To MAKE. [Lat. facere; Fr. faire.] To do or perform; to do in form of law. "To make oath" is to swear in a prescribed form of law. "To make default" is to fail to appear or answer. So in the old phrases "to make the duel," "to make a fine," "to make law," &c.

To MAKE. To have effect. "To make for" a party, is to support him. "That case makes for me." Hardr. 133, arg. See Facere, Facit.

To MAKE FAITH. In old Scotch law. To make oath; to swear with the right hand uplifted, that one will declare the truth. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 4, p. 235.

To MAKE LAW. [L. Lat. facere legem; L. Fr. faire, or parfaire ley.] In old English practice. To deny under oath the statement or charge of a complaining party; such oath being supported by the oaths of a certain number of persons called compurgators. Blackstone supposes the meaning of this phrase to be, "to take the benefit which the law has allowed." 3 Bl. Com. 341. But law, in this connection, seems to have its ancient technical meaning of oath. See Law, Lex.

To MAKE OVER. In conveyancing. To transfer; to put out of one's possession; to alienate. This expression corresponds with the Gr. εκποιειν, (q. v.)

MAKING LAW. In old practice. The formality of denying a plaintiff's charge under oath, in open court, with compurgators. One of the ancient methods of trial, frequently, though inaccurately, termed waging law, or wager of law. 3 Bl. Com. 341. It was the process of complying with wager of law. See Wager of law.

MAKER. In mercantile law. The person who makes a promissory note. Story on Notes, § 3.

MAL GREE. L. Fr. Against the will; without the consent. Bon gree ou mal gree le tenant; with the consent or without the consent of the tenant. Britt. c. 41. Hence the single word malgre, and more modern maugre, (qq. v.) See Gree.

MALA. Lat. [fem. sing. of malus, bad.] Bad. See Malus.

MALA FIDES. Lat. Bad faith. The opposite of bona fides, (q. v.) Malâ fide; in bad faith. Malæ fidei possessor; a possessor in bad faith. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 310, 311, § 289.

MALA GRAMMATICA. L. Lat. Bad grammar.

Mala grammatica non vitiat chartam. Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed. Wingate's Max. 18, max. 13. 9 Co. 48 a. 2 Bl. Com. 379. Neither false English nor bad Latin will destroy a deed, when the meaning of the party is apparent. Id. ibid. The grammatical construction is not always, in judgment of law, to be followed. Broom's Max. 299, [535.] See Bad English.

MALA PRAXIS. L. Lat. Mal-practice; unskilful management or treatment. Particularly applied to the neglect or unskilful management of a physician, surgeon, or apothecary. 3 Bl. Com. 122. This is a great misdemeanor and offence at common law. Id. ibid. 1 Ld. Raym. 214.

MALA. Lat. [pl. of malum, bad.] Bad or evil things; offences; wrongs. See infra.

MALA IN SE. L. Lat. Wrongs in themselves; acts morally wrong; offences against conscience. 1 Bl. Com. 57, 58. 4 Id. 8.

MALA PROHIBITA. L. Lat. Prohibited wrongs or offences; acts which are made offences by positive laws, and prohibited as such. 1 Bl. Com. 57, 58. 4 Id. 8.

MALE CREDITUS. L. Lat. In old English law. Unfavorably thought of; in bad repute or credit. Bract. fol. 116, 154.

Maledicta est expositio quæ corrumpit textum. That is a cursed interpretation which corrupts the text. 4 Co. 35 a, Bozoun's case. Broom's Max. 268, [480.]

MALEFACTOR. Lat. [from malefacere, to do wrong.] In old English law. A wrong-doer; an offender; a criminal; a convicted criminal. Bract. fol. 104 b. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, §§ 35, 120.

MALEFEASANCE, Malfeasance, Malfesance, Malfeazance, Malfaisance. L. Fr. and Eng. [from male, ill, and faisance, a doing; Lat. maleficium.] A doing of evil; ill conduct; the doing of what one ought not to do. Cro. Jac. 266. 1 Tidd's Pr. 4.

MALE FAME. L. Fr. Bad character. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 12.

MALEFICIUM. Lat. [from malefacere, to do wrong.] In the civil law. Wrong-doing; wrong; tort; the commission of an offence; malfeasance. Inst. 4. 1, pr. Bract. fol. 99, 101, 103.

Maleficia propositis distinguuntur. Evil deeds are distinguished from evil purposes. Jenk. Cent. 290, case 9. This is the translation given in Branch's Principia; but as used by Jenkins, the proper translation seems to be, "Wicked deeds are distinguished by their purposes." The putting of ratsbane to kill vermin is not felony, although a man should take it and die of it. Jenk. Cent. ub. sup.

MALETOLT, Mal tolt, Maletot, Male toute. L. Fr. [L. Lat. mala tolta, q. v.] In old English law. An undue or excessive toll, tribute or imposition. Called in Magna Charta (9 Hen. III. c. 30; Johan. c. 41,) malum toltum, or mala tolta, an evil toll. Lord Coke translates it male tent. Stat. de Tallagio non concedendo, c. 3. See Barr. Obs. Stat. 174.

MALETOUTE. L. Fr. [L. Lat. mala tolta.] In old English law. A tax of 40*s.* on every woolsack exported. Blackst. Mag. Cart. Intr. xciv. See Conf. Cartar. 25 Edw. I. This word was not always used in a bad sense. Outre le droiturel maletoute de demy marke; over and above the rightful custom of half a mark. Rot. Parl. 27 Edw. III. See 2 How. State Trials, 425.

MALFETRIA. Span. In Spanish law. Offence. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 19, c. 1, § 1.

MALICE. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Lat. malitia, q. v.] In criminal law and general practice. Wickedness of purpose; a spiteful or malevolent design against another; a settled purpose to injure or destroy another.

Any formed design of doing mischief. 1 Hale's P. C. 455, (Am. ed. note.) 2 Stra. 766.—Any evil design in general. 4 Bl. Com. 198.—A disposition or inclination to do a bad thing, (un disposition à faire un male chose.) 2 Roll. R. 461.—General wickedness of heart; inhuman or reckless disregard of the lives or safety of others, as when one coolly discharges a gun, or throws any dangerous missile among a multitude of people, or strikes, even upon provocation, with a weapon that must produce death.* 4 Bl. Com. 199, 200. See U. S. Digest, Homicide. Whart. Am. Cr. Law, §§ 944—967.

Deliberate disregard of the rights of others; as when one carries on the trade of melting tallow, to the annoyance of the neighboring dwellings. Abbott, C. J. 3 Barn. & Cress. 584.

Wilfulness. 4 Mason's R. 115. The doing any act without a just cause. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 46. Otherwise called malice in law. Pollock, C. B. 12 Mees. & W. 787. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 453. Malice, in the legal acceptation of the word, is not confined to personal spite against individuals, but consists in a conscious violation of the law, to the prejudice of another. Lord Campbell, 9 Cl. & Fin. 321. Malice, in its legal sense, means a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. Bailey, J. 4 Barn. & Cress. 255. Shaw, C. J. 9 Metcalf's R. 93, 104, 105. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 34, note. And malice may not only be presumed from the total absence of probable cause, but also from gross and culpable negligence in omitting to make suitable and reasonable inquiries. Story, J. 3 Story's R. 1, 7.

MALICE AFORETHOUGHT, otherwise called MALICE PREPENSE. [L. Lat. malitia præcogitata.] In criminal law. Malice previously and deliberately entertained. This is essential to constitute the crime of murder. 4 Bl. Com. 198.

MALICIOUS ABANDONMENT. In criminal law. The desertion of a wife or husband without just cause.

MALICIOUS INJURY. In criminal law. An injury committed out of spite or ill-will against another; an injury committed wantonly, wilfully, or without cause.* 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 136.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION. In practice. The procuring the indictment or arrest of a person, maliciously and without probable cause. 3 Chitt. Bl. Com. 126. 1 Archb. N. Prius, 446. 3 Story's R. 1. U. S. Digest, Malicious Prosecution.

MALITIA. Lat. [from malus, bad.] In criminal law. An express evil design. 4 Bl. Com. 199. Wickedness of purpose; malice. See Malice. Malitia excogitata; meditated malice. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, § 16. Malitia præcogitata; malice aforethought, evil intended beforehand. 4 Bl. Com. 198, 200.

Malitia supplet ætatem. Malice supplies [or makes up for] age; wickedness of design supplies the want of age. Dyer, 104 b. An infant between the ages of seven and fourteen may be guilty of felony and punished capitally, if shown to be possessed of a mischievous discretion, or to be doli capax. 1 Bl. Com. 464, 465. 4 Id. 22, 23, 212. Broom's Max. 149, [232.]

Malitiis hominum est obviandum. The wicked or malicious designs of men must be thwarted. 4 Co. 15 b.

MALITIOSE. L. Lat. In old English law. Maliciously. Comb. 116.

MALLARE. L. Lat. [from mallum, q. v.] In old European law. To cite or summon to court, (in mallum vocare.) L. Salic. tit. 52, § 2. L. Alaman. tit. 36, § 3. L. Boior. tit. 1, c. 11, § 2. Spelman.

MANCEPS. Lat. In the Roman law. A purchaser, one who took the article sold in his hand, (qui manu cepit;) a formality observed in certain sales. Calv. Lex. Adam's Rom. Ant. 55. See Mancipatio.

A farmer of the public taxes. Id.

MANCIPARE. Lat. [from manus, hand, and capere, to take.] In the Roman law. To sell, alienate or make over to another; to sell with certain formalities. See Mancipatio.

To sell a person; one of the forms observed in the process of emancipation. See Emancipation.

MANCIPATIO. Lat. [from mancipare, q. v.] In the Roman law. A kind of sale in the presence of five witnesses, accompanied with delivery of possession or seisin; the purchaser taking the thing sold in his hand. It took place among Roman citizens only, and was confined to certain property called res mancipi or mancipia. Calv. Lex. Adam's Rom. Ant. 55, 58.

The imaginary sale of a son in the ceremony of emancipation; so called, because the natural father gave over (mancipabat, i. e. manu tradebat) his son to the purchaser, adding these words, Mancupo tibi hunc filium qui meus est. Adam's Rom. Ant. 52. Cooper's Just. Inst. Notes, *442, 443.

MANCIPI RES. Lat. In old Roman law. A name given to one of the leading divisions of private property, the precise meaning of which is not settled. Ulpian defines or describes it as embracing estates in Italy, (prædia in Italico solo,) which were acquired by mancipation, usucapion or adjudication, those rights of country estates called servitudes, slaves and working animals. Calv. Lex. Gibbon explains it to mean things originally taken in war

(manu capti,) and which were sold in the particular form called mancipatio, in order to assure the purchaser that they had been the property of an enemy, and not of a fellow citizen. 3 Gibbon's Rom. Emp. 176, (Am. ed. 1844.)

MANCIPIUM. Lat. In the Roman law. A slave; so called, because taken from the enemy by hand, (quod ab hostibus manu capiantur.) Dig. 1. 5. 43. Inst. 1. 3. 3. Cod. 4. 56, 57. 1 Bl. Com. 423.

A sale. The same as mancipatio, (q. v.)

MANCUS. L. Lat. In Saxon law. A coin of the value of thirty pence, or 7s. 6d. Spelman.

MANDAMIENTO. Span. In Spanish law. Commission; authority or power of attorney. A contract of good faith, by which one person commits to the gratuitous charge of another, his affairs, and the latter accepts the charge. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 12, c. 1.

MANDAMUS. Lat. (We command.) In practice. A writ which issues out of a superior court, directed to any person, corporation, or inferior court, requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified, which appertains to their office and duty, and which the court issuing it has previously determined, or at least supposes to be consonant to right and justice.* 3 Bl. Com. 110. It is a high prerogative writ, and of a most extensively remedial nature. Id. ibid. Cowen, J. 4 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 581. It is used principally for public purposes, and to enforce the performance of public rights or duties; as to compel inferior courts to do some act belonging to their duty in order to prevent a delay or denial of justice; to compel the admission or restoration of the applicant to any office or franchise of a public nature, &c. It lies, however, to enforce some private rights when withheld by public officers, as to compel a clerk to record a deed, to compel a corporation to exhibit their books to a corporator, and the like. 3 Bl. Com. 110, 264. 3 Steph. Com. 681. See the cases in which it lies enumerated in 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 789—806. United States Digest, Mandamus. In general, it can be properly employed only where a party has a legal right, and there is no other adequate legal remedy; and it does not lie where a party has a remedy by action. 2 Cowen's R. 444. 18 Wendell's R. 575. 21 Id. 20. 2 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 45. 5 Id. 616. 6 Id. 243. And it can issue only in cases where the act to be done is merely ministerial, and with regard to which, nothing like judgment or discretion in the performance of his duties is left to the officer. 17 Howard's R. 284.

A mandamus has been held to be a suit, within the Constitution of the United States; for it is a litigation of a right in a court of justice, seeking a decision. 2 Peters' R. 449. 14 Id. 564.

The writ derives its name from its emphatic word, when framed in Latin; Nos igitur—tibi mandamus, firmiter injungendo, &c. See Bohun's Instit. Leg. 163.

MANDANS. Lat. [from mandare, q. v.] In the civil law. One who gives a thing in charge to another; one who requires, requests or employs another to do some act for him. Inst. 3. 27. 1, et seq.

MANDANT. Fr. [from Lat. mandans, q. v.] In French and Scotch law. The employing party in the contract of mandatum, or mandate. Story on Bailm. § 138.

MANDARE. Lat. In old practice. To command. Hence the term mandamus, (q. v.) although præcipere or præcipimus, (qq. v.) was the usual word in writs.

To commit. Mandare executioni; to commit to execution, to put in execution. Clerke's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 58, 59.

To make return to a writ. Si fraudulenter mandavit quod ille qui attachiari debuit non fuit inventus in ballivâ suâ; if he has fraudulently returned that he who ought to be attached was not found in his bailiwick. Bract. fol. 441 b. Si vice comes mandaverit; if the sheriff have returned. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 9.

In the civil law. To give in charge; to commit to one's care; to request another to do some act for one. Dig. 17. 1. 2. Qui mandat ipse fecisse videtur. He who requests [another to do an act for him] is supposed to have done it himself. Story on Bailm. § 147.

Mandata licita recipiunt strictam interpretationem, sed illicita latam et extensam. Lawful commands receive a strict interpretation, but unlawful commands a broad and extended one. Bac. Max. reg. 16.

MANDATAIRE. Fr. In French law.

A person employed by another to do some act for him; a mandatary. Pothier, Tr. de Mandat, art. prel. n. 1.

MANDATARY. [Lat. mandatarius, from mandare, q. v.] One to whom a charge or commandment is given. Cowell.

In the law of bailment. One who is employed by another to do some act for him without reward, in regard to some personal property bailed or delivered to him.* One who undertakes to do an act for another, without reward. 2 Kent's Com. 569, 570.

MANDATE. [from Lat. mandatum, q. v.] A kind of bailment when one undertakes, without recompense, to do some act for another, in respect to the thing bailed. 2 Kent's Com. 568.—A bailment of goods without reward, to be carried from place to place, or to have some act performed about them. Story on Bailm. § 5. Jones on Bailm. 36. It is also called, after the civil law, mandatum, (q. v.) The word mandate is borrowed from the Scotch law. See Bell's Dict. In old English law, the word commandment was used. 2 Leon. 75.

In practice. A judicial command; that part or clause of a writ containing the words "We command you," &c.

MANDATO. Span. [from Lat. mandatum, q. v.] In Spanish law. The contract of mandate. Escriche, Dicconario Razonado. Schmidt's Civ. Law, 197.

MANDATOR. Lat. [from mandare, q. v.] In the civil law. One who gives a thing in charge to another; one who employs another to do some act for him in regard to property bailed.* Cod. 8. 41. 10. Story on Bailm. § 138. Called, also, mandans, (q. v.) In old English law, a commander. 2 Leon. 75.

MANDATUM. Lat. [from mandare, q. v.] In the civil law. That kind of bailment in which the one party (mandans,) gives something in charge (mandat,) to the other to do for him; and the latter (mandatarius,) undertakes to do the act without recompense.* Inst. 3. 27, pr. et per tot. Dig. 17. 1. Cod. 4. 35. 2 Kent's Com. 568. Story on Bailm. § 137. Jones on Bailm. 36.

MANNIRE. L. Lat. [from Sax. manien, to summon.] In old European law. To cite or summon to court, (in legem vocare.) L. Salic. tit. 1, §§ 1, 2, 3. Spelman.

MANOPERA, MANOPUS. L. Lat. [from manus, hand, and opera, opus, work.] In old European law. Work done by hand, (quod manu perficitur;) manual labor. Spelman. The same with opus manificum. See Manificus.

In old English law. A day's work. Id. Used also as the barbarous Latin for mainour, (q. v.) Cowell.

MANOR. [L. Fr. maner, manoir, maneire; L. Lat. manerium, q. v.] In English law. A feudal estate of a noble kind (feodum nobile,) granted partly to tenants in consideration of certain services, and partly reserved to the lord for the use of his family, with a jurisdiction over the tenants for the lands granted them; formerly called a barony, and in modern times a lordship, (dominium.) Spelman. —A district of ground held by a lord or great personage, who kept to himself such parts of it as were necessary for his own use, which were called terræ dominicales or demesne lands, and distributed the rest to freehold tenants, to be held of him in perpetuity. 1 Steph. Com. 202. 2 Bl. Com. 90. See 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 71, § 88. See Fleta, lib. 2, cc. 72—88, for a minute description of a manor and manor life in England, about the time of Edward I.

A franchise, or right to hold courts and have suit and service rendered, or quit rents paid by copyholders and others. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 166.

In the United States, a manor is a tract of land occupied by tenants who pay a fee-farm rent to the proprietor, sometimes in kind; and sometimes perform certain stipulated services. In the province of New-York, large tracts of land were formerly granted as manors, with all the manorial rights and incidents. In the county of Westchester were the manors of Fordham, Pelham, Scarsdale, Philipsburg, Cortlandt and others. The manorial tenures in other parts of the State have occasioned much litigation, but have, with some modifications, continued to the present day.

Spelman derives this word, through the L. Lat. manerium, from manendo, (remaining, or abiding,) because the lord was accustomed to reside permanently (manere) on the manor as well as the tenants; and hence the latter were anciently called manentes. Lord Coke suggests the same etymology, though he prefers another from the Fr. mesner, to guide, the tenants being under the lord's guidance and direction. Co. Litt. 58 a. Co. Cop. sect. 31. See Manerium.

MANRENT. In Scotch law. The service of a man or vassal. A bond (band or letter) of manrent was an instrument by which a person, in order to secure the protection of some powerful lord, bound himself "in manrent and service to be leil and trew man and servant" to such lord, specifying the services. Sir Walter Scott, who has given some forms of these bonds, observes that the proper spelling is manred. Minstrelsy of Scottish Border, "Lord Maxwell's Goodnight." Skene calls homage "a band of man-rent." De Verb. Sign. voc. Homagium.

MANSA. L. Lat. The same as mansus, (q. v.)

MANSE. [L. Lat. mansa, mansus, mansum, qq. v.] In old English law. A habitation or dwelling, generally with land attached. Spelman, voc. Mansus.

A residence or dwelling-house for the parish priest, (mansus presbyteri;) a parsonage or vicarage house. Paroch. Ant. 431. Cowell. Still used in Scotch law, in this sense. Bell's Dict.

MANSIA. L. Lat. In Saxon law. A dwelling; a country habitation, (sedes rustica;) embracing not only buildings, but sufficient land for the support of a family. Chart. Reg. Kenulph. cited in Spelman.

MANSIO. L. Lat. [from manere, to stay.] In old European law. An inn; a place of entertainment and accommodation for travellers. Capitul. Carol. lib. 6, c. 81. Formul. Solen. 33. Spelman.

In old English law. A dwelling; a mansion; which might be constructed of several houses, (mansio esse poterit constructa ex pluribus domibus.) Bract. fol. 434. See the distinction between mansio and manerium. Id. ib. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 51.

MANSION. [from Lat. mansio, q. v.] A dwelling-house. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 167.

In old English law. Residence; dwelling. "Mansion or habitation will not indenize him." Bacon's Arg. Case of the Postnati of Scotland, Works, iv. 328.

MANSION-HOUSE, in its common sense, not only includes the dwelling-house, but also all out-houses, as barn, stable, cow-house, dairy-house, if they be parcel of the mansion, though they be not under the same roof, or joining or contiguous to it. 1 Hale's P. C. 558, 559. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 168.

MANSIUNCULA. L. Lat. [dimin. of mansio, a dwelling.] In old English law. A little dwelling. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 22, § 6.

MANSLAUGHTER. In criminal law. The unlawful killing of another, without malice, either express or implied; which may be either voluntarily, upon a sudden heat, or involuntarily, but in the commission of some unlawful act. 1 Hale's P. C. 466. 4 Bl. Com. 191. See Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, §§ 931—933. Lewis' U. S. Crim. Law, 348, et seq.

This term is a literal translation of the L. Lat. homicidium, though it does not fully answer to the English homicide, being only a species of that crime.

MANSUETUS. Lat. [from mansuescere, to tame.] In the civil law. Tame; tamed; as though accustomed to come to the hand, (quasi ad manum venire suetus.) Dig. 3. 1. 1. 6. Festus, 9. 2 Bl. Com. 391. Bract. fol. 8 b, 9. Calv. Lex. The opposite of ferus.

MANSUM. The same as Mansus, (q. v.)

MANSURA. L. Lat. In old European law. A dwelling or house; the same as mansus, (q. v.) Spelman.

MANSUS, Mansum, Mansa. L. Lat. [from manere, to stay or dwell.] In old European law. A dwelling with a sufficient portion of land for the support of one family; corresponding with the familia of Bede, and the hida of the Saxons. Otherwise called colonica, (q. v.;) a country dwelling. Spelman. Montesquieu supposes that it was a particular portion of land belonging to a farm where there were bondmen. Esprit des Loix, liv. 30, c. 13.

A portion of land sufficient to be worked by a yoke of oxen for a year. This was the sense of the word in Italy, according to an old vocabulary cited by Spelman. The same with the English oxgang (q. v.) or bovate.

A house or dwelling without land; a house in a city; a messuage. Spelman.

MANUCAPERE. L. Lat. [from manus, hand, and capere, to take.] In old law and practice. To become surety; to offer one's self as a surety to redeem another from imprisonment, and to have him in court at an appointed day. Spelman. To become bail for another; literally, to take in hand. Cro. Jac. 97. But see 1 Stra. 200, arg.

Spelman observes that manucapere is the proper correlative of balliare, (to bail,) and not its equivalent; the office of the sureties being to receive the party into their hands, and to deliver him. This corresponds with the technical idea of bail, which is said to be the act of the court. 1 Salk. 8. 1 Tidd's Pr. 238.

MANUCAPTIO. L. Lat. [from manucapere, q. v.] In old English law. Manucaption; surety or security. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 27, § 18.

MANUCAPTION. [L. Lat. manucaptio, q. v.] In practice. The same with mainprise, (q. v.) which is similarly derived.

MANUCAPTOR. L. Lat. [from manucapere, q. v.] In old English law. A surety for another's appearance. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 26, § 19. The same with mainpernor, (q. v.) which is similarly derived. Sometimes applied, as an English word, to ordinary bail. "Manucaptors are but gaolers pro tempore." 2 Show. 202.

MANU BREVI. Lat. With a short hand; shortly; directly; by the shortest course; without circuity. Manu longa; indirectly; circuitously. Terms used by the civilians. Calv. Lex.

MANUFACTURE. [from Lat. manus, hand, and factura, a making.] The process of making a thing by art. Buller, J. 2 H. Bl. 463, 471.

A thing made by art. Id. ibid.

MANU FORTI. Lat. With strong hand. A term used in old writs of trespass. Manu forti et cum multitudine gentium; with strong hand and multitude of people. Reg. Orig. 183.

MANUMISSION. [Lat. manumissio, from manumittere, q. v.] In the Roman law. The giving a slave or bondman his liberty; the discharging one from the power of another. Manumission, as explained by Ulpian in his Institutes, was a sending out of hand, (de manû missio;) that is, a giving of liberty, (datio libertatis.) As long as a person was in servitude, he was subject to the hand and power of his master, (manui et potestati suppositus est,) but when manumitted, he was released from such power, (manumissus liberatur potestate.) Dig. 1. 1. 4. This passage is copied in the Institutes of Justinian, with a slight variation. Inst. 1. 5, pr.

In old European law. The enfranchisement of a slave; the freeing a villein out of his bondage. 1 Rob. Charles V. 32, and Appendix, note xx. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 11, §§ 17, 21. Cowell.

MANUMITTERE. Lat. [from manus, the hand, and mittere, to send.] In civil and old European law. To set free; to send, dismiss or discharge out of the hand, or power; to manumit. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 11, §§ 17, 21. See Manumission. Manumittere idem est quod extra manum vel potestatem ponere; to manumit is the same as to put out of the hand or power. Co. Litt. 157.

MANUOPERA. L. Lat. An old form of mainour, (q. v.) Stolen goods taken upon a thief apprehended in the fact. Cowell. Properly, manuopere, (abl. of manuopus.) Cum manuopere capti; taken with the mainour. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 42.

MANUPASTUS. L. Lat. [L. Fr. maynpast.] In old English law. A household, or family. Spelman. Bract. fol. 124 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 7.

A domestic servant. Spelman. Vaugh. 115.

MANUPES. L. Lat. In old records. A foot of full and legal measure. Cart. Ric. I. cited in Cowell.

MANURABLE. [from manure, q. v.] In old English law. Capable of being had or held in hand; capable of manual occupation; capable of being cultivated; capable of being touched; tangible; corporeal. "Corporeal things are such as are manurable." Hale's Anal. sect. xxiv.

MANURE. L. Fr. and Eng. [from main, the hand.] In old English law. To occupy; to use or cultivate; to have in manual occupation; to bestow manual labor upon. "Let him keep it [the tenement] a year and a day without manuring." "He shall enter and manure those lands and tenements as his own." Cowell, voc. Gavelet. Perhaps another form of mainoverer, to work with the hand.

MANUS. Lat. and L. Lat. In old English law. A hand. An oath, as taken with the hand on the Gospels. Spelman.

A person making oath; a compurgator. Jurare duodecima manu; to swear by the twelve-hand; to swear by the oaths of twelve, that is, eleven compurgators besides the party himself.

A degree or condition. Manûs mediæ; of a middle rank. Manûs infimæ; of the lowest class. Cowell.

In the civil law. Power or authority. See Manumission.

MANUS MORTUA. L. Lat. A dead hand; mortmain. Spelman.

MANUTENERE. L. Lat. [from manus, the hand, and tenere, to hold; Fr. maintenier.] In old English law. To maintain; to support, assist or defend; to take one's part; to assist one in carrying on his suit. Spelman. Manutenere placitum—querelam; to maintain one's plea—plaint. Reg. Orig. 182, 189. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 66, § 23.

Spelman supposes this word to have been introduced by the Normans.

Permission to pass the frontier of a country, in order to make reprisals. 1 Bl. Com. 258. Generally used as synonymous with reprisal. Id. ibid.

MARQUESS, Marquis. [L. Lat. marchio; from Germ. marche, a border.] In English law. A degree of nobility next to that of duke. So called from the ancient office of the marquess to guard the frontiers and limits [marches or borders] of the kingdom, particularly those on the side of Wales and Scotland. 1 Bl. Com. 397.

MARR'. Abbrev. of marescallo. A word written on the margin of old records on habeas corpus. Selden, arg. 3 How. St. Trials, 105.

MARRIAGE. [L. Fr. mariage; Lat. matrimonium, nuptiæ.] The legal union of a man and woman for life. Webster.—The union of a man and woman, in a state of habitual and inseparable intercourse for life; (viri et mulieris conjunctio, individuam vitæ consuetudinem continens.) Inst. 1. 9. 1.—A contract according to the form prescribed by law, by which a man and woman capable of entering into such contract, mutually engage with each other to live their whole lives together in the state of union which ought to exist between a husband and wife. Shelford, Marr. & Div. 1.

MARRIAGE. [L. Fr. mariage; L. Lat. maritagium.] In feudal law. The power which the lord or guardian in chivalry had, of disposing of his infant ward in matrimony. 2 Bl. Com. 70.

MARRIAGE BROKAGE. The procurement of a marriage between persons, for a consideration.

The consideration paid or agreed to be paid for bringing about a marriage. See 1 Story's Eq. Jur. §§ 260—264.

MARRIAGE ARTICLES. Articles of agreement between parties contemplating marriage, intended as preliminary to a formal marriage settlement, to be drawn after marriage. Atherley on Marriage Settlements, 92.

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT. A settlement made by a husband out of his estate, before or after marriage, for the benefit of his wife, or of his wife and children. 2 Steph. Com. 307. 2 Kent's Com. 172—178.—A settlement in writing, usually made before marriage and in consideration of it, by which the estate of either or both of the parties is settled or limited to be enjoyed in a certain way; as upon the husband and issue, or upon the wife and issue, or upon the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the issue, or otherwise, as may be agreed upon. See Atherley on Marr. Settlements, 92, et seq. Mac Queen on Husb. & Wife, 257, et seq.

MARSHAL, Mareschal. [Sc. marischall; L. Fr. mareshal, marescal, mariscal; L. Lat. marescallus, marascalcus; from Germ. marth, a horse, and schalc, an attendant.] In English law. The title of several officers with judicial or ministerial powers; as,

The earl marshal, or lord mareschal, a high officer of state, who presided in the court of chivalry. 3 Bl. Com. 68.

The marshal of the king's house, or knight marshal, whose special authority is in the king's palace, to hear and determine all pleas of the crown, and to punish faults committed within the verge, and to hear and judge of suits between those of the king's household. Holthouse.

The marshal of the king's bench prison, who had the custody of that prison. Id. See Marescallus.

In American law. The ministerial officer of the courts of the United States, with duties similar to those of a sheriff. 1 Kent's Com. 309.

An officer with duties similar to those of a petty constable.

 The term marshal, though of later and humbler origin than constable, is derived essentially from the same source; marascalcus signifying an attendant upon horses, as comes stabuli (afterwards constabularius) denoted a superintendent of the stable. See Marescallus. Both titles seem to have risen in dignity by a similar progress, which Spelman has distinctly traced. When the comes stabuli was advanced to the rank of a military commander, the marescal (from his superior skill in the management of horses,) came to be employed in various military capacities; as to inspect the army, to select positions for encampment, to determine the array or order of battle, and finally to lead the van as commander of the cavalry. Rising into higher eminence, the marshal finally became an officer of the palace, charged with the protection of the sovereign's person and the preservation of the peace of the household, for which purpose he was allowed to hold a court, and at length became one of the great officers of state. It was at this period of its history that the office, with its title, was introduced into England by the Normans.

Spelman, describing the office as it existed in England in his day, found traces of its original character subsisting in the circumstances that the earl marshal was entitled to receive from every person made a knight, a saddled palfrey, and that stray horses were among his perquisites. And see Fleta, lib. 2, c. 4, § 4; c. 5, § 8. No affinity, however, can be traced between the original meaning of the word and its application in modern law. What may now be called its radical meaning dates from the later period, when the marshal, among his other military duties, had the important one of arraying the army for battle. Hence "to marshal" now signifies to set in order, as in the common equity phrase, "marshalling of assets." So, in popular language, a marshal is a person chosen to arrange the order, and direct the route of a procession.

To MARSHAL. To arrange, rank, or set in order. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 558. See infra. A term derived from the ancient office of the marshal. See Marshal.

To arrange words in a certain order; to construe. "The law will marshal words, ut res magis valeat." Hill, B. Hardr. 92. "The wisdom of the law useth to transpose words according to the sense; and not so much to respect how the words do take place, but how the acts which are guided by those words may take place." Bacon's arg. Case of Revocation of Uses, Works, iv. 248. "The law shall marshal the acts against the order of the words." Id. ibid. "The law will rather invert the words than pervert the sense." Id. 249.

MARSHALLING OF ASSETS. In equity. The arranging or ranking of assets in the due order of administration. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 558.—Such an arrangement of the different funds under administration as shall enable all the parties having equities thereon, to receive their due proportions, notwithstanding any intervening interests, liens, or other claims of particular persons to prior satisfaction out of a portion of these funds. Id. ibid.—The arrangement or ranking of assets in a certain order towards the payment of debts. 4 Kent's Com. 421.

MARSHALLING OF SECURITIES. In equity. That principle of arrangement by which a party having a lien on or interest in a certain fund, may compel a party having a lien on or interest in the same fund, and also on another fund, to resort, in the first instance, to such other fund for satisfaction, whenever it will not trench upon the rights or operate to the prejudice of the party entitled to the double fund.* 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 663.

MARSHALSEA. [L. Lat. marescallia.] In English law. The court or seat of the marshal. A court originally held before the steward and marshal of the king's house, and instituted to administer justice between the king's domestic servants, that they might not be drawn into other courts, and thereby the king lose their service. 3 Bl. Com. 76. It is now united with the Palace Court, and held once a week in the borough of Southwark. Id. ibid. 3 Steph. Com. 444.

MARTE SUO DECURRERE. Lat. To run by its own force. A term applied in the civil law to a suit, when it ran its course to the end, without any impediment. Calv. Lex. Brissonius.

MARTIAL LAW. A system of rules for the government of an army, or adopted in times of actual war. An arbitrary kind of law or rule, sometimes established in a place or district occupied or controlled by an armed force, by which the civil authority and the ordinary administration of the law are either wholly suspended, or subjected to military power.* It is founded on paramount necessity, and proclaimed by a military chief. 1 Kent's Com. 341, note. It is quite a distinct thing from military law, with which it is sometimes confounded. Id. ibid. See Hale's Hist. Com. Law, 42, 43, and note, (Runnington's ed.) 1 Bl. Com. 413. Lord Loughborough, 2 H. Bl. 69, 98.

MARUS. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. A maire; an officer or executor of summons. Otherwise called præco regis. Skene de Verb. Signif.

MASCULINE. [Lat. masculinus, from mas, male.] Belonging to, or descriptive of the male sex. The masculine frequently includes the feminine; as "man" includes "woman." In the Digests, the rule is laid down in broader terms. Semper sexus masculinus etiam femininum sexum continet; the masculine sex always includes the feminine. Dig. 32. 62. Mulorum appellatione etiam mulæ continentur; under the appellation of mules are included she-mules. Id. ibid. Equis legatis et equæ continentur; under a bequest of horses are included mares. Id. 32. 65. 6.

MASSA. Lat. In the civil law. A mass; an unwrought substance, such as gold or silver, before it is wrought into cups or other articles. Dig. 47. 2. 52. 14. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, §§ 17, 22.

MASSA. L. Lat. In old European law. A manse. The same as mansus, (q. v.) Spelman, voc. Mansus. Regist.

S. Greg. cited ibid. Spelman supposes it to be the origin of the Fr. mese, and English messuage.

MAST. To fatten with mast, (acorns, &c.) 1 Leon. 186.

MAST-SELLING. In old English law. The practice of selling the goods of dead seamen at the mast. Held void. 7 Mod. 141.

MASTER. [L. Fr. maistre; from Lat. magister, q. v.] One having authority; one who rules, directs, instructs or superintends; one having superior skill to others; a head or chief; an instructor; an employer. Applied to several judicial officers. See infra.

MASTER IN CHANCERY, (anciently MASTER OF THE CHANCERY.) [L. Lat. magister cancellariæ.] In equity practice. An important officer of courts of equity, who acts as assistant to the chancellor or judge, and whose principal duty consists in inquiring into various matters referred to him for the purpose, and reporting thereon to the court. Wharton's Lex. Holthouse. In England, there are twelve of these masters, of whom the Master of the Rolls is the chief.

These officers were originally the chief clerks of the chancery, (clerici de prima forma,) who acted as the assessors or council of the Lord Chancellor, (collaterales et socii cancellarii.) 2 Reeves' Hist. 251. According to Mr. Spence, they obtained the title of masters in the reign of Edward III. 1 Spence's Chancery, 360. But they appear to have had the title of præceptores at a much earlier period. 2 Reeves' Hist. ub. sup. Crabb's Hist. 184.

MASTER AT COMMON LAW. In English law. An officer of the superior courts of common law, (each court having five,) whose principal duties, when attending court, consist in taking affidavits sworn in court, in administering oaths to attorneys on their admission, and in certifying to the court, in cases of doubt or difficulty, what the practice of the court is. Their principal duties out of court consist in taxing attorneys' costs, in computing principal and interest on bills of exchange, promissory notes and other documents, under rules to compute, in examining witnesses who are going abroad for the purpose of obtaining their testimony, in hearing and determining rules referred to them by the court in the place of the court itself, and in reporting to the court their conclusions with reference to the rules so referred to them. Holthouse.

MASTER OF THE CROWN OFFICE. In English law. The Queen's coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the Court of Queen's Bench, who prosecutes at the relation of some private person, or common informer, the crown being the nominal prosecutor. Wharton's Lex.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS. [L. Lat. magister rotulorum.] In English law. An assistant judge of the Court of Chancery, who holds a separate court ranking next to that of the Lord Chancellor, and has the keeping of the rolls and grants which pass the great seal, and the records of the chancery. He was originally appointed only for the superintendence of the writs and records appertaining to the common law department of the court, and is still properly the chief of the masters in chancery. 3 Steph. Com. 417. Wharton's Lex.

MASTER OF A SHIP. [Lat. magister navis, (q. v.) navicularius, navarchus, nauclerus.] In maritime law. A person having the command of a merchant vessel and the government of her crew; hence commonly styled captain. A person entrusted with the care and navigation of a vessel and cargo, appointed by the owner, and acting as his confidential agent.* 3 Kent's Com. 158, 161. Abbott on Ship. [118,] 151.

MASURA. L. Lat. [from massa, q. v.] In old English law. A house and ground; a piece of ground belonging to a house; a house in a city. Spelman.

An old decayed house or wall; the ruins of a building. Cowell.

MATE. In maritime law. The next officer to the master on board a vessel, who, on his death, or in his absence, succeeds virtute officii to the care of the ship, and the government and management of the crew. 3 Kent's Com. 176. He does not, however, cease to be mate in such cases, but has thrown upon him cumulatively the duties of master. Id. ibid.

MATERFAMILIAS. Lat. In the civil law. The mother or mistress of a family. Calv. Lex.

A chaste or virtuous woman, whether married or a widow. Matrem familias à ceteris feminis mores discernunt; morals distinguish a materfamilias from other women. Dig. 50. 16. 46. 1. Id. 48. 5. 10, pr.

MATERIA. Lat. In the civil law. Materials; as distinguished from species, or the form given by labor and skill. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 7—12. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 14.

Materials (wood) for building, as distinguished from lignum. Dig. 32. 55, pr.

MATERIA. L. Lat. Matter; substance; subject matter. 3 Bl. Com. 322.

MATERIAL MEN. In maritime law. Persons who furnish and construct materials for the outfit or repair of vessels. 1 Kent's Com. 379. 2 Id. 168—170. Such as ship-builders, rope-makers, &c. Jacobsen's Sea Laws, 357, note. U. S. Digest, Material men.

MATERTERA. Lat. [Gr. μητραδελφη.] In the civil law. A maternal aunt; a mother's sister, (matris soror.) Inst. 3. 6. 1. Bract. fol. 68 b.

MATERTERA MAGNA. Lat. In the civil law. A great aunt; a grandmother's sister, (aviæ soror.) Dig. 38. 10. 10. 15.

MATERTERA MAJOR. Lat. In the civil law. A greater aunt; a great grandmother's sister, (proaviæ soror;) a father's or mother's great aunt, (patris vel matris matertera magna.) Dig. 38. 10. 10. 16. Called promatertera. Id. 38. 10. 1. 7.

MATERTERA MAXIMA. Lat. In the civil law. A greatest aunt; a great great grandmother's sister, (abaviæ soror;) a father's or mother's greater aunt, (patris vel matris matertera major.) Dig. 38. 10. 10. 17. Called abmatertera. Id. 38. 10. 3.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES. In English ecclesiastical law. Causes of action or injuries respecting the rights of marriage. One of the three divisions of causes or injuries formerly cognizable by the ecclesiastical courts; comprising suits for jactitation of marriage, and for restitution of conjugal rights, divorces and suits for alimony. 3 Bl. Com. 92—94. 3 Steph. Com. 712—714.

MATRIMONIALITER. L. Lat. In the way of marriage. Bract. fol. 302 b.

MATRIMONIUM. Lat. In the civil law. Matrimony; marriage; the conjunction of man and woman, (maris atque feminæ conjunctio.) Dig. 1. 1. 1. 3. Justinian makes it synonymous with nuptiæ, and defines them both—viri et mulieris conjunctio, individuam vitæ consuetudinem continens, (the union of a man and a woman in a state of habitual and inseparable intercourse during life.) Inst. 1. 9. 1. See Tayl. Civ. Law, 268.

Matrimonia debent esse libera. Marriages ought to be free. A maxim of the civil law. 2 Kent's Com. 102.

MATRIX ECCLESIA. Lat. A mother church; a cathedral church, in respect of the parochial churches within the same diocese, or a parochial church, in respect of the chapels depending on her. Cowell.

MATTER IN DEED. Matter contained in a deed, or writing under seal between two or more parties, which is regarded as a private act. Co. Litt. 380 b. Steph. Pl. 197. Called by Lord Coke (ub. sup.) matter in fait.

MATTER IN PAIS. Matter in the country. This term is used by Blackstone as synonymous with matter in deed. 2 Bl. Com. 294. But it is generally distinguished, and applied to matters not transacted in writing. Steph. Pl. 197. 2 Smith's Lead. Cas. 458.

Matter en ley ne serra mise en bouche del jurors. Matter in law shall not be put into the mouth of jurors. Jenk. Cent. 180, case 61. Another form of the maxim, Ad quæstionem legis non respondent juratores.

MATTER OF RECORD. Matter entered on record, or appearing on the records of a court, comprising all judicial acts; such as a judgment or pleading in an action, a recognizance acknowledged before a court, and the old proceedings by fine, statute merchant, &c. Co. Litt. 380 b. Steph. Pl. 197.

MATURITY. In mercantile law. The time when a bill of exchange or promissory note becomes due. Story on Bills, § 329.

MATURUS. Lat. Ripe; mature or perfect. Maturiora sunt vota mulierum quam virorum; the desires of women are more mature [sooner matured] than those of men. 6 Co. 71 a. Bract. fol. 86 b.

MAUGRE. L. Fr. In spite of; against the will of. Litt. sect. 672. See Malgre, Mal gree.

MAUNDER. L. Fr. [from Lat. mandare, q. v.] In old English law. To command. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 45.

To return (a writ.) Id. ibid. The word occurs in both these senses in the following passage: Et sil maunde que il ad fait l'execution en due maner,—adonques soit maunde au viscount que, &c.; and if he return that he hath done execution in due manner,—then shall it be commanded to the sheriff that, &c. Id. ibid.

MAUNGER. L. Fr. To eat; eating. Maunger des jurours. Dyer, 37 b, (Fr. ed.)

MAUVEISE, Mauveys. L. Lat. False; fraudulent. Britt. c. 15. Mauvestie; a fraud. Id. Mauveysement musce; fraudulently concealed. Id. fol. 3 b.

Bad; defective; informal. La breve est mauveys. Yearb. H. 2 Edw. II. 33.

MAXIM. [L. Fr. maxime; from Lat. maximus, greatest.] A general principle; a postulate or axiom; a rule of general or universal application, upon which other rules are founded.* Co. Litt. 11 a. Called by Lord Coke, "a sure foundation or ground of art, and a conclusion of reason;" so called, quia maxima est ejus dignitas, et certissima auctoritas, atque quod maxime omnibus probetur; (because its dignity is greatest and its authority most sure, and because it is most highly approved by all.) Co. Litt. ub. sup. Lord Bacon observes that "the conclusions of reason of this kind are worthily and aptly called by a great civilian, legum leges, laws of laws, for that many placita legum, that is, particular and positive learnings of laws, do easily decline from a good temper of justice, if they be not rectified and governed by such rules." Bacon's Max. Pref. See 2 Kent's Com. 552—555.

Maxime paci sunt contraria, vis et injuria. The greatest enemies to peace are force and wrong. Co. Litt. 161 b.

"MAY," in the construction of public statutes, is to be construed "must" in all cases where the legislature mean to impose a positive and absolute duty, and not merely to give a discretionary power. 1 Peters' R. 46, 64. 3 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 612, 615. See 9 Grattan's R. 391. The word "may," in a statute, means must or shall, when the public interest or rights are concerned, or the public, or third persons, have a claim, de jure, that the power shall be exercised. 1 Vern. 153. 1 Kent's Com. 467, note. See 24 Mississippi R. 657.

MAYN. L. Fr. A hand; handwriting. Britt. c. 28.

MAYNOVER. L. Fr. A work of the hand; a thing produced by manual labor. Yearb. M. 4 Edw. III. 38.

MAYOR. [L. Lat. major; L. Fr. maire; Germ. meyer; from Lat. major, greater.] The chief magistrate of a city [or borough.] Cowell. The chief officer of a municipal corporation. Spelman. Answering to the portgreve and burgreve of the Saxons, and the bailiff of the Anglo-Normans.

* Spelman observes that he did not find this word used in England, prior to the Norman invasion, nor was it applied to any corporation until A. D. 1189, when Richard I. changed the bailiffs of London into a mayor; in imitation of which King John, A. D. 1204, made the bailiff of King's Lynn, a mayor. The Saxon title of portgreve, or portgerefe, is given to the chief magistrate of London in a charter granted to the city by William the Conqueror. Camd. Brit. 325. See Portgreve. According to Cowell and Blount, (who quote Camden,) Richard I. ordained two bailiffs instead of this portgreve, and it was John who changed the bailiffs into mayor. Mayor (major or maior) had become an ordinary title in the time of Bracton. Bract. fol. 57. The titles portreeve and boroughreeve continued in some places down to the passage of the late Municipal Reform Act, 5 & 6 Will. IV.

Mayor is derived by Spelman from the Lat. major, (greater,) denoting that he held the chief rank among his colleagues in office, whether aldermen, burgesses or jurats, who anciently constituted his council. This appears to be the true etymology. See Custos. Cowell and Blount, who trace the word to the Brit. meyr, make it to be derived from miret, to keep or guard. Webster pronounces the derivation from Lat. major an error, and traces the word to the Armoric mear, and Welsh maer, one that keeps or guards.

MAYORAZGO. Span. In Spanish law. The right to the enjoyment of certain aggregate property, left with the condition therein imposed, that they are to pass in their integrity perpetually, successively to the eldest son. Schmidt's Civ. Law, 62. A species of entail.

Meliorem conditionem suam facere potest minor, deteriorem nequaquam. A minor can make his condition better, but by no means worse. Co. Litt. 337 b.

MELIORATIO. Lat. [from melior, better.] In old English law. A melioration; a making better; an improvement or betterment. Bract. fol. 75. Stat. Marlbr. pr. See Feud. Lib. 2, tit. 28, § 2.

MELIUS. Lat. Better; the better. Melius averium; the better [best] beast. Bract. fol. 60. Secundum vel tertium melius; second or third best. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 1.

Melius est omnia mala pati quam malo consentire. It is better to suffer all wrongs, [any wrong] than to consent to wrong. 3 Inst. 23, marg.

Melius est recurrere quam male currere. It is better to run back than to run badly; it is better to retrace one's steps, than to proceed improperly. 4 Inst. 176.

Melius est in tempore occurrere, quam post causam vulneratam remedium quærere. It is better to meet a thing in time, than after an injury inflicted, to seek a remedy. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 37, § 15. 2 Inst. 299.

MELIUS INQUIRENDUM, (or INQUIRENDO.) L. Lat. (To be better inquired.) In old English practice. The name of a writ issued to the escheator, commanding him to make a further inquiry or to take a new inquisition respecting a matter; as to inquire who was the next heir of a party who died seised of lands, &c. Reg. Orig. 293. F. N. B. 255 C.

MELLER. L. Fr. To mix or blend; to meddle with; to interfere or interpose. Kelham.

MELLETUM, Medletum. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. meller, q. v.] In old Scotch law. Dissension; contest or strife. Skene de Verb. Sign. See Medletum.

MEMBRANA. Lat. In the civil law. Parchment. Dig. 32. 52.

In old English law. A skin of parchment. The English rolls are composed of several of these skins; and their contents are frequently distinguished according to the skin on which they are written. Thus, Mag. Rot. Stat. membr. 40. Rot. Cart. 28 Edw. I. membr. 16. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, 17.

MEMORANDUM. Lat. [from memorare, to remember.] To be remembered; be it remembered. A formal word with which the body of a record in the court of King's Bench anciently commenced: "Memorandum quod alias, scilicet termino," &c. and which has been literally translated in modern records, "Be it remembered that heretofore, to wit, in the term," &c. Towns. Pl. 486. Bohun's Instit. Legalis. 32. 2 Tidd's Pr. 719. The whole clause is now, in practice, termed, from this initial word, the memorandum, and its use is supposed to have originated from the circumstance that proceedings "by bill," (in which alone it has been employed) were formerly considered as the by-business of the court. Gilb. C. Pleas, 47, 48.

The term memorandum is also sometimes applied to a special clause in an instrument, to which attention is particularly required, as in a policy of insurance; and it has now become an ordinary word signifying a brief note in writing of some transaction, or an outline of an intended instrument, or an instrument drawn up in a brief and compendious form.

MEMORANDUM. A clause in a marine policy of insurance, declaring that certain enumerated articles, and any other articles that are perishable in their own nature, shall be free from average under a given rate, unless general, or the ship be stranded. 3 Kent's Com. 294, 295. 2 Phillips on Ins. 467. This clause was first introduced into the London policies in May, 1749. Id. note.

MEMORANDUM. A writing required by the Statute of Frauds, to bind the parties to agreements in certain specified cases. 2 Kent's Com. 510. It may be either all on one paper, or on several papers, if sufficiently connected, and it must contain the substance of the agreement; that is to say, the parties, the consideration, and the subject matter, as well as the promise and signature. See Blackburn on the Contract of Sale, c. 4.

MEMORANDUM CHECK. A check intended not to be presented immediately for payment; such understanding being denoted by the word mem. written upon it. But it has been held that the making of a check in this way does not affect its negotiability, or alter the right of the holder to present it to the bank, and demand payment immediately. 11 Paige's R. 612.

MEMORIA. Lat. In old English law. Memory; faculty of remembrance; mental soundness generally. Utrum compos sui et bonæ memoriæ, cum sano intellectu et sensu integro; whether having power of himself, and of good memory, with sound understanding, and perfect sense. Bract. fol. 15 b. Vel esse sanæ mentis, vel non bonæ memoriæ; or to be not of sound mind, or not of good memory. Id. fol. 43. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 7, § 1.

MEMORIE. L. Fr. [from Lat. memoria, q. v.] Memory; mind or understanding. Ne fuit mie en droit memorie en temps du feffement; was not in his right mind at the time of the feoffment. Britt. c. 80.

MEMORY. [Lat. memoria; L. Fr. memorie.] Used generally with the word mind, to denote full possession of the intellectual powers, as in the expression, "sound and disposing mind and memory," and the "sanæ mentis et bonæ memoriæ" of the ancient law. The Fr. memorie, however, was sometimes singly used in this comprehensive sense, as in the phrase de non sane memorie, (q. v.) See Memorie.

MEMORY (or TIME OF MEMORY.) In English law. A period fixed by the statute of Westminster 1, A. D. 1276, to commence from the beginning of the reign of Richard I. 2 Chitt. Bl. Com. 30, 31, and note. 1 Steph. Com. 45. See preamble to stat. 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71.

MENAUNTISE. L. Fr. A place of residence. Britt. c. 120.

MENDACIUM. Lat. [from mendax, lying.] In old English law. Falsehood; a falsehood or lie; a false statement made with intent to deceive; (falsa significatio vocis, cum intentione fallendi.) Fleta, lib. 5, c. 22, § 6. Fleta enumerates eight kinds of falsehoods. Id. ibid. See Grotius de Jur. Bell. lib. 3, c. 1, § 9.

MENEE, Meyne. L. Fr. [from mener, q. v.] A leading. Ovesque la menee de corns et de bouche; with the leading of horns and of mouth. Britt. c. 12, 27. A description of the ancient hue and cry which was led by a number of men, sounding horns and shouting.

MENER, Mesner, Menir. L. Fr. To lead; to conduct or manage; to bring; to drive; to carry. Pris et mene à nostre gaole; taken and carried to our gaol. Britt. c. 29.

MENETUM. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. A stock-horn; a horn made of wood, "with circles and girds of the same." Skene de Verb. Sign.

MENIAL. A term applied to a domestic servant, as being intra mœnia, (within the walls.) 1 Bl. Com. 425.

MENS. Lat. Mind; understanding. Calv. Lex. Mente captus; of unsound mind. Id. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 3, § 10.

Will; meaning; intention. Id. Mens testatoris in testamentis spectanda est. The intention of the testator is to be regarded in wills. Jenk. Cent. 277. Actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea, (q. v.) See Animus.

MENS LEGISLATORIS. Lat. The intention of the law-maker. Suarez de Leg. lib. 6, c. 1. Bl. L. Tr. 3.

MENSA. Lat. In the civil law. A table; the table of a money-changer. Dig. 2. 14. 47.

MENSIS. Lat. In civil and old English law. A month. Dig. 50. 17. 101. Mensis vetitus; the prohibited month; fence-month, (q. v.)

MENSOR. Lat. [from metiri, to measure.] In the civil law. A measurer of land; a surveyor. Dig. 11. 6. Id. 50. 6. 6. Cod. 12. 28.

MENSULARIUS. Lat. [from mensa, a table.] In the civil law. A money-changer or dealer in money, (nummularius.) Dig. 2. 14. 47. 1.

MENSURA. Lat. In old English law. A measure. Una mensura vini sit per totum regnum nostrum, et una mensura cervisiæ, et una mensura bladi; there shall be one measure of wine throughout our whole realm, and one measure of ale, and one measure of grain. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. c. 25.

MENSURA DOMINI REGIS. L. Lat. The king's measure. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 1. Otherwise called mensura regalis; the standard measure kept in the exchequer. Cowell. 1 Bl. Com. 276.

MENTIRI. Lat. To lie; to assert a falsehood. Mentiri est contra mentem ire; to lie is to go against the mind. An etymology of the civilians, adopted in some of the old reports. Calv. Lex. 3 Bulstr. 260.

MERCANDISA, Merchandisa, Mercandisia. L. Lat. In old English law. Merchandize; all goods and wares exposed to sale in fairs or markets. Paroch. Antiq. 311. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. c. 14. Bract. fol. 57.

MERCANTILE LAW. The law of trade; that branch of law which defines and enforces the rights and duties of merchants or mercantile persons; embracing the law of partnership, of principal and agent, of bills and notes, of sale, of bailment, guaranty, and lien, the law of shipping, of insurance, &c.

MERCAT. An old form of market, common in Scotch law, closely formed from the Lat. mercatum, (q. v.)

MERCATIO. Lat. [from mercari, to buy.] A buying; a trafficking or trading.

MERCATOR. Lat. [from mercari, to buy.] In civil and old English law. A trader; a merchant. Strictly, a buyer. It included all sorts of traders or buyers and sellers. Cowell. Mag. Chart. 9 Hen. III. cc. 14, 30. 2 Show. 325. Bract. fol. 334. The Lombards, in the thirteenth century, were called mercatores and campsores. 1 Rob. Charles V. Appendix, Note xxx. See Merchant.

A mercer. 2 Show. 326.

MERCATUM, Mercatus, Mercadum, Marcatum, Marcadum. L. Lat. [from mercari, to buy.] In old European law. A place of public buying and selling; a place of trade or traffic; a market; (forum rerum venalium, locus publicæ mercationis.) Spelman. Marcatum, mercadum, and marcadum are used in continental law. Mercatum is used by Bracton and other English writers. Bract. fol. 56 b, 235. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 28, §§ 13, 14. Mercatus occurs in the civil law. Cod. 4. 60. 1.

MERCEN-LAGE, Merchen-lage, Merchen-lae. [Sax. Myrcnalag; L. Lat. Merchenelega.] The Mercian law, or law of the Mercians. One of the three principal systems of laws which prevailed in England, in the times of the Saxons; being that which was observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales. Spelman. 1 Bl. Com. 65.

MERCES. Lat. In the civil law. Hire or compensation; the reward of labor, whether money or other thing. Dig. 19. 2. 2. Calv. Lex.

MERCHANDIZE. [L. Lat. merchandisa, mercandisa; Lat. merx.] Articles of trade or traffic; subjects of commerce; things bought and sold, or bought to be sold again.* "The term merchandize is usually, if not universally, limited to things that are ordinarily bought and sold, or are ordinarily the subjects of commerce and traffic." "The fact that a thing is sometimes bought and sold, is no proof that it is merchandize." Story J. 2 Story's R. 16, 53. "The term merchandize is usually applied to specific articles, having a sensible intrinsic value, bulk, weight or measure in themselves, and not merely evidences of value." Id. 54. On this ground, bank bills were held not to be merchandize. Id. ibid. See 6 Wendell's R. 335. On the other hand, silver dollars were held to be merchandize. 2 Mason's R. 467. In other cases, a broader meaning has been claimed for the word. 3 Metcalf's R. 365, 367, Wilde, J.

MERCHANT. [L. Fr. marchant; Lat. mercator, from mercari, to buy.] Strictly, a buyer; one who buys to sell, or buys and sells; a trader; one who deals in the purchase and sale of goods; a dealer in merchandize.

One who traffics or carries on trade with foreign countries; one who exports and imports goods, and sells them by wholesale. Webster. This is considered by Webster the proper sense of the word; but there is nothing in the etymology, or in the application of the equivalent words in Latin and French, which warrants such a restriction of meaning. It appears to have grown out of mercantile usage, and it is very properly said by the editor of Cowell, that mercator, the Latin equivalent, embraced all sorts of traders or buyers and sellers, and that the Scotch, in calling their pedlars merchants, keep the primitive use of the word. Indeed, Bracton expressly applies the term mercator to those itinerant chapmen for whose benefit the courts of pepoudrous or piepouders were held. Bract. fol. 334. In 2 Show. 326, it was said, "in the country, every shop-keeper is styled a merchant."

MERCIMONIA. Lat. In old writs. Wares. Mercimonia et merchandizas; wares and merchandizes. Reg. Brev. Appendix, 10.

MERCY. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Fr. merci; L. Lat. misericordia.] In old practice. The arbitrament or discretion of the king, lord or judge, in punishing any offence, not directly censured by the law. Cowell. To be "in mercy" seems to have originally signified, to be subject to the discretion of the king, &c. as to the amount of punishment. Hence were framed the Fr. amercir, and English amerce, and amercement, denoting the imposition of a pecuniary punishment in general terms. See Amerce, Amercement, In mercy. Occasionally, however, it was used to denote a fixed sum. Soit en nostre mercy à cent sous; shall be in our mercy at a hundred shillings. Britt. c. 22, fol. 59.

MERE. L. Fr. Mother. Aele, mere, fille; grandmother, mother, daughter. Britt. c. 89, fol. 180 b.

MERE RIGHT. [L. Lat. merum jus; L. Fr. meer droit.] The mere right of property in land; the jus proprietatis, without either possession or even the right of possession. 2 Bl. Com. 197. The abstract right of property.

MERE-STONE. In old English law. A stone for bounding or dividing lands. Yearb. P. 18 Hen. VI. 5.

MEREMIUM. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. meresme, mereme.] In old English and Scotch law. Timber. Ad buscam, meremium, corticem vel carbonem emendum; to buy brush-wood, timber, bark or coal. Cart. de For. c. 14. Skene de Verb. Sign. See Mæremium.

MERENNIUM, Merennum. L. Lat. In old records. Timber. Cowell. A corruption of meremium, (q. v.)

MERGER. [from Fr. merger, to drown, from Lat. mergere, to plunge.] The drowning, sinking, absorption or extinguishment of one estate in another.* The extinguishment by act of law, of one estate in another, by the union of the two estates. Preston on Merger, 7. The consolidation of a greater estate with a less.* "It is a general principle of law, that where a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately annihilated, or, in the law phrase, is said to be merged, that is, sunk or drowned in the greater. Thus, if there be tenant for years, and the reversion in fee simple descends to, or is purchased by him, the term of years is merged in the inheritance, and shall never exist any more." 2 Bl. Com. 177. 1 Steph. Com. 293. 4 Kent's Com. 99. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 1057, § 2447. Lee on Abstracts, 255. So, a term for years may merge in another term that is immediately reversionary to, or expectant upon it. Id. ibid. 4 Kent's Com. 99.

The absorption or extinguishment of one contract in another. Where an engagement has been made by way of simple contract, and afterwards the same engagement is entered into between the same parties by deed, the simple contract is merged in the deed, and becomes totally extinguished.* Smith on Contracts, 18. 2 Penn. R. 533. 1 Watts & Serg. R. 83.

MERIDIES. L. Lat. In old English law. Noon. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, § 31.

MERESME, Mereme. L. Fr. Timber. Yearb. H. 9 Edw. III. 4. P. 7 Hen. VI. 47.

MERITS. In practice. Matter of substance in law, as distinguished from matter of mere form; a substantial ground of defence in law. A defendant is said "to swear to merits," or "to make affidavit of merits," when he makes affidavit that he has a good and sufficient or substantial defence to the action on the merits. 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 543, 544. Merits, in this application of it, has the technical sense of merits in law, and is not confined to a strictly moral and conscientious defence. Id. 545. 1 Burr. Pr. 214.

MERS. In old English law. Marshy ground. Spelman.

MERTON, Statute of. A celebrated English statute, passed in the 20th year of the reign of Henry III. A. D. 1253. So called, because the parliament was then holden at the monastery or priory of the canons regular of Merton, in Surrey, seven miles distant from the city of London. 2 Inst. 79. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 46. Mr. Barrington observes that it seems to be only an ordinance. Id. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, 9, 10, note, (Runnington's ed. 1820.) It is the first of those old statutes which Sir Matthew Hale describes as not being of record, but only their memorials preserved in ancient printed and MS. books of statutes. Id. 18. Bracton calls it the Constitutio de Merton. Bract. fol. 227.

MERUM. Lat. In old English law. Mere; naked or abstract. Merum jus; mere right. Bract. fol. 31. Majus jus merum; more mere right. Id. ibid. See Mere right.

MERUM IMPERIUM. Lat. In the civil law. The simple power of punishment. Halifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 8, num. 5.

MERX. Lat. Merchandize; moveable articles that are bought and sold; articles of trade. See infra.

Merx est quicquid vendi potest. Merchandize is whatever can be sold. Every personal thing for which merchants traffic may be called merchandize. Com. 355. 3 Wooddes. Lect. 263. Wilde, J. 3 Metcalf's R. 365, 367. The broad terms of this maxim are qualified by the following.

Mercis appellatio ad res mobiles tantum pertinet. The term merchandize belongs to moveable things only. Dig. 50. 16. 66.

Mercis appellatione homines non contineri. Men are not included under the denomination of merchandize. Dig. 50. 16. 207. Man is never comprehended under the name of merchandize. Emer. Tr. des Ass. ch. 8, sect. 4.

MES, Meas, Mas. L. Fr. But. Britt. passim. Litt. passim. Kelham. Mes vide; but see. T. Raym. 11. Mes adjornat; but it is adjourned. Id. 201, 208.

MESQUE. L. Fr. Except; unless. Fet Assaver, § 23.

MES. tof. mo. co. gar. ter. pra. pas. bos. brue. mora, Junca. maris. alne. rus. re. sectare priora.

A rhyming couplet artificially constructed by the old practitioners in real actions, for the more easy remembrance of the rule requiring the various parcels of land which might be demanded in a writ of right, to be named in a certain order. It consists of the first syllables of the following words: *Mes*suagium, *tof*tum, *mo*lendinum, *co*lumbare, *gar*dinum, *ter*ra, *pra*tum, *pas*tura, *bos*cus, *brue*ra mora, *Junca*ria, *maris*cus, *alne*tum, *rus*caria, *re*ditus; (in English, messuage, toft, mill, dovehouse, garden, land, meadow, pasture, wood, heath, moor, rush-ground, marsh, alder-ground, broom-ground, rent;) the words sectare priora (follow the first syllables) denoting how it was to be read. F. N. B. 2 C. In the Register, the complementary syllables are written over each of the abbreviations. Reg. Orig. 2.

MESAVENTURE. L. Fr. A mischance. Defined by Britton to be, where persons die by falling from trees, ships, carts, horses, mills, &c. Britt. c. 7, fol. 6, 15 b. See Misadventure.

MISCREAUNTES. L. Fr. In old English law. Apostates; unbelievers; infidels. Classed by Britton with the worst criminals; as murderers, robbers, prison-breakers, sorcerers, poisoners, &c. Britt. c. 29. Hence the term miscreant. 4 Bl. Com. 44. Otherwise written mescroyantz. Id. ibid. note.

MESCRU. L. Fr. Suspected of crime; guilty. Britt. c. 1, 4.

MESE, Mees, Meas. L. Fr. In old English law. A house. Litt. sect. 69, 71, 701. Derived by Spelman, with the L. Lat. messuagium, from the O. Lat. massa, another form of mansa or mansus. Spelman, voc. Mansus.

MESFAIT. L. Fr. A misdeed; an offence. Britt. c. 29, fol. 71 b.

MESFESOUR. L. Fr. A wrong-doer; an offender; a criminal. Britt. c. 15, 22, 29.

MESME. L. Fr. The same. Frequently contracted to m̄. Reg. Orig. 17, nota.

MESNALTY, Mesnality. In old English law. The estate or right of a mesne, (q. v.) Termes de la Ley.

MESNE. L. Fr. and Eng. [Lat. medius.] Middle; intermediate; between two persons or proceedings. See Medius and infra.

An intermediate lord; a lord who stood between a tenant and the chief lord; a lord who was also a tenant. "Lord, mesne, and tenant; the tenant holdeth by four pence, and the mesne by twelve pence." Co. Litt. 23 a.

MESNE LORD. In old English law. A middle or intermediate lord; a lord who held of a superior lord. 2 Bl. Com. 59. More commonly termed a mesne, (q. v.)

MESNE PROCESS. In practice. Intermediate process; process intervening between the beginning and end of a suit. 3 Bl. Com. 279. Process not only for the plaintiff against the defendant, but for either of them against any other whose presence in the court may be necessary for them; as against juries, witnesses, or to execute judgments given. Finch's Law, b. 4, ch. 43.

The writ of capias ad respondendum. Called mesne, to distinguish it on the one hand, from the original process by which a suit was formerly commenced; and on the other, from the final process of execution. 3 Bl. Com. 279.

MESNE PROFITS. [L. Lat. media proficua.] In practice. Intermediate profits; profits which have been accruing between two given periods. Holthouse. Profits of land, which a tenant has received during the period of his wrongful possession; and which, after a recovery in ejectment, may be recovered by an action of trespass. 3 Bl. Com. 205. In New-York, a proceeding by suggestion has been substituted for an action. 2 Rev. St. [310,] 236, § 44.

MESNER. L. Fr. To lead; to conduct or manage. Kelham. See Mener.

MESPRENDRE. L. Fr. To misbehave; to do amiss; to offend. Kelham.

To mistake. Id. This is the literal meaning.

MESPRISION. L. Fr. [from mesprendre, q. v.] Mistake; a mistaking. Par mesprision de nosmes nomables; by mistake of names that should be named. Britt. c. 48, fol. 123 b.

MESS BRIEF. Germ. In Danish sea law. One of a ship's papers; a certificate of admeasurement granted at the home port of a vessel, by the government or by some other competent authority. Jacobsen's Sea Laws, 51.

MESSIS. Lat. A harvest or crop. Messis sementem sequitur. The crop belongs to [follows] the sower. A maxim in Scotch law. Where a person is in possession of land which he has reason to believe is his own, and sows that land, he will have a right to the crops, although before it is cut down, it should be discovered that another has a preferable title to the land. Bell's Dict.

MESSOINGES. L. Fr. Lies. Kelham.

MESSOR. Lat. In old English law. A reaper. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 4. See Id. c. 84.

MESSUAGE. [L. Lat. messuagium, mesuagium; L. Fr. mease, meason.] A dwelling-house, with some adjacent land assigned to the use thereof. Cowell. Spelman.—A dwelling-house with the adjacent buildings, including garden, orchard and curtilage.* Co. Litt. 5 b, 6. Burton's Real Prop. 175, pl. 546. Held, in some of the old cases, to be a word of larger import than house; the latter word comprehending buildings only. Keilw. 57. But this is now overruled in England. 2 Term R. 498. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 74, § 89. And see Cro. Jac. 634. Which is merely restoring the ancient interpretation of the word; it having been held, as far back as the Year Books, that there was no difference between a house and a messuage. Fairfax, J. M. 21 Edw. IV. 62. Thel. Dig. lib. 8, c. 1, ¶ 6. See acc. 4 Penn. St. (Barr's) R. 93. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 338. See House, Messuagium.

This word, which is still of constant occurrence in conveyances and wills, is derived by Spelman from the L. Lat. or Ital. massa, (q. v.) or old Fr. mas, answering to the L. Fr. mese, (q. v.)

MESSUAGIUM, Mesuagium. L. Lat. A messuage. Reg. Orig. 1. Cro. Jac. 634. Messuagium sive domus, (a messuage or house,) are one and the same. Id. ibid. This identity of signification is confirmed by the use of mesuagium in the Magna Charta of 9 Hen. III. as the synonyme of domus, in the charter of King John, c. 7.

MESTER, Mestre, Meister. L. Fr. Need; occasion. Si mester soit; if need be. Britt. c. 1. Il n'est pas mestre; there is no need. Yearb. P. 6 Edw. III. 5.

MESTIER. L. Fr. Business; occupation. Un coroner que face le mestier de la corone; a coroner who shall attend to the affairs of the crown. Britt. fol. 2.

MESURE. L. Fr. Measure. Britt. c. 30.

META. Lat. The goal of a Roman race-course; a mark or object about which the chariots turned, and where the course ended.

In old English law. A boundary line; a border or terminus. Properly, a visible object, standing upon the line, as a stone or tree, and showing where it ended; a butt. See *Butts and bounds. MILITIA. Lat. and Eng. [from miles, a soldier.] Military service. The national soldiery of a country, as distinguished from the standing military force; consisting of the able-bodied male inhabitants of a prescribed age, who are enrolled, officered, mustered and trained according to law, but are called into active service only on emergent occasions, such as insurrection or invasion, for the public defence. Act of Congress, May 8, 1792. United States Digest, Militia. 1 Kent's Com. 262, 266.

"MILL," is a tenement. Burr. Sett. Cas. 107, 108.

"MILL," held to mean not merely the building in which the business is carried on, but the site, dam, and other things connected with the freehold. Story, J. 3 Mason's R. 280. The grant of a saw-mill or grist-mill, with its privileges and appurtenances, will pass the land under it, and that required for the use of the mill; also the head of water necessary to its enjoyment, and the right of flowing back upon other lands of the grantor. 3 Shepl. R. 218. 5 Id. 281. So, in the case of a devise of a mill and the appurtenances. 3 Mason's R. 280. 1 Serg. & Rawle's R. 169. See Angell on Water-Courses, §§ 153—157.

"MILL SITE." The grant of a mill site passes all the land covered by the mill. 2 Appl. 61. The exception in a lease, of a mill site, includes not merely an easement, but the soil of the mill site, and all the land necessary for the pond and for carrying on the mill. 6 Cowen's R. 677. See Ang. on Water-Courses, § 153 a.

MILLENA. L. Lat. [from Lat. mille, a thousand.] In old English practice. A thousand. Towns. Pl. 171.

MILNE. An old form of mill; as millner was of miller. Plymouth Col. Laws, 1636, 1638. It appears to be immediately derived from the Fr. molin, (q. v.)

MINA. L. Lat. In old English law. A measure of corn or grain. Cowell. Spelman.

MIND AND MEMORY. A phrase applied to testators, denoting the possession of mental capacity to make a will. In order to make a valid will, the testator must have a sound and disposing mind and memory. In other words, he ought to be capable of making his will, with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged,—a recollection of the property he means to dispose of,—of the persons who are the objects of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them. Washington, J. 3 Wash. C. C. R. 385, 386.

"MINE," held to have the sense of quarry. 14 Mees. & W. 859, 872, Parke, B. quoting Jacob.

MINERA. L. Lat. In old English law. A mine. Co. Litt. 6 a. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 8. 4 Mod. 143.

"MINERALS," held to include all fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines. 14 Mees. & W. 859. Such as beds of stone which may be dug by winning or quarrying. Id. ibid. Parke, B.

MINIME. Lat. In the least degree; least of all; by no means; not at all. Minime mutanda sunt quæ certam habuerunt interpretationem. Things which have had a certain interpretation, [whose interpretation has been settled, as by common opinion,] are not to be altered. Co. Litt. 365. Wingate's Max. 748, max. 202.

MINIMENT. An old form of muniment, (q. v.) Blount.

MINIMUS, Minimum. Lat. The least; the smallest. Minima pœna corporalis est major qualibet pecuniaria. The smallest corporal punishment is greater than any pecuniary one. 2 Inst. 220.

Minimum est nihilo proximum. The least is the nearest to nothing. Bacon's Arg. Low's case of Tenures.

MINISTER. Lat. and Eng. [L. Fr. ministre.] An assistant; an attendant.* A servant. Hob. 125. One who executes the orders of another.* A chief servant; an agent. Webster.

An officer of justice, charged with the execution of the law, and hence termed a ministerial officer; such as a sheriff, bailiff, coroner, sheriff's officer. Britt. c. 21. The Roman prætor's attendants were called ministri. Adam's Rom. Ant. 133. In the old books, the term is applied to all officers assisting in the administration of justice, such as clerks, serjeants, attorneys, &c. and even to the justices themselves. Britt. ub. sup. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 25. 2 Inst. 208.

In Saxon law. A thane. Spelman.

In international law. A diplomatic agent or representative; as a minister plenipotentiary, a resident minister. Wheaton's Intern. Law, 264, [273.] 1 Kent's Com. 39, 40.

MINISTERIAL. [from minister, q. v.] Attendant upon; subservient, subordinate. "Those magistrates who have a certain imperium, but without jurisdiction, are called ministerial officers." Hale's Anal. sect. xii.

MINISTERIUM. Lat. [from minister, q. v.] Ministry; attendance; service; office. Calv. Lex. Spelman.

MINOR. Lat. Less; younger. See Minus.

MINOR. Lat. and Eng. A minor, or infant. A term derived from the civil law, which described a person under a certain age, as less than so many years. Minor viginti quinque annis; one less than twenty-five years of age. Inst. 1. 14. 2. The correlative term was major, (as major viginti quinque annis,) but this has not been adopted in English. Bracton and Fleta use the word minor alone, in its modern sense of infant. Bract. fol. 340 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 26.

Minor jurare non potest. A minor cannot make oath. Co. Litt. 172 b. An infant cannot be sworn on a jury. Litt. sect. 259. A maxim of practice, taken even anciently in a qualified sense. Co. Litt. ub. sup. It seems to be derived from the rule of the civil law, Pupillo non defertur jusjurandum. Dig. 12. 2. 34. 2.

Minor 17 annis non admittitur fore executorem. A person under seventeen years is not admitted to be an executor. 6 Co. 67, Sir Moyle Finch's case. A rule of ecclesiastical law. See Age.

Minor minorem custodire non debet, alios enim præsumitur male regere qui seipsum regere nescit. A minor ought not to be guardian to a minor, for he who knows not how to govern himself, is presumed to be unfit to govern others. Co. Litt. 88 b.

MINOR. Lat. In old English law. A person of lower condition. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, §§ 13, 15.

MINOR ÆTAS. Lat. In old English law. Minority or infancy. Cro. Car. 516. Literally, lesser age.

MINOR FACT. In the law of evidence. A relative, collateral or subordinate fact; a circumstance. Wills, Circ. Evid. 27. Burr. Circ. Evid. 121, note, 582.

MINORA REGALIA. L. Lat. In English law. The lesser prerogatives of the crown, including the rights of the revenue. 1 Bl. Com. 241.

MINORITY. [Lat. minor ætas, contracted into minoritas.] The state of being under, or less than a certain age; in the civil law, under twenty-five, (minor viginti quinque annis;) in the common law, under twenty-one. See Infancy, Minor.

MINUERE. Lat. [from minus, less.] In the civil law. To make less; to diminish or reduce. Dig. 4. 5. 2. 2.

MINUM. L. Lat. A technical word used in old practice, when the records were written in Latin, descriptive of the marks or strokes composing the letters i, m, n, and u, and obviously made up from those letters. If a word ended with um, it was said to have five minums at the end. 1 Inst. Cler. 15.

MINUS. Lat. Less. In many phrases of the civil law, this word had the sense of not. Thus, a debt was said to be minus solutum, though none of it had been paid. Minus solutum intelligitur etiam si nihil esset solutum. Dig. 50. 16. 32. So, if paid at a later time than was agreed on. Minus solvit qui tardius solvit. Dig. 50. 16. 12. 1. So, in some common law phrases. Minus satis; insufficient. Cro. Jac. 552. Minus sufficiens in literatura; incompetent in point of learning. 1 Bl. Com. 390. 4 Mod. 134.

In eo quod plus sit, semper inest et minus. In the greater is always included the less also. Dig. 50. 17. 110.

MINUTE. L. Fr. [from mi, middle, and nuyt, night.] Midnight. Britt. c. 80.

MINUTE TITHES. [L. Lat. minutæ, or minores decimæ.] In old English law. Small tithes, such as usually belong to the vicar; as herbs, seeds, eggs, honey, wax, &c. Cowell. 2 Inst. 649.

MINUTES. In Scotch practice. A pleading put into writing before the Lord Ordinary, as the ground of his judgment. Bell's Dict.

MINUTIO. Lat. [from minuere, q. v.] In the civil law. A lessening; diminution or reduction. Dig. 4. 5. 1.

MINUTUS. L. Lat. In old English law. Small. Minutis curiis; in small courts. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 20.

MIRROR OF JUSTICES, commonly called THE MIRROR. The title of an old treatise written in law French, and generally attributed to Andrew Horne, who was chamberlain of London in the time of Edw. II. though the share which Horne had in the work has been a matter of dispute. Lord Coke supposes that the greater part of it was written before the Conquest, and that Horne added many things to it in the reign of Edward I. 9 Co. pref. 10 Id. pref. Dugdale supposes that Horne composed the work from an old law tract called Speculum Justitiariorum. Dugd. Orig. Jur. 23. Mr. Reeves is of the opinion that a great part of it was written after Fleta and Britton. 2 Reeves' Hist. 358. It was first published in 1642. Crabb's Hist. 224, 225. Mr. Barrington remarks that the word mirror, (Lat. speculum; Germ. spiegel,) is used as the title of some of the oldest law books. Obs. Stat. 1, 2, note [b.]

MIS'. An abbreviation of misis. 1 Inst. Cler. 11.

MISA. L. Lat. In old English law. The mise or issue in a writ of right. Spelman. See Mise.

MISÆ. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. mise, q. v.] In old practice. Costs of suit; charges. Spelman. T. Raym. 20. Cum misis et custibus. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 13. Pro misis et custagiis. Dyer, 75, (Fr. ed.) Kitchin and West are referred to in Cowell, as using the singular misa, but this was rare.

Expenses generally. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 2.

MISADVENTURE. [L. Fr. mesaventure; L. Lat. infortunium.] In criminal law. Mischance; misfortune or accident. See Mesaventure. This term is differently defined by Britton, Staundford and West. Britt. c. 7. Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 1, c. 8. West's Symbol. part. 2, tit. Indictment, sect. 48—50. Cowell.

MISCONTINUANCE. In practice. An improper continuance; want of proper form in a continuance. Cowell makes it to be the same with discontinuance.

MISCREANT. In old English law. An apostate; an unbeliever; one who totally renounced Christianity. 4 Bl. Com. 44.

MISDEMEAN. In old English law. To use improperly; to abuse. "If he misdemean an authority." Finch's Law, b. 1, ch. 3, num. 63.

MISDEMEANOUR, Misdemesnor: In criminal law. A less heinous species of crime; an indictable offence, not amounting to felony. 4 Chitt. Bl. Com. 5, and note.

According to Blackstone, crime and misdemeanour, properly speaking, are mere synonymous terms. 4 Bl. Com. ub. sup. 4 Steph. Com. 57.

MISE. L. Fr. Cost or expense. Cowell. But it is most commonly used in the plural, (mises,) like the L. Lat. misæ. Britt. c. 17. Kelham.

MISE. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Lat. missum.] In old English practice. The issue in real actions, particularly in writs of right. So called, because both parties put themselves upon the mere right, and the whole cause was put [missa] upon this point. Co. Litt. 294 b. Lord Coke seems to consider this word to be derived from the Lat. mittere, to put. But it appears to be essentially French, from mettre, to put. Crabb's Hist. 422. Et il joyne le mise sur le mere droit; and he join the mise upon the mere right. Litt. sect. 478. Le mise est joyne en le bank. Id. sect. 514. The word is still used in practice, in some of the United States. 10 Grattan's R. 350.

MISE-MONEY. In old records. Money given by way of contract or composition to purchase any liberty, &c. Cowell. Blount.

Misera est servitus, ubi jus est vagum aut incertum [incognitum.] It is a wretched state of slavery, where the law is shifting or uncertain, [unknown.] 4 Inst. 246. It is one of the genuine marks of servitude, to have the law, which is our rule of action, either concealed or precarious. 1 Bl. Com. 416. Obedience to law becomes a hardship, when the law is unsettled or doubtful. Broom's Max. 62.

MISERABILE DEPOSITUM. Lat. In the civil law. A sad or lamentable deposit; one made under circumstances of sorrow or misfortune, such as insurrection, fire, shipwreck, &c. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 15, § 812. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 7, sect. 13.

MISERERE. Lat. Have mercy. The first word (in the Latin version) of the fifty-first psalm, from which the whole psalm was called the Miserere, or psalm of mercy. It was the first verse of this that the ordinary commonly gave to such malefactors to read, as had the benefit of clergy allowed them by law. Cowell.

MISERICORDIA. L. Lat. In old practice. Mercy. See In misericordia, Mercy.

An amercement. The old writ De moderata misericordia lay where a man had been outrageously amerced, to moderate or mitigate it. F. N. B. 75. Si inciderit in misericordiam; et nulla prædictarum misericordiarum ponatur, nisi per sacramentum proborum et legalium hominum de visneto; if he fall into mercy; and none of the aforesaid amercements shall be imposed unless by the oath of good and lawful men of the visne. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 14. Id. Johan. c. 20.

MISES, Myses. L. Fr. Expenses or costs. 2 Inst. 528. Sauve al trovour ses mises, et ses costages renables; saving to the finder his expenses and his reasonable costs. Britt. c. 17.

Tasks; taxes; talliages or takings. Stat. Confirm. Chart. c. 5. 2 Inst. 528.

The doing what a party ought to do, improperly. 1 Tidd's Pr. 4. The improper performance of some act which a man may lawfully do. 3 Steph. Com. 460.

MISHERSING. In old English law. The being quit of amercements for plaints in any courts, not regularly or properly preferred. Spelman.

MISJOINDER. In practice. Improper joinder or union. Used to denote the improper union of parties as plaintiffs or defendants in an action, and the improper union of causes of action in one suit. 1 Chitt. Pl. 13, 44, 66, 86, 205.

MISKENNING. In Saxon and old English law. An unjust or irregular summoning to court; to speak unsteadily in court; to vary in one's plea. Cowell. Blount. Spelman.

MISLIER, Mislyer. L. Fr. To choose the wrong; to mistake. Kelham. L. Fr. Dict.

MISNOMER. [from Fr. mes, amiss, and nomer, to name.] The using one name for another; a misnaming. The misnomer of a defendant is ground for pleading in abatement. 1 Chitt. Pl. 248, 451. In England, this is no longer allowed in personal actions. Id. ibid. Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 11. As to the effect of misnomer in a deed, see Shep. Touch. (by Preston,)

233, 245, 373. As to the effect of misnomer in a will, see Id. 416. 1 Jarman on Wills, 330, (328, Perkins' ed. note.)

MISPLEADING. Error in pleading; informal pleading, as pleading not guilty to an action of debt, instead of nil debet. 1 Salk. 365. 2 Tidd's Pr. 924. 1 Chitt. Pl. 682.

MISPRISION. [L. Fr. mesprision, q. v.] In old practice. Neglect; oversight; mistake; as the misprision of a clerk in writing or keeping a record. Stat. 14 Edw. III. c. 6, st. 1. Stat. 8 Hen. VI. c. 15. Crompt. Jur. fol. 20. Cowell. Blount.

In criminal law. Neglect or light account made of a crime; omission to reveal it. Misprision of treason is the bare knowledge and concealment of treason, without any degree of assent thereto, for any assent makes the party a principal traitor. 4 Bl. Com. 120. 4 Steph. Com. 200. Misprision of felony is the concealment of a felony committed by another, without such previous concert with, or subsequent assistance of the latter, as will make the party concealing an accessory before or after the fact. 4 Steph. Com. 260. These are misprisions in the proper sense of the term. Contempts and high misdemeanors were formerly termed positive misprisions. 4 Bl. Com. 121.

MISRECITAL. In conveyancing. Error in the recital of an instrument. As to the effect of misrecital, see Shep. Touch. (by Preston,) 77.

MISREPRESENTATION. A false or erroneous representation. A misrepresentation of a material fact, whether it be made through mistake or design, avoids a policy of insurance underwritten on the faith thereof. 1 Story's R. 57. See Representation.

The jurisdiction, circuit or territory of a missus, (q. v.) Id.

MISSILIA. Lat. [from mittere, to send or throw.] In the Roman law. Gifts or liberalities, which the prætors and consuls were in the habit of throwing among the people. Inst. 2. 1. 45.

MISSING SHIP. In maritime law. A vessel is so called when, computed from her known day of sailing, the time that has elapsed exceeds the average duration of similar voyages at the same season of the year. 2 Duer on Ins. 469. It is identical in meaning with the phrase "out of time," but is used by merchants and insurers in a different sense. Id. ibid.

MISSIO. Lat. [from mittere, to send or put.] In the civil law. A sending or putting. Missio in bona; a putting the creditor in possession of the debtor's property. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 378, § 344. 4 Reeves' Hist. 20. 2 Kames' Equity, 208.

Missio judicum in consilium; a sending out of the judices (or jury,) to make up their sentence. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 13, num. 31.

MISSIVES. In Scotch practice. Writings passed between parties as evidence of a transaction. Bell's Dict.

MISSUS, (plur. MISSI.) L. Lat. [from mittere, to send.] In old European law. A legate; a messenger, (nuncius;) a commissary, or commissioner, (commissarius;) a deputy, substitute or representative, (vicarius;) an attorney. Spelman. One who was sent on the business of another.

Missus regalis; a king's legate, commissary or commissioner; a king's justice. Spelman.

Missus dominicus; a king's justice or commissioner; an extraordinary and itinerant judge. Spelman. Esprit des Loix, liv. 28, c. 28. 1 Rob. Charles V. Appendix, note xxiii. See Steph. Lect. 81, 197.

MIST. L. Fr. Put. See Mitter.

MISTAKE, in equity, as distinguished from accident, is some unintentional act, or omission or error, arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition or misplaced confidence. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 110.

MISTERIUM. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. mestier.] A trade or occupation; a mystery. Spelman.

MISTRIAL. In practice. A false or erroneous trial, as where it is in a wrong county. Cro. Car. 284.

MISUSER. Abuse of an office or franchise. 2 Bl. Com. 153.

MITIOR SENSUS. L. Lat. The milder or more favorable sense. It was the old rule to construe slanderous words in the mildest sense, and to arrest the judgment if it was found possible to take them in any other sense than that of imputing a felony, or infamous misdemeanor. See 4 Co. 13 a. The old doctrine of mitior sensus is now, however, altogether exploded; and where words may be taken in a double sense, the court, after verdict, will always construe them in that sense which may support the verdict. Cooke's Law of Defamation, 13. 8 Mod. R. 24, 240.

Mitius imperanti melius paretur. The more mildly one commands, the better is he obeyed. 3 Inst. 24.

MITTA. L. Lat. [from Sax. mitten.] An ancient Saxon measure in use before the Conquest, the quantity of which is not known with certainty; some holding it to be the same with corus, others with modius, (a bushel,) and others that it was a measure of ten bushels. Blount. Cowell. Spelman.

MITTER. L. Fr. To put (a case;) to suppose. Mountague mist cest case. Dyer, 23 b.

MITTER AVANT. L. Fr. In old practice. To put before; to present before a court; to produce in court. Mist avant un fait; produced a deed. Yearb. M. 5 Edw. III. 119.

MITTER LE DROIT. L. Fr. In old English law. To put or pass the right; passing the right. 2 Bl. Com. 325. En ascun cas, un releas urera de mitter tout le droit que il que fait le releas ad, à celuy à que le release est fait; in some cases, a release shall enure to put all the right which he who maketh the release hath, to him to whom the release is made. Litt. sect. 306. See Hale's Anal. sect. xxxv.

MITTER L' ESTATE. L. Fr. In old English law. To put or pass the estate; passing the estate. Ascun foits un releas prendra effect et urera pur mitter l' estate de celuy que fist le release à celuy à que le releas est fait; sometimes a release shall take effect and enure to put the estate of him which makes the release, to him to whom the release is made. Litt. sect. 305. 2 Bl. Com. 325. See Release.

MITTERE. Lat. To send; to put. Mittere in confusum; to put in hotchpot; to put into a common stock. LL. Longobard. b. 2, tit. 14, c. 15. 2 Bl. Com. 190. Nec super eum mittemus; nor will we send upon him; that is, we will not send any judge or commissioner to condemn him. Magna Charta, c. 29. 2 Inst. 46. 1 Reeves' Hist. 249. See Missus dominicus. Quod me extunc possim in terram illam mittere; that I may thereafter put myself into that land. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 18.

MITTIMUS. L. Lat. [from mittere, q. v.] (We send.) In old practice. A writ by which records were removed and transferred from one court to another. Reg. Orig. 169 b, 170.

In criminal practice. A precept or warrant granted by a justice, for committing an offender to gaol, where bail is not allowed, or cannot be obtained.* 4 Bl. Com. 300.

MITTOMUS. L. Fr. [from mitter, q. v.] Let us suppose; put the case; admit. Litt. sect. 302.

MIXED ACTION. [Lat. actio mixta, or mista.] In the civil law. An action in which some specific thing was demanded, and also some personal obligation claimed to be performed; or, in other words, an action which proceeded both in rem and in personam. Inst. 4. 6. 20. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 1, num. 5.

An action in which each party was an actor; such as the actions of finium regundorum, familiæ erciscundæ, communi dividundo, and the like. Dig. 44. 7. 37. 1.

In the common law. An action partaking of the nature both of a real and a personal action; wherein some real property is demanded, and also damages for a wrong sustained. 3 Bl. Com. 118. Now abolished in England, with the exception of the action of ejectment. Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.

MIXED, (or COMPOUND) LARCENY. In criminal law. That kind of larceny which also includes in it the aggravation of a taking from one's house or person. 4 Bl. Com. 229. See Larceny.

MIXED TITHES. In English law. That species of tithes which consists of natural products, but nurtured and preserved in part by the care of man; as of wool, milk, &c. 2 Bl. Com. 24.

MIXTUM IMPERIUM. Lat. In old English law. Mixed authority; a kind of civil power. A term applied by Lord Hale to the power of certain subordinate civil magistrates, as distinct from jurisdiction. Hale's Anal. sect. xi.

MOBILIA. Lat. Moveables; moveable things; otherwise called res mobiles. In the civil law, this term properly denoted inanimate objects; animals being designated as moventes, or se moventes, (things moving themselves.) In a more general sense, however, it included both. Dig. 50. 16. 93. Calv. Lex. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 3, § 389. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 6.

Mobilia personam sequuntur, immobilia situm. Moveable things follow the person, immovables their site or locality. 1 Hub.

Prælec. 278. 2 Id. 542. Hub. de Conflict. Leg. sec. 15. Wills of chattels, executed according to the laws of the place of the testator's domicil, will pass personal property in all other countries, though not executed according to their laws. But wills concerning land must be executed according to the prescribed formalities of the state in which the land is situated. 4 Kent's Com. 513. See 2 Id. 67. 2 Greenl. Evid. § 668. An established maxim of public or international law. Bynk. Quæst. Jur. Priv. lib. 1, c. 16. Phillimore on Domicil, 6.

MODALIS. L. Lat. [from modus, q. v.] In old English law. Having the character of a modus; qualified; enlarged or restricted. Non conditionalis nec modalis; not conditional nor qualified. Bract. fol. 23.

MODERAMEN INCULPATÆ TUTELÆ. Lat. In the Roman law. The regulation of justifiable defence. A term used to express that degree of force in defence of the person or property, which a person might safely use, although it should occasion the death of the aggressor. Calv. Lex. Bell's Dict. Otherwise called inculpatæ tutelæ moderatio. Cod. 8. 4.

MODIUS. Lat. In old English law. A bushel. Cowell. Spelman.

A larger measure, of uncertain quantity. Id.

A measure of land. Id.

MODO ET FORMA. L. Lat. In manner and form. Words used in the old Latin forms of pleading by way of traverse, and literally translated in the modern precedents, importing that the party traversing denies the allegation of the other party, not only in its general effect but in the exact manner and form in which it is made. Steph. Pl. 189, 190. As to the effect of this expression, and how it is to be supported by proof, see Id. ibid. Even in the old law, modo et forma were, in many cases, mere words of form. Litt. sect. 483, 485.

MODUS. Lat. In old conveyancing. Mode; manner; the arrangement or expression of the terms of a contract or conveyance; the settling of the manner in which an agreement shall be made, or the manner in which land shall pass; the expression, by a grantor of land, of the particular manner in which the land given shall be held, or what estate shall be had in it, as whether it shall be held for years, for life or in fee; whether by one, or by several; and if by several, whether simultaneously, or successively, &c. Bract. fol. 17. And see the maxim, infra.

A qualification, involving the idea of variance or departure from some general rule or form, either by way of restriction or enlargement, according to the circumstances of a particular case, the will of a donor, the particular agreement of parties, and the like. See infra.

Bracton furnishes the best as well as the oldest illustration of this sense of the term, which was chiefly applied in his time to the then prevailing form of conveyance called donatio, or gift. A simple and pure gift was one made without any qualification or condition annexed to it, (simplex et pura dici poterit, ubi nulla est adjecta conditio nec modus;) as where a man gave land to another for his homage and service, to have and to hold to him and his heirs, of the donor and his heirs, rendering therefor annually so much, at such periods, &c. This was the ordinary form of donation, in accordance with the general rules of law of the period. But the donor might depart from this form if he chose, and enlarge the gift, (in Bracton's words,) by making others quasi heirs, who were not in fact heirs, (augere poterit donationem, et facere alios quasi hæredes, licet revera hæredes non sunt;) as if he were to say in the gift, "to have and to hold to such a one and his heirs, or to whomsoever he may chose to give or assign such land," or, in other words, admitting assigns in addition to heirs. And so, on the other hand, he might restrict or limit (coarctare) the descent of the land to certain heirs, in exclusion of others. Bract. fol. 17, 17 b. It was this species of variation or qualification which was expressed by the technical term modus, and this modus of the gift was so habitually allowed to prevail even against the general rule of law, as to give rise to two leading maxims which follow.

Modus is sometimes translated form, but not, as it appears, with accuracy; form being the proper translation of the Lat. forma, from which modus is often distinguished. See Modo et forma. Strictly, modus denotes the substance of the arrangement; forma, its verbal expression.

Modus et conventio vincunt legem. Manner and agreement overrule law. Bract. fol. 17 b. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 1. Co. Litt.

19 a, 116 a, 180. The qualifying manner (modus) in which a grantor or donor declares that the thing given or granted shall pass, be held or enjoyed, and the particular arrangement of the terms of a contract (conventio) between parties, will be allowed to prevail against a general rule of law. Parties may qualify and even abridge their rights by special agreement.* The conditions annexed to a grant or devise, the covenants inserted in a conveyance or lease, and the agreements, whether in writing or by parol, entered into between parties, have, when duly executed and perfected, and subject to certain restrictions, the force of law over those who are parties to such instruments or agreements. Broom's Max. 303, [538.] Story on Partn. § 134. This maxim applies to all contracts not offensive to sound morals, or [contrary] to positive prohibitions by the legislature. Story on Bailm. § 32.

Modus legem dat donationi. Manner gives law to a gift. Bract. fol. 17 b. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 1. Co. Litt. 19 a. Wright on Ten. 21. Broom's Max. [347.] The manner in which an estate is declared to be given by a feoffment (or gift) governs its operation, and the course of the estate under it. If given to a man and his heirs, a fee is passed by the force of these words. But if given to a man, without limiting or expressing any estate, [or, as it may be said, without declaring any modus,] the grantee has barely an estate for life.* 2 Bl. Com. 310.

Both the above maxims are constantly quoted in modern law, especially the first, which may be considered as the fundamental principle of the law relating to contracts. Broom's Max. 303. Originally, they were rules of the old English law of real estate, and, according to Blackstone, the latter was derived from the feudal maxim, Tenor est qui legem dat feodo. 2 Bl. Com. 310. It is interesting to trace them both to the following passage of Bracton, which is quoted to complete the illustrations already given: MODUS enim LEGEM DAT DONATIONI, et modus tenendus est contra jus commune, et contra legem, quia MODUS ET CONVENTIO VINCUNT LEGEM; ut si dicatur, do tali tantam terram cum pertinentiis in N. habendam et tenendam sibi et hæredibus suis quos de carne sua, et uxore sibi desponsata, procreatos habuerit. Vel sic: Do tali et tali uxori suæ, vel cum tali filia mea, &c. Habendum et tenendum sibi et hæredibus suis de carne talis uxoris, vel filiæ exeuntibus, vel procreatis vel procreandis; quo casû cum certi hæredes exprimantur in donatione, videri poterit quod tantum fit descensus ad ipsos hæredes communes, per MODUM in donatione appositum, omnibus aliis hæredibus suis à successione penitus exclusis, QUIA HOC VOLUIT DONATOR. The manner or qualification gives law to the gift, and the manner is to be observed against common right and against law, because manner and agreement overrule law. As if it be said, "I give to such a one so much land, with the appurtenances, in N. to have and to hold to him and his heirs whom he shall have begotten of his own body and his wife that is espoused to him." Or thus, "I give to such a one, and such a one his wife, or with such a one my daughter, &c. to have and to hold to him and his heirs of the body of such wife or daughter issuing, or begotten, or to be begotten." In which case, since certain heirs are expressed in the donation, it will be seen that the descent [of the land] takes place only to the said heirs in common, by the modus or qualification annexed in the donation, all the other heirs being wholly excluded from the succession, because the donor willed this. Bract. fol. 17 b.

MODUS. L. Lat. In old conveyancing. A consideration; the consideration of a conveyance, technically expressed by the word ut. Do tali tantam terram, &c. UT det mihi tantum, vel UT inveniat mihi necessaria; I give to such a one so much land, &c. that he may give [for him to give—in consideration of his giving] me so much, or find me necessaries. Bract. fol. 18. This was a modus in its proper sense, as distinguished from conditio, (a condition,) though Lord Coke has held them to be synonymous. If the party wished to superadd a condition, the conveyance proceeded in the following terms: quod nisi accipiens tradenti teneat quod convenit, statim liceat sibi se ponere in terram illam, &c.; that unless the party receiving possession should keep his covenant with the other, [that is, as to the payment of the modus,] it should be lawful for the latter immediately to put himself in possession of the land, &c. Bract. ub. sup.

MODUS DECIMANDI, (or simply MODUS.) L. Lat. In English ecclesiastical law. A particular manner of tithing growing out of custom, different from the general law of taking tithes in kind. 2 Bl. Com. 29. 13 Mees. & W. 822.

MODUS DE NON DECIMANDO.

L. Lat. In English ecclesiastical law. A prescription for not tithing; a claim to be entirely discharged of tithes, and to pay no compensation in lieu of them. 2 Bl. Com. 31. This application of the word modus is very reasonably objected to, as inaccurate. 2 Chitt. Bl. Com. 31, note. See 15 Mees. & W. 419.

MODUS LEVANDI FINES. L. Lat. The manner of levying fines. The title of a short statute in French, passed in the 18th year of Edward I. 2 Inst. 510. 2 Bl. Com. 349.

MOEBLE. L. Fr. Moveable. Biens moebles; moveable goods. Britt. c. 11. Biens moebles et nient moebles. Id. c. 98.

MOERYER. L. Fr. To die. Kelham. Si l'engendrure moerge; if the issue die. Britt. c. 102.

MOHATRA. L. Lat. In the civil law. The name of a kind of contract by which one of the parties sells a thing to the other upon credit, and immediately or soon after, either by himself or by means of an agent, buys it back for a less sum in ready money than the price for which he sold it, for which the other party still remains his debtor. Pothier, Contr. of Sale, num. 38. This is condemned in the books as a mere mode of disguising, under the false appearance of a sale, an usurious loan of the sum of money paid. Id. ibid. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 7, § 1227.

MOLENDINUM. L. Lat. [from Lat. molere, to grind.] In old English law. A mill. Reg. Orig. 96. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 71, § 8.

Molendinum bladonicum; a corn-mill. Cowell.

Molendinum ventriticum (or ventritium;) a wind-mill. Id. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 1, § 20.

Molendinum aquaticum; a water-mill. Cowell.

MOLIN. L. Fr. A mill. Molin eweret; a water-mill. Yearb. P. 8 Edw. III. 9.

MOLINUM, Molinus. L. Lat. In old European law. A mill. L. Wisigoth. lib. 8, tit. 4, l. 30. L. Salic. tit. 24, § 1. An older form of molendinum, and perhaps the origin of the L. Fr. molin or molyn, (qq. v.) It occurs also in Domesday Book. Spelman.

MOLITURA, Multura. L. Lat. In old records. A toll paid for grinding; a multure. Paroch. Ant. 120. Cowell.

A grist or sack of corn brought to the mill to be ground. Id.

MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT. L. Lat. (He) gently laid hands upon. Formal words in the old Latin pleas in actions of trespass and assault, where a defendant justified laying hands upon the plaintiff, as where it was done to keep the peace, &c. The phrase is literally translated in the modern precedents, and the original is retained as the name of the plea in such cases. 3 Bl. Com. 21. 1 Chitt. Pl. 501, 502. Id. 1071.

MOLMUTIAN, (or MOLMUTIN) LAWS. Laws ascribed to Dunwallo Molmutius, sixteenth king of the Britons, (who is said to have begun his reign 444 years before Christ.) Cowell. Blount.

MOLT. L. Fr. [from Lat. multus, much.] Much; many; very. Est molt grant folye; it is very great folly. Fet Assaver, § 35. Moltz; (pl.) many. Id. § 32.

MOLUTUS. L. Lat. [corrupted from Lat. molitus, from molere, to grind.] In old English law. Ground; sharpened by grinding; sharp. Arma moluta; sharp weapons, as swords and battle-axes. Bract. fol. 144 b. Spelman. Fleta has emolitorum. Lib. 1, c. 31, § 6.

MOLYN, Molin. L. Fr. [from L. Lat. molinum?] A mill. Britt. c. 1. Molyn ventresse; a wind-mill. Kelham. Britt. c. 42.

MOMENTUM. In the civil law. An instant; an indivisible portion of time, (Gr. ἄτομος.) Calv. Lex.

A portion of time that might be measured, a division or subdivision of an hour, answering in some degree to the modern minute, but of longer duration. According to Accursius, ten moments (momenta) made a point, (punctum,) and four points an hour. Calv. Lex. Hence, no doubt, the rule stated in Bracton, that an hour consists of forty moments, (hora fit ex quadraginta momentis,) which has been so far misunderstood as to be pronounced a misprint. Bract. fol. 264, 359 b. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, § 31. See Hour, Hora.

MOMENTANEUS. L. Lat. In old English law. Momentary. Seysina momentanea. Bract. fol. 273.

MONACHUS. Græco-Lat. [Gr. μοναχός, from μόνος, alone.] In the civil law. A monk. See Nov. 5.

MONASTERIUM. Græco-Lat. and L. Lat. [Gr. μοναστήριον.] In civil and old

English law. A monastery; a church. Nov. 5. Spelman. Hence, according to Spelman, the Sax. mynster and munster. And probably, also, the L. Fr. monstre, (q. v.)

MONATH, Moneth. Sax. [from mona, the moon.] Month; a month. Beda, lib. de temp. rat. c. 13. Spelman.

MONEIA. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. monnoye.] In old English law. Money. This form occurs in Domesday, and is doubtless the immediate origin of the modern English word. Spelman.

MONETA. Lat. [from monere, to warn, because by the impression upon it we are warned whose it is, (that is, by whom coined,) and what is its value.] In civil and old English law. Money. Falsa moneta; counterfeit money. Cod. 9. 24. Monetam conterfactam. Mem. in Scacc. M. 22 Edw. I. De moneta et chambio domini regis; of the money and exchange of the lord the king. Bract. fol. 117.

MONETARE. L. Lat. [from moneta, q. v.] In old English law. To coin money. Monetandi jus comprehenditur in regalibus quæ nunquam a regio sceptro abdicantur. The right of coining money is comprehended among those royal prerogatives which are never relinquished by the royal sceptre. Dav. R. 18.

Monetarium; a mint. Towns. Pl. 180, 260.

Monetarius; a moneyer, or coiner. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 22, § 6. See Monier.

MONETH. An old form of month. 3 Leon. 16.

MONEY, MONEYS. [Lat. moneta, q. v.] Cash; that is, gold and silver, or the lawful circulating medium of the country, including bank notes, when they are known and approved of, and used in the market as cash. Co. Litt. 207 a. Lord Ellenborough, 13 East, 20. Kent, C. 1 Johns. Ch. R. 236. The word "moneys" in a will does not comprehend bonds, mortgages, and other choses in action, when there is nothing in the will to show that the testator intended to use the word in that extended sense. 14 Johns. R. 1.

MONEY OF ADIEU. In French law. A kind of carnest money. Explained by Pothier to be so called, because it is a piece of money given by the buyer to the seller, when the parties, after having concluded their bargain, separate and say "Adieu." Poth. Contr. of Sale, num. 507. But is it not rather a French form of the Lat. denarius Dei, and English God's penny? (qq. v.)

MONEY COUNTS. In pleading. A species of common counts, so called from the subject matter of them; embracing the indebitatus assumpsit count for money lent and advanced, for money paid and expended, and money had and received, together with the insimul computassent count, or count for money due on an account stated. 1 Burr. Pr. 132.

MONIED CORPORATION. Construed by statute, in New-York, to mean "every corporation having banking powers, or having the power to make loans upon pledges or deposits, or authorized by law to make insurances." 1 Rev. Stat. [598, § 51,] 601, § 61. See 3 Comstock's R. 479.

MONIER, Moneyer. [L. Lat. monetarius.] In old English law. A minister of the mint, who made and coined the king's money. There were several of these moniers or workmen; "some to shear the money, some to forge it, others to beat it broad, some to round it, and some to stamp or coin it." Cowell, vocc. Moniers, Mint.

A banker; one who dealt in money. Cowell.

MONIALA. L. Lat. In old English law. A nun. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 34. In Fleta, the word is written monialis. Lib. 1, c. 39, § 4. Id. lib. 2, c. 1, § 11.

MONITION. [Lat. monitio, from monere, to warn.] In admiralty practice. The summons to appear and answer, issued on filing the libel; which is either a simple monition in personam, or an attachment and monition, in rem. Benedict's Adm. Pr. 228, 239. It is sometimes termed monition viis et modis, and has been supposed to be derived from the old Roman practice of summoning a defendant. Johnson, J. 10 Wheaton's R. 490.

MONMAISTRE. L. Fr. My master. A term of respect applied to a judge. Yearb. M. 3 Hen. VI. 12, 15.

MONOMACHIA. Græco-Lat. [from Gr. μόνος, alone or single, and μάχη, fight.] Single fight; a combat between two; (singularis pugna inter duos.) Sometimes used as another name for the duellum or judicial combat; but applied by Lord Coke to the modern duel. 3 Inst. 157.

MONOPOLIUM. Græco-Lat. [from Gr. μόνος, alone, and πωλειν, to sell.] The sole power, right, or privilege of sale; monopoly; a monopoly. Calv. Lex. Cod. 4.

59. Grot. de Jur. Bell. lib. 2, c. 12, § 16. Monopolium dicitur, cum unus solus aliquod genus mercaturæ universum emit, pretium ad suum libitum statuens; it is called monopoly, when one single person buys up the whole of a commodity, fixing on it a price at his pleasure. 11 Co. 86 b.

MONOPOLY. [from Lat. monopolium, q. v.] The exclusive privilege of selling any commodity. Defined in English law to be "a license or privilege allowed by the king for the sole buying and selling, making, working or using of any thing whatsoever; whereby the subject in general is restrained from that liberty of manufacturing or trading which he had before." 4 Bl. Com. 159. 4 Steph. Com. 291.

Any exclusive right or privilege.

MONOYE, Monnoye. L. Fr. Money. De fauseours de sealx et de monoye. Britt. c. 4.

MONSTER. [Lat. monstrum, partus monstrosus.] A prodigious birth; a human birth or offspring not having the shape of mankind; which cannot be heir to any land, albeit it be brought forth in marriage. Bract. fol. 5. Co. Litt. 7, 8. 2 Bl. Com. 246.

MONSTER, Monstre, Mouster, Mustre. L. Fr. A church; a monastery. Britt. c. 1.

MONSTRANS DE DROIT. L. Fr. In English law. A showing or manifestation of right; one of the common law methods of obtaining possession or restitution from the crown, of either real or personal property. It is the proper proceeding when the right of the party as well as the right of the crown appears upon record, and consists in putting in a claim of right grounded on facts already acknowledged and established, and praying the judgment of the court, whether upon these facts, the king or the subject hath the right. 3 Bl. Com. 256. 4 Co. 54 b. A proceeding under this name is in use in Virginia. 12 Grattan's R. 564.

MONSTRANS DE FAITS. L. Fr. In old English practice. A showing of deeds; a species of profert. Cowell. Hale's Anal. sect. xxxv.

MONSTRAT per vultum quid sit sub corde sepultum.

He shows by his countenance what is buried in his heart. An old verse quoted by Fleta, lib. 3, c. 15, § 10.

MONSTRAVIT, (he hath showed,) and MONSTRAVERUNT, (they have showed.) In old English practice. A writ for the relief of tenants in ancient demesne, where they had been distrained to do to their lords other services or customs than they or their ancestors had used to do. Reg. Orig. 14. F. N. B. 14 D. So called from the word with which the body of the writ commenced.

MONTES. Span. In Spanish law. Forests or woods. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 1, c. 6, § 1.

MONTH. [O. Eng. moneth, from Sax. monath; Lat. mensis.] A well known division of a year, being either a lunar month, consisting of twenty-eight days or four weeks, or a calendar month, consisting of from twenty-eight to thirty-one days.* Co. Litt. 135 b. 2 Bl. Com. 141.

By the common law of England, a month is, in matters temporal, a lunar month. 1 Steph. Com. 265. 2 Bl. Com. 141. The reason of which rule is explained to be, "not only because it is always one uniform period, but because it falls naturally into a quarterly division by weeks." Therefore a lease for "twelve months" is only for forty-eight weeks; but if it be for "a twelve-month," in the singular number, it is good for the whole year. Id. ibid. In statutes and deeds, "month" means a lunar month, unless expressly described as calendar, or so appearing from the context. Com. Dig. Ann, B. 1 M. & S. 113. So, in all contracts, unless a contrary intention appear, or unless a general understanding of trade to the contrary be proved. Willes' R. 585. 4 Mod. 185. 1 Stra. 446. So, in all legal proceedings, unless the month be expressly described as calendar. 3 Burr. 1455. 1 Bla. R. 450. Dougl. 463, 446. 2 Chitt. Bl. Com. 140, note.

In ecclesiastical matters, on the other hand, "month" means a calendar month. 2 Roll. Abr. 521, 51. 6 Co. 61 b, Catesby's case. Hob. 179. 1 Bla. R. 450. 1 Steph. Com. 265. So, by the custom of trade, as in case of bills of exchange and promissory notes, a month is deemed a calendar month. 3 Brod. & B. 187. This, indeed, is the universal rule of the commercial world, in regard not only to negotiable instruments, but all commercial contracts. Story on Bills, § 330.

In the United States, the old English rule is considerably impaired, and the term "month" usually computed, and especially in statutes and judicial proceedings, as calendar. 4 Kent's Com. 94, 95, note. 4 Dallas' R. 142. 5 Grattan's R. 285. 21 Alabama R. 47. In Georgia, however, the English rule has been followed. Dudley's R. 107. In New-York, it has been expressly reversed, it being declared by statute that whenever the term "month" or "months" is or shall be used in any statute, act, deed, verbal or written contract, or any public or private instrument whatever, it shall be construed to mean a calendar and not a lunar month, unless otherwise expressed. 1 Rev. Stat. [606,] 615, § 4.

MONUMENTUM, Monimentum. L. Lat. In the civil and common law. A monument; a memorial; a chronicle or record. Calv. Lex. Monumenta quæ nos recorda vocamus sunt veritatis et vetustatis vestigia; the memorials which we call records are the traces of truth and of antiquity. Co. Litt. 118.

MONYA. In Norman law. Moneyage. A tax or tribute of one shilling on every hearth, payable to the duke every three years, in consideration that he should not alter the coin. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, 148, and note.

MOOT. [L. Lat. mota, from Sax. gemote, a meeting or court, according to Spelman; from Lat. movere, to move or agitate, according to Mr. Crabb.] In English practice. An argument of causes by way of exercise; an argument of fictitious causes, with formalities resembling those of a court. Moots were a sort of exercise in the inns of courts, usually performed by students of a certain standing, preparatory to their commencing practice. Crabb's Hist. 564. Plowden observes, in his preface, that he was a constant attendant "at moots and lectures," while a student.

To MOOT, (anciently, To MOTE.) To argue (placitare;) to argue by way of exercise; to argue a fictitious case in form of law. See Moot.

To agitate a point by argument, without determining it; to raise a question for argument.

MOOT. (adj.) A subject for argument; unsettled; undecided. As a moot case, a moot point.

MOOTING. The exercise of arguing questions of law or equity, raised for the purpose. See Moot.

MOOT COURT. A court held for the arguing of moot cases or questions.

MOOT HALL. The place where moot cases were argued.

MOOT HILL. [L. Lat. mallobergium, mons placiti.] In old English law. A hill of meeting or council; an elevated place in the open air, where public assemblies or courts were held by the Britons. Wharton's Lex. In Scotland they were called Mute hills, as the famous Mute hill of Scone. Spelman, voc. Mallobergium. In Ireland, Parly hills. Id. ibid. See Mote, Mute.

MOOT MAN. One who argued moot cases in the inns of court.* One who argued readers' cases in inns of chancery, both in terms and grand vacations. 3 Co. pref. From these mootmen, after eight years' study, or thereabouts, were chosen utter barristers. Id.

MORA. Lat. In the civil law. Delay; default; neglect; culpable delay or default. Calv. Lex. 1 Kames' Equity, 324. See In mora.

Delay in fulfilling an obligation, as in the payment of money. Dig. 32. 1. 32. Said to be of difficult definition. Id. pr. Nulla intelligitur mora ibi fieri, ubi nulla petitio est; no delay is understood to be made where there is no demand. Id. 50. 17. 88.

Mora reprobatur in lege. Delay is reprobated in law. Jenk. Cent. 51, case 97.

MORA. L. Lat. In old English law. A moor; a more barren and unprofitable ground than a marsh. Reg. Orig. 2. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 71, § 7. Co. Litt. 5 a. Shep. Touch. 95.

Mora mussa; a watery or boggy moor; a moss or morass. 2 Mon. Angl. 306 b. Cowell.

MORAL CERTAINTY. In the law of criminal evidence. That degree of assurance which induces a man of sound mind to act, without doubt, upon the conclusions to which it leads. Wills' Circ. Evid. 7.—A certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. Shaw, C. J. in Commonwealth v. Webster, Bemis' Report of the trial, 470.—A high degree of impression of the truth of a fact, falling short of absolute certainty, but sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty, even in a capital case. See Burr. Circ. Ev. 198—200.

MORARI. Lat. In old English law. To delay; to pause or rest. Moratur in lege; (he) rests or pauses in law; (he) demurs. See Demorari.

MORBUS. Lat. In the civil law. Disease; sickness. Defined by Sabinus (quoted by Ulpian in the Digests,) habitum cujusque corporis contra naturam, qui usum ejus ad id facit deteriorem, cujus causâ natura nobis ejus corporis sanitatem dedit; an unnatural habit of body, which impairs its use for that purpose for which nature gave us soundness of body. Dig. 21. 1. 1. 7. It was distinguished from vitium, (fault or vice.) Id. ibid. See Dig. 50. 16. 101. 2.

MORBUS SONTICUS. Lat. In the civil law. A sickness which rendered a man incapable of attending to any business, (qui cuique rei nocet.) Dig. 50. 16. 113. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 137, § 127, note.—A sickness of the severer kind, having the power of causing great pain. A. Gellius, Noct. Att. lib. 20, c. 1.—A sickness which excused a non-appearance in court. Calv. Lex. Adam's Rom. Ant. 245, 272. Bracton uses this term in treating of the law of essoins, but gives it the meaning of an incurable disease. Bract. fol. 344 b. See Sonticus.

MORBOSUS. Lat. [from morbus, q. v.] In the civil law. Diseased. See Dig. 21. 1. 1—16.

MORE COLONICO. Lat. In old pleading. In husband-like manner. Towns. Pl. 198.

MORE OR LESS. [Lat. sive plus, sive minus.] A phrase frequently used in describing the quantity of land conveyed by a deed or lease; as, "containing by estimation — acres, more or less;" or, "containing in breadth, in front and rear, — feet, and in length on each side, — feet, be the same more or less." It imports that the quantity conveyed is uncertain, or is not warranted; and is adopted by way of precaution in cases where it is possible that there may be a deficiency on actual admeasurement, and the party does not mean to bind himself as to the quantity. In such an event, a small deficiency or a reasonable difference would not be regarded, but a large deficiency, such as 100 acres short, in land described as "349 acres, more or less," would not be tolerated. 2 Russ. R. 570. 2 B. & Adol. 106. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 180. It imports, on the other hand, that in case of the quantity of land proving to be more than that described, the grantee or lessee is to have the benefit of it; but in this case, also, it is to be understood within reasonable limits. Thus, it was held that the description of "a house in B. and ten acres of land there, sive plus, sive minus," would not include thirty acres usually occupied with the house. Owen, 133. See 1 Ves. & Bea. 375. Coventry on Conveyancers' Evidence, 34, 35. 2 Johns. R. 37. 8 Paige's Ch. R. 312. See Plurisve.

Where a party covenants to make a deed to a certain quantity of land "more or less," these words mean that where there is only an inconsiderable deficiency as to the quantity of land, the vendor is not to submit to a deduction from the amount of the purchase money, if the tract of land contains less than the amount; nor is the purchaser to pay more than the sum stipulated, if the tract contains a greater number of acres. The risk in this respect is mutual. The vendor risks as to the sum of money, and the vendee as to the quantity of the land. Phipps v. Tarpley, 24 Mississippi R. 597. In this case, the tract was represented by the vendor to contain 1,000 acres, whereas, upon a survey, it fell short about 80 acres. This was held to be an inconsiderable deficiency. Id. ibid. In Texas, the words "more or less" have been held to cover a deficiency of 5 out of 41 acres. 13 Texas R. 223. They are sometimes rejected. See 20 Howard's R. 413.

MORGANATIC MARRIAGE. In old European law. A marriage between a man of superior, and a woman of inferior rank, in which it was stipulated that the latter and her children should not enjoy the rank or inherit the possessions of her husband. Brande. Shelford, Marr. & Div. 9, 10. This kind of marriage still subsists in Germany, under the appellation of a left-handed marriage. Id. ibid. The earliest and clearest description of it is to be found in the Books of Feuds, in which it is treated as a Milanese custom. Feud. Lib. 2, tit. 29.

Some have derived this word from the Goth. morgjan, to shorten, but Spelman traces it to morgangiva, (q. v.)

MORGANGIVA, Morgengeba. L. Lat. [Lomb. morgingap; Sax. morgan gyfe; from morgin, morning, and gab, a gift.] In old European law. A gift made to a wife on the morning of the nuptial day; a species of dower, which Spelman compares to the English dower ad ostium ecclesiæ. This word occurs in the laws of the Burgundians, Alamanni, Ripuarians and Lombards, and also in the laws of Canute. LL. Canuti, c. 71. Spelman.

MORGEN. Anglo-Dutch. In old New-York law. A measure of land, equal to about two acres. O'Callaghan's New-Netherlands, vol. 2. Appx. 593.

MORGENGAB. Germ. In German or Dutch law. Morning gift; a species of dower. A gift made to the wife on the morning after the marriage. Skene de Verb. Signif. voc. Dos. See Grot. de Jur. Bell. lib. 2, c. 7, § 8, n. 3. See Morgangiva.

MORIER, Mourir, Moeryer, Moire, Muire, Murer, Murger. L. Fr. [from Lat. morior, moriri, to die.] To die. Kelham. L. Fr. Dict. Moront, moreaunt; they die. Id. Morant; dying. Id. Morera; shall die. Id. Morust; died. Id.

MORINA. L. Lat. In old English law. Murrain; a disease of sheep. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 79, § 6.

MORS. Lat. Death. Mors dicitur ultimum supplicium; death is called the last punishment, the extremity of punishment. 3 Inst. 212.

Mors omnia solvit. Death dissolves all things. Jenk. Cent. 160, case 2. Applied to the case of the death of a party to an action. Id.

MORSELLUM TERRÆ. L. Lat. In old records. A small parcel or bit of land. Cowell.

MORT D' ANCESTOR. L. Fr. The name of a species of assise, founded on the death of an ancestor. See Assise of mort d' ancestor.

MORTGAGE. L. Fr. and Eng. [from mort, dead, and gage, security; L. Lat. mortuum vadium.] In old English law. A dead or unproductive pledge; a pledge of moveables or immoveables by one person to another, as a security for a debt. Called dead, because the contract was that the fruits or rents arising from the thing pledged should not go towards paying off the demand for which it was pledged; or, in Glanville's words, cujus fructus vel reditus interim percepti in nullo se acquietant. Glanv. lib. 10, c. 6. 1 Reeves' Hist. 161. It was thus distinguished from what was called a living pledge, (vivum vadium, or vif gage,) in which the rents and profits went towards the discharge of the debt. Crabb's Hist. 108.

In modern law. The conveyance of an estate, by way of pledge for the security of debt, and to become void on payment of it. 4 Kent's Com. 135. A conveyance of lands, chattels or other subjects of property as a security for a debt, upon a condition, which in substance is that if the sum due shall be paid at a certain time the conveyance shall be void, otherwise to become absolute; the latter alternative, however, taking effect subject to the right or equity of redemption, (q. v.)* 2 Bl. Com. 157—159. 4 Kent's Com. 135, 162, et seq.—A debt by specialty, secured by a pledge of lands, of which the legal ownership is vested in the creditor, but of which, in equity, the debtor and those claiming under him remain the actual owners, until debarred by judicial sentence or their own laches. Coote on Mortgages, 1. See 1 Steph. Com. 282—285. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 845, § 2202.

The term mortgage has a definite, technical legal signification, and imports a defeasance and an equity of redemption. 1 Wisconsin R. 420. See 6 Texas R. 110, 294. As to when a deed will be considered a mortgage, see 12 Howard's R. 139. 1 Wisconsin R. 527. And see United States Digest, Mortgage.

According to Littleton, Coke and others, a mortgage is so called, (dead pledge,) because in case of non-payment of the debt at the time limited, the land was forever dead, and gone from the mortgagor, and in case of payment it became dead as to the mortgagee. Litt. sect. 332. Co. Litt. 205 a. 2 Bl. Com. 158. But the explanation of Glanville (supra) gives a much more satisfactory account of the origin of the word. Coote on Mortgages, 9—11. This word seems to have been sometimes written morgage, before the pure French form was adopted. Litt. ub. sup. Spelman, voc. Mortuum vadium. See Mortgage.

MORTGAGE OF GOODS. A conveyance of goods in gage, or mortgage, by which the whole legal title passes conditionally to the mortgagee; and if the goods are not redeemed at the time stipulated, the title becomes absolute in law, although equity will interfere to compel a redemption. Story on Bailm. § 287. It is distinguished from a pledge by the circumstance that possession by the pledgee is not, or may not be, essential to create or to support the title. Id. ibid. See 2 Kent's Com. 522—532. 4 Id. 138.

MORTGAGEE. The party to whom a mortgage is made or given; the party taking a mortgage, in whom the legal estate vests, subject to be defeated upon performance of the condition. 4 Kent's Com. 154. Written morgagee in Yearb. M. 7 Hen. VI. 26.

MORTGAGOR. The party who gives a mortgage; the party mortgaging, and who in equity is considered as the real owner, until a decree of foreclosure. 4 Kent's Com. 159. Written morgageor in Yearb. M. 7 Hen. VI. 26.

MORTIFICATION. In Scotch law. A term nearly synonymous with mortmain. Bell's Dict. 5 Bell's Ap. Cas. 409. Lands are said to be mortified for a charitable purpose.

MORTMAIN. L. Fr. [from mort, dead, and main, hand; L. Lat. mortua manus.] A dead hand; a condition of property in which it is held without the power of change or alienation.* A term originally applied to the possession of land by ecclesiastical bodies, the members of which (being professed,) were reckoned dead persons in law. 2 Bl. Com. 479. Afterwards applied to purchases and acquisitions by any corporate body. Stat. 15 Ric. II. c. 5. Hence the statutes prohibiting conveyances of lands by deed or will to a corporation, were termed statutes of mortmain, or mortmain acts. 2 Bl. Com. 268—274. 2 Kent's Com. 282, 283, and notes.

MORTUARIUM. L. Lat. [from mors, death.] In old English law. A mortuary, (q. v.) Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 30.

MORTUARY. [L. Lat. mortuarium, from mors, death.] In English law. A customary gift claimed by, and due to the minister in very many parishes, on the death of his parishioners; a sort of ecclesiastical heriot. 2 Bl. Com. 425. See Heriot. Otherwise called a corse-present, (q. v.) and in the laws of King Canute soul-scot, (q. v.) It seems to have originally been (like a lay heriot,) only a voluntary bequest to the church, being intended, according to Lyndewode, as a kind of expiation and amends to the clergy for the personal tithes and other ecclesiastical duties, which the laity, in their lifetime, might have neglected or forgotten to pay, and it was usually the second best beast or chattel, the best being reserved to the lord. 2 Bl. Com. 425. In Bracton's time, however, it had become "rivetted into an established custom," and the bequest of a mortuary was held to be a necessary ingredient in every testament of chattels. Bract. fol. 60. The statute of 21 Hen. VIII. c. 6, reduced these mortuaries to a certainty, by fixing an equivalent to be paid in money, according to the value of the property of the deceased, and upon this statute stands the law of mortuaries to this day. 2 Bl. Com. 427. 3 Steph. Com. 147.

MORTUUM VADIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. A dead pledge; a mort gage, or mortgage. Mortuum vadium dicitur illud cujus fructus vel reditus interim percepti in nullo se acquietant; that is called a dead pledge, the profits or rents of which, received in the mean time, in no respect discharge it. Glanv. lib. 10, c. 6.

MORTUUS. Lat. Dead. Bract. fol. 301 b. Mortuus exitus non est exitus. A dead issue is no issue. Co. Litt. 29. A child born dead is not considered as issue.

A return made by a sheriff, that the party named in the process directed to him is dead. 4 Watts' R. 270, 276.

MOSTRENCOS. Span. In Spanish law. Strayed goods; estrays. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 2, c. 6.

MOT. Fr. A word. De mot en mot; word for word. Britt. c. 22.

MOT BELL. Sax. Meeting-bell; a bell used by the Saxons to summon the people to the folcmote. Spelman. See Folcmote.

MOT-WORTHY. O. Eng. A common-councilman. Cowell, voc. Concionator.

MOTE. Sax. [L. Lat. mota; a contraction of gemote, Sc. mute, q. v.] In Saxon law. A court; a meeting or assembly. Spelman, vocc. Mota, Gemotum.

MOTION. [Lat. motio, from movere, to move.] In practice. An application (founded generally on affidavit,) made to the judge or judges of a court, viva voce, in open court, for the purpose of obtaining a rule or order directing some act to be done in favor of the applicant. It is usually an incidental proceeding to an action, but it may be wholly unconnected with that kind of remedy.* 3 Steph. Com. 679, 680. 1 Tidd's Pr. 478.

MOTIVE. [from Lat. movere, to move, or stir.] In the law of evidence. That which moves or influences the mind or will; an emotion, passion or desire which incites or impels to action.

In criminal evidence. An unlawful desire or emotion, awakened by the perception or contemplation of some external object, or end to be attained by action. This ultimate object is, in fact, the cause or spring of the motive itself, and has sometimes been called the exterior or external motive, as distinguished from the desire or passion it creates, which is termed the interior or internal motive. See 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 183. It is, in other words, the inducement, or that which leads or tempts the mind to indulge the criminal desire. Burr. Circ. Evid. 283, 284.

MOTUM. Lat. [from movere, to move.] In old English law. Moved; stirred; put in motion; commenced. Placitum motum; plea moved; suit commenced. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 23, § 10.

MOULDRE. L. Fr. To grind. Yearb. M. 4 Edw. III. 71.

MOULT, Molt, Mult. L. Fr. [from Lat. multus.] Many; much. Kelham. (Plur. mults, moldes, mous. Id.)

MOUN. L. Fr. My. Moun piere. My father. Yearb. M. 3 Edw. II. 49.

MOUNSTER, Mouster, Muster. L. Fr. [from Lat. monasterium.] In old English law. A church; a minster or monastery. Al huys d'mouster; at the church door. Britt. c. 110.

MOUNTAUNT. L. Fr. Ascending. Britt. c. 119.

MOVANT, Movaunt. L. Fr. Moving. Britt. c. 1.

MOVE. To occasion; to contribute to; to tend or lead to. The forewheel of a wagon was said "to move to the death of a man." Say. 249. See Deodand.

MOVEABLES. [L. Fr. moebles; Span. muebles; Lat. mobilia, res mobiles.] Things moveable; moveable or personal chattels, which may be annexed to, or attendant on the person of the owner, and carried about with him from one part of the world to another. 2 Bl. Com. 387. Moveables consist, first, of inanimate things, as goods, plate, money, jewels, implements of war, garments and the like, or vegetable productions, as the fruit or other parts of a plant when severed from the body of it, or the whole plant itself when severed from the ground; secondly, of animals which have in themselves a principle and power of motion. 2 Steph. Com. 67.

In the civil law, moveables (mobilia,) properly denoted inanimate things; animals being distinguished as moventia, things moving. But this distinction was not always observed. Dig. 50. 16. 93. Calv. Lex. Brissonius. See Moventes.

"Moveables," in a will, pass all the personal goods, both quick and dead, which either move themselves, as horses, sheep and the like, or may be moved by another, as plate, household stuff, corn in garners and barns or in the sheaf, &c.; also all bonds and specialties. Shep. Touch. 447. But "moveables" will not carry corn nor fruit growing on the ground, nor stone nor timber prepared for building. Ward on Legacies, 210.

MOVEABLES, in Scotch law, are opposed to heritage. So that every species of property, and every right a man can hold, is by that law either heritable or moveable. Bell's Dict.

MOVENTES. Lat. [pl. of movens, from movere, to move.] In old English law. Moving things. Se moventes; things moving themselves; animated objects, as distinguished from mobilia, (moveables.) Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 6.

MOVERE. Lat. To move; to set in motion; to stir or agitate; to originate or commence. Movere litem; to commence a suit. Alia vice movit ei litem de eadem terra; on another occasion commenced a suit against him for the same land. Bract. fol. 271 b, 274. So, in law French, en toutz pleas meus et à mover; in all pleas moved and to be moved. Britt. c. 126. To begin a controversy or dispute, before resorting to law. See Lis mota.

MOYEN, Moien. L. Fr. Mean; intermediate. Kelham.

MOYS, Moyes, Meyes. L. Fr. A month. Kelham.

MOYTE. L. Fr. Half; a moiety. Britt. c. 119.

MUEBLES. Span. In Spanish law. Moveables; all sorts of personal property. White's New Recop. b. 1, tit. 3, c. 1, § 2.

MUET. L. Fr. [from Lat. mutus, q. v.] Dumb. Ne sourds ne meutz; nor deaf nor dumb persons. Britt. c. 34.

MUILLERE. L. Fr. [from Lat. mulier, q. v.] The son of a lawful wife; a mulier. Frere muillere et frere bastard. Britt. c. 70.

MUIRBURN. Sc. In Scotch law. The offence of setting fire to a muir or moor. 1 Brown's R. 78—116.

MULCTA. Lat. In the civil law. A mulct or fine; a pecuniary punishment. See the distinction between mulcta and pœna, Dig. 50. 16. 131, 244. Mulcta dam- num famæ non irrogat. A mulct does not involve loss of character. Cod. 1. 54. Calv. Lex.

MULIER. Lat. In the civil law. A woman, in general, (quælibet femina.) Calv. Lex. 8 Co. 102 a.

A marriageable virgin, (virgo viripotens.) Dig. 50. 16. 13.

A woman not a virgin. Spiegelius. 8 Co. 102 a.

A married woman; a wife, (uxor.) Calv. Lex. 8 Co. 102 a.

A mother. Dig. 21. 1. 14. 7.

A multiplying or increasing. Story's Eq. Pl. § 287.

MULTITUDE. L. Fr. and Eng. In old English law. An assembly or collection of persons for some unlawful purpose. Defined by some of the old writers to consist of ten or more; (multitudinem decem faciunt.) Lord Coke mentions this, but observes that he could never read it restrained by the common law to any certain number, but left to the discretion of the judges. Co. Litt. 257 a.

Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocinum. The multitude of those who err furnishes no countenance or excuse for error. 11 Co. 75 a, Magdalen College case. Hardr. 98, arg. It is no excuse for error that it is entertained by numbers.

Multitudo imperitorum perdit curiam.

The great number of unskilful practitioners ruins a court. 2 Inst. 219.

MULTO. L. Lat. In old English law. A sheep; a wether. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 79, § 4. Cowell.

MULTURE. [L. Lat. multura, molitura, from molere, to grind.] In old English law. A grinding of grain at a mill; the grain ground.

The toll or fee due for grinding grain. 2 Mon. Angl. 825. Cowell. Called multer in an old award, 28 Hen. IV. cited by Blount.

In Scotch law. A duty paid for grinding in any mill. 1 Forbes' Inst. part. 2, p. 140. A quantity of grain payable to the proprietor of a mill, for grinding grain. Bell's Dict.

MULVEYN. L. Fr. Middle. Mulveyn fitz; a middle son; one born between two others. Britt. c. 107.

MUND, Munde. Sax. [L. Lat. mundium.] In Saxon law. Protection; defence; peace; (tutela, defensio, protectio, pax, patrocinium.) When the king took a church, monastery or borough, or any man or company, or their effects or estates into his protection, it was said to be on cynges munde, under the king's protection, (in regis mundio.) Spelman.

MUNDBRICE, Mundbrich. Sax. [from mund, protection, and brice, a breach.] In Saxon law. Violation of the mund or king's protection. Spelman. See Mund. Sometimes confounded with grithbrice, or grithbrech, (q. v.)

Mundbrich is also defined a breaking of enclosures; mounds or banks of earth being anciently used for such purposes. Spelman.

MUNDEBURDE, Mundbyrd. Sax. [from mund, protection, and bord, borh, a pledge; L. Lat. mundeburdum, mundoburdum, mundiburdium.] In Saxon and old European law. A pledge or security for protection, (patrocinii fidejussio.) Spelman. 1 Spence's Chancery, 35, note.

MUNDIUM. L. Lat. In old French law. A tribute paid by a church or monastery to their seignorial avoués and vidames, as the price of protecting them. Steph. Lect. 236.

MUNICEPS. Lat. [pl. municipes, from munus, office, and capere, to take.] In Roman law. One who was entitled to hold office. Municipes dici quod munera civilia capiant. Dig. 50. 16. 18. One who was admitted into a state, with the privilege of holding office. Proprie municipes appellantur muneris participes, recepti in civitatem, ut munera nobiscum facerent. Id. 50. 1. 1. A citizen of a foreign town or municipium; so called from the privilege of enjoying office at Rome. Adam's Rom. Ant. 47, 77. See Municipium.

A townsman; one born in the same municipium. This was a later, but improper sense. Dig. 50. 1. 1. Id. 50. 16. 228.

MUNICIPAL. [Lat. municipalis, from municipium, q. v.] Belonging to a city, town or place having the right of local government; belonging to, or affecting a particular state or separate community. Local; particular; independent. See Municipium.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. [L. Lat. villa corporata.] A public corporation; a corporation created by government for political purposes, and having subordinate legislative powers to be exercised for local purposes, such as a county, city, town or village.* 2 Kent's Com. 275. See Public corporation.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION ACT. In English law. The statute 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, for regulating the municipal corporations in England and Wales. 3 Steph. Com. 191, et seq.

MUNICIPAL LAW. [Lat. jus municipale, lex municipalis.] The rule or law by which a particular district, community or nation is governed. 1 Bl. Com. 44. The particular law of a state or nation; as distinguished from public or international law.*—A rule of civil conduct, prescribed by the supreme power in a state. 1 Bl. Com. ub. sup. 1 Kent's Com. 447. A municipal law, according to the American theory of government, is the expression of the legislative will of the state according to the forms of the constitution. 25 Mississippi R. 625.

In a stricter sense,—the local law of a particular place, such as a city or town. Originally, the law of a municipium, (q. v.) or free town. Calv. Lex. voc. Municipalis.

MUNICIPIUM. Lat. [from munus, office or honor, and capere, to take.] In Roman law. A foreign town to which the freedom of the city of Rome was granted, and whose inhabitants had the privilege of enjoying offices and honors there; a free town. Butler's Hor. Jur. 29. Adam's Rom. Ant. 47, 77.

A free or privileged town; one that had the right of being governed by its own laws and customs. Id. 77. Hence the Lat. municipalis, and Eng. municipal, (q. v.)

In old English law. A castle. Spelman.

MUNIMENTS. [L. Lat. munimenta, munimina, from munire, to defend.] The evidences or writings whereby a man is enabled to defend the title of his estate. Blount. 9 Co. 18. Title deeds and papers; evidences of title. Corrupted to miniments, which seems to have once been the common form of the word. The Lat. munimenta and munimina occur in this sense in the laws of the Lombards. L. Longobard. tit. 35, l. 9. Spelman.

MUNIMENT HOUSE. A place for the safe-keeping of muniments, (q. v.) "A little room of strength" in cathedral and collegiate churches, castles, colleges, &c. purposely made for keeping the seal, evidences, charters, &c. of such church or college. Blount.

MUNUS. Lat. In the civil law. A gift or present, (donum, q. v.) Dig. 50. 16. 18. See the distinction between munus and donum, Id. 50. 16. 194. 214.

A charge or duty, (onus.) Id. 50. 16. 18. Hence immunitas. Id.

An office (officium.) Id. ibid. Id. 50. 4. 1, 14, 18. And see Calv. Lex.

In feudal law. The name first given to what was afterwards termed beneficium, and finally feudum. Spelman. A feudal estate, in its original character of a mere gratuitous donation. Cowell, voc. Benefice.

MUR, Mure. L. Fr. [from murus.] A wall. Par mure ou par haye; by a wall or by a hedge. Britt. c. 61. Mur abatu; a wall beaten or thrown down. Id. ibid.

MURAGE. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Lat. muragium, from murus, Fr. mur, a wall.] In old English law. A toll or tribute levied for the building or repairing of public walls. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 30. 2 Inst. 222.

MURDER. [L. Fr. murdre; L. Lat. murdrum; from Teut. moerda, or Sax. morthor.] In old English law. The secret killing of one human being by another. Homicide privately perpetrated, no one being present, knowing, hearing or seeing it, (homicidium quod nullo præsente, nullo sciente, nullo audiente, nullo vidente, clam perpetratur.) Bract. fol. 134 b. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 23, § 6; c. 30, § 1.

The private slaying of foreign and known persons, (occulta extraneorum et notorum hominum occisio,) wickedly perpetrated by the hand of man, and which is committed, no one knowing or seeing, except only the slayer and his aiders and abetters, and in such a manner that the hue and cry does not immediately follow, (ita quod non statim assequatur clamor popularis.) Bract. fol. 134 b. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 30, § 1. This was the technical definition of murder in the time of Bracton, founded on another signification of the term, (see infra,) and the old law of Englishery. As early as Britton, however, it was modified to mean, "the slaying of an unknown person, feloniously done, when it cannot be known by whom it was committed," (occision de home disconu, felonisement faite, dount home ne poit saver par que ne par quex.) Britt. c. 6.

A fine or amercement imposed upon the vill or hundred where a person was found killed by another, unless the fact of the slain person having been English (technically called Englishery) was duly presented before the justices.

The origin of this imposition (or murdrum) is thus explained by Bracton: After the subjugation of England by Canute the Dane, the English barons pledged themselves, in consideration of his sending back his army to Denmark, that as many followers as he chose to retain with him in England, should remain entirely unmolested, and for greater security on this point agreed that if an Englishman should kill a Dane and escape, so that he could not be taken, there should be paid for him sixty-six marks, to be collected in the vill where the slain person was found, or in the hundred, if the vill were too poor to pay it. Bract. fol. 134 b. After the conquest by the Normans, a similar regulation was established for the protection of the king's Norman followers or subjects; a fine (called murdrum,) being imposed upon the neighborhood, (patria) where a Frenchman (Francigena,) was found killed, and the slayer was unknown; and to render this the more effectual, it was declared by law that the slain person was always to be presumed to be French, unless the fact of his or her being English was formally presented and proved. Hence the law of Englishery, (q. v.) once so important that the very definition of murder as a crime was made to turn upon the fact that the slain person was a foreigner, (extraneus.) See the definition from Bracton, supra.

MURDER. [L. Lat. murdrum, L. Fr. murdre, Sc. murther.] In criminal law. The killing of a man with malice prepense. 1 Hale's P. C. 425. Plowd. 261.—The killing of one human being by another, with malice aforethought, express or implied.* The unlawful killing of any reasonable creature in being, and in the peace of the commonwealth, by a person of sound memory and discretion, with malice aforethought, express or implied.* 3 Inst. 47. 4 Bl. Com. 195, et seq.

This is substantially the definition of murder in American law, though, in some of the states, modifications have been introduced by statute. Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, §§ 930, 884, et seq. 1 Hale's P. C. 425, (Am. ed. note.) See 1 Russell on Crimes, 482, (Am. ed. 1850, note.)

 The radical sense of the word murder is a secret killing; the term gemurdrit or gamurdrit, (q. v.) being thus used at the earliest period to which it can be traced. L. Boior. tit. 18, c. 2, § 3. So in England, the L. Fr. murdre occurs in old statutes in the sense of concealment or stifling. Stat. Exet. 14 Edw. I. And the L. Lat. murdrare, (q. v.) is used as an equivalent word by Fleta. Hence the general definition of murder given by Bracton,—a secret killing, where it cannot be known who the slayer is. Bract. fol. 121, 134 b. To this was superadded the idea of a felonious killing (occisio nequiter perpetrata.) Id. ibid. But the whole definition of the crime by the same author was made a technical one, by being based on that peculiar regulation of the times, called Englishery. It was in substance, "the secret and felonious killing of a foreigner (occulta extraneorum occisio.") Id. 134 b. This will account for the form of the definitions given by Staundford and others, after Englishery was abolished;—"the wilful and felonious killing of another, whether Englishman or foreigner, secretly or openly." Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 1, c. 2. Cowell.

"MURDER," "MURDERED." Necessary words in indictments for murder, as murdrum and murdravit, anciently were. 3 Bl. Com. 321. 4 Id. 307. Wharton's Prec. of Indictments, 42, et seq.

MURDRARE. L. Lat. In old criminal law. To murder. 3 Bl. Com. 321. Murdravit; murdered. A necessary word in old indictments for murder. 4 Bl. Com. 307. 5 Co. 122 b, Long's case. Lord Kenyon, 2 East, 30.

NATI ET NASCITURI. Lat. Born and to be born. An expression including all heirs, near and remote. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 8. See Comb. 154.

NATIO. Lat. In old records. A native place. Cowell.

NATIVA. L. Lat. In old English law. A neife, or female villein. So called, because for the most part bond by nativity. Co. Litt. 122 b.

NATIVE. [Lat. nativus, born, home born.] In English law. A natural born subject. 1 Bl. Com. 366.

In American law. A person born within the jurisdiction of the United States. 2 Kent's Com. 38.

NATIVE CITIZEN. A person born in the United States since the declaration of independence, or before, if he has removed here since that event; or the child of a citizen born abroad, if his parents have ever resided here. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 190, (196, 3d ed.)

NATIVI. L. Lat. Vassals or feudal tenants. So called, even before feuds became hereditary. Wright on Tenures, 14. Villeins. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 51. See Nativus.

NATIVITAS. L. Lat. [from nativus, q. v.] In old English law. Villeinage; that state in which men were born slaves. 2 Mon. Angl. 643. Called by Britton, naifte. Britt. c. 31. Otherwise written naivitas, (q. v.)

NATIVUS. L. Lat. [from nasci, to be born.] In old English law. A born slave; a villein born; a villein. Glanv. lib. 5, c. 1. Spelman. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 51.

NATURA. Lat. Nature. Natura appetit perfectum; ita et lex. Nature covets perfection; so does law also. Hob. 144.

Natura non facit saltum; ita nec lex. Nature makes no leap, [no sudden or irregular movement,] so neither does law. Co. Litt. 238. Applied, in old practice, to the regular observance of the degrees in writs of entry, which could not be passed over per saltum.

NATURAL ALLEGIANCE. In English law. That kind of allegiance which is due from all men born within the king's dominions, immediately upon their birth; which is intrinsic and perpetual, and cannot be divested by any act of their own. 1 Bl. Com. 370, 371. 2 Kent's Com. 42.

In American law. The allegiance due from citizens of the United States to their native or adopted country, and which, it seems, cannot be renounced without the permission of government, to be declared by law. 2 Kent's Com. 43—49.

NATURAL-BORN SUBJECTS. In English law. Such persons as are born within the dominions of the crown of England, that is, within the ligeance, or, as it is generally called, the allegiance of the king. 1 Bl. Com. 366.

NATURAL CHILD. [Gr. νοθος.] In the civil law. A child by natural relation or procreation; a child by birth, as distinguished from a child by adoption. Inst. 1. 11, pr. Id. 3. 1. 2. Id. 3. 8, pr.

A child by concubinage, in contradistinction to a child by marriage. Cod. 5. 27. See Nov. 89. Tayl. Civ. Law, 270.

In English and American law. An illegitimate child; a child born out of lawful wedlock. Cooper's Just. Inst. *499. Bracton divides natural children into two kinds, legitimate and illegitimate. Bract. fol. 64. And see Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 5.

NATURAL DAY. That period of time which begins at sunrise and ends at sunset; otherwise called a solar day. See Day. This seems to be sometimes confounded with an artificial day. Dyer, 131 a.

NATURAL FOOL. A person born without understanding; a born fool or idiot. Sometimes called, in the old books, a natural. See Idiot.

NATURAL FRUITS. [Lat. fructus naturales.] Fruits of land or other thing, produced solely by the powers of nature. See Fructus naturales.

NATURAL LAW. [Lat. jus naturale, jus naturæ.] The rule and dictate of right reason, showing the moral deformity or moral necessity there is in any act, according to its suitableness or unsuitableness to a reasonable nature. Tayl. Civ. Law, 99. See Law of nature.

NATURAL LIBERTY. The power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, unless by the law of nature. 1 Bl. Com. 125.

NATURAL PRESUMPTION. In the law of evidence. That species of presumption, or process of probable reasoning, which is exercised by persons of ordinary intelligence, in inferring one fact from another, without reference to any technical rules. Otherwise called præsumptio hominis. Burr. Circ. Ev. 11, 12, 22, 24.

Presumption as applied to subjects not of a legal character, as distinguished from judicial presumption. Id. 11. See Presumption.

A presumption of fact. Id. 59.

NATURAL YEAR. [Lat. annus naturalis.] In old English law. That period of time in which the sun was supposed to revolve in its orbit, (spatium quo suum sol pervolvat circulum;) consisting of 365 days and one-fourth of a day, or six hours. Bract. fol. 359 b.

NATURALEZA. Span. In Spanish law. The state of a natural born subject. White's New Recop. b. 1, tit. 5, c. 2. Called naturalidad. Id. § 1.

NATURALIZATION. [Lat. naturalizatio.] The act of investing an alien with the rights and privileges of a native or natural-born subject or citizen.* Co. Litt. 129 a. 1 Bl. Com. 374. 2 Kent's Com. 64—67. See the Acts of Congress of April 14th, 1802, ch. 28; March 3d, 1813, ch. 184; March 22d, 1816, ch. 32;

May 26th, 1824, ch. 186; and May 24th, 1828, ch. 116.

NATURALIZED CITIZENS. In American law. Those who go through the prescribed process for naturalization; their minor children at that time in the country; or the widows and children of those who have taken the initiatory steps for naturalization, but have died before they were actually naturalized. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 190.

NAUCLERUS. Græco-Lat. [Gr. ναύκληρος, from ναῦς, a ship, and κλῆρος, lot.] In the civil law. The master or proprietor of a trading vessel. Cod. 11. 1. [2.] Calv. Lex. Adam's Rom. Ant. 440. Molloy de Jur. Mar. 243. 2 Peters' Adm. Dec. Appendix, lxxxiii.

NAUFRAGE. Fr. [Lat. naufragium, q. v.] In French law. Shipwreck, (navis fractura.) Emerigon Tr. des Ass. ch. 12, sect. 12, § 1.

NAUFRAGIUM. Lat. [from navis, a ship, and frangere, to break; L. Fr. naufrage.] In the civil law. Shipwreck; the breaking of a ship (navis fractio;) q. d. ship-break. Dig. 47. 9. Cod. 11. 5. Calv. Lex. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 7. "A ship was broken at sea." Hale de Jur. Mar. pars 1, c. 7.

NAUGHT. In old practice. Bad; defective. "The bar is naught." 1 Leon. 77. "The avowry is naught." 5 Mod. 73. "The plea is undoubtedly naught." Eyre, C. J. 10 Id. 329. See 11 Id. 179. Sometimes written "naughty." Brownl. & Golds. 97. See Ill.

NAULUM. Græco-Lat. [Gr. ναῦλον, from ναῦς, a ship.] In civil and maritime law. Freight; a sum paid for carrying goods or passengers over sea in a ship.* The consideration or premium promised to the master of a ship for carrying goods or persons from one place to another. Roccus Notab. de Nav. et Naulo, Not. ii. See Freight.

NAUPEGUS. Græco-Lat. [Gr. ναυπηγός, from ναῦς, a ship, and πήγνυμι, to fit together.] In the civil law. A shipwright, or ship carpenter. Dig. 50. 6. 6. Calv. Lex. Molloy de Jur. Mar. 243. 2 Peters' Adm. Dec. Appendix, lxxxiii.

NAUTA. Lat. [from Gr. ναῦς, a ship.] In the civil and maritime law. A sailor; one who works a ship. Calv. Lex.

Any one who is on board a ship for the purpose of navigating her, (omnes qui navis navigandæ causâ, in nave sunt.) Dig. 4. 9. 1. 2. Roccus de Nav. & Naulo, not. 9. 3 Sumner's R. 213.

The employer of a ship, (qui navem exercet.) Dig. 4. 9. 1. 2. Story on Agency, § 317, note.

NAVARCHUS. Græco-Lat. [Gr. ναύαρχος, from ναῦς, a ship, and ἀρχή, command.] In civil law. The master or commander of a ship; the captain of a man-of-war. Cod. 11. 1. 6. Adam's Rom. Ant. 440. Calv. Lex. 2 Peters' Adm. Dec. Appendix, lxxxiii.

NAVICULARIUS. Lat. [from navis, ship.] In the civil law. The master or captain of a ship. Calv. Lex. Molloy de Jur. Mar. 243. 2 Peters' Adm. Dec. 307, note. Id. Appendix, lxxxiii. See Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 14, sect. 1.

NAVIGABLE. [Lat. navigabilis, from navigare, to sail, from navis, a ship.] That may be navigated or passed over in ships or vessels. But the term is also understood in a more restricted sense. See Navigable river.

That may be used for navigation. Said of a ship. See Innavigable.

NAVIGABLE RIVER or STREAM. A river or stream in which the tide ebbs and flows, or as far as the tide ebbs and flows. This is the common law definition of the term. The flux and reflux of the tide is the common law test of a navigable stream. And, by that law, fresh-water rivers do not come within the category of navigable rivers. Grier J. 20 Howard's R. 194. See Id. 299. 12 Id. 444. This doctrine has been adopted in several of the United States, as in New-York, Massachusetts, New-Hampshire, Connecticut, Maine, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio and Indiana. See Angell on Water-Courses, §§ 546, 547. In other states, as in Pennsylvania, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi, it has been rejected, and large public rivers used for navigation, whether tide-waters or not, are considered as coming under the denomination of navigable. 12 Howard's R. 444. 20 Id. 299. 14 Id. 91. 2 Binney's R. 475. 2 Devereux R. 30. 1 McCord's R. 580. 6 Humphrey's R. 358. 2 Swan's R. 9. 2 Porter's R. 436. 29 Mississippi R. 31, 34. Angell on Water-Courses, §§ 548, 549. This is in accordance with the civil law, in which, a navigable river is a river capable of being navigated, in the common sense of the term, and not merely a river in which the tide flows and reflows.

Id. § 550. See 3 Kent's Com. 412—418. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 90, 91.

Navigable streams are highways. Gordon's Dig. 318. See Angell on Water-Courses, §§ 545, 546. And a stream not navigable by boats, but floatable merely, is a public highway. 2 Michigan (Gibbs) R. 519, 525, 527.

NAVIGARE. Lat. [from navis, a ship, and agere, to move or work.] To navigate; to work or manage a ship; to perform a voyage; to sail.

NAVIGATION. [Lat. navigatio, from navigare, q. v.] The act of navigating or passing on water, in ships or other vessels. Webster.

The management of ships or vessels. 3 Kent's Com. 159.

Commerce or intercourse by means of shipping.* Marshall, C. J. 9 Wheaton's R. 189—196. See the Passenger cases in 7 Howard's R. 283, et seq.

NAVIGATION ACT. In English law. The celebrated statute of 12 Car. II. c. 18. 2 Bl. Com. 419. Repealed by the statute 6 Geo. IV. cc. 109, 110, 114. 3 Steph. Com. 272, 273.

NAVIL, Navyl. L. Fr. No; not. Yearb. P. 5 Edw. III. 5. P. 7 Edw. III. 10. T. 5 Edw. III. 34, 36.

NAVIS. Lat. [Gr. ναῦς.] A ship; a vessel. Dig. 21. 2. 44. Id. 47. 9.

NAVIS BONA. Lat. A good ship; one that was staunch and strong, well caulked, and stiffened to bear the sea, obedient to her helm, swift, and not unduly affected by the wind. Calv. Lex. citing Seneca, lib. 5, ep. 77. So, in modern bills of lading and other mercantile papers, a vessel is frequently termed "the good ship."

NE. L. Lat. and Fr. Not. See infra. The Lat. ne was used to express a negative condition. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 16, § 6.

NE ADMITTAS. L. Lat. (That you admit not.) In English practice. A writ which lies for the plaintiff in a quare impedit, where he suspects that the bishop will admit the defendant's or any other clerk, pending the suit; forbidding the bishop to admit any clerk whatever till such contention be determined. So called from the initial words in the Latin forms: Prohibemus vobis ne admittatis personam, &c. Reg. Orig. 31. F. N. B. 37, F. G. 3 Bl. Com. 248. Mr. Serjeant Stephen supposes this writ to be now superseded. 3 Steph. Com. 661, note (q.)

NE BAILA (BAILLA) PAS. L. Fr. (Did not deliver.) In old English practice. A plea in the action of detinue, denying the delivery of the thing sued for. Crabb's Hist. 424. Yearb. H. 6 Edw. II. 192.

NE DISTURBA PAS. L. Fr. (Does or did not disturb.) In English practice. The general issue or general plea in quare impedit. 3 Steph. Com. 663. Steph. Pl. 156, 158. 3 Wooddes. Lect. 9.

NE DONA PAS. L. Fr. (Did not give.) In old English practice. The general issue or general plea, in the writ of formedon. Crabb's Hist. 423. Yearb. M. 3 Edw. III. 29. P. 9 Edw. III. 26.

NE EXEAT REGNO, (that he go not out of the kingdom,) commonly called NE EXEAT. L. Lat. In equity practice. A writ issuing out of chancery, forbidding the person or persons to whom it is directed from leaving the kingdom or state. It was formerly used in England for state purposes, but has now become a mere process between private parties in an equity suit, and is used where one party wishes to prevent the other from withdrawing his person or property from the jurisdiction of the court, by going abroad. 2 Steph. Com. 524, note. 3 Daniell's Chanc. Pr. (Perkins' ed.) 1925. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 1464, et seq. See the original forms, Reg. Brev. Appendix, 54, 55.

NE GIST PAS EN BOUCHE. L. Fr. It does not lie in the mouth. A common phrase in the old books. Yearb. M. 3 Edw. II. 50.

NE INJUSTE VEXES. L. Lat. (That you do not unjustly vex.) In old English practice. A prohibitory writ, (now abolished,) founded on the tenth chapter of Magna Charta, which lay for a tenant distrained by his lord for more services than he ought to perform, commanding the lord that he do not distrain his tenant to do other services than those which of right he ought to do, or, in the words of the writ, prohibiting him from vexing the tenant concerning his freehold, &c. (Prohibemus tibi ne injuste vexes, vel vexari permittas W. de libero tenemento, &c.) Reg. Orig. 4. F. N. B. 10, C. F. 3 Bl. Com. 234.

NE QUID IN LOCO PUBLICO VEL ITINERE FIAT. Lat. That nothing shall be done, (put or erected) in a public place or way. The title of an interdict in the Roman law. Dig. 43. 8.

NE RECIPIATUR. L. Lat. (That it be not received.) In practice. A proceeding by which a party to an action at law may prevent the other from doing some act, such as filing a writ or record, when it has not been done in due time. See 1 Stra. 63. Bohun's Inst. Legalis, 39, 200. In American practice, it has sometimes been adopted by a defendant, to prevent the filing of the plaintiff's trial record. 1 Burr. Pr. 232.

NE UNQUES ACCOUPLE EN LOI-ALL MATRIMONIE. L. Fr. (Never accoupled in lawful matrimony—never lawfully married.) In pleading. A plea by which the tenant in an action of dower, unde nil habet, might controvert the validity of the demandant's marriage with the person out of whose lands she claimed dower. Roscoe's Real Act. 220. So called from the words constituting the substance of the plea, when orally delivered in French. See Britt. c. 107. It seems to have at one time been called the plea or exception of concubinage. Id. ibid. Still used in some of the United States, as on petitions for the allotment of dower. 4 Florida R. 23.

NE UNQUES EXECUTOR (or ADMINISTRATOR.) L. Fr. (Never executor or administrator.) In pleading. A plea by which the defendant denies being an executor or administrator. 2 Williams on Exec. 1654. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 344.

NE UNQUES RECEIVOUR. L. Fr. (Never receiver.) In pleading. The general plea in actions of account, denying the fact of the defendant's being a receiver. 2 Reeves' Hist. 339. Crabb's Hist. 424.

NE UNQUES SEISE QUE DOWER. L. Fr. (Never seised of a dowable estate.) In pleading. The general issue in the action of dower unde nil habet, by which the tenant denies that the demandant's husband was ever seised of an estate of which dower might be had. Roscoe's Real Act. 219, 220.

NE VARIETUR. L. Lat. (That it be not changed, or let it not be changed.) A notarial phrase, the words of which are sometimes written by notaries upon bills and notes, for the purpose of ascertaining their identity; but held to be no restriction upon their negotiability. 8 Wheaton's R. 338.

"NEAR," in a penal law, construed strictly, yet not equivalent to next. 1 W. Bl. 20. "There must be a reasonable vicinity, of which the court will judge." Id. ibid.

NECE. L. Fr. A granddaughter. Britt. c. 119. See Neveu.

NECESSARIES. In the law of infancy. Such things and articles furnished to an infant as are useful and suitable to his state and condition in life, and not merely such as are requisite for bare subsistence. 6 Mees. & W. 42. 1 Man. & Gr. 550. 5 Ad. & Ell. 606. See Macpherson on Infants, 498—510. Smith on Contracts, 201, 205, and notes. 2 Greenl. Evid. § 365. The question what is, in the legal sense of the word, necessary, is, in each case, to be tried by a jury. Smith on Contracts, ub. sup.

NECESSARIUS. Lat. Necessary; unavoidable; indispensable; not admitting of choice or the action of the will; needful. See Necessary.

NECESSARY. [from Lat. necessarius.] That must be; that cannot be otherwise; indispensably requisite. Webster.

In a less strict sense,—needful; requisite; incidental; useful or conducive to. Mr. Hamilton's Argument on the Constitutionality of a National Bank. "It is a common mode of expression to say that it is necessary for a government or a person to do this or that thing, when nothing more is intended or understood, than that the interest of the government or person requires, or will be promoted by the doing of this or that thing." Id. ibid. The word "necessary" does not always import an absolute physical necessity, so strong, that one thing, to which another may be termed necessary, cannot exist without that other. It frequently imports no more than that one thing is convenient, or useful, or essential to another. To employ the means necessary to an end, is generally understood as employing any means calculated to produce the end, and not as being confined to those single means without which the end would be entirely unattainable. Marshall, C. J. 4 Wheaton's R. 316, 413. See 1 Kent's Com. 253, 254, note. "Necessary" is an adjective possessing degrees, and does not mean indispensable. Dupont, J. 6 Florida R. 29. And see 24 Connecticut R. 338.

law, as distinguished from voluntary domicil or domicil of choice. . Phillimore on Domicil, 27—97.

NECESSARY INTROMISSION. In Scotch law. That kind of intromission or interference where a husband or wife continues in possession of the other's goods after their decease, for preservation. Wharton's Lex.

NECESSITAS. Lat. Necessity; a force, power or influence which compels one to act against his will. Calv. Lex. Brissonius.

Necessitas culpabilis; culpable or blameable necessity. That kind of necessity which excuses a man who kills another se defendendo. So called by Lord Bacon, to distinguish it from the necessity of killing a thief or malefactor. Bacon's Elem. c. 5. 4 Bl. Com. 187.

Necessitas est lex temporis et loci. Necessity is the law of time and of place. 1 Hale's P. C. 54.

Necessitas facit licitum quod alias non est licitum. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise is not lawful. 10 Co. 61 a. See Quod alias non fuit, &c.

Necessitas inducit privilegium quoad jura privata. Necessity carries with it a privilege as to private rights. Bacon's Max. 28, reg. 5. "The law chargeth no man with default where the act is compulsory and not voluntary, and where there is not a consent and election; and, therefore, if either there be an impossibility for a man to do otherwise, or so great a perturbation of the judgment and reason as, in presumption of law, man's nature cannot overcome, such necessity carrieth a privilege in itself." Id. ibid. Broom's Max. 6—11, [8, 14.] But it is to be noted that necessity privileges only quoad jura privata; for in all cases, if the act that should deliver a man out of the necessity be against the commonwealth, necessity excuses not. Bac. Max. 32.

Necessitas inducit privilegium quod jure privatur. 10 Co. 61 a, The Bishop of Salisbury's case. This seems to be a misstatement of the preceding maxim, Lord Bacon being referred to as the authority.

Necessitas non habet legem. Necessity has no law. Plowd. 18 a. "A common proverb." Id. ibid. "Necessity shall be a good excuse in our law, and in every other law." Id.

Necessitas publica major est quam privata. Public necessity is greater than private. Bacon's Max. 37, in reg. 5. "Death," observes Lord Bacon, in illustration of this maxim, "is the last and farthest point of particular necessity, and the law imposeth it upon every subject, that he prefer the urgent service of his prince and country before the safety of his life."

Necessitas quod cogit, defendit. Necessity defends or justifies what it compels. 1 Hale's P. C. 54. Applied to the acts of a sheriff, or ministerial officer, in the execution of his office. Broom's Max. 7, 8, [10.] See Quod necessitas cogit, &c.

Necessitas sub lege non continetur. Necessity is not embraced under any law. 2 Inst. 326. See Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 14.

Necessitas vincit (communem) legem. Necessity overcomes the [common] law. 5 Co. 40 b, Dormer's case.

NECESSITUDO. Lat. In the civil law. An obligation; a close connexion; relationship by blood. Calv. Lex.

NECESSITY. [Lat. necessitas.] Irresistible power; compulsive force, physical or moral. Webster.—The influence or operation of superior power or irresistible force; the influence of a cause which cannot be avoided nor controlled.*—A constraint upon the will, whereby a man is urged to do that which his judgment disapproves, and which, it is to be presumed, his will (if left to itself) would reject. It is highly just and equitable, therefore, that a man should be excused for those acts which are done through unavoidable force and compulson. 4 Bl. Com. 27.

NECK-VERSE. A cant term for the verse which the ordinary gave a malefactor who prayed his clergy, to read; and by reading which he escaped hanging. Foster's Crown Law, 206, c. 7. See Miserere, Clergy.

> "Letter nor line know I never a one,
> Were't my neck-verse at Hairibee."
> Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel, canto i.

NEE, Ne. L. Fr. [from Lat. natus.] Born. Si il fuit nee en vie; if it was born alive. Britt. c. 51. Nee vife; born alive. Litt. sect. 35.

NEF, Noef, Nief. L. Fr. New. Kelham.

NEFAS. Lat. That which is against right, or the divine law, (fas.) See Fas.

A wicked or impious thing or act. Calv. Lex.

NEFASTUS. Lat. [from ne, not, and fastus, q. v.] In Roman law. A term applied to a day on which it was unlawful to administer justice. Adam's Rom. Ant. 129, 200.

NEFE, Neef, Naef. L. Fr. [from Lat. navis.] A ship. Nefe siglaunt; a vessel sailing. Britt. c. 1. Neis; ships. Kelham.

NEGARE. Lat. To deny. Calv. Lex. See Factum negantis, &c.

NEGATIF, Negatyf. L. Fr. A negative or denial; a contrary or opposite allegation. Prover le negatyf. Britt. c. 98.

NEGATIO. Lat. [from negare, q. v.] In civil and old English law. A negation, or denial; a negative. Negatio conclusionis est error in lege. The denial of a conclusion is error in law. Wingate's Max. 268, max. 77. Applied to a conclusion in its logical sense, as drawn from premises.

Negatio destruit negationem, et ambæ faciunt affirmationem. A negative destroys a negative, and both make an affirmative. Co. Litt. 146 b. Lord Coke cites this as a rule of grammatical construction, not always applying in law. Id. ibid.

NEGATIVE. A denial; a form or expression of denial; a proposition by which something is denied; a statement in the form or mode of denial. Two negatives do not make a good issue. Steph. Pl. 386, 387.

NEGATIVE PREGNANT. In pleading. A negative implying also an affirmative. Cowell.—Such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry within it an affirmative. Steph. Pl. 381. As if a man be said to have aliened land in fee, and he says he has not aliened in fee, this is a negative pregnant, for though it be true that he has not aliened in fee, yet it may be that he has made an estate in tail. Cowell. Dyer, 17 a.

A negative pregnant is considered as a fault in pleading; and the reason why it is so considered is, that the meaning of such a form of expression is ambiguous. Mr. Stephen gives the following example: "In trespass for entering the plaintiff's house, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff's daughter gave him license to do so, and that he entered by that license. The plaintiff replied that he did not enter by her license. This was considered as a negative pregnant; and it was held that the plaintiff should have traversed the entry by itself, or the license by itself, and not both together. Cro. Jac. 87. It will be observed that this traverse might imply or carry within it, that a license was given, though the defendant did not enter by that license. It is, therefore, in the language of pleading, said to be pregnant with that admission, viz. that a license was given." Steph. Pl. 381.

NEGATIVE STATUTE. A statute expressed in negative terms; a statute which prohibits a thing from being done, or declares what shall not be done. See 1 Bl. Com. 142.

NEGATUM. Lat. [from negare, q. v.] Denied; the opposite of concessum, (q. v.) "Held by Dodridge, J. et non fuit negatum, that," &c. Latch, 149.

NEGLECT is used, in the law of bailment, as synonymous with negligence, (q. v.) Jones on Bailm. 9, 21, 118. But the latter word is the closer translation of the Lat. negligentia, (q. v.)

NEGLIGENCE. [from Lat. negligentia, q. v.] The omission of care or diligence.*—The want of ordinary diligence. Story on Bailm. § 17.—The omission of that degree of care which a man of common prudence takes of his own concerns. 2 Steph. Com. 131. This, according to Mr. Stephen, answers to what Sir William Jones calls ordinary neglect. Id. ibid. note. Jones on Bailm. 118, 119. But see Negligentia.

Negligence is commonly distinguished as of three degrees,—slight, ordinary and gross. But doubts have been expressed as to the practical utility of this division. See the opinion of Mr. Justice Curtis, 16 Howard's R. 469, 474.

NEGLIGENTIA. Lat. [from negligere, to neglect.] In the civil law. Negligence, want or omission of care or attention; inattention. This term hardly seems to correspond with what is called in English simple negligence, since it took a high degree of it to constitute culpa, or fault. Magna negligentia culpa est. Dig. 50. 16. 226. See Culpa.

Negligentia semper habet infortunium comitem. Negligence always has misfortune for a companion. Co. Litt. 246 b. Shep. Touch. 476.

NEGLIGENT ESCAPE. In practice. An escape from an officer's custody without his consent. 1 Arch. Pr. 85. An escape through negligence or inattention.

NEGOTIABILITY. In mercantile law. Transferable quality. That quality of bills of exchange and promissory notes, which renders them transferable from one person to another; and from possessing which, they are emphatically termed negotiable paper. 3 Kent's Com. 74, 77, 89, et seq. See Story on Bills, § 60.

NEGOTIABLE. In mercantile law. Transferable or assignable; transferable by endorsement; that may be negotiated or transferred from one to another, so as to pass a right of action. A term constantly applied to bills of exchange, promissory notes, and checks, which are made negotiable by being made payable to order or to bearer. See Negotiable instrument, Negotiable words.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT. Any instrument, the right of action on which is, (by exception from the common rule,) freely assignable from man to man. 2 Steph. Com. 163. But see Story on Bills, § 62.

NEGOTIABLE WORDS. In mercantile law. Words necessary to render a bill of exchange, promissory note or check, negotiable; words which give a bill, note or check a negotiable quality. The usual word for this purpose in a bill or note, is "order," and in a check, "bearer;" as "to A. B. or order;" or, "to the order of A. B.;" "to A. B. or bearer," or, "to bearer." 3 Kent's Com. 77. Story on Bills, § 60. See 3 Comstock's R. 506.

NEGOTIARI. Lat. [from negotium, business.] To do or transact business; to trade or traffic; to negotiate.

NEGOTIATE. [from Lat. negotiari, q. v.] To pass from one to another in the way of business, (negotium.) To negotiate a bill or note, is to indorse and deliver it to another.

NEGOTIORUM GESTIO. Lat. In the civil law. Literally, a doing of business or businesses. A species of spontaneous agency, or an interference by one in the affairs of another, in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority. 2 Kent's Com. 616, note. Inst. 3. 28. 1. Dig. 3. 5. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 28, § 969. The intervention of a person, acting without authority in transacting the affairs of another. 2 Duer on Ins. 133.

NEGOTIORUM GESTOR. Lat. In the civil law. A manager of business. A name given to one who assumed the care of the affairs of another in his absence, without authority or mandate, (qui negotia absentis gessit—sine mandato alienis negotiis gerendis se obtulit.) Inst. 3. 28. 1.—A voluntary agent. 2 Duer on Ins. 134.—One who spontaneously, and without the knowledge or consent of the owner, intermeddles with his property, as to do work on it, or to carry it to another place, &c. Story on Bailm. § 189.

NEGOTIUM. Lat. A thing; a matter, business or affair; any thing that may occupy a person, (illud quod nos habet occupatos.) Calv. Lex.

Business; trade, (mercatura.) Id.

In the civil law. A suit; a contract. Id.

Negotia, (plur.) matters or affairs. See Negotiorum gestio.

NEIFE, Neif. [L. Lat. nativa.] In old English law. A female villein; a woman born in villeinage. 2 Bl. Com. 94. Perkins, ch. 5, s. 314. This is the proper form of the word, though it is also written niefe by Coke and others. See Niefe. Neife de eu et trene; a neife of water, and whip of three cords; such a bondwoman as was used to servile works and correction. Co. Litt. 25 b. See De eu et trene.

NEIFTY. In old English law. The condition of a neife. Derived probably from the Fr. naifte, (q. v.)

NEMBDA. Teut. In Swedish and Gothic law. A jury. 3 Bl. Com. 349, 359. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 18, note [z.]

Neminem oportet esse sapientiorem legibus. No man ought to be wiser than the laws. Co. Litt. 97 b. No man (out of his own private reason,) ought to be wiser than the law, which is the perfection of reason. Id. ibid.

Nemo admittendus est inhabilitare seipsum. No man is to be admitted to incapacitate himself. Jenk. Cent. 40, case 77. No man shall be received to avoid his deed, by alleging that he was non compos mentis at the making of it. Id. ibid. Yearb. M. 5 Edw. III. 131. See 2 Kent's Com. 451, and note.

Nemo agit in seipsum. No man acts against himself. Jenk. Cent. 40, case 76. A man cannot be a judge and a party in his own cause. Id. ibid. No man can do an act to himself. Finch's Law, b. 1, ch. 3, n. 20.

Nemo alienæ rei, sine satisdatione, defensor idoneus intelligitur. No man is considered a competent defender of another's property, without security. A rule of the Roman law, applied in part in admiralty cases. 1 Curtis' R. 202.

Nemo alieno nomine lege agere potest. No man can sue in another's name. A maxim of the civil law. Dig. 50. 17. 123.

Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem est audiendus. No one alleging his own baseness or infamy is to be heard (as a witness;) no person is allowed to give evidence of his own baseness or wickedness. 4 Inst. 279. This maxim (which is derived from the civil law,) is quoted in several of the old English cases, and has been recognised in American law. Gibson, C. J. 6 Penn. St. (Barr's) R. 473, 474. Story J. 3 Story's R. 516, 514. But Mr. Best, after an examination of the modern authorities, comes to the conclusion that in England it forms no part of the common law of the present day. Best on Evid. 412—416, § 373, 374.

Nemo bis punitur pro eodem delicto. No man is punished twice for the same offence. 4 Bl. Com. 315. 2 Hawk. P. C. 377.

Nemo cogitur rem suam vendere, etiam justo pretio. No man is compelled to sell his own property, even for a just price. 4 Inst. 275. Applied to things saleable in markets.

Nemo contra factum suum venire potest. No man can contravene or contradict his own deed. 2 Inst. 66. The principle of estoppel by deed. Best on Evid. 408, § 370.

Nemo dare potest quod non habet. No man can give that which he has not. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 15, § 8. 2 And. 92. Nemo dat qui non habet. Jenk. Cent. 250.

Nemo de domo sua extrahi debet. No man ought to be dragged from his own house. Dig. 50. 17. 103.

Nemo debet bis puniri pro uno delicto. No man ought to be punished twice for one offence. 4 Co. 43 a. 11 Co. 59 b, Foster's case. No man shall be placed in peril of legal penalties more than once upon the same accusation. Broom's Max. 138, [257.]

Nemo debet bis vexari [si constet curiæ quod sit] pro una et eadem causa. No man ought to be twice troubled or harassed [if it appear to the court that it is] for one and the same cause. 5 Co. 61 a, Sparry's case. No man can be sued a second time for the same cause of action, if once judgment has been rendered. See Broom's Max. 135, [241.] No man can be held to bail a second time at the suit of the same plaintiff, for the same cause of action. 1 Chitt. Arch. Pr. 476. No man who has once been indicted for an offence and acquitted, can be afterwards indicted for the same offence, provided the first indictment were such that he could have been lawfully convicted upon it by proof of the facts contained in the second indictment. Broom's Max. 137, [257.]

Nemo debet [potest] esse judex in propria causa. No man ought to [can] be a judge in his own cause. 12 Co. 114 a, Earl of Derby's case. A maxim derived from the civil law. Cod. 3. 5. Called a fundamental rule of reason and of natural justice. Burr. Sett. Cas. 194, 197.

Nemo debet immiscere se rei ad se nihil pertinenti. No one should intermeddle with a thing that in no respect concerns him. Jenk. Cent. 18, case 32.

Nemo debet locupletari aliena jactura. No one ought to be enriched by another's loss. 2 Kent's Com. 336. 1 Kames' Equity, 331. 2 Id. 145, 204, 205. Other forms of this maxim are, Nemo debet locupletari ex alterius incommodo. Jenk. Cent. 4, case 5. Nemo ex alterius detrimento fieri debet locupletior. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 558. Jure naturæ æquum est neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuria fieri locupletiorem. Dig. 50. 17. 206. Id. 12. 6. 14.

Nemo debet rem suam sine facto aut defectu suo amittere. No man ought to lose his property without his own act or default. Co. Litt. 263 a.

Nemo duobus utatur officiis. No man should enjoy two offices (at the same time.) 4 Inst. 100. A justice can take no other office. Id. ibid.

Nemo est hæres viventis. No one is the heir of a living person. Co. Litt. 8 a, 22 b. No one can be heir during the life of his ancestor. Broom's Max. 223, [393.] No person can be the actual complete heir of another, till the ancestor is previously dead. 2 Bl. Com. 208. Id. 107, 170, 224. 4 Kent's Com. 212. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 540.

Nemo ex alterius facto prægravari debet. No man ought to be burdened in consequence of another's act. 2 Kent's Com. 646.

Nemo ex consilio obligatur. No man is bound in consequence of his advice. Mere advice will not create the obligation of a mandate. Story on Bailm. § 155.

Nemo ex proprio dolo consequitur actionem. No man acquires a right of action from his own wrong. Broom's Max. [221.]

tionem facere potest. No man can improve his own condition by his own wrong. Dig. 50. 17. 134. 1.

Nemo inauditus condemnari debet si non sit contumax. No man ought to be condemned without being heard, unless he be contumacious. Jenk. Cent. 18, case 12, in marg.

Nemo in propria causa testis esse debet. No one ought to be a witness in his own cause. 3 Bl. Com. 371. 1 Id. 443. This maxim has been greatly impaired in modern law, by judicial decisions and statutory provisions, both in England and the United States. See Lord Denman's Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85. Best on Evid. 159, § 125, et seq. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 329, et seq. Id. §§ 383—386, et seq. 1 Phill. on Ev. 45, 60. 3 Id. Cowen and Hill's notes, 44—60. (Notes 34—37.) 24 Mississippi R. 528, 538, and cases cited ibid.

Nemo militans Deo implicetur secularibus negotiis. No man who is warring for [in the service of] God should be involved in secular matters. Co. Litt. 70 b. A principle of the old law, that men of religion were not bound to go in person with the king to war.

Nemo patriam in qua natus est exuere, nec ligeantiæ debitum ejurare possit. No man can renounce the country in which he was born, nor abjure the obligation of his allegiance. Co. Litt. 129 a. Broom's Max. [52.] More briefly expressed, Nemo potest exuere patriam. Fost. Cr. Law, 184. See Natural allegiance.

Nemo plus commodi heredi suo relinquit quam ipse habuit. No one leaves a greater benefit to his heir than he had himself. Dig. 50. 17. 120.

Nemo plus juris ad [in] alium transferre potest quam ipse habet, [haberet.] No one can transfer more right to another than he has himself. Dig. 50. 17. 54. See Id. 50. 17. 175. 1. This maxim of the civil law has been adopted in the common law, and constitutes a leading principle of the alienation of property, both real and personal. 1 Wooddes. Lect. Introd. Lect. 5, lxxi. note. 5 Co. 113. Co. Litt. 309 b. Wingate's Max. 56. Broom's Max. [354.] 2 Kent's Com. 324. 4 Id. 10. Story on Bailm. §§ 328, 340. Called by Mr. Justice Thompson, "a plain dictate of common sense." 10 Peters' R. 161, 175. Otherwise expressed, Nemo potest plus juris ad alium transferre quam ipse habet. Co. Litt. 309 b.

Nemo potest contra recordum verificare per patriam. No one can verify by the country, against a record. 2 Inst. 380. The issue upon matter of record cannot be to the country. A maxim of old practice.

Nemo potest esse dominus et hæres. No man can be both owner and heir. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, c. 7. Nemo ejusdem tenementi simul potest esse hæres et dominus. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 106.

Nemo potest esse tenens et dominus. No man can be both tenant and lord (of the same tenement.) Gilb. Ten. 142. See Nullus esse, &c.

Nemo potest facere per alium quod per se non potest. No one can do that by another, which he cannot do of himself. Jenk. Cent. 237, case 14. A rule said to hold in original grants, but not in descents; as where an office descended to a woman, in which case, though she could not exercise the office in person, she might by deputy. Id. ibid.

Nemo potest facere per obliquum quod non potest facere per directum. No man can do that indirectly, which he cannot do directly. 1 Eden, 512.

Nemo potest mutare consilium suum in alterius injuriam. No man can change his purpose to another's injury. Dig. 50. 17. 75. Broom's Max. [29.]

Nemo præsumitur alienam posteritatem suæ prætulisse. No man is presumed to have preferred another's posterity to his own. Wingate's Max. 285, max. 79.

Nemo præsumitur esse immemor suæ æternæ salutis, et maxime in articulo mortis. No man is presumed to be unmindful of his eternal welfare, and especially when at the point of death. 6 Co. 76 a, Sir George Curson's case. A party doing an act in contemplation of death, is presumed to act under a proper sense of the solemnity of his situation; that is, with sincerity of purpose.* No collusion can be averred upon a will. 6 Co. ub. sup.

Nemo prohibetur plures negotiationes sive artes exercere. No one is prohibited from following several kinds of business or several arts. 11 Co. 54 a, Ipswich Tailors' case. The common law doth not prohibit any person from using several arts or mysteries at his pleasure. Id. ibid.

Nemo prohibetur pluribus defensionibus uti. No one is prohibited from making use of several defences. Co. Litt. 304 a. Wingate's Max. 479, max. 120. Hence the allowance of several pleas on the part of a defendant. Id. ibid. This rule is derived from that of the civil law, Nemo prohibetur pluribus exceptionibus uti, quamvis diversæ sint. Dig. 44. 1. 8.

Nemo prudens punit ut præterita revocentur, sed ut futura præveniantur. No wise man punishes in order that past things may be recalled, but that future wrongs may be prevented. 3 Bulstr. 173.

Nemo punitur pro alieno delicto. No man is punished for the crime of another. Wingate's Max. 336, max. 87.

Nemo punitur sine injuria, facto seu defalta. No one is punished unless for some wrong, act or default. 2 Inst. 287.

Nemo tenetur ad impossibile. No man is bound to do an impossibility. Jenk. Cent. 7, case 10. Held, on this ground, that when the king's command to the judges was contrary to law, it ought not to be obeyed. Id. ibid.

Nemo tenetur armare adversarium suum contra se. No man is bound to arm his adversary against himself; (as to furnish him with an instrument to enable him to state his cause of action.) Bract. fol. 34. An observation of Bracton, which Britton (c. 39,) has rendered in French, Nul n'est tenu de armer son adversarie, and which has passed into a maxim of the common law, though its strictness has been much relaxed in modern practice. Co. Litt. 36 a. Wingate's Max. 665, max. 171. Best on Evid. 487, § 442.

Nemo tenetur divinare. No man is bound to divine, or to have foreknowledge of a future event. 10 Co. 55 a. 4 Id. 28.

Nemo tenetur edere instrumenta contra se. No man is bound to produce writings against himself. A rule of the Roman law, adhered to in criminal prosecutions, but departed from in civil questions. Bell's Dict.

Nemo tenetur informare qui nescit, sed quisquis scire quod informat. No one is bound to give information on a subject of which he is ignorant, but every one is bound to know that which he gives information about. Branch's Princ.

Nemo tenetur jurare in suam turpitudinem. No one is bound to swear to the fact of his own criminality; no one can be forced to give his own oath in evidence of his guilt. Bell's Dict. See Criminate.

Nemo tenetur seipsum infortuniis et periculis exponere. No one is bound to expose himself to misfortunes and dangers. Co. Litt. 253 b. Hence a threat of bodily harm will excuse the performance of an act in law. Id. ibid.

Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare. No one is bound to accuse himself. Wingate's Max. 486. 1 Bl. Com. 443. Nemo tenetur prodere seipsum. No man is bound to betray himself. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 224.

Nemo videtur fraudare eos qui sciunt et consentiunt. No one seems [is supposed] to defraud those who know and assent [to his acts.] Dig. 20. 17. 145.

NEMY, Nemi. L. Fr. Not. Nemy come heire; not as heir. Litt. sect. 3.

NEPHEW. [from L. Fr. neveu, (q. v.) and so pronounced, according to the English authorities.] A brother's or sister's son. "All my nephews and nieces," in a bequest, held to include nephews and nieces of the half blood as well as of the whole blood. 2 Jones' Eq. R. 202.

NEPORQUANT. L. Fr. Nevertheless. Fet Assaver, § 46.

NEPOS. Lat. In the civil law. A grandson. Supra, avus, avia; infra, nepos, neptis; above, grandfather, grandmother; below, grandson, granddaughter. Inst. 3. 6. 1. Bracton uses nepos in the same sense. Bract. fol. 67, 68. In Britton it is rendered neveu, (q. v.) Britt. c. 119. The old Scotch nepuoy (q. v.) is probably derived from nepos.

NEPTIS. Lat. In the civil law. A granddaughter. Inst. 3. 6. 1. Bracton uses the word in the same sense. Bract. fol. 67, 68. In Britton, it is rendered nece. Britt. c. 119. In old Scotch law, the equivalent word was neipce, (q. v.)

NEQUITER. Lat. In old English law. Wickedly. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, §§ 6, 7, 8.

NESCIENCE. [from Lat. nescire.] Ignorance. 6 Mod. 286.

NETHER. O. Eng. Under; lower. Nether-vert; underwood. See Vert. "Nether" and "over" are used in the old books as distinctions of places. See Yearb. M. 9 Edw. III. 56.

NEUTRAL. [Lat. neutralis, from neuter, neither.] In international law. On neither side; taking neither side; belonging to neither side; indifferent between contending parties. A neutral nation or power is one that takes no part in a contest going on between others, who are called *belligerents.

1 Kent's Com. 115. See Wheat. Int. Law, 480.

NEUTRALITY. In international law. A state of being neutral, or on neither side; a state of indifference between contending parties. 1 Kent's Com. 114. United States Digest, Neutrality.

NEVER INDEBTED. [L. Lat. nunquam indebitatus.] In English practice. A form of plea in actions of debt on simple contract, substituted by the late Pleading Rules in place of the plea of nil debet, (q. v.) Reg. Hil. T. 4 Will. IV. Steph. Pl. 156. The substance of it is that the defendant "never was indebted in manner and form as in the declaration alleged." Id. ibid. It is made the proper form of plea in cases where the defendant means to deny, in point of fact, the existence of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, or to deny the matters of fact from which such contract would, by law, be implied. Wharton's Lex.

NEVEU. L. Fr. In old English law. A grandson. Desouth le pleintife (says Britton, describing a figure or diagram illustrative of the degrees of succession,) soit mis un fitz ou fille, et celuy face le primer degree avalaunt; et desouth soit mis ou neveu ou nece, et celuy face le second degree; under the plaintiff let there be put a son or daughter, and this makes the first degree descending, and under [the son or daughter,] let there be put a grandson or granddaughter, and this makes the second degree. Britt. c. 119.

Neveu is undoubtedly the original form of the modern nephew, though the latter word is now exclusively used to denote a brother's or sister's son.

NEW ASSIGNMENT. [L. Fr. novel assignment.] In pleading. A species of pleading on the part of a plaintiff, (most commonly occurring in actions of trespass,) sometimes termed a replication, (from its following the defendant's plea,) but which is, in fact, a re-statement of the cause of action alleged in the declaration, in a more minute and circumstantial manner, being in the nature of a new or repeated declaration. Its necessity arises from the very general mode of declaring allowed in such actions, in consequence of which, the defendant is sometimes led to apply his plea to a different matter from that which the plaintiff had in view; or, in other words, to plead an evasive plea. Steph. Pl. 220—228. 1 Chitt. Pl. 624.

NEW FOR OLD. A term in the law of insurance, applied to a deduction made in the adjustment of losses. In the case of a partial loss, the rule is to apply the old materials towards the payment of the new, by deducting the value of them from the gross amount of the expenses for the repairs, and to allow the deduction of one-third new for old upon the balance. 3 Kent's Com. 339. Stevens & Benecke on Average, 374.

NEW STATUTES. See Nova statuta.

NEW TRIAL. In practice. A second (and, in some cases, a third) trial of a cause, granted by the court, on motion of the party dissatisfied with the result of the previous trial, upon a proper case being presented for the purpose.* A rehearing of the cause before another jury. 3 Bl. Com. 391.

New trials are granted on the ground either of irregularity, such as want of notice of trial; misconduct of the prevailing party or of the jury, during the trial; or on the merits of the cause itself; as where the jury have given a verdict against law or without evidence, or contrary to evidence, or have given exorbitant damages, or where the judge has erred in allowing or refusing evidence, or has misdirected the jury, or where a new and material fact has come to light since the previous trial. See 3 Bl. Com. 387, 392. 3 Steph. Com. 624—627. Steph. Pl. 94, 95. 1 Burr. Pr. 468. United States Digest, New trial.

NEW WORK. [Lat. novum opus; Fr. nouvel œuvre.] In the civil law. An edifice or other work newly commenced on any ground whatever. Civil Code of Louis. art. 852.

NEWSPAPER. A paper or publication conveying news or intelligence.

A printed publication, issued in numbers at stated intervals, conveying intelligence of passing events.

The term newspaper is popularly applied only to such publications as are issued in a single sheet, and at short intervals, as daily or weekly. It is not, however, the form, so much as the subject matter of a publication which seems properly to constitute it, in law, a newspaper. Hence publications consisting of more than one sheet, and issued in pamphlet form, at longer intervals, may, if principally, or in great part, devoted to the transmission of news, be considered, for certain purposes, as newspapers.

NEXI. Lat. [plur. of nexus, from nectere, to bind.] In the Roman law. Bound; bound persons. A term applied to such insolvent debtors as were delivered up to their creditors, by whom they might be held in bondage until their debts were discharged. Calv. Lex. Adam's Rom. Ant. 49.

NEXT FRIEND. [L. Fr. prochein ami; L. Lat. proximus amicus.] In practice. A person, usually a near relative, by whom an infant sues at law or in equity. 1 Tidd's Pr. 99. 1 Daniell's Ch. Pr. 88—105.

NEXT OF KIN. [L. Fr. prochein du saunk.] Nearest of blood. A term applied, in the law of descent and distribution, to the nearest blood relatives of a deceased person, though it is sometimes construed to mean only those who are entitled to take under the statute of distributions, and sometimes to include other persons. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 1065 b. See 2 Jarman on Wills, 37, (28, Perkins' ed.) Nearness of kin is computed by the rule of the civil law, according to which, the father and son of the deceased stand in the first degree, the grandfather, grandson and brother in the second, the uncle and nephew in the third, cousins in the fourth, &c.; the deceased himself being the point or terminus from which the computation is made. 2 Kent's Com. 422. 4 Id. 412, et seq. See Kin.

NICHOL. An old way of writing Lincoln. Yearb. H. 4 Hen. VI. 7.

NIEFE, Nief. L. Fr. [L. Lat. nativa.] In old English law. A female villein. Feme que est villein est appel niefe. Litt. sect. 186. A woman born in vassalage. Barr. Obs. Stat. 238, note [k.] But the proper form of the word seems to be neife, (q. v.)

NIEF. L. Fr. [Lat. navis.] In old English law. A ship. Yearb. H. 6 Edw. III. 15.

NIENT CULPABLE. L. Fr. [Lat. non culpabilis.] In pleading. Not guilty. The old French name for the general issue of not guilty.

The name given to that clause in a suggestion, in which it is stated that the fact suggested is not denied. 1 Tidd's Pr. 606. 2 Id. 723.

NIENT LE FAIT. L. Fr. [L. Lat. non est factum.] In pleading. Not the deed. Yearb. H. 11 Hen. VI. 21. The name formerly given to the general issue of non est factum. Crabb's Hist. Eng. Law, 213, 423. 2 Reeves' Hist. 331. Nient nostre fait; not our deed. Yearb. T. 1 Edw. II. 18. Nient son fait; not his deed. H. 3 Hen. VI. 35. M. 21 Hen. VI. 9.

NIENT SEISI. L. Fr. In old pleading. Not seised. The general plea in the writ of annuity. Crabb's Hist. 424.

NIGHT. [L. Fr. nuyt; Lat. nox.] In the common law of burglary. That portion of time during which it is so dark (from the absence of daylight) that the countenance of a man cannot be discerned. 1 Hale's P. C. 350. 4 Bl. Com. 224. See Burglary. In this sense, night is distinguished from day, as a separate portion of time; but in the general sense, the night constitutes a part of the day. See Day. Night-time has always been an essential circumstance in the English law of burglary. Tempus discernit prædonem à burgatore. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 16, § 6.

By the English statutes 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 86, s. 4, it is declared that as regards the offence of burglary, the night shall be considered as commencing at nine in the evening, and concluding at six in the morning of the next day. 4 Steph. Com. 147.

NIHIL, Nichil, Nil. Lat. Nothing. See Nil.

In practice. A return made by a sheriff to a writ of scire facias, that the bail or defendants have nothing (nihil habent) by which he can make known to them. 2 Tidd's Pr. 1124.

A return formerly made to process of attachment and distringas to compel the appearance of a defendant. 3 Bl. Com. 282.

A return or answer formerly made by a sheriff, on being apposed (that is, interrogated,) in the Exchequer concerning illeviable debts, that they were worth nothing. Cowell.

In American law. A return to an attachment in garnishee process. 4 Penn. St. (Barr's) R. 232.

Nihil consensui tam contrarium est quam vis atque metus. Nothing is so contrary to consent as force and fear. Dig. 50. 17. 116.

Nihil dictum quod non dictum prius. Nothing is said which was not said before. Said of a case where former arguments were repeated. Hardr. 464.

Nihil est magis rationi consentaneum quam eodem modo quodque dissolvere quo conflatum est. Nothing is more consonant to reason, than that a thing should be dissolved or discharged in the same way in which it was created. Shep. Touch. 323. As that the discharge of a debt or duty created by writing (or deed,) should be by writing (or deed) also. Id. ibid. See Nihil tam convenieus, &c.

Nihil facit error nominis, cum de corpore constat. An error of name works no prejudice, where it is clear as to the body [or subject matter intended.] Dig. 18. 1. 9. 1. This maxim of the civil law has been adopted in the common law, corpus being taken in the sense of a corporate body. 11 Co. 21 a, Dr. Ayray's case. A misnomer in a grant to a corporation does not avoid the grant, though the right name of the corporation be not used, provided the corporation really intended be made apparent. 2 Kent's Com. 292. Sometimes, the maxim is more generally applied, and in place of the word corpore, the words persona or re are used. Shep. Touch. (by Preston,) 236, 247. In the original text of the Digests, corpus is taken in the sense of subject matter.

Nihil in lege intolerabilius est [quam] eandem rem diverso jure censeri. Nothing is more intolerable in law, than that the same matter, thing or case, should be subject to different views of law. 4 Co. 93 a, Slade's case. Applied to the difference of opinion entertained by different courts, as to the law of a particular case. Id. ibid.

Nihil magis justum est quam quod necessarium est. Nothing is more just than that which is necessary. Dav. R. 12. Branch's Princ.

Nihil nequam est præsumendum. Nothing wicked is to be presumed. 2 P. Wms. 583.

Nihil perfectum est dum aliquid restat agendum. Nothing is perfect, while any thing remains to be done. 9 Co. 9 b, Dowman's case.

Nihil peti potest ante id tempus quo per rerum naturam persolvi possit. Nothing can be demanded before the time when, by the nature of things, it can be paid. Dig. 50. 17. 186.

Nihil possumus contra veritatem. We can do nothing against truth. Doct. & Stud. dial. 2, c. 6.

Nihil quod est contra rationem est licitum. Nothing that is against reason is lawful. Co. Litt. 97 b.

Nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum. Nothing that is inconvenient is lawful. Co. Litt. 66 a, 97 b. A maxim very frequently quoted by Lord Coke, but to be taken in modern law with some qualification. Broom's Max. 84—86, [140.]

Nihil tam naturale est, quam eo genere quidque dissolvere quo colligatum est. Nothing is so natural as to dissolve a thing by the same kind of means, by which it was bound together. Dig. 50. 17. 35. See Id. 153. This maxim of the civil law is otherwise expressed by Bracton, Nihil tam conveniens est naturali æquitati, quam unumquodque dissolvi eo ligamine quo ligatum est, (Nothing is so consonant to natural justice, as that every thing should be dissolved by the same kind of tie with which it is bound;) and applied to the dissolution of the connection of homage by the same mutual consent by which it was created. Bract. fol. 78 b. The maxim in the latter form is constantly quoted by Lord Coke, and has been extensively adopted in the common law. 2 Inst. 359, 360. Every contract or agreement ought to be dissolved by matter of as high a nature as the first deed, or as that which first made it obligatory. 5 Co. 26 a, Countess of Rutland's case. 2 Id. 53 a. 4 Id. 57 b. Shep. Touch. 396. Broom's Max. 407, [681.] Best on Evid. 250, § 206. It does not apply, however, to the dissolution of the contract of partnership. Story on Partn. § 271. Other forms of this maxim occur in the books. Nihil est tam naturale quam quidlibet dissolvi eo modo quo ligatur. (Nothing is so natural as that a thing should be dissolved in the same way in which it was created;) contract by contract, deed by deed, record by record. Jenk. Cent. 166, case 20. Quomodo quid constituitur, eodem modo dissolvetur. Id. 74, case 40.

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali æquitati, quam voluntatem domini volentis rem suam in alium transferre, ratam haberi. Nothing is so agreeable to natural equity, as that the will or intention of an owner desiring to transfer his property to another, should be ratified or confirmed. Inst. 2. 1. 40. Dig. 41. 1. 9. 3. This civil law maxim is quoted by Bracton, and from the latter writer by Lord Coke. 1 Co. 100 a, Shelley's case.

Nihil tam proprium imperio quam legibus vivere. Nothing is so becoming to authority, as to live in accordance with the laws. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 17, § 11.

Nil temere novandum. Nothing should be rashly changed. Jenk. Cent. 163, case 9. No innovation should be rashly introduced.

NIL CAPIAT, (or, QUOD NIL CAPIAT, that he take nothing.) L. Lat. In practice. A name given to the judgment for the defendant in an action at law, where the issue has arisen on a pleading in bar. So called from the emphatic words of the entry of judgment in the old form: Ideo consideratum est quod prædictus—NIL CAPIAT per breve sed quod sit in misericordia, &c. Literally translated in the modern precedents: "Therefore it is considered that the said (plaintiff) take nothing by his writ (bill or declaration,) but that he be in mercy," &c. Arch. Forms, 129.

NIL DEBET. L. Lat. (He owes nothing.) In pleading. The name of the general issue in an action of debt on simple contract. 3 Bl. Com. 305. 1 Burr. Pr. 167. See 1 Kent's Com. 260, 261. So called from the emphatic words of the plea when framed in Latin: Et dicit quod ipse NON DEBET præfato—præd. 20*l. nec aliquem inde denarium*, &c. (And says that he does not owe the said — the aforesaid 20*l.* nor any penny thereof.) Towns. Pl. 483. Nil debent; they owe nothing. 10 East, 366.

In England, the plea of nil debet is not now allowed in any action. Reg. Gen. Hil. T. 4 Will. IV. See Never indebted.

NIL (or NIHIL) DICIT. L. Lat. (Says nothing.) In practice. A name given to the judgment entered on the default of a defendant to plead to the plaintiff's declaration. 3 Bl. Com. 397. 1 Tidd's Pr. 562. So termed from the emphatic words of the ancient entry on the record: Et prædictus—venit et defendit, &c. et NIHIL in barram sive præclusionem actionis prædicti—DICIT, per quod, &c. Towns. Pl. 432. Literally translated in the modern precedents, "And the said (defendant) — comes and defends, &c. and says nothing in bar or preclusion of the action of the said (plaintiff) whereby," &c. Arch. Forms, 336.

NIL HABUIT IN TENEMENTIS. L. Lat. (He had nothing in the tenements.) In old pleading. A plea in an action of debt upon a lease. 2 Ld. Raym. 1154.

Nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur. Excessive subtlety is reprobated in law. 4 Co. 5 b, Vernon's case. Wingate's Max. 26. Broom's Max. [141.] The law discountenances curious and nice exceptions, tending to the overthrow or delay of justice. See Apices juris non sunt jura.

NIMIS. Lat. Too much; too.

NISI. Lat. Unless. Nisi convenissent in manum viri; unless they should come into the power of a husband; unless they should marry. A phrase applied in Roman law to women, who were subject to perpetual guardianship until married. 1 Bl. Com. 464. See Rule nisi.

NISI PRIUS. L. Lat. (Unless before, or unless sooner.) In practice. A common law phrase of high antiquity, unmeaning in its literal translation as at present applied, but of great significance in practice, and equally familiar to the jurisprudence of England and the United States; being constantly used to denote the system of trial of issues of fact, in civil cases, before a jury, as distinguished from the argument of issues and questions of law before the court in bench. Originally consisting merely of two ordinary words in a writ and record, it came to be used, from its convenience, as the name of the writ by virtue of which an issue of fact was tried, of the record used for the trial, of the court in which the trial was had, of the jury, of the trial itself, and finally of the whole system of trial, as already described.

 The origin of this important phrase may be explained as follows: Originally, an action was triable only in the court where it was brought, and there the parties and the jurors were always summoned to appear. But it was provided by Magna Charta, in ease of the subject, that assises of novel disseisin and mort d'ancestor, (which were the most common remedies of that day) should thenceforward, instead of being tried at Westminster, in the superior court, be taken in their proper counties, and for this purpose justices were to be sent into every county, once a year, to take these assises there. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 246. These justices, it may be observed, continued to be called in Bracton's time by their original name of justices itinerant or in eyre, their court being also termed, as before, the eyre or iter. Bract. fol. 109, 110. The system of local trials, being found convenient, was soon applied not only to assises but to other actions, but, in consequence of the uncertainty which at that early period was found to attend the holding of the local courts, eyres or assises, (or, in Bracton's words, quia bene poterit iter multipliciter impediri, revocari vel suspendi,) the practice was continued of summoning the parties to appear as before in the superior court, at a certain day, or in the language of the record, giving them a day in the bench, (in banco,) UNLESS BEFORE (that day,) the justices itinerant should come to the places designated for the trial, (NISI justitiarii itinerantes PRIUS venerint ad partes illas.) Bract. fol. 110. The statute of Westminster 2, (13 Edw. I. c. 30, afterwards called the statute of Nisi Prius,) confirmed this practice, and introduced a similar condition into the process for summoning the jury, by providing that writs of venire for summoning juries to the superior courts should be in the following form: Præcipimus tibi quod venire facias coram justitiariis apud Westm. in Octabis Scti Michaelis NISI, talis et talis, tali die et loco ad partes illas venerint, duodecim, &c. [We command you that you cause to come before our justices at Westminster, on the octave of St. Michael, UNLESS such and such a one, at such a day and place, shall come to those parts, twelve, &c.] Mr. Serjeant Stephen considers this statute as the foundation of the present system of trial at nisi prius, and Mr. Spence supposes that the term nisi prius itself originated in its provisions. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (30.) 1 Spence's Chancery, 116, note. But the passage in Bracton, already referred to, and which is quoted by Blackstone, though not noticed by the writers just named, seems to carry back both the system and the term itself to a much earlier date. 3 Bl. Com. 352.

The words nisi prius, now generally treated as untranslatable or unmeaning, are, in their very simplicity, singularly expressive of the character of the system of local trials, at the remote period to which it has been traced. The trial was then a contingency, that might or might not happen, the justice might or might not come into the county, the circuit or iter might be in various ways prevented or suspended (poterit iter multipliciter impediri, vel suspendi,) or, in modern phrase, might fall through. Hence it was presented on the record, in the way of an exception, that might or might not have effect, and introduced, as it were, by the by, as something collateral and subordinate to the main course of the proceedings. And the nisi prius clause (as it is termed) has in practice retained this character of a condition or exception ever since, although the system of local trials itself has long been established on a permanent foundation. 3 Bl. Com. 352—354.

NISI PRIUS CLAUSE. In practice. A clause entered on the record in an action at law, and introduced also into the jury process, authorizing the trial of the cause in the particular county designated. It was first used by way of continuance, the parties having a day given them in the court above, unless, before (nisi prius) that day, the justices assigned to try the cause should come into the county. Bract. fol. 110. See Nisi prius. It was afterwards introduced into the process for summoning the jury (now called the venire,) which was hence termed the writ of nisi prius. In this way it came to be entered on the record made up for the trial, which was hence termed the nisi prius record, from which it was finally transferred to the judgment roll or record. In English practice, this clause has long been omitted in the venire, being inserted in the distringas juratores, (q. v.) which is now the effective process. Its form, as now entered on the record, is as follows: "Afterwards, on the — day of — &c. the jury between the parties aforesaid is respited here until the — day of —, UNLESS [the judge or judges of nisi prius and assise] shall FIRST come on the — day of —, at," &c. This is a very close translation of the old Latin entry:—Jurata ponitur in respectum hic usque, &c. NISI dominus T. T. &c. die, &c. PRIUS venerit, &c. Towns. Pl. 430.

The nisi prius clause has been used in American practice, though it is now in a great degree dispensed with.

NISI PRIUS COURT. A court held for the trial of issues of fact, before a jury and a single presiding judge.

NISI PRIUS RECORD. In practice. A record made up for the use of the court on a trial at nisi prius, serving both as a warrant to the judge who is to try the cause, and as a guide as to the nature of the issue to be tried. It consists of entries of the pleadings, and of the award of jury process, in a certain order and form, and is, in other words, a historical summary of the proceedings from the commencement of the action down to the time at which it is made up. In England, it is written on parchment, and is required to be sealed and passed, as it is termed, at the proper office, before it can be used. It derives its name from the clause of nisi prius, with which it concludes; by which the jury are respited or the cause continued to a certain day, unless the judge or judges of nisi prius and assise shall first come, on a certain day, at the place designated. Steph. Pl. 78—80. 2 Tidd's Pr. 775, 776. 3 Steph. Com. 589.

NISI PRIUS WRIT. The old name of the writ of venire, which originally, in pursuance of the statute of Westminster 2, contained the nisi prius clause. Reg. Jud. 28, 75. Cowell. The clause, however, as it appears in the forms, was not in the original nisi prius form, but in the alternative, the jury being directed to be summoned to come before the justices at Westminster, &c. or before the justices of assise IF they should SOONER come to the place of trial, on the day designated. The emphatic Latin words were not nisi prius, but vel si prius. See Reg. Jud. ub. sup.

NOBILE OFFICIUM. Lat. Noble office or privilege. A term in Scotch law, said not to admit of a precise definition. Bell's Dict. Bell describes it as that power or privilege of a court of equity, which enables it to give redress by abating the rigor of strict law.

NOCENT. [from Lat. nocere.] Guilty. "The nocent person." 1 Vern. 429.

NOCERE. Lat. To hurt or damage; to offend or annoy; to produce an inconvenience; (damnum dare, incommodum adferre.) Calv. Lex. Properly applied to persons. Id.

NOCIVUS. Lat. [from nocere, q. v.] In old practice. Hurtful; pernicious; noxious. Called, by Lord Mansfield, "a very technical term." 1 Burr. 337.

NOCTANDRE. L. Fr. By night. Yearb. M. 5 Edw. III. 31.

NOCTANTER. Lat. [from nox, night; L. Fr. noctandre, nutauntre.] By night. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 17.

NOCTES DE FIRMA. L. Lat. In English law. Nights of farm or rent; entertainments at night by way of rent. Otherwise expressed as firmæ noctium. Spelman. See Firma.

NOCTURNUS. Lat. [from nox, night.] In old English law. Nocturnal. Fur nocturnus; a night thief. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 16, § 6. This was not the same with a burglar, (burgator.) Id. See Grotius, de Jur. Bell. lib. 2, c. 1, § 12.

NOCUMENTUM. Lat. [from nocere, to annoy.] In old English law. A nuisance. Bract. fol. 221. Nocumentum damnosum; a nuisance occasioning loss or damage, (or damnum sine injuria.) Id. ibid. Nocumentum injuriosum; an injurious nuisance. Id. For the latter only a remedy was given. Id. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 26, § 2.

NO'EN. A contraction of nomen. No'is of nominis. Noi'e of nomine. 1 Inst. Cler. 11.

NOLI PROSEQUI. An old, though incorrect form of nolle prosequi. Com. 312.

NOLIS. Fr. [from Lat. naulum, q. v.] In French law. Freight. The same with fret. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 3.

NOLISSEMENT. Fr. [from nolis, q. v.] In French marine law. Affreightment. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 1.

NOLLE. Lat. To be unwilling; to will not to do a thing; to refuse to do a thing. Used, in the civil law, to denote a voluntary act under full knowledge. Calv. Lex. A distinction was made between nolle and non velle. Id. Ejus est nolle, qui potest velle, (q. v.)

NOLLE PROSEQUI. Lat. (Will not prosecute.) In practice. The name of an entry made by a plaintiff in an action at law, where he wishes to discontinue the action, either wholly, or (more commonly) as to some of the counts of his declaration, or as to some of several defendants. 1 Burr. Pr. 148, 385. So termed from the emphatic words in the old forms, the plaintiff declaring that he will not further prosecute his suit as to the counts or defendants named. See 1 Peters' R. 46, 73, et seq. Story, J.

A proceeding on an indictment by which the prosecuting officer agrees to prosecute no farther, either as to the whole of the indictment, or as to some particular part of

it. 1 Chitty's Crim. Law, 478—480, (Perkins' ed. notes.)

NOMEN. Lat. A name. Nomen dicitur à noscendo, quia notitiam facit; Nomen (a name) is so called from noscendo (knowing,) because it causes knowledge. 6 Co. 65 a, Sir Moyle Finch's case.

Nomen est quasi rei notamen; Nomen (a name) is, as it were, notamen rei, (the mark of a thing.) 11 Co. 20 b, Dr. Ayray's case. Calvin quotes the same etymology from Diomed. lib. 1, Grammat.

Præsentia corporis tollit errorem nominis. The presence of the body (or substantial thing itself,) takes away the effect of error in the name of it. Bacon's Max. 96, reg. 25.

Nomen non sufficit, si res non sit de jure aut de facto. A name is not sufficient, if there be not a thing [or subject for it,] de jure or de facto. 4 Co. 107 b, Adams and Lambert's case.

NOMEN. Lat. In the Roman law. A name; including, in the most general sense, the three names of prænomen, nomen (proper,) and cognomen. Calv. Lex. See Cod. 6. 23. 4.

In a strict sense,—the second of the three names which the Romans commonly had, following the prænomen, and marking the gens to which the individual belonged. It commonly ended in ius; as Cornelius, Fabius, Octavius, &c. Adam's Rom. Ant. 36. Butler's Hor. Jur. 28.

A debtor; the obligation of a debtor. Vendere nomen; to sell a name or obligation. Calv. Lex. Cod. 4. 10. 7. See Cic. Att. v. 21. Horat. Sat. i. 2, 16. Id. Ep. ii. 1, 105. The word name is still familiarly used in this sense.

A debt; the cause of a debt; an article of an account. Adam's Rom. Ant. 547, and the authorities cited ibid.

NOMEN. Lat. In old English law. A name; the name. The given or baptismal name of a person, as Matthew, Andrew, Peter, Paul. Distinguished from the cognomen (q. v.) or surname. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, §§ 7, 9. Fleta mentions the prænomen, agnomen and cognomen. Id. § 9.

NOMEN COLLECTIVUM. Lat. A collective name, or term; a term expressive of a class; a term including several of the same kind; a term expressive of the plural as well as singular number. Skinn. 205. A term descriptive of person or interest, or both. Eyre, C. J. 1 Bos. & Pull. 243.

NOMEN GENERALE. Lat. A general name; the name of a genus. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 19, § 1.

NOMEN GENERALISSIMUM. L. Lat. A name of the most general kind; a name or term of the most general meaning. By the name of land, which is nomen generalissimum, every thing terrestrial will pass. 2 Bl. Com. 19. 3 Id. 172.

NOMEN JURIS. Lat. A name of law. A legal name or designation; a technical term. 2 Swinton's R. 429.

NOMINA. Lat. [plur. of nomen, q. v.] Names. Nomina sunt notæ rerum. Names are the marks of things. 11 Co. 20 b. Nomina sunt symbola rerum. Names are the symbols or signs of things. Branch's Princ. Nomina significandorum hominum reperta sunt, qui si alio quolibet modo intelligantur, nihil interest; names were invented for the purpose of designating persons, who, if they can be known in any other way, it makes no difference. Inst. 2. 20. 29.

Nomina si nescis perit cognitio rerum. Et nomina, si perdas, certi distinctio rerum perditur. If you are ignorant of names, [without a knowledge of names,] the knowledge of things perishes. And if you lose the names, the distinction of things is certainly lost. Co. Litt. 80 b. The names of things are, for avoiding of confusion, diligently to be observed. Id. ibid.

Nomina mutabilia sunt, res autem immobiles. Names are mutable, but things are immoveable, [immutable.] 6 Co. 66 a. Applied to the name of a manor, which might be acquired by knowledge of the country, without being the true and proper name.

NOMINA VILLARUM. Lat. Names of the villages. The name of a return made by the sheriffs of England into the exchequer, in the reign of Edward II. of the names of all the villages and their possessors in every county. Cowell. Blount.

NOMINAL PARTNER. One who appears, or is held out to the world as a partner, but who has no real interest in the firm or business. Story on Partn. § 80. One who allows his name to appear in the partnership firm, and be used in the business, and thereby holds himself out to the world as apparently having an interest in it; though he may have no actual interest in the business or its profits.* 3 Kent's Com. 31, 32.

NOMINARE. Lat. [from nomen, name.] To name; to nominate; to appoint. Calv. Lex.

NOMINATE CONTRACTS. In the civil law. Contracts having a proper or peculiar name and form, and which were divided into four kinds, expressive of the ways in which they were formed; viz. 1. real, which arose, ex re, (from something done;) 2. verbal, ex verbis, (from something said;) 3. literal, ex literis, (from something written;) and 4. consensual, ex consensu, (from something agreed to.) Calv. Lex. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 14, num. 9. Cooper's Just. Inst. Notes, *584.

NOMINATIM. Lat. [from nomen, name.] In the civil law. By name, or other special designation, (demonstratione corporis, opificii, officiive;) specially; expressly. Calv. Lex. Lord Ellenborough, 12 East, 244.

NOMINE PŒNÆ. Lat. In the name of a penalty. In the civil law, a legacy was said to be left nomine pœnæ, where it was left for the purpose of coercing the heir to do or not to do something. Inst. 2. 20. 36.

In the common law, the term nomine pœnæ has been applied to a covenant inserted in a lease, that the lessee shall forfeit a certain sum on non-payment of rent, or on doing certain things, as ploughing up ancient meadow, and the like. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 171, § 155. Gilbert on Rents, 140—145. 1 Williams on Exec. 697.

NOMOΣ, Νόμος. Gr. [from νέμειν, to give or distribute.] Law; so called, because suum cuique νέμει, (it gives to every one his due.) Calv. Lex. Schrev. Lex. See the definitions in Dig. 1. 3. 2.

NOMOTHETA. Græco-Lat. [Gr. νομοθέτης, from νόμος, law, and τιθέναι, to lay down.] A lawgiver; such as Solon and Lycurgus, among the Greeks, and Cæsar, Pompey and Sylla among the Romans. Calv. Lex.

NON. Lat. Not. The common particle of negation. In the civil law, it sometimes had the senses of not only, (non solum,) and not so much, (non tantum, non tam.) Calv. Lex.

NON ABILITY. Want of ability to do an act in law, as to sue. Cowell. A plea founded upon such cause. Id.

NON-ACCESS. Non-existence of sexual intercourse. 1 Sim. & Stu. 153. Sugden's Law of Property, 182, 183. See Access.

Non accipi debent verba in demonstrationem falsam, quæ competunt in limitationem veram. Words ought not to be taken to import a false demonstration, which may have effect by way of true limitation. Bacon's Max. 59, reg. 13. "Though falsity of addition or demonstration doth not hurt where you give the thing a proper name, yet nevertheless, if it stand doubtful upon the words, whether they import a false reference and demonstration, or whether they be words of restraint that limit the generality of the former name, the law will never intend error or falsehood." Id. ibid. Broom's Max. [498.] Lord Ellenborough, 8 East, 91.

Non aliter a significatione verborum recedi oportet, quam cum manifestum est aliud sensisse testatorem. The ordinary meaning of words should not be departed from in any other case than where it is clear that the testator intended something different. Dig. 32. 69, pr.

NON ASSUMPSIT. L. Lat. (Did not undertake.) In pleading. The general issue in an action of assumpsit. So called from the emphatic words of the old Latin form: Et idem—defendit vim et injuriam quando, &c. et dicit quod ipse NON ASSUMPSIT super se modo et forma prout idem—superius versus eum queritur. Et de hoc ponit se super patriam, &c. (And the said (defendant) defends the wrong and injury when, &c. and says that he did not take upon himself (or undertake) in manner and form as the said (plaintiff) above complains against him. And of this he puts himself upon the country, &c.) Towns. Pl. 484. Where it is pleaded by several defendants, it is called non assumpserunt. 8 East, 311. The use of this plea has been much narrowed in England by the Pleading Rules. 1 Chitt. Pl. 513—517.

NON ASSUMPSIT INFRA SEX ANNOS. L. Lat. He did not undertake within six years. The plea of the statute of limitations, in the action of assumpsit. So called from the emphatic words of the old Latin form. See 2 Greenl. Evid. § 342, and note.

Non auditur perire volens. He who is desirous to perish is not heard. Best on Evid. 423, § 385. He who confesses himself guilty of a crime, with the view of meeting death, will not be heard. A maxim of the foreign law of evidence. Id. ibid.

NON BAILABLE. In practice. Not admitting of bail; not requiring bail. See Bailable.

NON CEPIT. Lat. He did not take. The general issue in replevin, where the action is for the wrongful taking of the property; putting in issue not only the taking, but the place in which the taking is stated to have been made. Steph. Pl. 157, 167.

NON CLAIM. In old English law. The omission or neglect of one that ought to challenge his right within a time limited, by which neglect he was barred of his right or of his entry. Cowell. Termes de la Ley. 2 Bl. Com. 354. 1 Steph. Com. 521.

NON COMPOS MENTIS. Lat. Not in possession, or not having power of one's mind, or mental faculties; of unsound mind or memory. Litt. sect. 405. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 16. This term is used by Blackstone as a synonyme of lunatic or madman. 1 Bl. Com. 304. 2 Id. 497. But Lord Coke interprets it in a wider sense, making it to include both an idiot and lunatic, as well as one that by sickness, grief, or other accident, wholly loses his memory and understanding. Co. Litt. 246 b, 247 a. Mr. Stock, in a treatise devoted expressly to the subject, adopts non compos mentis as the most general expression, embracing, and to a certain extent defining all states of mind contradistinguished from the rational one. Stock on Non Comp. Mentis, Introd. See 2 Kent's Com. 451, 453. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 223, 230.

NON CONCESSIT. L. Lat. He did not grant. The name of a plea pleaded by a stranger to a deed; estoppels not holding with respect to strangers. Wharton's Lex.

NON CONSTAT. L. Lat. It does not appear; it is not apparent or clear. Cro. Car. 52. 3 East, 111. 2 P. Wms. 643. Non constat quid inde venit; it does not appear what became of it. A reporter's note. Hardr. 65. Non constabat; it did not appear. Gibbs, C. J. 5 Taunt. 527.

NON CULPABILIS. L. Lat. Not guilty. The general issue in the action of trespass. 3 Bl. Com. 305. So called from the emphatic words of the old Latin form: "Et dicit quod ipse NON est inde CULPABILIS. Et de hoc ponit," &c., (and says that he is not guilty thereof. And of this he puts, &c.) Towns. Pl. 484.

NON DAMNIFICATUS. L. Lat. Not damnified, or harmed. A plea in an action of debt on an indemnity bond, or bond conditioned "to keep the plaintiff harmless and indemnified," &c. It is in the nature of a plea of performance; being used where the defendant means to allege that the plaintiff has been kept harmless and indemnified, according to the tenor of the condition. Steph. Pl. 360. See 8 Grattan's R. 539.

Non debet actori licere quod reo non permittitur. A plaintiff ought not to be allowed what is not permitted to a defendant. A rule of the civil law. Dig. 50. 17. 41.

Non debet adduci exceptio ejus rei cujus petitur dissolutio. A plea of the same matter, the dissolution of which is sought [by the action] ought not to be brought forward. 2 Lord Raym. 1433. Broom's Max. [125.] Otherwise expressed, Exceptio rei cujus dissolutio petitur, nulla est. Jenk. Cent. 37, case 71. See Non potest, &c.

Non debet [deberet] alii nocere, quod inter alios actum est, [esset.] A person ought not to be prejudiced by what has been done between others. Dig. 12. 2. 10.

Non debet cui plus licet, quod minus est non licere. He to whom the greater is lawful, ought not to be debarred from the less as unlawful. Dig. 50. 17. 21. Broom's Max. [130.] See Cui licet quod majus, &c.

Non decipitur qui scit se decipi. He is not deceived who knows himself to be deceived. 5 Co. 60 b, Gooch's case.

NON DEMISIT (or DIMISIT.) L. Lat. (He) did not demise. The name of a plea in an action of debt for rent on a parol lease, denying the demise. 1 Tidd's Pr. 650.

NON DETINET. L. Lat. He does not detain. The name of the general issue in the action of detinue. 1 Tidd's Pr. 645.

The general issue in the action of replev-vin, where the action is for the wrongful detention only. 2 Burr. Pr. 14.

Non differunt quæ concordant re, tametsi non in verbis iisdem. Those things do not differ, which agree in substance, though not in the same words. Jenk. Cent. 70, case 32.

Non efficit affectus nisi sequatur effectus. The intention amounts to nothing unless the effect follow. 1 Rol. R. 226.

NON erit alia lex Romæ, alia Athœnis; alia nunc, alia posthac; sed et omnes gentes, et omni tempore, una lex, et sempiterna, et immortalis continebit. There will not be one law at Rome, another at Athens; one law now, another hereafter; but one eternal and immortal law shall bind together all nations throughout all time. Cic. Frag. de Repub. lib. 3. 3 Kent's Com. 1. Quoted by Lord Mansfield, with some variation in the reading,—(sed et apud omnes gentes et omni tempore, una eademque lex obtinebit,) and applied to the universal adoption of the maritime law, as the general law of nations. Luke v. Lyde, 2 Burr. 883, 887. Story, J. 16 Peters' R. 1, 19.

NONES. [Lat. nonæ, from nonus, ninth.] In the Roman calendar. The fifth, and in March, May, July and October, the seventh day of the month. So called, because, counting inclusively, they were nine days from the ides. Adam's Rom. Ant. 355, 357.

Non est arctius vinculum inter homines quam jusjurandum. There is no closer [or firmer] bond between men than an oath. Jenk. Cent. 126, case 54.

Non est disputandum contra principia negantem. There is no arguing with one who denies principles. Branch's Princ. Co. Litt. 343 a.

NON EST FACTUM. L. Lat. (Is not [his] deed.) The name of the general issue in an action of debt on bond. So called from the emphatic words in the old Latin form: Et dicit quod ipse de debito prædicto, virtute scripti obligatorii prædicti onerari non debet, quia dicit quod scriptum obligatorium prædictum NON EST FACTUM suum. Et de hoc ponit se super patriam. (And says that he ought not to be charged with the aforesaid debt, by virtue of the aforesaid writing obligatory, because he says that the said writing obligatory is not his deed. And of this he puts himself upon the country.) Towns. Pl. 484.

NON EST INVENTUS. L. Lat. (Is not found.) In practice. The name of the return made by a sheriff to a writ of capias or ca. sa. where the party named in the writ is not found in his bailiwick or county. 3 Bl. Com. 283. 1 Tidd's Pr. 308. 2 Id. 1028, 1098. The return, as actually made, is usually expressed by the English words "not found," endorsed upon the writ, and signed by the sheriff. But it is called in the books a return of non est inventus, from the emphatic words of the return, as formerly made in Latin: Infranominatus C. D. NON EST INVENTUS in balliva mea. (The within named C. D. is not found in my bailiwick.) When there were several so returned, the proper words were non sunt inventi, (in the plural;) but "non est," although bad grammar where there were two defendants, was lately held in New-York to be a good return. 2 Hill's R. 598.

Non est novum ut priores leges ad posteriores trahantur. It is not a new doctrine that prior laws shall give place to later ones. Dig. 1. 3. 26. See Id. 1. 4. 4. Broom's Max. [24.] See Leges posteriores, &c.

Non est singulis concedendum quod per magistratum publice possit fieri, ne occasio sit majoris tumultus faciendi. That is not to be allowed to individuals, which can be publicly done by a magistrate, lest it be the occasion of making greater confusion. Dig. 50. 17. 176.

Non ex opinionibus singulorum, sed ex communi usu, nomina exaudiri debent. The names of things ought to be understood, not according to the opinions of individuals, but according to common usage. Dig. 33. 10. 7. 2.

Non facias malum, ut inde fiat bonum. You are not to do evil, that good may be or result therefrom. 11 Co. 74 a. 5 Co. 30 b, Coulter's case.

NON FEASANCE. A not doing; an omission to do something that ought to be done.* The not doing of that which it was a party's duty or contract to do. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 9.

NON IMPEDIVIT. L. Lat. (He did not hinder or disturb.) In English practice. The general issue in quare impedit. 3 Wooddes. Lect. 9.

Non impedit clausula derogatoria, quo minus ab eadem potestate res dissolvantur a quibus [qua] constituuntur. A derogatory clause [that is, a clause disabling a person to do some future act,] does not prevent things or acts from being dissolved by the same power by which they were originally made or done. Bacon's Max. 74, reg. 19. Thus, if a man make a will, and in the end of it add a clause, that if he shall revoke the present will, or declare any new will, except in a certain form, that such revocation or new declaration shall be utterly void; this clause, or any similar one, is of no force or efficacy to fortify the former will against the second, but the testator may revoke it and make a new.* Id. 75. The reason given by Lord Bacon why a derogatory clause (called also clausula de non obstante de futuro,) is idle and of no force is, "because it doth deprive men of that which of all other things is most incident to human condition, and that is alteration or repentance." Id. 74. Broom's Max. [24.]

NON INFREGIT CONVENTIONEM. L. Lat. He did not break the covenant. The name of a plea sometimes pleaded in the action of covenant, and intended as a general issue, but held to be a bad plea; there being, properly speaking, no general issue in that action. 1 Tidd's Pr. 648. 3 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 187.

Non in legendo sed in intelligendo leges consistunt. The laws consist not in being read, but in being understood. 8 Co. 167 a. The mere verbal form in which a law is expressed is unimportant, if it be understood. Lord Coke (ub. sup.) quotes this rule in support of his remark that the opinion of a certain judge (Hussy, C. J.) was good law, if it were well understood.

NON INTERFUI. Lat. I was not present. A reporter's note. T. Jon. 10.

NON-JOINDER. In practice. Omission to join or include one or more persons as parties to an action, whether as plaintiffs or defendants. 1 Chitt. Pl. 13, 66, 86.

NON-JUROR. One who has not sworn; one who has not taken, or has refused to take a prescribed oath, such as an oath of allegiance. See 3 H. & McHenry's R. 101, 103. 1 Dallas' R. 170.

Non jus, sed seisina facit stipitem. Not right, but seisin makes a stock. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2, § 2. It is not a mere right to enter on lands, but actual seisin, which makes a person the root or stock from which all future inheritance by right of blood must be derived. 2 Bl. Com. 209, 312. This ancient maxim of the common law has recently been abrogated in England, so far as respects the descent of land taking place on deaths since Jan. 1, 1834, by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106. Broom's Max. 226—228, [397—399.] 1 Steph. Com. 365—368. It is also considered as abrogated in most of the United States. 4 Kent's Com. 388, 389.

Non licet quod dispendio licet. That which may be [done only] at a loss is not allowed [to be done.] Co. Litt. 127 b. The law does not permit or require the doing of an act which will result only in loss. The law forbids such recoveries whose ends are vain, chargeable and unprofitable. Co. Litt. ub. sup.

NON LIQUET. Lat. It is not clear. In the Roman law and practice, where a judex was at a loss how to decide a cause, he made oath that he was not clear (se non liquere,) and was thereupon discharged. A. Gell. Noct. Att. lib. 14, c. 2. So, in criminal trials, such of the judices as were undecided, deposited in the urn a ballot or tablet marked with the letters N. L. (non liquet.) Adam's Rom. Ant. 285. Tayl. Civ. Law, 192. This practice has never been allowed in English common law. See Lord Bacon's observations in his Reading on the Statute of Uses, Works, iv. 184. The expression, however, is in use. Lord Ellenborough, 11 East, 188.

Non observata forma, infertur adnullatio actus. Where form is not observed, an annulling of the act is inferred, or follows. 12 Co. 7. Where the law prescribes a form for an act or proceeding, the non-observance of such form renders the proceeding itself a nullity. This is a rule of evidence in English and French law. Best on Evid. Introd. 58, § 59. Bonnier, Tr. des Preuves, s. 334.

NON OBSTANTE. Lat. Notwithstanding, (or, in two words, not withstanding.) Words anciently used in public and private instruments, intended to preclude, in advance, any interpretation contrary to certain declared objects or purposes.

A clause frequent in old English statutes and letters patent, (so termed from its initial words,) importing a license from the crown to do a thing, which otherwise a person would be restrained by act of parliament from doing. Crabb's Hist. Eng. Law, 570. Plowd. 501. Said to have been taken from the papal law. Cowell.

A power in the crown to dispense with the laws in any particular case. This was abolished by the Bill of Rights at the revolution. 1 Bl. Com. 342.

NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO. L. Lat. Notwithstanding the verdict. A judgment non obstante veredicto, is a judgment entered, by order of the court, for the plaintiff in an action at law, notwithstanding a verdict in favor of the defendant. It is always upon the merits, and never granted but in a very clear case, as where it is apparent to the court from the defendant's own plea that he can have no merits.* 2 Tidd's Pr. 922. Thus, where the plea confesses and attempts to avoid the declaration, by some matter which amounts to no sufficient avoidance of it in point of law, and the plaintiff, instead of demurring, has taken issue upon the truth of the plea in fact, and that issue has been found in favor of the defendant, yet the plaintiff may move that, without regard to the verdict, the judgment be given in his favor. For the plea having confessed the matter of fact in the declaration, and having opposed it by an allegation which, though true in fact, is bad in law, it appears upon the whole that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain his action. 3 Steph. Com. 629, 630.

NON OMITTAS. L. Lat. (You omit not.) In English practice. A clause inserted in a writ of capias and other process, in cases where a defendant resides within a liberty, empowering the sheriff to enter it. 1 Tidd's Pr. 154, 217. At present every writ under the stat. 2 Will. IV. c. 39, is framed as a non omittas. 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 190.

Formerly, when the defendant resided within a liberty, the bailiff of which had the execution and return of writs, the practice was, on a writ being issued to the sheriff, for the latter to make his mandate to the bailiff directing him to execute the writ. On the sheriff's returning in such case, that he had made his mandate to the bailiff, (mandavi ballivo,) but that the latter had not served the writ, a writ issued to the sheriff commanding him that he omit not by reason of the said liberty, (non omittas propter libertatem,) but that he enter himself and execute the writ. Reg. Orig. 83, 151 b. Reg. Jud. 5 b, 56 b. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 26, § 3; lib. 2, c. 67, § 13. Hence the name of the clause in the modern process.

Non omne damnum inducit injuriam. It is not every loss that produces an injury. Bract. fol. 45 b. See Damnum absque injuria.

Non omne quod licet honestum est. Not every thing that is lawful is proper or becoming. Dig. 50. 17. 144.

Non omnium quæ a majoribus nostris constituta sunt ratio reddi potest. There cannot be given a reason for all the things which have been established by our ancestors. Dig. 1. 3. 20. Branch's Princ. 4 Co. 78.

NON-PLEVIN. L. Fr. and Eng. In old English practice. A neglect or default in a defendant to replevin land in due time, that had been taken into the king's hand, by reason of default. Hengham describes it as a default after a default. Heng. Magna, c. 8. See Fet Assaver, § 23.

Non possessori incumbit necessitas probandi eas [possessiones] ad se pertinere. The burden does not lie on a possessor, of proving that his possessions belong to him. Cod. 4. 19. 2. Broom's Max. [562.]

Non potest adduci exceptio ejus [dem] rei cujus petitur dissolutio. A plea of the same matter, the dissolution of which is sought, [by the action,] cannot be brought forward. Bacon's Max. 6, reg. 2. Wingate's Max. 647, max. 169. Where an action is brought to defeat, undo or annul any matter or proceeding, the defendant cannot plead such matter or proceeding in bar of the action. See 3 P. Wms. 317. A matter, the validity of which is at issue in legal proceedings, cannot be set up as a bar thereto. Broom's Max. [124.]

Non potest quis sine brevi agere. No one can sue without a writ. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 4. A fundamental rule of old practice.

Non potest videri desiisse habere, qui nunquam habuit. He cannot be considered as having ceased to have a thing, who never had it. Dig. 50. 17. 208.

Non præstat impedimentum quod de jure non sortitur effectum. A thing or act which has not its effect by law, [or no effect in law,] offers no impediment, [or amounts to no bar.] Jenk. Cent. 162, case 8. Wingate's Max. 727, max. 195.

NON PROS. L. Lat. In practice. An abbreviation of NON PROSEQUITUR, (he does not prosecute.) The name of an entry and judgment on the part of a defendant in an action at law, where the plaintiff fails to declare in due time, by which the action is terminated with costs; the plaintiff in such case being said to be non pros'd. 3 Bl. Com. 296. 1 Tidd's Pr. 458. A similar judgment may be entered for not replying to the defendant's plea. Id. 676. This term is sometimes erroneously confounded with nonsuit, (q. v.)

Non quod dictum est, sed quod factum est inspicitur. Not what is said, but what is done is regarded. Co. Litt. 36 a. A maxim applied by Lord Coke to the delivery of deeds, and in modern law to the execution of deeds and wills. Tindal, C. J. 6 Bing. 310. 1 Metcalf's R. 353.

Non refert an quis assensum suum præbet verbis, an rebus ipsis et factis. It matters not whether one gives his assent by words, or by things themselves and by acts. 10 Co. 52 b, Lampet's case. An acceptance implies an assent. Id. ibid.

Non refert quid ex æquipollentibus fiat. It matters not what is done with [what disposition is made of] equipollent [or equivalent] expressions. 5 Co. 122 a, Long's case. Equivalent words may be treated as redundancies.* It matters not what words are omitted in an instrument, if there be tantamount words present. 5 Co. ub. sup.

Non refert quid notum sit judici, si notum non sit in forma judicii. It matters not what is known to a judge, if it be not known in judicial form. 3 Bulstr. 115. A leading maxim of modern law and practice. Best on Evid. Introd. 31, § 38.

Non refert verbis an factis fit revocatio. It matters not whether a revocation be made by words or by acts. Branch's Pr. Cro. Car. 49. But the case here quoted is against the rule.

NON RESIDENCE. Want of residence; cessation of residence; failure or neglect of residence. See Residence.

NON RESIDENT. One who does not reside, or is not a resident; one who resides out of a particular place or jurisdiction. See Resident.

NON SANÆ MENTIS. Lat. Of unsound mind. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 40, § 1.

NON SANE MEMORY. Unsound memory; unsound mind. A term essentially law French. See Memory.

NON SEQUITUR. Lat. Does not follow. See Nonsuit.

Non solent quæ abundant vitiare scripturas. Superfluities [things which abound] do not usually vitiate writings. Dig. 50. 17. 94. See Abundare, Surplusage.

Non solum quid licet, sed quid est conveniens est considerandum; quia nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum. Not only what is lawful, but what is proper or convenient is to be considered; because nothing that is inconvenient is lawful. Co. Litt. 66 a.

NONSUER. L. Fr. In old practice. To nonsuit. Se retreist et el fuit nonsue; withdrew himself, and she was nonsuited. Yearb. M. 3 Edw. III. 40. Nonsuy; nonsuited. P. 8 Edw. III. 9. Nounsiwy. II. 3 Edw. II. 71.

NON SUI JURIS. Lat. Not one's own master. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 16.

NONSUIT, Nonsuyt, Nonsute. L. Fr. In old English law. A not following; a neglect to follow. Pur nonsute de hu et de crie leve; for not following of the hue and cry raised. Britt. c. 21.

An omission to follow up or prosecute an action. Par la nonsuyt del pleintife. Id. c. 33. Jugement de la nonsuyt; judgment of nonsuit or for the nonsuit. Id. c. 27.

NONSUIT. L. Fr. and Eng. In practice. A failure to follow up a cause; a relinquishment of a cause on the part of a plaintiff at the trial, either voluntarily or by the order of the court; an order or award of the court granted at the trial, compelling the plaintiff to abandon the farther prosecution of the action.

A voluntary nonsuit is where the plaintiff, at the trial, discovers some error or defect in the proceedings which cannot be remedied, or finds that his evidence is not sufficient to maintain his case. In such case, he may submit to a nonsuit, which is done by absenting himself, or failing to answer when called to hear the verdict, upon which he is nonsuited. 3 Bl. Com. 376. 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 910. See Calling the plaintiff. A compulsory nonsuit is one which is ordered by the court on the motion of the defendant, or without any motion; and the most usual grounds of it are either the insufficiency of the cause of action itself, or the insufficiency of the evidence to support the case. It may be granted, also, upon grounds not affecting the merits, such as a mistake in the parties, or form of the action, or variance between the declaration and the evidence. 1 Burr. Pr. 234, 424. Compulsory nonsuits are not allowed in English practice. 2 Tidd's Pr. 869.

The effect of a nonsuit is to defeat the action, and give costs to the defendant, but the plaintiff may always commence a new action for the same cause. 3 Bl. Com. 377.

NON SUM INFORMATUS. L. Lat. (I am not informed.) In practice. A species of judgment by default, so called from being founded on an averment by the defendant's attorney, that he has no instruction to say any thing in answer to the plaintiff, or in defence of his client. 3 Bl. Com. 397. 2 Tidd's Pr. 930. It is said to be used only in cases where judgment is entered in pursuance of a previous agreement between the parties. Holthouse.

NON TENUIT. L. Lat. (He did not hold.) The name of a plea in bar, in replevin, to an avowry for arrears of rent, that the plaintiff did not hold in manner and form as the avowry alleges. Roscoe's Real Act. 638.

NON TENURE. [L. Fr. noun tenoure.] In pleading. A plea by a tenant in a real action, where he is not in fact the tenant of the freehold, denying that he was tenant of the freehold of the land or rent demanded, &c. Roscoe's Real Act. 190. It is usually called a plea in abatement, but is not strictly so. Id. ibid.

NON TERM. [L. Lat. non terminus.] In old practice. The time of vacation between term and term. Cowell.

NON USER. [L. Lat. non usus.] Neglect to use a franchise; neglect to exercise an office. 2 Bl. Com. 153. Neglect or omission to use an easement or other right. 3 Kent's Com. 448. A right acquired by use may be lost by non-user. Id. ibid.

NON USUS. L. Lat. In old English law. Non-user. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 18, § 2.

NON VALENTIA AGERE. L. Lat. Inability to sue. 5 Bell's Ap. Cas. 172.

Non valet exceptio ejusdem rei cujus petitur dissolutio. A plea of the same matter the dissolution of which is sought, is not valid. Called a maxim of law and common sense. Henley, Lord C. 2 Eden, 134.

Non valet impedimentum quod de jure non sortitur effectum. An impediment or bar which does not derive its effect from law, is of no force. 4 Co. 31 a, French's case. In Branch's Principia and Wharton's Lexicon, the words quod de jure non sortitur effectum are erroneously rendered, "which does not destroy the force of law."

Non verbis, sed ipsis rebus, leges imponimus. We impose laws, not upon words, but upon things themselves. Cod. 6. 43. 2.

Non videntur qui errant consentire. They who mistake, are not supposed to consent. Dig. 50. 17. 116. 2. There can be no consent, when the parties are in an error respecting the object of their agreement. Pothier, Obl. part 1. ch. 1, sect. 1, art. 3, § 1. A contract entered into, under a mistake of facts or circumstances going to the essence of it, is not considered as made by consent, and is therefore no contract.* 2 Kent's Com. 477. "This is a clear principle of universal justice." Id. ibid. See Broom's Max. [197.] 14 Georgia R. 207. Another form is, Non consentit qui errat, (q. v.)

Non videtur consensum retinuisse, si quis ex præscripto minantis aliquid immutavit. Where a person [under duress] has made any change from the terms of the party threatening him, he is not [for all that] considered as having retained his consent [to such terms.] Bacon's Max. 89, reg. 22. Broom's Max. [208.] See Consensus, for a full illustration of this maxim.

Non videtur perfecte cujusque id esse, quod ex casu auferri potest. That does not seem to be completely one's own, which can be taken from him on occasion. Dig. 50. 17. 139. 1.

Non videtur vim facere, qui jure suo utitur et ordinaria actione experitur. He is not considered to use force, who exercises his own right, and proceeds by ordinary action. Dig. 50. 17. 155. 1.

NOOK OF LAND. [L. Lat. noka, or nocata terræ.] In old records. A measure or description of land, of uncertain quantity. Blount observes that he had seen an old deed of Sir Walter de Pedwardyn, wherein twelve acres and a half were granted for a noke of land, but he thought the quantity was not certain.

NORFF. An abbreviation of Norfolcia, Norfolkshire. 1 Inst. Cler. 28.

NOSAUNCE, Noysaunce. L. Fr. [from noier, or nuire, to hurt.] A nuisance; an act done by one to the injury of another's freehold; an act by which a person is prevented from enjoying his tenement as conveniently or freely as he ought to do. The most familiar examples of nuisance in Britton, are the stopping or diverting a watercourse, the stopping a way by a wall, hedge or dyke, &c. Britt. c. 61.

Noscitur a sociis. It is known from its associates. 1 Ventr. 225. The meaning of a word is, or may be known from the accompanying words. 3 Term R. 87. 9 East, 267. 6 Taunt. 294. Broom's Max. 294, [450, 455.] This maxim appears to have been first applied to the language of the law by Lord Hale, (1 Ventr. 225,) and, it is observed, was no pedantic or inconsiderate expression when falling from him, but was intended to convey, in short terms, the grounds upon which he formed his judgment. See 3 Term R. 87. 1 B. & C. 644. 13 East, 531, arg.

NOSME. L. Fr. Name; a name. Nosmes nomables; names that should be named; necessary names. Britt. c. 48. Kelham translates this expression "surnames," but the word surnosme, (surname) is used by Britton immediately after.

NOSMEMENT. L. Fr. Namely. Yearb. M. 2 Edw. III. 19.

NOSOCOMUS. Græco-Lat. [Gr. νοσοκόμος, from νόσος, disease, and κομεω, to take care.] In the civil law. One who had the care of a hospital. Cod. 3. 1. 46. 3. Nov. 7, epil.

NOSTRUM. Lat. Ours; our own. Id quod nostrum est, sine facto nostro, ad alium transferri non potest. That which is ours cannot, without our act, be transferred to another. Dig. 50. 17. 11.

NOTA. Lat. In the civil law. A mark or brand put upon a person by the law. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 134, 135.

NOTA. L. Lat. In old English conveyancing. A note or memorandum of a charter or deed, drawn up preparatory to the execution of the charter itself. Si autem dicant testes quod præsentes fuerint confectioni notæ in quam utraque pars consentit, donator et donatorius, hoc sufficit ad probationem, licet præsentes non essent ubi charta scripta fuit et assignata, [signata?] But if the witnesses say that they were present at the making of the note, to which each party agreed, donor and donee, this is sufficient for proof, though they were not present when the charter was written and sealed. Bract. fol. 398. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 34, § 2.

A promissory note. 11 Mod. 340.

NOTÆ. Lat. In civil and old European law. Short hand characters or marks of contraction, in which one person wrote what was said by another, or in which the emperors' secretaries took down what they dictated. Spelman. Calv. Lex. See Notarius.

NOTARE INFAMIA. Lat. In the civil law. To mark or brand with infamy, or disgrace. Dig. 3. 2. For a description of the persons who were so branded, (de his qui notantur infamia,) see Id. ibid.

NOTARIAL. Belonging to a notary; made or done by a notary.

NOTARIUS. Lat. [from nota, a character or mark.] In Roman law. A person (sometimes a slave) who wrote in short hand (notis,) what was dictated by another. Dig. 29. 1. 40, pr. Id. 40. 5. 41. 3. Cod. 7. 7. 1. 5. Brissonius. Calv. Lex.

An officer who attended on a magistrate, and took down, in short hand, (notis excipiebat,) what was said or done. Adam's Rom. Ant. 188.

In feudal law. An officer who drew up conveyances and other instruments. Feud. Lib. 2, tit. 52, § 1.

In old English law. A scribe or scrivener who made short draughts of writings and other instruments; a notary. Cowell.

NOTARY, (or NOTARY PUBLIC.) A public officer by or before whom various acts, chiefly in mercantile matters, are required to be done; such as the protest of negotiable paper, marine protests in cases of loss, and the acknowledgment of certain instruments; and who attests or certifies the same in writing, under his official seal. See United States Digest, Notary Public.

The word notary itself is evidently formed from the notarius (q. v.) of the Roman law; but the functions of the office have been chiefly derived from those of the Roman tabellio, (q. v.) For a valuable sketch of the history of the office, see Anthon's Law Student, 33—46. And see Bell's Dict.

NOTE, (or PROMISSORY NOTE, sometimes called a NOTE OF HAND.) In mercantile law. A written promise by one person to another, [or by a corporation,] for the payment of money absolutely, and at all events. 3 Kent's Com. 74. Bayley on Bills, 1. Story on Notes, § 1. See Promissory note, Bank note.

NOTE OF A FINE. In old conveyancing. One of the parts of a fine of lands, being an abstract of the writ of covenant, and the concord; naming the parties, the parcels of land and the agreement. 2 Bl. Com. 351.

"NOTE or MEMORANDUM," in the statute of frauds, imports an informal writing made on the spot, in the moment and hurry and tumult of commercial business.

Kent, C. 14 Johns. R. 484, 492. Hence, if written with a lead pencil, it has been held sufficient. Id. ibid.

NOTE OF PROTEST. A memorandum of a protest made by a notary, preliminary to drawing up the protest in form, or extending it, as it is termed.

NOT GUILTY. [L. Lat. non culpabilis; L. Fr. nient culpable.] In pleading. The general issue in the action of trespass, by which the defendant "says that he is not guilty of the said supposed trespasses above laid to his charge, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the said plaintiff hath above thereof complained against him," &c. 2 Burr. Pr. Appendix, 340.

The general issue or plea pleaded by a prisoner, to an indictment on which he has been arraigned. 4 Bl. Com. 338.

In practice. The form of the verdict in criminal cases, where the jury acquit the prisoner. 4 Bl. Com. 361.

NOTHUS. Græco-Lat. [Gr. νόθος.] In civil and old English law. A natural child. Nov. 89. A bastard or illegitimate child. See Tayl. Civ. Law, 271. Calv. Lex. Properly, the offspring of an adulterous connection; (notho mœchus dedit ortum.) Co. Litt. 244 a.

NOTICE. [from Lat. notitia, q. v.] In practice. A making known of something. Information of an act done; as of a suit commenced, bail put in, a rule entered, a partnership formed, a note protested, &c.

Information of an act to be done, or required to be done; as of a motion to be made, a trial to be had, a plea or answer to be put in, costs to be taxed, &c.

In practice, all notices are required to be in writing, dated, addressed to the party for whom they are intended, and signed by the party, or his attorney, by whom they are given. See United States Digest, Notice.

Knowledge. "A bonâ fide holder, without notice." Clifford, J. 20 Howard's R. 365.

NOTICE OF MOTION. In practice. A notice in writing, entitled in a cause, dated and signed by the attorney of the party in whose behalf it is given, and addressed to the opposite party or his attorney; stating that, on a certain day designated, a motion will be made to the court for the purpose or object stated.

NOTICE TO PLEAD. In practice. A notice in writing, requiring the defendant in an action to plead within a certain time specified. Chitt. Arch. Pr. 152. 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 498.

NOTICE TO PRODUCE. In practice. A notice in writing, given in an action at law, requiring the opposite party to produce a certain described paper or document at the trial. Chitt. Arch. Pr. 230. 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 834.

NOTICE OF PROTEST. A notice given by a notary to the drawer or indorser of a bill, or the indorser of a note, that the bill or note has been protested for non-acceptance or non-payment.* But the giving of this notice has been held to be no part of the official duty of a notary, unless rendered so by statute. 2 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 227. No particular form of words is necessary in a notice of protest; all that is necessary is to apprize the party of the dishonor of the bill or note. The essential requisites of the notice are, a true description of the note; an assertion that it has been duly presented at maturity, and dishonored; and that the holder looks to the person to whom notice is given, for indemnity. 1 Wisconsin R. 264. As to the description of the note or bill, see 17 Howard's R. 606, 608. And see 1 Comstock's R. 413. 2 Selden's R. 19.

NOTICE TO QUIT. A notice in writing, given by a landlord to his tenant from year to year, requiring the latter to quit and deliver up the possession of the premises on a day specified. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 483, and note.

A notice given by a tenant from year to year to his landlord, of his intention to quit the premises on a day named. Id. ibid.

A notice given by a landlord to a tenant at will or by sufferance, requiring him to remove from the premises. 1 N. Y. Rev. St. [745,] 737, § 7.

NOTICE OF TRIAL. In practice. A notice in writing, given by the plaintiff in an action at law, or his attorney, to the defendant or his attorney, entitled in the cause, and properly dated, addressed and subscribed; stating that the cause will be brought to trial at the next term or sittings of the court.

NOTIO. Lat. [from noscere, to know.] In the civil law. The power of hearing and trying a matter of fact; the power or authority of a judex; the power of hearing causes and of pronouncing sentence, without any degree of jurisdiction. Hal- lifax, Anal. b. 3, ch. 8, num. 3, 6. Calv. Lex.

In a more general sense, notio included both cognitio, (cognizance,) and jurisdictio, (jurisdiction.) Dig. 50. 16. 99, pr. Calv. Lex.

NOTITIA. Lat. [from notus, known, or noscere, to know.] In the civil law. Knowledge; information; intelligence.

In old practice. Notice. Inde notitiam habuit; had notice thereof. 1 Ld. Raym. 70, 71. Notitia non debet claudicare; notice ought not to be lame or imperfect. 6 Co. 29 b, Green's case.

NOTOUR. Sc. In Scotch law. Open; public; notorious; as notour adultery, notour bankruptcy. Bell's Dict. vocc. Adultery, Bankrupt.

NOUN. L. Fr. [Lat. non.] Not; no. Est ceo vostre fait ou noun; is this your deed or not. Yearb. T. 1 Edw. II. 8. Noun sire; no, sir. Id. T. 1 Edw. II. 13.

NOUN. L. Fr. [Lat. nomen.] Name; a name. Fet Assaver, § 33.

Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non præteritis. A new statute or enactment ought to prescribe form to future acts, not to those that are past. 2 Inst. 292. A legislative enactment ought to be prospective in its operation, and not retrospective. Broom's Max. 14, [28.] See Omnis nova, &c.

NOVA STATUTA. L. Lat. New or later statutes. A name given to the English statutes from the beginning of the reign of Edward III. 3 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 143.

NOVÆ NARRATIONES. L. Lat. New counts or tales; in old English, new talys. 3 Bl. Com. 297. A collection of forms, published in the reign of Edward III. containing the pleadings in the actions then in practice. It consists principally of declarations, as the title indicates, but occasionally of pleas and subsequent pleadings. 3 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 151, 152. Crabb's Hist. 330.

NOVALE. Lat. Land newly ploughed, or that had not been tilled before within the memory of man. Cowell. Spelman.

NOVALIS. Lat. [from novus, new.] In the civil law. Land that rested a year after the first ploughing. Dig. 50. 16. 30. 2.

NOVATIO. Lat. [from novare, to make new, from novus, new.] In the civil law. Literally, a making new. A change of a former debt or obligation into another of the same or a different kind, either by a change of the persons, called delegatio, (q. v.) or by a change in the obligation, the persons continuing the same. Inst. 3. 30. 3. Dig. 46. 2. Cod. 8. 42. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, ch. 20, num. 8. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 30, § 1011, et seq. This term, translated or converted into novation, is extensively used in modern civil law, and in the jurisprudence of Holland, Spain, France, Scotland and the state of Louisiana. Burge on Suretyship, 166. Called in Fleta, innovatio. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 12.

Novatio non præsumitur. Novation is not presumed. Halk. Max. 109.

NOVATION. [from Lat. novatio, q. v.] In modern civil and general law. A change of one debt or obligation into another; a substitution of a new debt or obligation for an old one. Story on Bills, § 441. Burge on Suretyship, 166. 19 Johns. R. 129, 133. The substitution of a new bill of exchange in lieu of, and taking up the old bill, is a familiar example of novation. Story on Bills, § 441. Called in Scotch law, innovation, (q. v.)

NOVEL. L. Fr. New; recent. De novel; anew. Kelham. Novel assignment; a new assignment, (q. v.) Novel disseisin; recent disseisin. See Assise of novel disseisin. Un novel trial; a new trial. T. Jon. 163.

NOVELLÆ, (or NOVELLÆ CONSTITUTIONES.) New Constitutions; generally translated in English, Novels. The Latin name of those constitutions which were issued by Justinian after the publication of his Code; most of them being originally written in Greek, and published under the name of Νεαραὶ Διατάξεις. After his death, a collection of 168 Novels was made, 154 of which had been issued by Justinian, and the rest by his successors. These were afterwards included in the Corpus Juris Civilis, (q. v.) and now constitute one of its four principal divisions. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 59, § 71. Tayl. Civ. Law, 22. 1 Kent's Com. 541. See Authentics.

NOVERCA. Lat. In the civil law. A stepmother. Inst. 1. 10. 7. Dig. 38. 10. 4. 6.

NOVERINT UNIVERSI. L. Lat. Know all men. Introductory words of conveyances in England, from a very early period. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 3.

NOVERINT UNIVERSI PER PRÆSENTES. L. Lat. Know all men by these presents. Words with which deeds, obligations, letters of attorney and other instruments were formerly commenced. Litt. sect. 445. West's Symboleog. pars 1, lib. 2, sect. 102, 518, 522—525.

NOVI OPERIS NUNCIATIO. Lat. In the civil law. A protest against, or prohibition of a new work. Where a person began to build up or to pull down something, (which was technically called novum opus, a new work,) another person, who feared that his right would be impaired thereby, might extra-judicially hinder the completion of the work, by protesting before the workmen on the spot, or before some one present representing the owner, against the prosecution of the work, and forbidding the same. Dig. 39. 1. Id. 43. 24. Cod. 8. 11. See Opus novum.

NOVIGILD. [from Lat. novem, nine, and Sax. gild or geld, a payment.] In Saxon law. A pecuniary satisfaction for an injury, amounting to nine times the value of the thing for which it was paid. Spelman, voc. Geldum.

NOVISIMA RECOPILACION. Span. (Latest compilation.) The title of a collection of Spanish law compiled by order of Don Carlos IV. in 1805. 1 White's Recop. 355. 2 Id. 99. Schmidt's Civ. Law, Introd. 81—85.

NOVITER AD NOTITIAM PERVENTA. L. Lat. Newly come to the knowledge. A phrase in the practice of the ecclesiastical courts. 3 Hagg. R. 365.

NOVITAS. Lat. Novelty; newness. Novitas non tam utilitate prodest quam novitate perturbat. A novelty does not benefit so much by its utility, as it disturbs by its novelty. Jenk. Cent. 167, case 23.

NOVODAMUS. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. (We give anew.) The name given to a charter or clause in a charter, granting a renewal of a right. Bell's Dict.

Novum judicium non dat jus novum, sed declarat antiquum. A new judgment does not give or make new law, but declares the old. 10 Co. 42 a, Mary Portington's case.

NOVUM OPUS. Lat. In the civil law. A new work. See Novi operis nunciatio, Opus novum.

NOVUS. Lat. New. Novis injuriis emersis, nova constituuntur remedia; as new injuries arise, new remedies are ordained. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 1.

N'R. A contraction of noster. N'ri, of nostri; N'rum, of nostrum. 1 Inst. Cler. 11.

NOW. Present. "The now plaintiff." 9 Mod. 31.

"NOW," in a will, is to be referred to the date of the will, and not to the death of the testator. 1 Jarman on Wills, 277, 278, (290, Perkins' ed. 1849.) See 1 P. Wms. 597.

NOXA. Lat. [from nocere, to hurt.] In the civil law. A slave who had committed an offence, or done any damage or injury. Noxa est ipsum corpus quod nocuit, id est servus; Noxa is the body or person itself that has done the harm, that is, the slave. Inst. 4. 8. 1.

The obligation to make good an injury committed by a slave, and which followed the person of the slave, (Noxa sequitur caput.) Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 8, § 1231.

An offence, (delictum.) Dig. 50. 16. 238. 3. Calv. Lex. Held to be a more general word than delictum. Id.

The punishment of an offence. Id.

NOXALIS ACTIO. Lat. In the civil law. An action which lay against the master of a slave, for some offence (as theft or robbery,) committed, or damage or injury done by the slave, who was called noxa, (q. v.) Inst. 4. 8, pr. 5. Dig. 9. 4. Cod. 3. 41. Usually translated noxal action. Cooper's Transl. ibid.

NOXIA. Lat. In the civil law. An offence committed, or damage done by a slave, or an animal. Dig. 9. 1. 1. 1. Inst. 4. 8. 1.

NOXIOUS. [Lat. nocivus, q. v.] Hurtful; offensive; offensive to the smell. 1 Burr. 337. The word noxious includes the complex idea both of insalubrity and offensiveness. Denison, J. Id. ibid.

Nuda pactio obligationem non parit. A naked promise does not create an obligation. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4. Broom's Max. [584.] Nuda ratio et nuda pactio non ligant aliquem debitorem; naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25.

NUDE PACT. A common translation of the Lat. nudum pactum, (q. v.) 2 Bl. Com. 445. 2 Kent's Com. 464. A contract without a consideration. Id. ibid. A mere promise without mutuality. 12 Howard's R. 126.

NUDUM PACTUM. Lat. In the civil law. A naked, bare or mere pact, or promise; one that stands within the bare limits of convention and pleasure, (quod in nudis placiti et conventionis finibus subsistit.) Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 14, § 777. One that has nothing about it, either special name or cause, (consideration,) or contract wherewith to cover it. Calv. Lex. citing Bartolus and others. A pactum or pact, it will be observed, was not a contract in the technical sense of the words. Heinecc. El. J. C. lib. 3, tit. 14, §§ 774, 775, 776. See Pactum.

Bracton uses the phrase nudum pactum, though he gives to pactum the broader sense of contract, making in fact little distinction between them. He distinguishes pacts or agreements into such as were naked, (nuda,) and such as were clothed, (vestita;) and enumerates in a Latin couplet the six kinds of vestments, (vestimenta,) or clothing, which were essential to give them legal efficacy. Bract. fol. 16 b, 99. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, § 4.

In modern law, nudum pactum is constantly used to denote a contract without consideration. 2 Bl. Com. 445. 2 Kent's Com. 464. This is founded on the broad terms of the civil law,—(nudum pactum [or rather nuda pactio] est ubi nulla subest causa præter [propter] conventionem,) without reference to the stricter and technical meaning of the words. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4. Plowd. 309 a. Broom's Max. 336, [583.] See 1 Spence's Chancery, 186, note (f.)

Ex nudo pacto non oritur [nascitur] actio. Out of a naked pact or promise, no action arises. Cod. 2. 3. 10. Id. 5. 14. 1. Bract. fol. 99. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, § 3. A nudum pactum, in the civil law, afforded no ground for an action, but it might be the subject of an exception or plea; (Nuda pactio obligationem non parit, sed parit exceptionem.) Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4. Heinecc. El. J. C. lib. 3, tit. 14, § 777.

NUE. L. Fr. Nude; naked; bare. Ascun [contracte] est nue, et sauns garnement, et ascun vestue; one kind of contract is naked and without clothing, and another kind is clothed. Britt. c. 28.

NUEVA RECOPILACION. Span. (New Compilation.) The title of a code of Spanish law, promulgated in the year 1567. Schmidt's Civ. Law, Introd. 79—81.

NUICTANTER. L. Fr. By night. Yearb. M. 9 Edw. III. 17.

NUISANCE, Nusance. [from L. Fr. noysaunce, nosaunce, (q. v.;) L. Lat. nocumentum.] Annoyance; any thing that worketh hurt, inconvenience or damage. 3 Bl. Com. 215. Hale's Anal. sect. xlii.—Annoyance done to one's hereditament. Finch's Law, b. 3, c. 2.—Any thing that annoys, incommodes or offends; any thing that renders the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable. See 9 Co. 58 a, William Aldred's case. Lord Mansfield, 1 Burr. 337. Cowen, J. 5 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 121, 123. See United States Digest, Nuisance. See Common nuisance, Private nuisance.

NUISANCE, Assise of. In old practice. A judicial writ directed to the sheriff of the county in which a nuisance existed, in which it was stated that the party injured complained of some particular fact done ad nocumentum liberi tenementi sui, (to the nuisance of his freehold,) and commanding the sheriff to summon an assise, (that is, a jury) to view the premises, and have them at the next commission of assises, that justice might be done, &c. 3 Bl. Com. 221.

A writ of nuisance modelled after this assise, has been in occasional use in American practice, but it has been deemed obsolete by the courts, and not encouraged. 17 Wendell's R. 441. 1 Denio's R. 436. The modern remedy for a nuisance, both in England and the United States, is an action on the case.

NUL DISSEISIN. L. Fr. (No disseisin.) In old practice. The general issue in a real action. 3 Bl. Com. 305. Lord Coke unites it with nul tort, as the general issue in assise. Co. Litt. 283 a. Roscoe's Real Act. 227.

NUL AGARD, (no award;) NUL FAIT AGARD, (no award made.) L. Fr. In practice. The name of a plea denying that an award has been made. Billing on Awards, 279, 281.

Nul prendra advantage de son tort demesne. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong. 2 Inst. 713. Branch's

Pr. A wrongful or fraudulent act shall not be allowed to conduce to the advantage of the party who committed it. Broom's Max. 322, [217.]

NUL TIEL RECORD. L. Fr. (No such record.) In practice. The general plea in an action of debt upon matter of record, (as upon a judgment,) denying its existence. 2 Tidd's Pr. 742.

The name of the replication to a plea of matter of record. Id. ibid.

The issue rising upon a plea or replication of nul tiel record. Id. ibid.

NUL TORT. L. Fr. (No wrong.) In old practice. A species of general issue in a real action or assise. 3 Bl. Com. 305. See Nul disseisin.

NUL WAST FAIT. L. Fr. (No waste done.) In old practice. The general issue in an action of waste. Roscoe's Real Act. 242. Co. Litt. 283 a.

NULL. [from Lat. nullus, none.] Naught; of no validity or effect. Usually coupled with the word void, as "null and void."

NULLA BONA. L. Lat. (No goods.) In practice. The technical name of the return made by a sheriff to a writ of fieri facias, where the party named in the writ has no property which can be levied on. 2 Tidd's Pr. 1018. 1 Arch. Pr. 279. Derived from the emphatic words of the old return.

Nulla curia quæ recordum non habet, potest imponere finem, neque aliquem mandare carceri. No court which has not a record can impose a fine, or commit any one to prison. 8 Co. 61 a, Beecher's case.

Nulla impossibilia, aut inhonesta sunt præsumenda; vera autem, et honesta et possibilia. No things that are impossible or dishonorable are to be presumed; but things that are true and honorable and possible. Co. Litt. 78 b.

Nulla pactione effici potest ut dolus præstetur. By no agreement can it be effected that a fraud shall be practised. Fraud will not be upheld, though it may seem to be authorized by express agreement. 5 M. & S. 466. Broom's Max. 309, [545.]

Nulle terre sans seigneur. No land without a lord. A maxim of feudal law. Guyot, Inst. Feod. ch. 28.

NULLITY. Want of legal efficacy.

Nothing; no proceeding; an act or proceeding in a cause, which the opposite party may treat as though it had not taken place.

NULLIUS FILIUS. Lat. [L. Fr. nully fitz.] A son of nobody; a bastard. See Filius nullius.

Nullius hominis auctoritas apud nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequeremur si quis attulerit. The authority of no man ought to prevail with us, so far as to prevent our following better [opinions,] if any one should present them. Co. Litt. 383 b.

NULLIUS IN BONIS. Lat. Among the property of no person; not a subject of private property. Dig. 1. 8. 1. See In nullius bonis.

NULLIUS JURIS. Lat. In old English law. Of no legal force. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 24.

NULLI VENDEMUS, NULLI NEGABIMUS, AUT DIFFEREMUS RECTUM, AUT JUSTITIAM. To no one will we sell, to no one will we deny or delay right or justice. Magna Charta, Johan. c. 40. This clause occurs in the same words in the charter of 1 Hen. III. c. 33, and in the charter A. D. 1217, c. 36. In the charter of 9 Hen. III. c. 29, the reading is vel justitiam. In the original articles of Magna Carta, (c. 30,) the demand was, NE JUS VENDATUR, VEL DIFFERATUR, VEL VETITUM SIT. See this clause variously quoted. Dyer, 104 b. 1 P. Wms. 226. 2 Vern. 498.

NULLUM ARBITRIUM. L. Lat. In old pleading. No award. 8 Mod. 212.

Nullum crimen majus est inobedientia. No crime is greater than disobedience. Jenk. Cent. 77, case 48. Applied to the refusal of an officer to return a writ. Id.

Nullum exemplum est idem omnibus. No example is the same for all purposes. Co. Litt. 212 a. No one precedent is adapted to all cases. A maxim in conveyancing.

Nullum iniquum est præsumendum in jure. Nothing unjust is to be presumed in law. 4 Co. 72 a. Cruel, oppressive or tortious conduct will not be presumed. Best on Evid. 336, § 298. Another form is Nullum iniquum in jure præsumitur. See Freem. 82.

Nullum simile est idem. No like thing is the same. 2 Bl. Com. 162. Similarity is not identity.* To hold an estate as a freehold, is not to have a freehold. 2 Bl. Com. ub. sup. A check nearly resembles a bill of exchange, but it is not the same thing. Story, J. 2 Story's R. 512. Partnership resembles both joint-tenancy and tenancy in common, yet it differs from both in important particulars. Story on Partn. § 90.

Nullum simile quatuor pedibus currit. No simile runs upon four feet, (or all fours, as it is otherwise expressed.) No simile holds in every thing. Co. Litt. 3 a. Eunomus, Dial. 2, p. 155. Story, J. 2 Story's R. 143.

NULLUM TEMPUS ACT. The statute of 9 Geo. III. c. 16, so called. Perk. ch. 1, sect. 29, note.

Nullum tempus occurrit regi. No time bars (or runs against) the king. Otherwise expressed, Nullum tempus nec locus occurrit regi. 2 Inst. 273. Jenk. Cent. 83, case 62. Lapse of time does not bar the right of the crown. Broom's Max. 27, [46.] The law determines that in the king can be no negligence or laches, and therefore no delay will bar his right. 1 Bl. Com. 247. See 2 Id. 259, 277. This maxim seems to have been derived from the Nullum tempus currit contra regem, of Bracton. Bract. fol. 103, 56. See Currere. It has been largely qualified by statute in modern times, and indeed has always been subject to exceptions. Broom's Max. 28, [47.] Currit tempus contra regem sicut contra quamlibet privatam personam; time (in certain cases) runs against the king, as against any private person. Bract. fol. 14, 56. This maxim, under the form Nullum tempus occurrit reipublicæ, (q. v.) has been applied, in some of the United States, to rights of action on the part of the government. See 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 173. 11 Grattan's R. 572. 5 Texas R. 410. 16 Id. 305. 5 McLean's R. 133. 19 Missouri R. 607.

Nullum tempus occurrit reipublicæ. No time runs [time does not run] against the commonwealth or state. 11 Grattan's R. 572.

NULLUS. Lat. No; no person. See infra.

Null; void; of no force.

Nullus commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria. No man [shall] can take advantage of his own wrong. Co. Litt. 148 b. Broom's Max. [209.]

Nullus idoneus testis in re sua intelligitur. No person is understood to be a competent witness in his own cause. Dig. 22. 5. 10. Story, J. 1 Sumner's R. 328, 344. See Nemo in propria causa testis, &c.

Nullus jus alienum forisfacere potest. No man can forfeit another's right. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, § 11.

Nullus videtur dolo facere, qui suo jure utitur. No man is considered a wrongdoer, who avails himself of his own right. Dig. 50. 17. 55. Broom's Max. [95.]

NULLUS LIBER HOMO CAPIATUR, VEL IMPRISONETUR, AUT DISSEISIETUR DE [ALIQUO] LIBERO TENEMENTO SUO, VEL LIBERTATIBUS VEL LIBERIS CONSUETUDINIBUS SUIS, AUT UTLAGETUR, AUT EXULETUR, AUT ALIQUO [ALIO] MODO DESTRUATUR, NISI PER LEGALE JUDICIUM PARIUM SUORUM, VEL PER LEGEM TERRÆ. No freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, or disseised of [any] his freehold, or his liberties or free customs, or be outlawed, or exiled, or in any [other] manner destroyed, unless by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. c. 29. The most celebrated clause in Magna Charta, and the substance of which has been incorporated into the constitutions, or bills of rights, of most of the United States.

 The above extract is taken from the Charter of 9 Henry III. The Charter of King John presents quite a different reading. It may be interesting to trace the clause through the different forms it took in the different charters, as they were granted by John and Henry III.

Before the Charter had been extorted from King John, or even its articles agreed upon, the king offered to refer all differences between him and his barons to the Holy See and eight other arbitrators. The letters patent by which the offer was made, contained the following clause: SCIATIS NOS CONCESSISSE BARONIBUS NOSTRIS QUI CONTRA NOS SUNT, QUOD NEC EOS, NEC HOMINES SUOS, CAPIEMUS NEC DISSEISIEMUS, NEC SUPER EOS PER VIM VEL PER ARMA IBIMUS, NISI PER LEGEM REGNI NOSTRI, VEL PER JUDICIUM PARIUM SUORUM IN CURIA NOSTRA, &c. (Know ye, that we have granted to our barons who are against us, that we will neither take nor disseise them, nor their men, nor will we go upon [proceed against] them by force or by arms, unless by [in accordance with] the law of our realm, or by the judgment of their peers in our court, &c.) Pat. 16 Johan. pars 1, m. 3, d. n. 2. Blackst. Mag. Cart. Introd. xxi. The words of this instrument appear to have been had in view in drawing the original Articles of King John's Charter, the twenty-ninth chapter of which stipulates as follows:

NE CORPUS LIBERI HOMINIS CAPIATUR,

NEC IMPRISONETUR, NEC DISSAISIETUR, NEC UTLAGETUR, NEC EXULETUR, NEC ALIQUO MODO DESTRUATUR; NEC REX EAT VEL MITTAT SUPER EUM VI, NISI PER JUDICIUM PARIUM SUORUM, VEL PER LEGEM TERRÆ. (That the body of a freeman shall not be taken, nor imprisoned, nor disseised, nor outlawed, nor exiled, nor in any manner destroyed; nor shall the king go or send upon him by force, [i. e. shall not himself forcibly proceed against him, nor send others to proceed in his name,] unless by the judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land.) Artic. Mag. Cart. Johan. c. 29. In the Charter, as actually granted by the king, the words of the articles are as follows:

NULLUS LIBER HOMO CAPIATUR, VEL IMPRISONETUR, AUT DISSAISIATUR, AUT UTLAGETUR, AUT ALIQUO MODO DESTRUATUR; NEC SUPER EUM IBIMUS, NEC SUPER EUM MITTEMUS, NISI PER LEGALE JUDICIUM PARIUM SUORUM, VEL PER LEGEM TERRÆ. (No freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or disseised, or outlawed, or in any manner destroyed; nor will we go upon him, nor will we send upon him, unless by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land.) Mag. Cart. Reg. Johan. c. 39. In the Charter of 1 Henry III. no other change was made than the addition of two words, as in the following:

NULLUS LIBER HOMO CAPIATUR, VEL IMPRISONETUR, VEL DISSEISIATUR, AUT UTLAGETUR, [AUT EXULET,] AUT ALIQUO ALIO MODO DESTRUATUR, &c. Mag. Cart. 1 Hen. III. c. 32. In the Charter of Hen. III. dated A. D. 1217, some additional words were introduced, more fully expressive of disseisin, as follows:

NULLUS LIBER HOMO CAPIATUR, VEL IMPRISONETUR, AUT DISSAISIETUR DE LIBERO TENEMENTO SUO, VEL LIBERTATIBUS VEL LIBERIS CONSUETUDINIBUS SUIS, AUT UTLAGETUR, AUT EXULETUR, AUT ALIQUO ALIO MODO DESTRUATUR, &c. (No freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or disseised of his freehold, or of his liberties or free customs, or outlawed, or exiled, or in any other manner destroyed, &c.) Cart. Hen. III. A. D. 1217, c. 35. This is in nearly the same words with the Charter of 9 Hen. III. first above quoted.

The expression NEC SUPER EUM IBIMUS, NEC SUPER EUM MITTEMUS, in King John's Charter, (omitted in that of 9 Hen. III.) has been made the subject of considerable criticism. See the argument of Mr. Selden before parliament, on the liberty of the subject. 3 State Trials, 18, 79. Its meaning, however, seems to be sufficiently explained by the other instruments above quoted. The expression VEL PER LEGEM TERRÆ, has also occasioned much discussion. See Lex terræ.

Nullus recedat e curia cancellaria sine remedio. No person should depart from the court of chancery without a remedy. 4 Hen. VII. 4. Branch's Princ.

NUMERATA PECUNIA. Lat. In the civil law. Money told or counted; money paid by tale. Inst. 3. 24. 2. Bract. fol. 35.

NUMMULARIUS. Lat. [from nummus, money.] In the Roman law. A money-lender, or money-changer; a banker. Cod. 11. 17. 1, pr. Adam's Rom. Ant. 546. See Argentarius.

NUMMUS. Lat. Money. Commonly derived from Gr. νόμος, law, as being originally established by law. Co. Litt. 207 b. But Calvin prefers to derive it from numerus, number. Calv. Lex.

NUNC PRO TUNC. L. Lat. In practice. Now for then. A term applied to such acts (as the entry of a judgment) as are allowed to be done after the time when they should have been done, and with the same effect as if they had been done at the proper time; the doing of the act now, (nunc,) that is, at the time when it is actually done, being allowed to pass as a substitute and equivalent for (pro) doing it then (tunc,) or before. 1 Stra. 639. 2 Tidd's Pr. 932. See 1 Williams on Exec. 762, 763.

NUNCIATIO, Nuntiatio. Lat. In the civil law. A solemn declaration, usually in prohibition of a thing; a protest. Dig. 39. 1. See Novi operis nunciatio.

NUNCUPARE. Lat. In the civil law. To name; to pronounce orally, or in words without writing. Nuncupare hæredem; to name one's heir viva voce, before witnesses. Calv. Lex.

NUNCUPATIVE WILL. A will or testament orally made or declared before witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing; a will not made in writing; an unwritten will.* 2 Bl. Com. 500. A term derived from the civil law. See Nuncupare.

Nuncupative wills have been recently abolished in England, by statute 1 Vict. c. 26, § 9, with an exception in the case of soldiers in actual military service, and mariners and seamen at sea. Id. § 11. See 1 Williams on Exec. 96. This is in accordance with the present law in New-York. 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. [60,] 4, § 22. As to the law in other states, see 1 Jarman on Wills, (Perkins' ed. 1849,) 130, 131, notes. United States Digest, Will. Nuncupative wills have never been regarded with favor by the courts, and when they are allowed, much greater strictness is required in the proof of them than in the proof of written wills. See 27 Mississippi R. 119.

NUNDINÆ. Lat. In civil and old English law. A fair; fairs. Dig. 50. 11. Cod. 4. 60. In nundinis et mercatis; in fairs and markets. Bract. fol. 56. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 63, § 7; c. 64, § 23.

NUNQUAM. Lat. Never. Nunquam fuit ballivus ejus, vel mercator, vel denariorum suorum receptor, vel administrator; never was his bailiff or merchant, or receiver of his moneys, or his administrator (manager.) Fleta, lib. 2, c. 70, § 9. See infra.

NUNQUAM INDEBITATUS. L. Lat. Never indebted. The name of the plea now substituted in England for nil debet, as the general issue in debt on simple contract. 3 Steph. Com. 577. 1 Arch. Nisi Prius, 202.

Nunquam crescit ex postfacto præteriti delicti æstimatio. The character of a past offence is never aggravated by a subsequent act or matter. Dig. 50. 17. 138. 1. A maxim adopted by Lord Bacon, with merely a change in the order of the words. Bacon's Max. 38, reg. 8. See Æstimatio.

Nunquam decurritur ad extraordinarium sed ubi deficit ordinarium. We are never to resort to what is extraordinary, but where [until] what is ordinary fails. 4 Inst. 84.

Nunquam præscribitur in falso. There is never a [no] prescription in case of falsehood, or forgery. A maxim in Scotch law. Bell's Dict.

Nunquam prospere succedunt res humanæ, ubi negliguntur divinæ. Human things [affairs] never prosper where divine things are neglected. Wingate's Max. 6, max. 2.

NUNTIUS, Nuncius. Lat. In old English practice. A messenger. One who was sent to make an excuse for a party summoned, or one who explained as for a friend (quasi pro amico,) the reason of a party's absence. Bract. fol. 345. This was not the same as an essoiner, (essoniator.) Id. ibid. 1 Reeves' Hist. 413.

An officer of a court; a summoner, apparitor or beadle. Cowell.

NUPER. Lat. Late; lately. Nuper vicecomes; late sheriff. Nuper de facto, et non de jure, reges Angliæ; lately kings of England in fact, and not of right. 1 Bl. Com. 204.

NUPER OBIIT. L. Lat. (Lately died.) In old English practice. An ancestral writ brought to establish an equal division of land, where, on the death of an ancestor who had several heirs, one of them entered and held the others out of possession. 3 Bl. Com. 186. F. N. B. 197. Roscoe's Real Act. 127, 128. The name was derived from that clause of the writ which referred to the ancestor qui nuper obiit, ut dicitur, (who lately died, as is said.) Reg. Orig. 226.

NUPTIÆ. Lat. [from nubere, to cover or veil.] In the civil law. Marriage; nuptials; the union of man and woman; companionship for all life, (conjunctio maris et feminæ, et consortium omnis vitæ.) Dig. 23. 2. 1. See Cod. 5. 4. Justinian uses nuptiæ and matrimonium as synonymous. Inst. 1. 9. 1. Properly, the nuptial ceremony. Calv. Lex. Tayl. Civ. Law, 269, 274. See Consensus non, &c.

NUPTIÆ SECUNDÆ. Lat. In the canon law. A second marriage; any marriage after the first. The canon law put a mark of disapprobation upon nuptiæ secundæ, for so they termed every marriage after the first; no benediction could be pronounced, nor could any priest be present at the celebration of them. Corvin. Jus Canon. 108, 109, 110. Launc. Inst. Jur. Can. lib. 2, tit. 16. 4 Reeves' Hist. 63.

NURUS. Lat. In the civil law. A son's wife, (filii uxor,) a daughter-in-law. Dig. 38. 10. 4. 6. See Id. 50. 16. 50.

NUSANCE. The old form of nuisance. Hale's Anal. sect. xlii.

NUTAUNTRE, Nutander, Nuictander. L. Fr. By night. Ou nutauntre ou de jour; by night or by day. Britt. c. 47. Yearb. P. 10 Edw. III. 37.

NUYT, Nute. L. Fr. Night. Britt. c. 80.

O.

O. C. An abbreviation, in the civil law, for ope consilio, (q. v.)

OATH. [O. Eng. othe; Sax. ath; Lat. juramentum, jusjurandum, sacramentum; L. Fr. serement.] A declaration or promise, corroborated or confirmed by an appeal to God. A declaration or promise by a person, before an authorized officer, that what he has said or is about to say is true, or that he will faithfully do a certain act, or perform a certain duty; corroborated by an appeal to the Deity to witness the sincerity of the declaration.

A declaration or promise corroborated by an appeal to God, and accompanied by some outward manual act or form,—usually that of touching and kissing the gospels. See Corporal oath.

 An oath may refer to something already done, or to something to be done. Thus, the oath of a witness, testifying orally, is that the evidence which he is about to give shall be the truth: the oath of a party making an affidavit is that what he has said is true; the oath of a juror is that he will try the issue between the parties and give a true verdict according to the evidence; the oath of office is that the party swearing will faithfully discharge its duties.

An oath, considered with reference to its words, obviously consists of two parts: a declaration of what the parties will do, or a declaration in reference to what he has done, and an appeal to the Deity by way of attestation or confirmation of it: the latter being expressed by the concluding clause, "So help you God," or "So help me God." In this appeal, the essence and force of the oath consist. Hence an oath is said by Paley to be "the calling upon God to witness, that is, to take notice of what we say, and invoking his vengeance, or renouncing his favor, if what we say be false, or what we promise be not performed." Paley's Mor. Phil. b. 3, c. 16. So, in Rex v. White, an oath is defined to be "a religious asseveration by which a person renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of Heaven, if he do not speak the truth." 1 Leach Cr. L. 430. And this was the idea of an oath from the earliest period, it being defined by Britton to be "a judicial affirmation in any matter whereof a man is charged on peril of his soul to say the truth," (en peril de sa alme a dire verite.) Britt. c. 97. The imprecation of vengeance, however, is rather implied than expressed, the true import of the words "So help me God" being, that the party puts his future and eternal welfare on the condition of what he says being the truth. "So," that is, in such event, "may God help or aid me," that is, be merciful to me hereafter. And this idea is more fully brought out in some of the older English forms: "So God me help at the holy dome," "So help me God at his holy dome," that is, the doom or judgment. See Dome, So help me God.

The act or ceremony by which the taking of an oath is accompanied and expressed, is now usually (as it has been from the earliest times) that of laying the hand upon and kissing the gospels; but in place of this, parties are often allowed to swear by lifting up the right hand, and in some cases, without any manual act whatever. 2 N. Y. Rev. St. [407, § 103,] 329, § 83. See Kissing the gospels, Uplifted hand. The importance of some act of this kind seems to be greater now than formerly, since, in modern practice, the party swearing (except in certain cases,) says nothing; the whole words of the oath being pronounced by the officer to whom it is administered, and all that the party himself does being merely in the way of assent. The entire form is far less impressive than that of the ancient practice, which placed the words of the oath in the party's own mouth, it being repeated in the first person throughout, and sometimes with peculiar solemnity. Thus the juror's oath on an assise was expressed as follows: "Hear this, ye justices, that I will speak the truth of this assise," &c. "and that for nothing will I omit to speak the truth. So help me God and these holy gospels." Bract. fol. 185. Britt. c. 52.

OBLATIO. Lat. In the civil law. An offering or tender of money by a debtor to his creditor, in payment of the debt. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 30, § 1007.

OBLIGATIO. Lat. In the civil and old English law. Obligation. Defined by Justinian to be "a bond of law, by which we are necessarily bound to pay something according to the laws of our country;" (obligatio est juris vinculum quo necessitate astringimur alicujus rei solvendæ secundum nostræ civitatis jura.) Inst. 3. 14, pr. See Dig. 5. 1. 20. Id. 44. 7. Bracton has adopted this definition with a modification which is an obvious improvement. Obligatio est juris vinculum, quo necessitate astringimur ad aliquod dandum vel faciendum; obligation is a bond of law, by which we are necessarily bound to give or to do something. Bract. fol. 99. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, § 1.

In old practice. A bond, or writing obligatory, (scriptum obligatorium.) 2 Bl. Com. 340.

OBLIGATION. [L. Fr. obligacion, from Lat. obligatio; from obligare, to bind.] Binding force or efficacy; binding force in law; a binding or state of being bound in law; the effect of an act in binding a person in law. Expressively called by Justinian, Bracton, Britton and Fleta, a bond of law, or legal chain or tie, (vinculum juris; lien de droit;) a chain or bond put upon a person by the law, compelling him to do some act. See Obligatio, Obligacion. A duty imposed by law, for the fulfilment of which one party is bound to another.* The obligation of a contract is the duty to perform it. Story's Confl. Laws, § 266. The legal obligation of a contract is the right to performance which the law confers on one party, and the corresponding duty of performance to which it binds the other. Id. ibid. And see Poth. Obl. pr.

An instrument in writing by which a party is bound in law; a bond, commonly called a writing obligatory. Co. Lit. 172 a. 2 Bl. Com. 340. Lord Coke observes (ub. sup.) that obligation is a word of large extent, but is commonly taken in the common law for a bond containing a penalty, with condition for payment of money, or to do or suffer some act or thing, &c.

OBLIGATION OF A CONTRACT. The binding force of a contract; the duty to perform a contract. Story's Confl. Laws, § 266.

OBLIGEE. The party to whom another is bound; the party to whom a bond is given. 2 Bl. Com. 340.

OBLIGOR. A party who binds himself, as by a bond; the party by whom a bond is given. 2 Bl. Com. 340.

OBLIQUUS. Lat. In the old law of descents. Oblique; cross; transverse; collateral. The opposite of rectus, right or upright. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 7, § 2.

In the law of evidence. Indirect; circumstantial. Vinnius, Jurispr. Contr. lib. 4, c. 25.

OBLITERATION. A blotting out of writing. See Rasure.

OBOLATA TERRÆ. L. Lat. In old English law. A measure of land, the quantity of which was uncertain. Reg. Orig. 1 b. Cowell. Spelman.

OBRA. Span. [from Lat. opera?] In Spanish law. Work. Obras; works or trades; those which men carry on in houses or covered places. White's New Recop. b. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 6.

OBVENTIO. Lat. [from obvenire, to fall or come to.] In the civil law. A kind of rent, or income. More commonly used in the plural, (obventiones,) to denote the profits accruing from a thing, as the earnings of a vessel. See Exercitor navis.

In old English law, the rents or revenues of spiritual livings are called obventions. Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 11.

OCASION, Occasion. Span. In Spanish law. Accident. Las Partidas, part 3, tit. 32, l. 21. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 9, c. 2.

OCCASIO. L. Lat. In old English law. Molestation; trouble; hindrance; vexation by suit. Spelman. Cart. de Forest. c. 12. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 38, 39, note [k.]

OCCASIONARE. L. Lat. In old practice. To trouble or molest; to vex or harass with litigation. Spelman. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 66, § 20. Cart. Conf. 49 Hen. III.

OCCULTATIO. Lat. In old English law. A hiding. Occultatio thesauri inventi fraudulosa; the fraudulent concealment of treasure trove. Bract. fol. 119 b. 3 Inst. 133.

OCCUPANCY. [Lat. occupatio.] The taking possession of those things which before belonged to nobody. 2 Bl. Com. 258. 1 Steph. Com. 415. See Comb. 290.—The taking possession by any one, of a thing of which there is no owner. Brande. See Occupatio.

The right acquired by such taking possession. Id. 2 Kent's Com. 317—325. See Occupant.

OCCUPANT. [from Lat. occupans.] In a general sense. One who takes possession of a thing, of which there is no owner. Quod ante nullius est, id naturali ratione occupanti conceditur. That which belongs to no one, is by natural reason given to the occupant. Dig. 41. 1. 3.

One who takes possession of a thing which has been abandoned. Occupantis fiunt derelicta. Things abandoned become the property of the [first] occupant. 1 Peters' Adm. Dec. 53.

In a special sense. One who takes possession of lands held pur autre vie, after the death of the tenant, and during the life of the cestuy que vie. See General occupant, Special occupant.

OCCUPARE. Lat. In the civil law. To seize or take possession of; to enter upon a vacant possession; to take possession before another. Calv. Lex.

OCCUPATIO. Lat. [from occupare, to occupy.] In the civil law. A taking possession of a thing which before belonged to nobody, (quod ante nullius est;) as of wild beasts and other wild animals, property and persons captured in war, gems and other things found upon the sea-shore, &c. Inst. 2. 1. 12, 17, 18. See Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2.

Octave. Al oeps de St. Hilary. Yearb. H. 8 Hen. VI. 26.

"OF," held to be a word of more general description than "at." "My estate of ——," than "my estate at ——." Lord Ellenborough, 3 M. & S. 171, 172. See 3 Taunt. 147.

OF, though used in the sense of the genitive case, is constantly expressed in the old books by the Lat. de and ex, (qq. v.) See 2 Salk. 622.

OF A PLEA. See De placito.

OF COUNSEL. A common phrase in practice, applied to the counsel employed by a party in a cause, or whose name appears upon the papers. Derived probably from the Lat. à consiliis, (q. v.) and expressed by the L. Lat. de consilio, (L. Fr. de counsel.) Dyer, 34 b, 38. The modern phrase "of counsel for" a party was formerly expressed "of counsel with." "The counsellor should give his counsel to him with whom he is of counsel." 5 Co. 20.

OF COURSE. [L. Lat. de cursu.] In the general prescribed order of practice: without special reference to the court. A rule is said to be of course, when it may be entered by the attorney without application to the court.

OF NEW. A Scotch expression, closely translated from the Lat. de novo, (q. v.)

OFFA EXECRATA. L. Lat. In old English law. The morsel of execration; the corsned, (q. v.) 1 Reeves' Hist. 21.

OFFENCE. [from Lat. offendere, to offend; Lat. delictum.] An act committed against a law, or omitted where the law requires it, and punishable by it. Jacob. Now generally used as synonymous with crime, (q. v.) An act for which any criminal punishment may by law be inflicted. 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. [702, § 32,] 587, § 33.

OFFICE. L. Fr. and Eng. [Lat. officium.] A position or station in which a person is employed to perform certain duties, or by virtue of which he becomes charged with the performance of certain duties, public or private.*—A place of trust. 5 Mod. 431, arg. Cowell defines office to be "a function by virtue whereof a man hath some employment in the affairs of another." Finch defines it, "a duty of attendance upon a charge." Law, b. 2, ch. 13. Webster defines it to be "a duty, charge or trust." But these seem to be rather the results or incidents (though principal and necessary ones) of office, than to constitute office itself. The idea of an office clearly embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, fees or emoluments, rights and powers, as well as that of duty. The intrinsic meaning of the word is well expressed by the old English word "place," and the figurative terms "incumbent," "swearing in," "entering upon," "vacating," which are constantly applied to offices, have the same radical idea.

A public station or employment; an employment conferred by appointment of government.*—An employment on behalf of the government, in any station or public trust, not merely transient, occasional or incidental. Platt, J. 20 Johns. R. 493. A charge or trust conferred by public authority. 7 Porter's (Ala.) R. 371. See 26 Alabama R. 159, arg. A station or employment conferred by election of the people.

A right to exercise a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments thereto belonging. 2 Bl. Com. 36. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 431, § 530. A species of incorporeal hereditament. In the United States, no public office can properly be termed a hereditament, and private ministerial offices of this class are rare or unknown. 3 Kent's Com. 454. See 1 Selden's R. 285.

An abbreviated name for inquest of office, (q. v.) Finch's Law, b. 4, ch. 24. Trove est per office; it is found by office. Dyer, 44, (Fr. ed.)

OFFICE COPY. In practice. A copy of a paper, obtained from the officer with whom the original has been filed or entered. See Copy.

OFFICE FOUND. In English law. Inquest of office found; the finding of certain facts by a jury on an inquest or inquisition of office. 3 Bl. Com. 258, 259. This phrase has been adopted in American law. 2 Kent's Com. 61.

OFFICER. [L. Lat. officiarius.] One who holds an office; a person lawfully invested with an office. See Office.

Officia judicialia non concedantur antequam vacent. Judicial offices should not be granted before they are vacant. 11 Co. 4.

OFFICIAL. [Lat. officialis.] In the civil law. The minister or apparitor of a magistrate or judge. Cowell.

In the canon law. A person to whom a bishop commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction. Id.

In common and statute law. The person whom the archdeacon substitutes in the execution of his jurisdiction. Id.

OFFICIARIUS. L. Lat. An officer. Clerke's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 3.

OFFICINA. Lat. A shop; a workshop. Officina justitiæ; the shop or mint of justice. 3 Bl. Com. 273. Id. 48. A name anciently given to the court of chancery, or rather to the ordinary legal branch of that court, as being the place where the king's writs, (the instruments of justice,) were framed. Id. ibid. Called also officina brevium; the shop of writs. 3 Wooddes. Lect. 214.

OFFICIUM. Lat. Office. Officium nemini debet esse damnosum. Office ought not to be an occasion of loss to any one. A maxim in Scotch law. Bell's Dict. By this rule, a mandatory is entitled to demand from the mandant all reasonable expenses debursed by him bonâ fide, and the damage sustained by him in the execution of the mandate, even though the management should have been a losing concern.

OIL. L. Fr. The eye. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 21.

OIL, Oile, Oyl, Oyel. L. Fr. Yes; yea. Schard. Est Jon icy en prop' p'son? Parn. Sir, oil. Yearb. M. 9 Edw. III. 13. Wilby. Est W. en vie? Sad. Sir, oile. P. 4 Edw. III. 12. Certes, oile. M. 6 Edw. III. 45. See Oyl, Oyel.

OIL, OIL. L. Fr. Yea, yea; ay, ay. The assent of the commons in 28 Edw. III. Kelham.

O'I'O. A contraction of omnino. 1 Inst. Cler. 11.

OIR. L. Fr. To hear. A oir son jugement; to hear his judgment. Fet Assaver, § 38. Jeo ai oi dire; I have heard said. Yearb. P. 1 Edw. II. 4.

OIR. Span. [from Lat. audire, to hear.] In Spanish law. To hear; to take cognizance. White's New Recop. b. 3, tit. 1, c. 7.

OKER. Sc. In Scotch law. Usury; the taking of interest for money, contrary to law. Bell's Dict.

OLD NATURA BREVIUM. The title of a treatise written in the reign of Edward III. containing the writs which were then most in use, annexing to each a short comment concerning their nature and the application of them, with their various properties and effects. 3 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 152. So called to distinguish it from Sir Anthony Fitzherbert's treatise on the same subject. Id. Crabb's Hist. 329. It is generally referred to by the abbreviation O. N. B. and, in the older books, by the Lat. abbreviation Vet. Na. Br. or Vet. Na'br.

OLD STATUTES. See Vetera statuta.

OLD TENURES. A treatise on tenures, written in the reign of Edward III. giving an account of the various tenures by which land was holden, the nature of estates and some other incidents to landed property. It is a very scanty tract, but has the merit of having led the way to Littleton's famous work on the same subject. 3 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 151. Crabb's Hist. 328.

OLERON, LAWS OF. A collection of maritime law promulgated in or about the time of Richard I. in the island of Oleron, on the coast of France; claimed by the French lawyers to have been a French production compiled under the direction of Queen Eleanor, Duchess of Guienne; and by Selden, and other English writers, to have been an English work, published by her son Richard I. in his character of King of England. These laws are generally ranked next after the Consolato del Mare in point of time and celebrity, and have been considered as the foundation of the maritime legislation and jurisprudence of the western nations of Europe. 3 Kent's Com. 12. They have been admitted as authority on admiralty questions, in the courts of justice in the United States. Id. 13. See 1 Duer on Ins. 38, 39, for remarks on the true character of this collection.

OLOGRAPH. A French mode of writing holograph, without the aspirate. Civil Code of Louis. art. 1567, 1581.

OME BUENO. Span. In Spanish law. A good man; a substantial person. Las Partidas, part. 5, tit. 13, l. 38.

OMISSIO. Lat. [from omittere, q. v.] Omission; a leaving out. Omissio eorum quæ tacite insunt nihil operatur. The omission of those things which are tacitly implied is of no consequence. 2 Bulstr. 131.

OMISSIS OMNIBUS ALIIS NEGOTIIS. Lat. Laying aside all other businesses. 9 East, 347.

OMITTERE. Lat. In the civil law. To pass over, or pass by; to leave out; to omit. Calv. Lex.

To neglect; to refuse. Id.

OMNE. Lat. Every thing; every; all. A word which is said to exclude all exception. Qui omne dicit nihil excipit. He who says "every thing" excepts nothing. Hence its employment in law maxims, (see infra,) has been sometimes thought to give them an undue generality.

Omne actum ab intentione agentis est judicandum. Every act is to be judged by the intention of the doer. Branch's Pr.

Omne crimen ebrietas et incendit et detegit. Drunkenness both inflames (or aggravates) and reveals every crime. Co. Litt. 247 a, 4 Bl. Com. 26. Broom's Max. [14.]

Omne jus aut consensus fecit, aut necessitas constituit, aut firmavit consuetudo. All right either consent has created, or necessity established, or custom confirmed, [has either been created by consent, or established by necessity, or confirmed by custom.] Dig. 1. 3. 40.

Omne magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum, quamvis minus dignum sit antiquius. Every worthier thing draws to it the less worthy, though the less worthy be the more ancient. Co. Litt. 355 b. See Finch's Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 24.

Omne magnum exemplum habet aliquid ex iniquo, quod publica utilitate compensatur.

Every great example has somewhat of injustice, which is compensated by its public utility. Branch's Pr. citing Hob. 279.

Omne majus continet in se minus. Every greater contains in itself the less. 5 Co. 115 a, Wade's case. Wingate's Max. 206, max. 59. The greater always contains the less. Finch's Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 22. Broom's Max. 75, [129.] Hence, if a man tender more than he ought to pay, it is good, and the other party ought to accept so much of the sum tendered as is due to him. Id. ibid. But see the qualification, ibid. A man having a power may do less than such power enables him to do. Id. 76. Story on Agency, § 172. This maxim is supposed to be merely a different version of that of the civil law, In eo quod plus est, semper inest et minus, (q. v.) Dig. 50. 17. 110. 1 Wooddes. Lect. Introd. Lect. 5, lxxi. note. Other forms of it are Omne majus trahit ad se [quod est] minus. Every greater thing draws to it the less. Co. Litt. 43 b. 2 Co. 68 b, Tookers' case. Omne majus minus in se complectitur. Every greater embraces in itself the less. Jenk. Cent. 208, case 40.

Omne quod inædificatur solo cedit. Every thing which is built upon [the soil] belongs to the soil. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 10. Inst. 2. 1. 29. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 12.

Omne sacramentum debet esse de certa scientia. Every oath ought to be of certain knowledge. 4 Inst. 279.

Omne testamentum morte consummatur, [consummatum est.] Every will is consummated or made complete by death. 3 Co. 29 b. 4 Id. 61 b, Forse & Hembling's case. Shep. Touch. 401. A testament is of no force till after the death of the testator. 2 Bl. Com. 500. Broom's Max. [378.]

Omnes licentiam habere his quæ pro se indulta sunt, renunciare. [It is a rule of the ancient law that] all persons shall have liberty to renounce those privileges which have been conferred for their benefit. Cod. 1. 3. 51. Id. 2. 3. 29.

Omnes prudentes illa admittere solent quæ probentur iis qui in arte sua bene versati sunt. All prudent men are in the habit of admitting those things which are proved by those who are well versed or skilled in their own art. 7 Co. 19 a, Calvin's case. This is only another form of the maxim, Cuilibet in arte sua perito credendum est, (q. v.) though less positively expressed. In the translations given in Branch and Wharton, its point is lost by the use of the word approved instead of proved.

Omnia delicta in aperto leviora sunt. All crimes that are committed openly are lighter; [or have a less odious appearance than those committed secretly.] 8 Co. 127 a, City of London's case.

Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem. All things are presumed against a despoiler or wrong-doer. A leading maxim in the law of evidence. Best on Evid. 340, § 303. If a man, by his own tortious act, withhold the evidence by which the nature of his case would be made manifest, every presumption to his disadvantage will be adopted. Broom's Max. 425, [725.] "When a man destroys a thing that is designed to be evidence against himself, a small matter will supply it." Holt, C. J. 1 Ld. Raym. 731. 1 Greenl. Evid. § 37.

Omnia præsumuntur legitime facta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to be lawfully done, until proof be made to the contrary. Co. Litt. 232 b. Best on Evid. 337, § 300. Broom's Max. [730.]

Omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta. All things are presumed to be done in due form. Omnia præsumuntur solemniter esse acta. All things are presumed to be done with due solemnity. Co. Litt. 6 b. Every thing is presumed to be rightly and duly performed, until the contrary is shown. Acts done, which presuppose the existence of other acts to make them legally operative, are presumptive proofs of the latter. 2 Ohio St. R. 246, 247. 4 Id. 148. 6 Id. 293. Where acts are of an official nature, or require the concurrence of official persons, a presumption arises in favor of their due execution. Broom's Max. 427, [729.] The presumption of law is, that public officers, charged with a public duty, perform that duty rightfully, until the contrary appears. Shaw, C. J. 11 Metcalf's R. 347. The acts of a court of justice are to be presumed to be rightfully done. 3 Story's R. 534. It is an established maxim of law, in relation to the acts of public officers, and especially of judicial tribunals acting within their jurisdiction, that all things shall be presumed to be done rightly, until the contrary is proven. 26 Mississippi R. 362. This maxim is now constantly used by the courts, to uphold the maxim Ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Pearson, J. 3 Jones' Law R. 119. See Best on Evid. 337—339. See Rite.

Omnia quæ jure contrahuntur, contrario

jure pereunt. All contracts which are made under a law, are destroyed under a contrary law. Dig. 50. 17. 100.

Omnia quæ sunt uxoris sunt ipsius viri. All things which are the wife's are the husband's. Bract. fol. 32. Co. Litt. 112 a. Finch's Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 58. See 2 Kent's Com. 130—143.

OMNIBUS AD QUOS PRÆSENTES LITERÆ PERVENERINT, SALUTEM. L. Lat. To all to whom the present letters shall come, Greeting. A form of address with which charters both public and private, (deeds,) and other instruments were anciently commenced. Otherwise modified, as Omnibus probis hominibus, (To all good men;) Omnibus in Christo fidelibus, (To all the faithful in Christ;) Omnibus Christi fidelibus, (To all the faithful of Christ,) &c. See West's Symboleog. pars 1, lib. 2, sect. 241, et passim.

OMNIBUS PRÆSENTES LITERAS VISURIS VEL AUDITURIS, SALUTEM. L. Lat. To all who shall see or hear the present letters, Greeting. See supra.

OMNI EXCEPTIONE MAJORES. Lat. Superior to all exception; beyond all exception. 3 Bl. Com. 363.

Omnis actio est loquela. Every action is a plaint or complaint. Co. Litt. 292 a.

Omnis conclusio boni et veri judicii sequitur ex bonis et veris præmissis et dictis juratorum. Every conclusion of a good and true judgment follows from good and true premises, and the verdicts of jurors. Co. Litt. 226 b.

Omnis consensus tollit errorem. Every consent removes error. Consent always removes the effect of error. 2 Inst. 123.

Omnis definitio in lege periculosa. All definition in law is hazardous. 2 Wooddes. Lect. 196. This seems to be abridged from the civil law. Omnis definitio in jure civili periculosa est, parum est enim ut non subverti possit. All definition in the civil law is hazardous, for there is little that cannot be subverted. Dig. 50. 17. 202. See Definition.

Omnis innovatio plus novitate perturbat quam utilitate prodest. Every innovation disturbs more by its novelty than it benefits by its utility. 2 Bulstr. 338. Every innovation occasions more harm and derangement of order by its very novelty, than benefit by its actual utility. Broom's Max. 61, [109.] 1 Salk. 20.

Omnis interpretatio, si fieri possit, in instrumentis ita fienda est, ut omnes contrarietates amoveantur. All interpretation in [of] instruments should be so made, if possible, that all contrarieties [contradictions] may be removed. Jenk. Cent. 96, case 86.

Omnis nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non præteritis. Every new statute ought to prescribe a form to future, not to past acts. Bract. fol. 228. This maxim has been adopted by Lord Coke with the addition of the word temporibus, after futuris. 2 Inst. 95. The word constitutio is translated in Branch's Principia, institution. It is employed by Bracton several times in the chapter where the above maxim is found, in the sense of the establishment of a servitude (constitutio servitutis;) but in referring to the statute of Merton he calls that also constitutio, (constitutio de Merton,) which authorizes the translation of "statute." The term is obviously derived from the civil law.

Omnis privatio præsupponit habitum. Every privation presupposes former enjoyment. Co. Litt. 339 a. A "rule of philosophie" quoted by Lord Coke, and applied to the discontinuance of an estate.

Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato [seu licentiæ] priori æquiparatur. Every ratification is drawn backward, [has a retrospective operation,] and is equivalent to a previous command [or permission.] Co. Litt. 207 a, 258 a. Wingate's Max. 485, max. 124. A subsequent ratification is equivalent to a prior authority. Story on Agency, § 445. Subsequent assent given to what has been already done has a retrospective effect, and is equivalent to a previous command. Broom's Max. 880, [676.] Ratification has retroactive efficacy, and relates back to the inception of the transaction. Hemphill, C. J. 16 Texas R. 465. A leading maxim of the common law, and of maritime and commercial jurisprudence, and applied constantly in the law of principal and agent. Broom's Max. ub. sup. Story on Agency, §§ 239, 445. Shep. Touch. 57. Smith's Merc. Law, 60. 2 Kent's Com. 616. 2 Steph. Com. 119. Applied also equally to contracts and torts. Broom's Max. 345, 383. This maxim seems to be derived from that of the civil law, Ratihabitio mandato comparatur. Dig. 46. 3. 12. 4. Id. 20. 1. 16. 1. Id. 13. 7. 20, pr. See Cod. 4. 28. 7, pr.

ON ACCOUNT OF WHOM IT MAY CONCERN. A formal clause in English marine policies of insurance, intended to embrace all persons who have an insurable interest in the property, and a lawful right to be insured. It is retained in some American policies, (as in the Philadelphia forms,) but in others the phrase "for whom it may concern" has been substituted. 2 Duer on Ins. 28, 29, note.

ON OR ABOUT. A phrase used in conveyancing, in reciting the date of an instrument referred to. To avoid the injurious consequences of error in the recital of dates, &c. the safe and correct practice in conveyancing (a practice inadmissible in pleading) is to recite deeds as bearing date "on or about," &c. thus allowing the deed to be produceable in evidence in support of the title, though the date be mistaken. Shep. Touch. (by Preston,) 77. Id. 397.

ONCE IN JEOPARDY. Once put in peril of legal penalties. For a view of the different interpretations which have been given of this expression, see Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, §§ 573—591.

Once quit and cleared, ever quit and cleared. (Sc. anis quit and clenged, ay quit and clenged.) Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Iter. ad fin.

Once a mortgage, always a mortgage. The right of redemption is held in equity to be an inseparable incident to a mortgage, and all restrictions or qualifications of this right are deemed utterly void. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 378.

ONE THIRD NEW FOR OLD. See New for old.

ONERARE. Lat. [from onus, a burden.] To burden or charge; to lade or load. Calv. Lex.

ONERARI NON. L. Lat. (Ought not to be charged.) In pleading. A form of commencement of a plea, substituted in some cases for the actio. non, (q. v.) Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (69.)

ONERATIO. L. Lat. [from onerare, q. v.] In maritime law. A lading; a cargo. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 8, sec. 10.

ONEROUS CAUSE. In Scotch law. A good and legal consideration.* 1 Forbes' Inst. part 3, p. 102.

ONEROUS DEED. In Scotch law. A deed given for a valuable consideration. Bell's Dict.

O. NI. An abbreviation of oneratur nisi habeat sufficientem exonerationem, (he is charged unless he has a sufficient discharge.) An entry formerly made in the English exchequer, as soon as the sheriff entered into and made up his account for issues, amercements, &c. 4 Inst. 116.

ONOMASTIC. [from Gr. ὄνομα, a name.] A term sometimes applied to the signature of an instrument, where the body of it is in the handwriting of another person. Best on Evid. 257, § 210.

ONUS. Lat. A burden, or load; a weight. Onus probandi; the burden of proof.

The lading, burthen or cargo of a vessel. Calv. Lex.

A charge; an incumbrance. Cum onere, (q. v.;) with the incumbrance.

ONUS PROBANDI. Lat. The burden of proving, or proof. Actori incumbit onus probandi. The burden of proof rests on the plaintiff. 4 Co. 71 b, Hynde's case. Best on Evid. 291, 293, 295.

OOR, Aour. L. Fr. Gold. Kelham.

OPE CONSILIO, (or OPE ET CONSILIO.) Lat. In the civil law. By aid and counsel. A term applied to accessories in the commission of crimes, of similar import to the "aiding and abetting" of the common law. Inst. 4. 1. 11, 12. Dig. 50. 16. 53. 2. It seems to have been interpreted disjunctively, (by aid or counsel.) Id. ibid.

OPEN. Not concealed; outward; manifest; apparent.

Not closed, settled or fixed. See infra.

OPEN ACCOUNT. Every account between two persons having dealings with one another, is deemed an open account until, by their tacit or express agreement, it is settled between them. Pulling on Merc. Accounts, 30.

OPEN DOORS. In Scotch practice. Letters of open doors are letters (process) authorizing the officer to whom they are directed to break open the doors of places in which the goods of a debtor are deposited. Bell's Dict.

OPEN LAW. In old English law. The trial by the duel or ordeal. See Lex manifesta.

OPEN POLICY. A policy of insurance in which the amount of interest is not fixed by the policy, but is left to be ascertained by the insured, in case a loss should happen. 3 Kent's Com. 272. A policy that contains no declaration of the amount of the interest of the assured, and which consequently casts upon him the burden of proof when he claims an indemnity. 1 Duer on Ins. 97.

OPEN THEFT. In Saxon law. The same with the Lat. furtum manifestum, (q. v.)

To OPEN. In practice. To commence or begin; to enter upon. At the trial of a cause, the counsel who first addresses the jury is said to open the case; and his address is called the opening. In English practice, this is technically called "opening the pleadings." The counsel for the party who has the affirmative of the issue is always entitled to begin or open.

To OPEN. In practice. To undo a proceeding, or recall an act, for the purpose of restoring a party to the position he was in before such proceeding or act was done; to relieve a party who has merits, against a proceeding by which he has been formally and regularly barred. To open a default, is to allow a party a new opportunity of doing the act, for not doing which the default was entered. To open biddings, in equity, is to allow a re-sale of property which has once been sold under a decree. The expression is a figurative one, like that of "letting in," which imports nearly the same idea.

The expressions "to open" and "to shut" have been applied to a remainder. Ryder, C. J. Say. 239.

OPENING BIDDINGS. In equity practice. The allowance by a court, on sufficient cause shown, of a re-sale of property once sold under a decree. See To open.

OPERARIUS. L. Lat. [from opus, work.] In old English law. A workman or laborer. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 4.

OPERIS NOVI NUNTIATIO. Lat. In the civil law. A protest or warning against [of] a new work. Dig. 39. 1. See Opus novum.

OPINIO. Lat. Opinion. Opinio communis or vulgaris; common opinion; general or prevalent opinion, as distinguished from the peculiar opinion of some individual, or a new opinion not generally received. It was a rule of the civil law that common opinion was to be regarded in judging and giving legal advice, (opinio communis judicando et consulendo complecti debet,) though there was much controversy among the civilians as to its application. Calv. Lex. To this source may be traced the old English rules on the subject of common opinion. See Communis opinio.

Opinio quæ favet testamento est tenenda. The opinion which favors a will is to be followed. 1 W. Bl. 13, arg.

OPORTET. Lat. It behooves; it is needful or necessary. Oportebit (the future form) had, in the civil law, the sense of oportet. Dig. 50. 16. 8. And as to the meaning of oportere, see Dig. 50. 16. 37. Oportet quod certa res deducatur in donationem. It is necessary that a certain thing be brought into the gift, or made the subject of the conveyance. Bract. fol. 15 b. There should be certainty as to the thing intended to be conveyed, because, as the same writer observes, the gift of an uncertain thing is null, (quia incertæ rei nulla est donatio.) Id. ibid.

Oportet quod certa res deducatur in judicium. It is necessary that a certain (definite) thing be brought to judgment or into court; that is, made the subject of an action, or of the action of the court in the particular case. There must be certainty as to the thing which is presented to the court by the pleadings. 5 Co. 35 a, Playter's case. Id. 38 a, Tey's case. Jenk. Cent. 84, case 64. This is merely a modification of Bracton's certa debet esse—res quæ deducitur in judicium. Bract. fol. 240.

Oportet quod certa sit res quæ venditur. It is necessary that there should be a certain thing which is sold. To make a valid sale, there must be certainty as to the thing which is sold. Bract. fol. 61 b.

OPP'. A contraction of obtulit or optulit, in the old books. A. opp' se versus B. quarto die; A. offered himself against B. on the fourth day. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 11. Id. c. 67, § 2.

OPPIDUM. Lat. A town. Dig. 50. 16. 239. 7.

OPPIGNERARE. Lat. In the civil law. To pledge. Calv. Lex.

OPPOSER. [L. Lat. oppositor.] In old English law. An officer in the court of exchequer. See Foreign apposer. Sometimes treated as a corrupted form of apposer, (q. v.) but there are good reasons for considering it as the genuine word.

Opposita juxta se posita magis elucescunt. Opposite things when placed near each other (in juxtaposition) appear in a clearer light. Bacon's Works, iv. 256, 258, 353.

Optima est legum interpres consuetudo. Custom is the best interpreter of laws. Dig. 1. 3. 37. Adopted in the common law, with a slight verbal variation. Optimus interpres legum consuetudo. 2 Inst. 18. Bacon's arg. Jurisdiction of Marches, Works, iv. 260. 1 Wooddes. Lect. Introd. Lect. 2, xxxi. That exposition of a law is to be preferred which is approved by constant and continual use and experience. Broom's Max. 421, [719.]

Optima est lex quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis, optimus judex qui minimum sibi. That law is the best which leaves least to the discretion of the judge; that judge is the best who leaves least to his own. Bacon's Aphorisms, 46. 2 Dwarris on Statutes, 782. That system of law is best which confides as little as possible to the discretion of the judge,—that judge the best who relies as little as possible on his own opinion. Broom's Max. 37, [60.] 1 Kent's Com. 478.

Optima statuti interpretatrix est (omnibus particulis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum. The best interpreter of a statute is (all its parts being considered,) the statute itself. 8 Co. 117 b, Bonham's case. Wingate's Max. 239, in max. 68.

Optimus interpres rerum usus. Use or usage is the best interpreter of things. 2 Inst. 282. Broom's Max. 415, [712.]

OPTION. [from Lat. optio, choice.] In English ecclesiastical law. A customary prerogative of an archbishop, when a bishop is consecrated by him, to name a clerk or chaplain of his own to be provided for by such suffragan bishop; in lieu of which it is now usual for the bishop to make over by deed to the archbishop, his executors and assigns, the next presentation of such dignity or benefice in the bishop's disposal within that see, as the archbishop himself shall choose, which is therefore called his option. 1 Bl. Com. 381. 3 Steph. Com. 63, 64. Cowell.

OPTIONAL WRIT. In old English practice. That species of original writ, otherwise called a præcipe, which was framed in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason wherefore he had not done it. 3 Bl. Com. 274.

OPTULIT. An old form of obtulit, used in Bracton. Bract. fol. 354, 354 b.

OPUS. Lat. and L. Lat. In civil and old English law. Work; labor. See infra.

A thing made or done by labor. See infra.

OPUS LOCATUM. Lat. In the civil law. A work let out. Opus, according to Labeo, signified the same with the Gr. ἀποτέλεσμα, a complete work, a thing made or done by labor, and not ἔργον, labor itself. Dig. 50. 16. 5. 1.

OPUS MANIFICUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Labor done by the hands; manual labor; such as making a hedge, digging a ditch. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 48, § 3. In the parallel passage in Bracton, the expression is opus manifestum vel manufactum, and manifestum is repeated. Bract. fol. 159 b, lib. 3, tract. 2, c. 37, ¶ 13.

OPUS NOVUM. Lat. In the civil law. A new work. By this term was meant something newly built upon land, or taken from a work already erected. He was said opus novum facere (to make a new work,) who, either by building or by taking any thing away, changed the former appearance of a work. Dig. 39. 1. 1. 11.

"OR," in written instruments, is frequently construed to mean "and," where such construction is necessary to effectuate the intention of the parties. Thus, in a deed. 5 Co. 112 a, Mallory's case. So, in a bond. Cro. Jac. 322. See 3 Term R. 470. So, in a will. 5 Bos. & Pull. 38. 9 East, 366. 16 Ib. 67. 6 Johns. R. 54—58. 1 Metcalf's R. 88. 1 Jarman on Wills, 443—454, (416, Perkins' ed. 1849, note.) 4 Zabriskie's R. 686. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 535.

It has been said that there is perhaps no word in the language of more equivocal effect than or. Hence, in England, it has been excluded from indictments, though it has been admitted in American practice. Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, §§ 294—296.

ORA. Lat. In old English and Scotch law. A Saxon coin of the value of 16*d.* mentioned in Domesday, the Regiam Majestatem, and other records. Spelman.

An ounce of the value of 20*d.* Id. And see Skene de Verb. Signif.

ORAL PLEADING. Pleading by word of mouth, in the actual presence of the court. This was the ancient mode of pleading in England, and continued to the reign of Edw. III. Steph. Pl. 23—26.

ORATIO. Lat. In the Roman law. An oration or address made by the emperor before the senate, expressing his opinion or pleasure; upon which the decree of the senate (senatus consultum,) was formed. Taylor's Civ. Law, 227, 228.

ORATIO SIGNIFICATIVA. Lat. In old English law. The meaning of an instrument, as distinguished from the more letters (literæ) in which it was written. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, § 20.

ORATOR. L. Lat. and Eng. [from orare, to pray or petition.] In equity pleading. A petitioner; one who prays for relief. The plaintiff or complainant in a bill in chancery is so styled in the bill, and sometimes in the reports. Hughes' Equity Draftsman, 1—455. 28 Vermont R. 87, 382.

ORATOUR. L. Fr. A complainant; a petitioner. Kelham.

ORATRIX. L. Lat. and Eng. [from orare, to pray.] In equity pleading. A female petitioner. A female complainant in equity is so styled in the bill. Hughes' Equity Draftsman, 2, 3, 4.

ORDEAL. [Sax. ordale, from or, great, and dæl, judgment; L. Lat. ordalium.] In Saxon and old English law. An ancient mode of trial, otherwise called judicium Dei, the judgment of God, it being regarded as the means of obtaining a miraculous interposition of Heaven in favor of innocence, by protecting a party accused from the destructive or natural effects of fire and water to which he was subjected. See Fire ordeal, Water ordeal. Spelman has given from the Textus Roffensis, a minute and curious account of the religious services which accompanied the ordeal, including the administration of the sacrament, the prayers, readings, benedictions, the solemn adjuration of the water or fire, &c.

ORDENAMIENTO. Span. In Spanish law. An order emanating from the sovereign, and differing from a cedula only in form, and in the mode of its promulgation. Schmidt's Civ. Law, Introd. 93, note.

ORDENAMIENTO DE ALCALA. Span. A collection of Spanish law, promulgated by the Cortes in the year 1348. Schmidt's Civ. Law, Introd. 75.

ORDER. [Lat. ordo.] In practice. A direction in writing, granted by a court or judge, requiring or authorizing some act to be done. In actions at law, the term is usually applied to the acts of a judge at chambers, those of the court being designated as rules. See Rule.

ORDER. In mercantile law. The usual word employed in bills of exchange, promissory notes, and checks, when it is intended to make them negotiable. The ordinary expression for this purpose is, "Pay to A. or order," or, "Pay to the order of A." which are deemed to import the same thing. Story on Bills, § 56. See Negotiable words.

ORDERS. See Holy orders.

ORDEUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Barley. An English form of hordeum. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 19.

ORDINANCE. [L. Fr. ordynaunce; Lat. ordinatio, q. v.] In old English law. A statute or act of parliament. Cowell. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, (Runnington's ed. 1820,) 13. See Ordinatio. The L. Fr. ordynaunce had the more general sense of enactment, or requirement. Solonc la ordynaunce de nos estatutz; according to the ordinance of our statutes. Britt. c. 18.

Strictly, a bill or law which might stand with the old law, and did not alter any statute in force at the time, and which became complete by the royal assent on the parliament roll, without any entry on the statute roll. A bill or law which might at any time be amended by the parliament, without any statute. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, ub. sup. An ordinance was otherwise distinguished from a statute, by the circumstance that the latter required the threefold assent of king, lords and commons; while an ordinance might be ordained by one or two of these constituent bodies. See 4 Inst. 25. See Statute.

In American law. An act or regulation of congress; such as the Ordinance of 13th July, 1787, for the government of the northwestern territory.

A law or regulation of a municipal corporation.

ORDINARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To ordain; to establish; to make (a law.) Ordinavit; he (the king) ordained. This word is used in Fleta, in reciting the statute of Acton Burnel. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 2. Ordinatum; ordained. Used in the statute of Marlbridge. Id. lib. 2, c. 47, § 13.

To appoint. Ordino et constituo talem et talem executores meos; I ordain and constitute such and such a one my executors. Yearb. M. 3 Hen. VI. 6.

In practice. To order. See Ordinatum.

ORDINARIUS. Lat. [from ordo, order.] In the civil law. Ordinary; regular; according to usual course and rule. Ordinaria judicia (ordinary judgments, trials or actions) were those in which the usual and regular order of pleading and litigating was observed, that is, first in jure, before the prætor, and then in judicio, before the judex.

Ordinary; of course; inherently. Applied, both in the civil and common law, to a judge who had a jurisdiction in his own right, and not by the gift or deputation of another. Calv. Lex. · Co. Litt. 96 a. See Bract. fol. 401.

ORDINARY. [Lat. ordinarius, q. v.] In the civil law. A judge who had authority to take cognizance of causes in his own right, and not by deputation. See Ordinarius.

In English law. An ecclesiastical judge who has the regular ordinary jurisdiction, independent of another. 1 Burn's Eccl. Law, 22. Co. Litt. 344 a.

A bishop, as having ordinary jurisdiction in his own diocese. 1 Bl. Com. 383. Brande. The ordinary formerly had the administration of an intestate's chattels. Finch's Law, b. 2, c. 15, p. 173.

In old English law. A deputy of the bishop, appointed to give malefactors their neck-verses, (q. v.) and judge whether they read or not; also to perform divine services for them and assist in preparing them for death. Wharton's Lex. The clergyman who performs the latter offices for condemned criminals is still called the ordinary. Brande.

In Scotch law. A single judge of the court of session, who decides with or without a jury, as the case may be. Brande.

In American law. A judicial officer having the powers of a judge of probate, or surrogate. N. J. Rev. St. tit. 7, c. 4.

ORDINARY CARE. That care which men of ordinary prudence and judgment exercise over property of their own. 28 Vermont R. 458. Id. 464.—That degree of care which may reasonably be expected from a person in the party's situation; reasonable care. 23 Connecticut R. 443.—In all cases, what constitutes ordinary care must be determined with reference to the nature of the act done and the circumstances attending it. Whiton, C. J. 2 Wisconsin R. 216, 223.—Ordinary care is altogether a relative term; the want of it means nothing more than the failure to use those precautions which a just regard to the persons and property of others demand should be used under the circumstances of the particular case. Goldthwaite, J. 26 Alabama R. 203.

In Briggs v. Taylor, (28 Vermont R. 180,) Redfield, C. J. objected to the use of the term "ordinary" in connection with the words "care" and "diligence;" contending that it conveyed no definite idea, was liable to misconstruction, and calculated in some instances to mislead a jury. The subject was considered at much length, and numerous authorities cited. But in the later case of Brown v. Hitchcock, in the same court, (28 Vermont R. 452, 458,) the term "ordinary care" was made use of without objection.

"ORDINARY SKILL" in an art means that degree of skill which men engaged in that particular art usually employ; not that which belongs to a few men only, of extraordinary endowments and capacities. 20 Penn. St. R. 130.

ORDINATIO. Lat. [from ordinare, to regulate, to ordain.] An ordinance. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 1. The title of several ancient English statutes. Ordinatio pro statu Hiberniæ, (Ordinance for the regulation or settlement of Ireland,) passed 17 Edw. I. containing eight chapters of regulations in matters of a judicial nature. 2 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 99. Crabb's Hist. 173. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 160. Ordinatio Forestæ, (Ordinance of the Forest,) passed 33 Edw. I. containing regulations about the purlieus of forests. 2 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 104. Another statute under the same title, passed 34 Edw. I. Id. 106, 107.

ORDINATUM EST. L. Lat. In old practice. It is ordered. The initial words of rules of court when entered in Latin. 9 East, 25, note. 2 M. & S. 144, note.

Ordine placitandi servato, servatur et jus. When the order of pleading is observed, the law also is observed. Co. Litt. 303 a. Broom's Max. [143.]

ORDINE. L. Fr. A rule or order; a regulation. Kelham.

ORDINER, Ordyner. L. Fr. To ordain; to establish; to enact or decree. Britt. fol. 1.

ORDINIS BENEFICIUM. Lat. In the civil law. The benefit or privilege of order; the privilege which a surety for a debtor had, of requiring that his principal should be discussed, or thoroughly prosecuted, before the creditor could resort to him. Nov. 4, c. 1. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 21, § 883.

ORDO. Lat. In old practice. Order; regular succession. Ordo petendi; the order of demanding or counting. Bract. fol. 400. Ordo excipiendi; the order of pleading. Id. ibid. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54.

Ordo agendi; the order of suing. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 6, § 8. Ordo brevium; the order of writs. Id. § 31.

An order of a court, (ordo curiæ.) 1 Rep. in Ch. 55.

ORDO JUDICIORUM. Lat. In the canon law. The order of judgments; the rule by which the due course of hearing each cause was prescribed. 4 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 17.

ORE. A Saxon coin of uncertain value. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 3, note. See Ora.

ORE. L. Fr. Now. Le roy que ore est; the king that now is. Artic. sup. Chart. pr. D' ore; at present. Kelham. Ore est à veyer; now it is to be seen. Keilw. 2 b.

ORE TENUS. Lat. By word of mouth; orally; viva voce. Pleading was anciently carried on ore tenus, at the bar of the court.* 3 Bl. Com. 293. "There is no longer any such thing as pleading ore tenus, in courts of record." 5 Hill's (N.Y.) R. 315.

ORFGILD. Sax. [from orf, a beast, and gild, a payment.] In Saxon law. The price or value of a beast. A payment for a beast. Spelman, voc. Geldum. The payment or forfeiture of a beast. Id. in voc. A penalty for taking away cattle. Lambard Arch. 125.

ORIGINAL BILL. In equity pleading. A bill which relates to some matter not before litigated in the court by the same persons standing in the same interests. Mitford's Chanc. Pl. 33.

ORIGINAL CONVEYANCES. Those conveyances at common law, otherwise termed primary, by which a benefit or estate is created or first arises; comprising feoffments, gifts, grants, leases, exchanges and partitions. 2 Bl. Com. 309.

ORIGINAL PROCESS. In old practice. That process which is till the defendant do appear. Finch's Law, b. 4, ch. 26.

ORIGINAL WRIT, or ORIGINAL. [L. Lat. breve originale.] In English practice. A writ issuing out of chancery, and so called because it anciently gave origin and commencement to an action at common law. It was principally used in the court of Common Bench, and in form was a mandatory letter from the king in parchment, sealed with his great seal, and directed to the sheriff of the county wherein the injury complained of was committed or supposed to be, requiring him to command the wrongdoer or party accused, either to do justice to the complainant, or else to appear in court and answer the accusation against him. 3 Bl. Com. 273. This writ constituted the foundation of the suit, and of the jurisdiction of the court, being the king's warrant for the judges to proceed to the determination of the cause. Id. ibid. See Breve.

In modern practice, the use of original writs is confined to real actions exclusively. 3 Steph. Com. 565, 658.

In American practice, they have been employed to some extent, but are now in general superseded by other forms of process.

Origo rei inspici debet. The origin of a thing ought to be regarded. Co. Litt. 248 b. See Initium, Principium.

ORPHANOTROPHIUS. Græco-Lat. [from ὀρφανὸς, an orphan, and τρέφω, to nourish.] In the civil law. One who had the charge of a house for orphans. Cod. 1. 3. Nov. 7, epil.

ORRAY. L. Fr. [from oyer, to hear.] Shall hear. Orrount, (plur.) Britt. c. 41.

ORRETZ. L. Fr. Golden; of gold. Yearb. T. 1 Edw. II. 17.

OUT OF COURT. In practice. Not in a position to prosecute; deprived of the power of prosecuting an action. A plaintiff in an action at law is said to be out of court, when he neglects to declare within a certain time (one year, in English practice,) after service of process. 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 445. A defendant who enters judgment of non pros against a plaintiff is said to put him out of court.

OUT OF THE REALM. [L. Fr. hors de royalme; L. Lat. extra regnum.] Out of the power of the king of England, as of his crown of England. Litt. sect. 439. Co. Litt. 260 a. For if a man be upon the sea of England, he is within the kingdom or realm of England, and within the ligeance of the king of England, as of his crown of England. Id. ibid.

OUT OF THE STATE. Held to mean "beyond sea," (q. v.)

OUT OF TIME. A mercantile phrase applied to a ship or vessel that has been so long at sea, as to justify the belief of her total loss. 2 Duer on Ins. 469, note.

In another sense, a vessel is said to be out of time, when, computed from her known day of sailing, the time that has elapsed exceeds the average duration of similar voyages at the same season of the year. Id. 469. The phrase is identical with "missing ship." Id. ibid.

OUTFANGTHEFE, Utfangthefe, Utfangenthefe. Sax. [from ut, out, fang, taken, and thef, thief.] In Saxon and old English law. A thief from without, or from abroad, (latro extraneus,) taken within a lord's fee, or liberty. Bract. fol. 154 b.

The privilege of trying such a thief. Id. See Utfangthefe.

OUTHOUSE. A small house or building belonging to a messuage or dwelling-house, and usually standing separate from or without it, and at a small distance from it; such as a barn, a stable, a dairy-house, and the like.* This word has been made the subject of considerable construction in the law of burglary. See 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 75, § 89. 1 Russell on Crimes, 798—799. Whart. Am. Crim. Law, §§ 1561—1564.

OUTLAND. [Sax. utland, from ut, out, and land.] In Saxon law. Land lying without or beyond the demesne lands of a manor, and occupied by the lord's tenants; tenemental land; the tenancy. Spelman, voc. Inland.

OUTLAW. [from Sax. utlagh, utlaughe; L. Lat. utlagatus, exlex.] In English law. One who is put out of the law, (extra legem positus,) that is, deprived of its benefit. Cowell. Anciently called frendlesman (friendless man, or outcast) and wulfesheofod, (wolf's head, caput lupinum,) being liable to be killed like a wild beast. See Caput lupinum. In modern law, the word has a much less intense meaning; importing, however, the forfeiture of property and loss of civil rights. See Outlawry.

To OUTLAW. [L. Lat. utlagare, exlegare.] In practice. To put out of the law, or out of the protection of the law. See Utlagare.

OUTLAWRY, Outlary. [L. Lat. utlagaria; L. Fr. utlagarie.] In practice. The being put out of the law; the state of being put out of the law.

The process of putting a person out of the protection of the law, both in regard to his property, and to some extent as to his person. A proceeding adopted against a defendant who has absconded and cannot be found; its ultimate object in civil cases being to obtain effectual access to his property, which becomes forfeited and may be seized and sold. 3 Steph. Com. 568. In England, it is effected by issuing writs of exigent and proclamation, under which the defendant is exacted, or called and proclaimed at five successive county courts, when if he fail to appear he is adjudged an outlaw, and further process is then issued to seize his property. Id. 569. In criminal law, outlawry is in the nature of a punishment, and its effect in all cases is to disable the party outlawed from enforcing any of his legal rights in a court of justice. 4 Steph. Com. 387, 388. Cole on Crim. Inform. 78, 98. Outlawry may be reversed by plea or writ of error according to the case; and recently an outlawry was reversed in the Queen's Bench, after the lapse of one hundred and sixteen years. 7 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 216.

Outlawry has been adopted as a proceeding in American practice, though the cases in which it is resorted to, are of comparatively rare occurrence.

OUTPARTERS. A name given in old English statutes to certain depredators from Redesdale, on the northern border of England, who made incursions into Scotland, and brought back to their accomplices at home (called Intakers) any booty they had taken.* Spelman, voc. Intakers. Stat. 9 Hen. V. c. 8.

OUTRAGE. L. Fr. [from outre, over?] In old English law. "Clerk of Cr. 'Crier, make an O yes.' Cr. O yes! You good men that are impannelled," &c. 7 How. St. Trials, 2, 3, 161.

In American courts, the English "Hear ye," is commonly employed.

P.

PACARE. L. Lat. In old records. To pay. 1 Mon. Angl. 384. Pacatio; payment. Matt. Paris. A. D. 1248. Cowell.

PACT. [Lat. pactum.] An agreement. This word is rarely used alone in English, except as the translation of the Lat. pactum, (q. v.) A pact is, in strictness, not a contract.

PACTIO. Lat. [from pangere, to strike.] In the civil law. A bargaining or agreeing, of which pactum, (the agreement itself,) was the result. Calv. Lex. It is used, however, as the synonyme of pactum.

PACTO. Span. [from Lat. pactum, q. v.] In Spanish law. A promise. White's New Recop. b. 1, tit. 6, c. 1, § 1.

PACTUM. Lat. [from pangere, to strike.] In the civil law. A pact. An agreement or convention without specific name, and without consideration, which, however, might, in its nature, produce a civil obligation, (conventio destitutâ nomine et causâ, quæ obligationem civilem suâ naturâ producere possit.) Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 14, § 775. A pact was distinguished from a contract, (contractus,) which had a specific name or present consideration, and carried with it a civil obligation, both being species of conventio, (convention,) which was the general term. Id. §§ 773—776. Do ut des (I give that you may give) was a contract. Dabo ut des (I will give that you may give) was a pact. Calv. Lex. An action lay upon a contract, but not on a pact. Id.

Pacta conventa, quæ neque contra leges, neque dolo malo inita sunt, omni modo observanda sunt. Compacts which are not against law, nor entered into with a fraudulent design, are in all respects to be observed. Cod. 2. 3. 39.

Pacta privata non derogant juri communi. Private agreements cannot derogate from common right (or law.) 7 Co. 23 b, Butt's case. Parties cannot charge a thing with rent which is not chargeable by the law. Id. ibid. Otherwise expressed, Pactis privatorum juri publico non derogatur. 4 Cl. & Fin. 241. Broom's Max. [544.]

Pacta quæ contra leges constitutionesque, vel contra bonos mores fiunt, nullam vim habere, indubitati juris est. That contracts which are made against law or against good morals, have no force, is a principle of undoubted law. Cod. 2. 3. 6.

Pacta quæ turpem causam continent non sunt observanda. Agreements founded upon an immoral consideration are not to be observed. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 4.

PAGA. Span. In Spanish law. Payment. Las Partidas, part 5, tit. 14, l. 1. Pagamento; satisfaction.

PAIARE. L. Lat. In old statutes. To pay. Paiavit; (he) paid. St. Westm. 2, c. 41.

PAIN, Peyne. [Lat. pœna.] A penalty. "To incur a pain;" "to pay a pain." 1 Leon. 203. "Under pain," "pains and penalties," are expressions still used.

PAINE (or PEINE) FORT ET DURE. L. Fr. [L. Lat. pœna fortis et dura.] In old English law. Literally, strong and hard or severe punishment. A dreadful punishment inflicted upon those who, being arraigned of felony, stood obstinately mute and refused to plead, or put themselves upon the country. 4 Bl. Com. 324, 325. It is called in Britton, penance, (penaunce, q. v.) and in the statute of Westminster 1, (c. 12,) prison fort et dure, which Blackstone (ub. sup.) considers as the proper and original expression. See Barringt. Obs. Stat. 82—87.

This punishment, which was vulgarly called pressing to death, is thus minutely described by Staundford, as quoted in Cowell: "He shall be sent back to the prison whence he came, and laid in some low dark house, where he shall lie naked on the earth, without any litter, rushes or other clothing. And he shall lie upon his back, with his head covered and his feet, and one arm shall be drawn to one quarter of the house with a cord, and the other arm to another quarter, and in the same manner let it be done with his legs; and let there be laid upon his body iron and stone, as much as he may bear, or more; and the next day following he shall have three morsels of barley bread without drink, and the second day he shall have drink three times, as much at each time as he can drink, of the water next unto the prison, except it be running water, without any bread: And this shall be his diet till he die." Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 2, c. 60. See a case in which it was ordered, Keilw. 70.

PAIS, Pays. L. Fr. [L. Lat. patria.] In old English law. Country; the country; a jury, as coming from the country or neighborhood. 3 Bl. Com. 359. Trial per pais; trial by the country, that is, by jury. Id. 349. See Pays. De faire vener pais à certein jour; to cause a jury to come at a certain day. Yearb. M. 5 Edw. III. 131. See M. 8 Edw. III. 36.

The word is still constantly used in the books, in the phrase in pais, (q. v.)

Issue (to the country.) Et sur ceo pais se joint; and upon this issue was joined. Yearb. M. 8 Edw. III. 5.

PAIX. L. Fr. In old practice. Peace; the peace or concord in a fine of lands. See Peace.

PALACE COURT. In English law. A court of legal jurisdiction, held in the borough of Southwark. See Marshalsea.

PALAM. Lat. In the civil law. Openly; in the presence of many, (coram pluribus.) Dig. 50. 16. 33.

PALATIUM. Lat. A palace. The emperor's house in Rome was so called from the Mons Palatinus on which it was built. Adam's Rom. Ant. 613.

PALATIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. A paling; a fence. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 18, § 1.

PALEA. Lat. Chaff. A canon said to be so called by Gratian. 2 How. St. Trials, 1167, 1172. But Sir Henry Spelman argued it might be a Latinized form of the Gr. παλαια, old or ancient. Id. 1172, 1173.

PALEFRETUM. L. Lat. In old English law. A palfrey. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 19.

PALINGMAN. In old English law. A merchant denizen; one born within the English pale. Blount.

PALICEA, Pallicia. L. Lat. In old records. A paling or paled fence. Cowell. Blount.

PALLACIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Palace; a palace. Mem. in Scacc. H. 22 Edw. I.

PALMATA. L. Lat. In old records. A handful. Blount.

PANDECTS. [Lat. Pandectæ; Gr. Πανδεκται, from πᾶν, all, and δέχομαι, to receive.] A compilation of Roman law in fifty books, published A. D. 533, consisting of selections from the writings of the old jurists, made by Tribonian and sixteen associates, under the direction of Justinian, and constituting one of the four principal divisions of the Corpus Juris Civilis. It is otherwise called the Digests, (Lat. Digesta, q. v.) and was intended to form a general repertory for the jus civile, as the Code furnished for the constitutiones. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law. 51—54, §§ 62—64. 1 Kent's Com. 539—541. See Dig. proœm. De Conf. Dig. § 1. Cod. 1. 17. 1. 12.

The Pandects are now usually cited by English and American jurists, by numbers, thus: Dig. 23. 3. 5. 6, meaning, book 23, title 3, law or fragment 5, section 6; otherwise, D. 23. 3. fr. 5. § 6; or fr. 5. § 6. D. 23. 3. The former mode of citing was by titles and initial words, thus: D. de jure dotium, L. profectitia, § si pater; or vice versa, L. profectitia, § si pater, D. de jure dotium. From this afterwards originated the following: L. profectitia 5, § si pater 6, D. de jure dotium; and lastly, L. 5. § 6. D. de jure dotium, which is the form now commonly used by the continental jurists of Europe. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 54, 55, § 65. And see Taylor's Civ. Law, 24, 25.

Pandoxatrix; an ale-wife; a woman that both brewed and sold ale and beer. Id.

PANEL, Panell, Pannel. [L. Lat. panella, panellum.] In practice. A list of the names of jurors returned by the sheriff for the trial of a cause, which, in England, is written on an oblong piece of parchment annexed to the jury process. 3 Bl. Com. 353.

According to Lord Coke, panel is an English word, and signifies a little part; for a pane is a part, and a panel is a little part. Co. Litt. 158 b. And see Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 25, note. But Spelman considers it to mean a sheet or page, (schedula vel pagina,) or properly a little page, (pagella) and refers to two old Anglo-Latin Dictionaries which give this meaning.

PANEL, Pannel. In Scotch law. A prisoner who is arraigned for trial at the bar of a criminal court. 2 Forbes' Inst. 336.

PANIS. Lat. In old English law. Bread; loaf; a loaf. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 9.

PANNAGE, Pawnage. [L. Lat. pannagium.] In old English law. Food that swine fed on in the woods, as mast of beech, acorns, &c. which some called pawns. Cowell. Barringt. Stat. 36, note [c.]

A duty for feeding in woods. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 31.

PANNUS. L. Lat. In old English law. Cloth. Una latitudo pannorum tinctorum; one width of dyed cloths. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. c. 25. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 10.

PAPER BOOKS. In English practice. Copies of the proceedings on an issue in law or demurrer, of cases, and of the proceedings on error, prepared for the use of the judges, and delivered to them previous to bringing the cause to argument. 3 Bl. Com. 317. Arch. New Pr. 353. 5 Man. & Gr. 98.

The term is used in Pennsylvania practice. Reg. Gen. Dec. 17, 1846. 4 Penn. St. (Barr's) R. 263.

PAPER. In English practice. The list of causes or cases intended for argument, called "the paper of causes." 1 Tidd's Pr. 504.

PAPER DAYS. In English practice. Days for going through the paper of causes entered for argument. 1 Tidd's Pr. 504.

ΠΑΠΠΟΣ, πάππος. Gr. In the civil law. Grandfather. Nov. 18, c. 3.

PAR. Lat. Equal; like. Par in parem imperium non habet. An equal has no command over his equal. Jenk. Cent. 174, case 48. One justice of peace cannot commit another justice of peace for breach of the peace. Id. ibid.

PAR OF EXCHANGE. In mercantile law. The precise equality or equivalency of any given sum or quantity of money in the coin of one country, and the like sum or quantity of money in the coin of any other foreign country into which it is to be exchanged, supposing the money of each country to be of the precise weight and purity fixed by the mint standard of the respective countries. Story on Bills, § 30, and note.

PAR. L. Lat. In old English law. A pair. Par calcarium deauratorum; a pair of gilt spurs. Reg. Orig. 2.

PAR. L. Fr. By. Par poy et par poy; by little and little. Britt. c. 51.

PAR DELICTUM. Lat. Equal guilt. "This is not a case of par delictum; it is oppression on one side and submission on the other; it never can be predicated as par delictum when one holds the rod and the other bows to it." Lord Ellenborough, 6 M. & S. 165. See Cum par delictum, &c. In pari delicto, &c.

PARAGE. L. Fr. [L. Lat. paragium, from par, equal.] In old English law. Equality of condition, blood or dignity. See Disparage.

Equality of lands in the partition of an inheritance. Spelman. Tenure by parage was where several persons, descended from the same ancestor, held equal portions of an inheritance. Blackst. L. Tr. 30.

In feudal law. Equality of condition between persons holding unequal portions of a fee, as between younger sons holding the smaller part and the elder son holding the largest. Calv. Lex. And see Guyot, Inst. Feod. ch. 18.

PARAMOUNT. [from Fr. par, by, and amount, above, or amounter, to ascend.] In English law. Above; over; over all. Paramount especifie; above specified. Kelham.

A term applied to the supreme lord of a fee, between whom and the tenant, or tenant paravail, there was an intermediate or mesne lord. F. N. B. 135 M. 3 Bl. Com. 234. Litt. sect. 144. Cowell.

Upwards. The correlative of paravail, downwards. The meaning of both terms is well illustrated in the following passage: "An inheritance in land descends downwards in the direct line, paravail (that is, below) the purchaser, and if there is none in that line, then in the collateral or transversal line paravail, and if there is none such paravail, then it shall go to the heirs in the collateral or transversal line ascending paramount, (that is, upwards.") Plowd. 449.

PARAPHERNA. Græco-Lat. [Gr. παραφέρνη, from παρά, besides, and φερνη, dowry.] In the Roman law. Goods which a woman brought to her husband besides her dos, or portion. Dig. 23. 3. 9. 3. See Calv. Lex.

In Fleta, this word is written paraferna, and called a species of dower. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 6.

In English law. Those goods which a woman is allowed to have, after the death of her husband, besides her dower, consisting of her apparel and ornaments, suitable to her rank and degree. 2 Bl. Com. 436. See 1 Williams on Exec. 643—649.

PARATITLA. Græco-Lat. [Gr. παράτιτλα.] In the civil law. Notes or abstracts prefixed to titles of law, giving a summary of their contents. Cod. 1. 17. 1. 12.

PARAVAIL, Peravaile. [L. Fr. paraval, from par, and avaler, to descend, to be under.] In English law. Below; at the bottom. Paraval les pountz; below the bridges. Kelham. Tenant paravail was the lowest tenant of land, holding of a mesne lord who himself held of a lord paramount. Cowell. 2 Bl. Com. 60.

Downwards. Plowd. 449.

The etymology of the word is clearly shown in the use of the Fr. paraval, and by the correlative paramount, (q. v.) but Lord Coke prefers deriving it from avayl or avail, in the sense of profit. 2 Bl. Com. 60.

PARAVEREDUS, Parafredus. L. Lat. In old European law. A post-horse, employed in the public service. L. Boior. tit. 1, c. 14, § 4. Marculph. lib. 1, form. 11. The paravaredi were horses furnished for the king's use by the freemen under the monarchy of the Franks. Esprit des Lois, liv. 30, c. 13.

PARCEL. [L. Lat. particula.] In conveyancing. A word used as synonymous with piece: "All that certain lot, piece or parcel of land." It seems obviously formed from parcella, (q. v.) which signified a small piece.

In old pleadings. A parcel or bundle. 2 Stra. 809.

PARCENER. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Lat. particeps, parcennarius.] A co-heir of lands; otherwise termed coparcener, (q. v.) One who holds an estate with others in coparcenary, (q. v.) 2 Bl. Com. 187.

Parceners are so called, according to Littleton, because they may be constrained to make partition. Litt. sect. 241. Cowell makes the word to be quasi parcellers. It is used by Britton (c. 71,) in its present form.

PARCUS. L. Lat. [from O. Fr. parc, an enclosed place.] In old English law. A pound; a place for confining cattle found doing damage. Spelman. The use of the word, in this sense, is shown by Spelman to have been introduced into England by the Saxons, from the continent of Europe; it distinctly occurring in the laws of the Ripuarians, as in the following passage: Si quis peculium alienum, in messe adprehensum, ad parcum minare non permiserit, 15 sol. culpabilis judicetur; if any one shall not permit a strange beast found in one's harvest (or grain field) to be driven to the pound, he shall be condemned to forfeit fifteen solidi. L. Ripuar. tit. 82, § 2.

A park; an enclosed place for the preservation of deer. Spelman. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 24, § 11. See Park.

PARDONARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To pardon. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, §§ 1, 2. Pardonavit; (he) pardoned. Id. ibid.

PARDONATIO. L. Lat. [from pardonare, q. v.] In old English law. Pardon; a pardon. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, § 1.

PARENS. Lat. and L. Lat. [Fr. parent.] A parent; a father or mother. This was the original and proper sense of the word.

In the civil law. Any relative in the direct ascending line, whether male or female; a progenitor. Appellatione parentis non tantum pater, sed etiam avus et proavus, et deinceps omnes superiores continentur; sed et mater et avia et proavia; under the name of parent are included not only a father, but also a grandfather and greatgrandfather; and also a mother, grandmother and greatgrandmother. Dig. 50. 17. 51. Id. 2. 4. 4. 2, 3.

In feudal and old English law. A relative by blood; a cousin, (cognatus, consanguineus.) Feud. Lib. 1, c. 24. Spelman. Parens est nomen generale ad omne genus cognationis; parent is a general name for every kind of relationship. Co. Litt. 80 b. Litt. sect. 108. Mag. Cart. Joh. c. 50. In the statute of Marlbridge (c. 17,) it is translated a friend.

PARENS PATRIÆ. Lat. Parent of the country. In England, the king, as parens patriæ, has the general superintendence of all charities. 3 Bl. Com. 427.

In the United States, the state, as a sovereign, is the parens patriæ. 9 Howard's R. 55. 17 Id. 384, 393. See 4 Kent's Com. 508, note. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 1189.

PARENT. L. Fr. A kinsman or relative. Britt. c. 31. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 45.

PARES. L. Lat. In old English law. Equals; peers; equals in rank or dignity. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. c. 14. Id. Johan. c. 21. The freeholders of a neighborhood. 2 Bl. Com. 315. See Coram paribus.

PARES CURIÆ, (or CURTIS.) L. Lat. In feudal and old English law. Peers of the court. A lord's tenants who sat in his court to try their fellow tenants. 2 Bl. Com. 54. Feud. Lib. 1, titt. 2, 3, 4. Lib. 2, titt. 2, 16—19, et passim. See Peers.

The barons who sat in the king's courts for the trial of their peers. 2 Bl. Com. 54. Spelman.

PARFOURNY, Parfurni. L. Fr. Perfected; completed. A term applied to a judgment. Britt. cc. 2, 106, 110.

PARIARE. L. Lat. [from par, equal.] In old Scotch law. To make equal. Pariare rationes; to square accounts. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Scaccarium.

Paribus sententiis reus absolvitur. Where the opinions are equal, [where the court is equally divided] the defendant is acquitted. 4 Inst. 64. Called by Lord Coke, "an old rule."

PARI PASSU. Lat. By an equal progress; equably; rateably; without preference. Coote on Mortgages, 56.

PARICLA, Paricula. L. Lat. [from par, alike.] In old European law. A charter or deed (charta paricula) which was like another in all respects; a duplicate. Marculph. lib. 1, form. 38. These pariculæ are supposed by Spelman to have been the origin of the English indentures.

PARIENTES. Span. [from Lat. parens, q. v.] In Spanish law. Relations. White's New Recop. b. 1, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2.

PARIES. Lat. In the civil law. A wall. Paries est, sive murus, sive maceria est. Dig. 50. 16. 157.

PARIES COMMUNIS. Lat. In the civil law. A common wall; a party wall. Dig. 29. 2. 39.

PARISH. [L. Lat. parochia; L. Fr. parocke, paroisse, from Gr. παροικία, a neighborhood.] In English law. A circuit of ground, committed to the charge of one parson or vicar, or other minister having cure of souls therein. 1 Bl. Com. 111.—The precinct of a parish church, and the particular charge of a secular priest. Cowell.—An ecclesiastical division of a town or district, subject to the ministry of one pastor. Brande.

In American law, parishes are recognized. As to their nature, and how distinguished from churches, see Baker v. Fales, 16 Mass. R. 488. Parker, C. J. Id. 492, 499, et seq. In some of the states, they constitute civil divisions corresponding to counties.

PARIUM JUDICIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Judgment of the peers; trial by jury. Magna Charta, c. 30.

Spelman has traced this phrase to the laws of the Lombards, and the following passage extracted by him has a striking similarity to the celebrated provision of Magna Charta: Præcipimus et firmiter statuimus, ut nullus miles, &c. sine certa et convicta culpa, suum beneficium perdat, nisi secundum consuetudinem antecessorum nostrorum et judicium parium suorum; we command and firmly ordain that no military tenant, &c. without an offence distinctly charged and proved, shall lose his benefice (or fee) unless according to the custom of our ancestors, and the judgment of his peers. LL. Longob. lib. 3, tit. 8, l. 4.

PARK. [Lat. parcus, from O. Fr. parc, an enclosure.] In English law. A tract of enclosed ground privileged for keeping wild beasts of the chase, particularly deer; (damarum vivarium.) Spelman.—An enclosed chase, extending only over a man's own grounds. 2 Bl. Com. 38. See Chase.

PARK-BOTE. In old English law. The being quit of enclosing a park or any part thereof. 4 Inst. 308.

PARLE HILL, or PARLINGE HILL. In old records. A hill where courts were anciently held. Spelman speaks of the term as still retained in Ireland. Spelman, voc. Parlamentum. See Moot hill.

PARLER. L. Fr. To speak. Parlance; speech. L. Fr. Dict. Parlour; a speaker. Kelham.

PARLIAMENT. [L. Lat. parliamentum, parlamentum, parlementum; from Fr. parler, to speak.] The supreme legislative assembly of Great Britain and Ireland, consisting of the King or Queen, and the three estates of the realm, viz. the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons. 1 Bl. Com. 153. See Parliamentum.

The term parliament is first met with in 42 Hen. III. but was not used in its modern sense until the reign of Edward I. Report of Lords' Comm. 1823, quoted 1 Spence's Chancery, 328, note. See 1 Chitt. Bl. Com. 147, and note. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 77.

PARLIAMENTUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Parliament. The supreme council or legislative assembly of the realm of England; the highest court of the realm. Co. Litt. 109 b. 4 Inst. 2. Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 18. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 1. Id. lib. 2, c. 2, § 1.

PARLIAMENTUM INDOCTUM. L. Lat. Unlearned or lack-learning parliament. A name given to a parliament held at Coventry in the sixth year of Henry IV. under an ordinance requiring that no lawyer should be chosen knight, citizen or burgess; "by reason whereof," says Sir Edward Coke, "this parliament was fruitless, and never a good law made thereat." 4 Inst. 48. 1 Bl. Com. 177.

PARMI, Parmy, Parme. L. Fr. By. Parmy sa bouche; by his mouth. Britt. c. 22. Sometimes written as two words, per my, (q. v.)

Through; throughout. Parmi le realm; throughout the realm. Artic. sup. Chart. c. 1. Parmi nostre roiaume. Conf. Cartar. 25 Edw. I.

PARNER. L. Fr. To take. De ceux queux parnent outragious tolnet'; of those who take excessive or exorbitant toll. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 31.

PAROCH. O. Sc. [from Lat. parochia, q. v.] In Scotch law. Parish; a parish. 1 Bell's Ap. Cas. 595.

PAROCHE, Parocke. L. Fr. [from Lat. parochia, q. v.] A parish. Car en une ville purrount estre plusurs parockes, et en une paroche plusurs maners; for in one vill (or town) there may be several parishes, and in one parish several manors. Britt. c. 50.

PAROCHIA. L. Lat. [from Gr. παροικια, a neighborhood.] In old English law. A parish. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 15, § 9. Id. lib. 6, c. 51, § 4. Parochia est locus in quo degit populus alicujus ecclesiæ; a parish is the place in which the people of [attending] any church reside. 5 Co. 67 a, Jeffrey's case. Formerly applied to a diocese or episcopal district. Cowell, voc. Parochianus. The word occurs in this sense, in a charter granted by Ceolwulf, king of the Mercians, A. D. 872. Spelman.

A plaint, plea or pleading. Britt. c. 27, 120. The pleadings in a cause. 3 Bl. Com. 293. A suit. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 25.

PAROL. Oral; that which is given, or done by word of mouth, as parol evidence, (q. v.)

Not expressed by deed or specialty, as a parol contract, (q. v.)

PAROL CONTRACT. Literally, a verbal contract; but the term is not confined to this meaning. A written contract not under seal; a simple contract. 7 Term R. 350, note. Chitty on Contracts, 4, (Perkins' ed. 1848.)

Any contract not of record, nor under seal, whether it be written or verbal. Story on Contracts, § 10.

PAROL EVIDENCE. Oral or verbal evidence; that which is given by word of mouth; the ordinary kind of evidence, given by witnesses in court. 3 Bl. Com. 369.

PAROL DEMURRER. In practice. A staying of the pleadings; a suspension of the proceedings in an action, during the non-age of an infant. 3 Bl. Com. 300. Abolished by statute 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Will. IV. c. 47, § 10. See Demur.

PAROL PROMISE. A simple contract; a verbal promise. 2 Steph. Com. 109. See Parol contract.

PAROLS DE LEY. L. Fr. Words of law; technical words. Yearb. P. 8 Edw. III. 24.

Parols font plea. Words make the plea. 5 Mod. 458. Sir H. Spelman, arg. 2 How. St. Trials, 1178. Est un maxime en nostre ley, parols font ple. Yelverton, arg. Yearb. M. 19 Hen. VI. 48.

PARRICIDIUM, Paricidium. Lat. [from parens, parent, and cædere, to kill.] In the civil law. Parricide; the murder of a parent. Dig. 48. 9. 9.

PARS. Lat. A part. Nemo aliquam partem recte intelligere possit, antequam totum iterum atque iterum perlegerit; no one can rightly understand any part, until he has read the whole through again and again. 3 Co. 59 b. Said of the construction of a statute.

Parte quacunque integrante sublata, tollitur totum. Any integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away. 3 Co. 41 a, Ratcliff's case. A maxim quoted from Aristotle, (lib. Topicorum,) with the qualification that pars integrans be understood to mean a necessary part, and applied to the incapacity of the half blood to inherit, "because he wants one of the bloods which should make him heritable." Id. ibid.

PARS ENITIA. L. Lat. [L. Fr. l'eigne part.] In old English law. The eldest's part or share; the privilege or portion of the eldest daughter in the partition of lands by lot. See Æsnetia.

PARS RATIONABILIS. L. Lat. In old English law. Reasonable part or portion; that share of a man's goods which the law gave to his wife and children. 2 Bl. Com. 492. Salvis uxori ipsius et pueris suis, rationabilibus partibus suis; saving to his wife and children their reasonable parts. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 18. Id. Joh. c. 26.

PARS. Lat. A party (to a suit.) Pars actrix; a party plaintiff. Reg. Orig. 9 a. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 63, § 11. Clerke's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 4. Singularly translated in Dyer, (179 a,) part actress. Pars agens. 3 St. Trials, 863.

Pars rea; a party defendant. Stat. Marlbr. c. 13.

PARS GRAVATA. L. Lat. In old practice. A party aggrieved; the party aggrieved. Hardr. 50. 3 Leon. 237.

PARSON. [L. Lat. persona, parsona; L. Fr. persone.] A parish priest; one that has full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. Sometimes called the rector (governor) of the church, "but the appellation of parson," observes Sir William Blackstone, "however it may be depreciated by familiar, clownish and indiscriminate use, is the most legal, most beneficial, and most honorable title that a parish priest can enjoy, because such a one, Sir Edward Coke observes, and he only, is said vicem seu personam ecclesiæ gerere," [to represent and bear the person of the church.] 1 Bl. Com. 384.

A parson is said to be so called, (persona,) because by his person the church, which is an invisible body, is represented; and he is in himself a body corporate, in order to protect and defend the rights of the church which he personates, by a perpetual succession. Co. Litt. 300. 1 Bl. Com. ub. sup. Dr. Wooddesson observes of this derivation, that it seems too refined for common adoption and ordinary use, adding that "Le Paroissien," suggested by Dr. Pegge, in his Anecdotes of the English language, seems at least as probable a source, if authorities could be vouched to support it. 1 Wooddes. Lect. 186, note.

PARSONA. L. Lat. In old English law. Parson; a parson. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 12.

PART AND PERTINENT. In Scotch conveyancing. Formal words corresponding with the English appurtenances. Bell's Dict.

PARTES FINIS NIHIL HABUERUNT. L. Lat. In old pleading. The parties to the fine had nothing, that is, had no estate which could be conveyed by it. 2 Bl. Com. 357. A plea to a fine which had been levied by a stranger. Id. ibid. 1 P. Wms. 520.

PARTIAL LOSS. In the law of insurance. A degree of damage not amounting to a total loss.* More commonly called particular average, (q. v.) Stevens & Benecke on Average, 341.

The total loss of a part. Id. 342.

PARTIBLE. [L. Lat. partibilis.] In old English law. Divisible; divisible among several; divisible among all the sons. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, c. 7. Lands in Normandy were of two kinds, viz. partible and non-partible. Id. c. 11.

PARTICEPS. Lat. [plur. participes; from pars, a part, and capere, to take.] Literally, a part-taker; a partaker or sharer; one jointly interested with another; an associate or accomplice. See Particeps criminis.

In old English law. A part-owner; a parcener. Sunt plures participes quasi unum corpus, in eo quod unum jus habent, et oportet quod corpus sit integrum, et quod in nulla parte sit defectus; several parceners are, as it were, one body, in this, that they have one right, and it is necessary that the body be entire, and that there be a defect in no part. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 48, § 2. Co. Litt. 164 a. Dicuntur participes quasi partis capaces, sive partem capientes, quia res inter eas est communis, ratione plurium personarum; they are called participes [parceners] as it were partis capaces, [capable of taking part,] or partem capientes, [taking a part,] because the thing is common between them, in consideration of their being several persons. Co. Litt. 164 b. Bract. fol. 66 b, 76 b. Fleta, ub. sup.

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS. Lat. A sharer, partner, participator or accomplice in [of] crime. Applied to parties both to contracts and offences. 2 Kent's Com. 467. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 302. 1 Russell on Crimes, 26. One who is in pari delicto with another. Called also particeps in crimine. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 13.

PARTICULAR AVERAGE. In the law of insurance. Every kind of expense or damage short of a total loss, which regards a particular concern, and which is to be borne by the proprietors of that concern alone. Stevens & Benecke on Average, (by Phillips,) 341.—A loss borne wholly by the party upon whose property it takes place; so called in distinction from a general average, for which different parties contribute. 2 Phillips on Ins. 191.

Lord Tenterden has objected to this term as "a very incorrect expression, used to denote every kind of partial loss or damage happening either to ship or cargo from any cause whatever." Abbott on Ship. 473. But Mr. Benecke claims that it should be retained, not only as being universally adopted and understood, but also because it is more expressive than the term partial loss, which may also convey the idea of the total loss of a part, in which sense it is sometimes used. Stevens & Benecke on Average, 342.

PARTICULAR ESTATE. An estate precedent to an estate in remainder. As an estate for years to A. remainder to B. for life; or, an estate to A. for life, remainder to B. in tail. This precedent estate is called the particular estate, as being only a small part or particula of the inheritance, the residue or remainder of which is granted over to another. 2 Bl. Com. 165. 1 Steph. Com. 290. 4 Kent's Com. 233.

PARTICULAR LIEN. A specific lien on the particular goods in a tradesman's hands, for the value of work done upon them. Cross on Lien, 24.—A right to retain a certain chattel from the owner, until a certain claim upon it [growing out of some labor bestowed upon such chattel, or act done in relation to it,] be satisfied. 2 Steph. Com. 132.

PARTICULAR TENANT. The tenant of a particular estate. 2 Bl. Com. 274. See Particular estate.

PARTICULARS. In practice. A written statement, (usually termed a bill of particulars,) of the items of a plaintiff's demand, or defendant's set-off, in an action at law. See Bill of particulars.

PARTIDA. Span. Part; a part. See Las Partidas.

PARTIES. [L. Lat. partes, parts.] The persons concerned in any affair, business, contract or proceeding, constituting, in most cases, two sides or parts of the transaction or proceeding. As in contracts, vendor and vendee, bailor and bailee; in bonds, obligor and obligee; in conveyances, grantor and grantee, mortgagor and mortgagee, lessor and lessee; which in the instrument are specifically arranged in parts, being usually designated as "of the first" and "second part," respectively.

In actions, the parties are, by the very nature of the proceedings, arrayed on opposite sides, (partes) it being also an invariable rule that there must be two parties, and cannot, in form, be more. In the Roman civil law, the parties were designated as actor and reus. In the common law, they are called plaintiff and defendant; in real actions, demandant and tenant; in equity, complainant or plaintiff and defendant; in Scotch law, pursuer and defender; in admiralty practice, libellant and respondent; in appeals, appellant and respondent, sometimes plaintiff in error and defendant in error; in criminal proceedings, prosecutor and prisoner.

PARTITIO. Lat. [from partire, to divide or sever.] In the civil law. Partition; division. This word did not always signify dimidium, a dividing into halves. Dig. 50. 16. 164. 1.

PARTITION. [Lat. partitio, from partire, to divide or sever.] A dividing or severing into parts; the dividing of an estate in which several are jointly interested; the division of an estate in lands held by several, in joint-tenancy, tenancy in common or coparcenary, into separate parts, shares or allotments, according to the respective interests of the parties.

At common law, the established mode of partition was by writ, but this in modern times has fallen into disuse, and in England has recently been abolished. 1 Steph. Com. 317. In equity, partition may be effected by bill filed for that purpose, which is the form of proceeding now generally adopted. Id. ibid. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 646.

In the United States, various modes of making partition have been established by statute. 4 Kent's Com. 364, 365, notes.

PARTITION. In conveyancing. A species of primary or original conveyance between two or more joint-tenants, coparceners or tenants in common, by which they divide the lands so held among them in severalty, each taking a distinct part. 2 Bl. Com. 323, 324.

PARTNER. [Lat. socius.] A member of a partnership; an associate in business under the contract of partnership. See Partnership. Partners were called, in old law, coparceners and parting fellows. West's Symbol. part 1, lib. 2, sect. 510.

PARTNERSHIP, or COPARTNERSHIP. [Lat. societas, societas negotiatoria; Fr. societie; Span. sociedad.] A contract of two or more competent persons, to place their money, effects, labor and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, and to divide the profit and bear the loss in certain proportions. 3 Kent's Com. 23.—A voluntary contract between two or more competent persons, to place their money, effects, labor and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, with the understanding that there shall be a communion of the profits thereof between them. Story on Partn. § 2. See other definitions by Puffendorf, Pothier and Domat, cited ibid. United States Digest, Partnership. Called, in old law, society or joint-occupying. West's Symbol. part 1, lib. 2, sect. 509.

The connection founded on such contract, or relation growing out of it, which is also sometimes implied by law, even against the intention of the parties.

PART OWNER. An owner of a part; one who has an interest in a chattel in common with another, or with others.* The term is chiefly applied to the owners of moveable or personal property, and particularly of ships and vessels. Story on Partn. 412—417.

PARTUS. Lat. Birth; offspring. Partus ex legitimo thoro non certius noscit matrem quam genitorem suum; the offspring of a lawful bed knows not his mother more certainly than his father. Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 42.

Partus sequitur ventrem. The offspring follows the mother; the brood of an animal belongs to the owner of the dam; the offspring of a slave belongs to the owner of the mother, or follows the condition of the mother. A maxim of the civil law, which has been adopted in the law of England in regard to animals, though never allowed in the case of human beings. 2 Bl. Com. 390, 94. Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 42. In the United States, the rule of the civil law has been adopted wherever slavery exists. 1 Hempstead's R. 483.

PARTY. [L. Fr. partie; L. Lat. pars.] A person concerned, or having or taking part in any affair, matter, transaction or proceeding, considered individually.

A side or part, composed of one or more individuals. See 5 Co. 103 a, Hungate's case.

PARTY WALL. [Lat. paries communis.] A common wall; a wall common to two adjoining estates; a wall erected on the line between two adjoining estates belonging to different persons, for the use of both estates. See United States Digest, Party wall.

PARUM. Lat. Little; but little. Parum differunt quæ re concordant. Things differ but little which agree in substance. 2 Bulstr. 53.

Parum est latam esse sententiam, nisi mandetur executioni. It is little [or to little purpose] that judgment be given unless it be committed to execution. Co. Litt. 289.

Parum proficit scire quid fieri debet, si non cognoscas quomodo sit facturum. It profits little to know what ought to be done, if you do not know how it is to be done. 2 Inst. 503.

PARUM CAVISSE VIDETUR. Lat. In Roman law. He seems to have taken too little care; he seems to have been incautious, or not sufficiently upon his guard. A form of expression used by the judge or magistrate in pronouncing sentence of death upon a criminal. Festus, 325. Taylor's Civ. Law, 81. 4 Bl. Com. 362, note.

PARVA SERJANTIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Petty serjeanty, (q. v.) Fleta, lib. 1, c. 11. Called also parva serjanteria. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 27.

PARVUM CAPE. L. Lat. (Little cape.) In old English practice. A writ which lay on a tenant's default after appearance in a real action. More commonly called petit cape, (q. v.) Roscoe's Real Act. 282. Fleta, lib. 6. c. 14, § 24.

PECULATUS. Lat. In the civil law. The offence of stealing or embezzling the public money, (furtum pecuniæ publicæ vel fiscalis.) Calv. Lex. Inst. 4. 18. 9. Dig. 48. 13. 4 Bl. Com. 122. Hence the common English word peculation; but embezzlement is the proper legal term. 4 Bl. Com. ub. sup.

PECULIAR. In English ecclesiastical law. An exempt jurisdiction;* a parish which is exempt from the jurisdiction of the ordinary of the diocese, and is subject to the metropolitan only. 3 Bl. Com. 65. See Court of peculiars.

PECULIUM. Lat. [dimin. of pecunia.] In the Roman law. Literally, a little money or property, (pusilla pecunia ;) a private or separate property; a little property or stock of one's own.* A limited amount of money or property, which a son or servant was allowed to have, separate from the accounts or stocks of his father or master; (pusilla pecunia quam filiusfamilias vel servus a rationibus paternis vel dominicis separatam habet.) Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 9, § 473. Defined by Tubero, according to Celsus, as quoted by Ulpian in the Digests, quod servus, domini permissu, separatum à rationibus dominicis habet, deducto inde si quid domino debetur ; that which a slave, by permission of his master, has separate from his master's accounts, deducting therefrom whatever he owes his master. Dig. 15. 1. 5. 4.

PECULIUM CASTRENSE. Lat. In the Roman law. The kind of peculium which a son acquired in war, or from his connection with the camp, (castrum.) Hein. El. J. C. lib. 2, tit. 9, § 474. Dig. 49. 17. Tayl. Civ. Law, 396.

PECUNIA. Lat. [from pecu or pecus, cattle.] Originally and radically, property in cattle, or cattle themselves. So called, because the wealth of the ancients consisted in cattle. Co. Litt. 207 b. This sense of the word was departed from at an early period in Roman law, but very distinctly occurs in old English law. Pastura ibidem ad pecuniam villæ ; pasture in the same place for the cattle of the town. A common expression in Domesday. Spelman. Sometimes qualified as viva pecunia. LL. Edw. Conf. c. 10.

In the civil law. Property in general, real or personal; any thing that is actually the subject of private property. Dig. 50. 16. 222. 178. Calv. Lex. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 312. It was a less extensive term than res, though the sense of res might be expressed by it. Dig. 50. 16. 5, pr. According to Taylor, res are such things as may be possessed; pecunia, such as are. Tayl. Civ. Law, 469.

In a narrower sense, personal property; fungible things. Calv. Lex. In old English law, goods and chattels. Spelman.

In the strictest sense, money. This has become the prevalent, and almost the exclusive meaning of the word.

PECUNIA NUMERATA. Lat. In civil and old English law. Counted money; money paid by count or tale. Inst. 2. 24, pr. Bract. fol. 94. The Span. dinero contado had the same sense.

PECUNIA NON NUMERATA. Lat. In the civil law. Money not paid. The subject of an exception or plea in certain cases. Inst. 4. 13. 2. See Exceptio pecuniæ non numeratæ.

PECUNIA TRAJECTITIA. Lat. In the civil law. Literally, money carried across the sea, (quæ trans mare vehitur.) Dig. 22. 2. 1. Money lent to sea, or advanced on the hazard of the lender, to carry (as was supposed) over the sea. Molloy, de Jur. Mar. 357. Another name for fœnus nauticum, (q. v.) or maritime interest. See 2 Sumner's R. 157, 181, Story, J.

PECUNIARY CAUSES. In English ecclesiastical practice. Causes arising from the withholding of ecclesiastical dues, or the doing or neglecting some act relating to the church, whereby some damage accrues to the plaintiff. 3 Bl. Com. 88.

PECUNIARY LEGACY. A legacy of a sum of money; a gift of a sum of money by will. Otherwise called a general legacy. 2 Bl. Com. 512. But it has been said that the use of the word "pecuniary" synonymously with "general," as descriptive of a legacy, is not strictly accurate; for every general legacy is not pecuniary, (i. e. relating to money,) and one species of specific legacy is of a pecuniary nature. 1 Roper on Legacies, 150, (ch. 3, sect. 1,) note.

PECUS. Lat. [pl. pecudes.] In the Roman law. Cattle; a beast. Under a bequest of pecudes, were included oxen and other beasts of burden. Dig. 32. 81. 2.

PEDAGIUM. L. Lat. [from pes, foot.] In feudal law. Money given for the passing by foot or horse through any country. Spelman. Cowell. 8 Co. 47 a.

PEDANEUS. Lat. [from pes, foot.] In the Roman law. On, or at the foot; occupying a low position. A term applied to the judices appointed by the prætor to determine causes; either from their not occupying a tribunal or elevated seat, or because they were occupied with small or less important causes. See Judex pedaneus.

PEDE PULVEROSUS. Lat. In old English and Scotch law. Dusty-foot, (Sc. pedder.) A term applied to itinerant merchants, chapmen or pedlars who attended fairs. Skene defines it "ane merchand or cremar, quha hes ne certaine dwelling-place quhair the dust may be dicht fra his feet or schone." De Verb. Signif. See Piedpoudre.

PEDELLUS. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. A serjeant or beadle, (Sc. serjand or beddle.) Derived à pedo, hoc est, baculo, a wand, staff or halbert. Skene de Verb. Sign.

PEDEM PONERE. L. Lat. In civil and old English law. To put or place the foot. A figurative expression used to denote the taking possession of lands; which was done by standing upon or walking over them, or symbolically by merely placing the foot upon the ground; (Fr. mettre del pee en nosme de seisine. Britt. cc. 35, 36, 42, 43.) Calv. Lex. See Pedis positio, Possessio. Otherwise expressed pedem apponere. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 15, § 6.

PEDETENTIM. Lat. [from pes, foot.] Foot by foot. Lord Ellenborough, 2 M. & S. 546.

PEDIS ABSCISSIO. Lat. In old criminal law. The cutting off a foot; a punishment anciently inflicted instead of death. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 8.

PEDIS POSITIO. Lat. In civil and old English law. A putting or placing of the foot. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 15, § 5. Id. lib. 4, c. 30. A term used to denote the possession of lands by actual corporal entry upon them, and sometimes as the analysis of the word possessio (q. v.) itself. Called also pedis possessio. Thompson, C. J. 15 Johns. R. 117. Gibson, C. J. 5 Penn. St. (Barr's) R. 303.

PEE. L. Fr. [from Lat. pes.] Foot; the foot. Le mettre del pee en le mees en nosme de seisine; the putting of the foot in the house, in name of seisin. Britt. c. 43. See Pedem ponere.

Foot; the foot. A part of a fine. Per le pee est la fine. Yearb. M. 3 Edw. III. 3.

PEER. [L. Fr. peir, pair, pere; from Lat. par, equal.] An equal; one of the same rank.

In feudal and old European law. The vassal of a lord, in his capacity of judge in the lord's court. Esprit des Loix, liv. 28, c. 27. See Peers.

PEERS. [L. Fr. pairs; Lat. pares.] In feudal law. The vassals of a lord who sat in his court as judges of their co-vassals, and were called peers, as being each other's equals, or of the same condition. Esprit des Loix, liv. 28, c. 27. Id. liv. 30, c. 18. Hence the expressions "trial by peers" and "judgment of peers," as used in English and American law to denote trial by jury. Magna Charta, c. 29. 4 Bl. Com. 349. 2 Kent's Com. 13, and note.

In English law. The nobility of the kingdom, who, though different in rank, are all peers (equals) in respect of their nobility. 1 Bl. Com. 403. The Magna Charta of King John (c. 21,) provided that earls and barons should not be amerced unless by their peers, (nisi per pares suos.) See Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 14. In cases of treason, felony and misprision of the same, a nobleman is always tried by his peers, the word having, in this application, both its ancient and modern meaning.* 1 Bl. Com. 401. The word peers is exclusively used to denote the lords temporal. Id. ibid. 4 Id. 264.

PEES. L. Fr. Peace. Encontre nostre pees; against our peace. Britt. fol. 2. De nostre pees. Id. c. 16.

The concord in a fine of lands. Kelham. See Peace.

PEINE. L. Fr. [from Lat. pœna.] Punishment. Kelham.

PEISIBLE. L. Fr. Peaceable. Si ilz eyent eu peisible seisine; if they have had peaceable seisin. Britt. c. 42. Id. c. 47.

PELLEX. Lat. In the Roman law. A concubine. Dig. 50. 16. 144.

PENAL. [from Lat. pœnalis, from pœna, punishment or penalty.] Enacting punishment. Webster. Imposing a punishment or penalty. See Penal statute.

Connected with a penalty, either as the object or consequence of an action.

PENAL ACTION. [Lat. actio pœnalis.] In practice. An action upon a penal statute; an action for the recovery of a penalty given by statute. 3 Steph. Com. 535, 536.

PENAL BILL. An instrument formerly in use, by which a party bound himself to pay a certain sum or sums of money, or to do certain acts; or, in default thereof, to pay a certain specified sum by way of penalty. These instruments have been superseded by bonds with conditions.

PENAL STATUTE. A statute which punishes; a statute which forbids an act, and punishes the doing or commission of it. A statute enacting or imposing a penalty or punishment on the commission of a certain offence.* 1 Steph. Com. 68.

PENALTY. [Lat. pœna.] A punishment; a punishment imposed by statute as a consequence of the commission of a certain specified offence.

A pecuniary punishment; a sum of money imposed by statute to be paid as a punishment for the commission of a certain act.

A sum of money agreed upon, and fixed by the parties to a contract, to be paid in case of its non-performance by either: being intended to secure the performance of the contract.

A sum of money mentioned in the obligatory part of a bond, to be paid by the obligor, absolutely in its terms, but in fact (taken with reference to the condition annexed) only in case of non-performance of the condition.

The legal operation of a penalty, properly so called, is not to create a forfeiture of the entire sum named, but only to cover the actual damages occasioned by the breach of contract; and therefore, on payment of such damages, or in case of a bond, of the principal and interest actually due, the party who has incurred the penalty will be relieved or discharged from it. But in the case of what is termed liquidated damages, the whole of the precise sum named may be exacted of the party who is in default, and the court will not interfere to relieve him. See 2 Steph. Com. 159—162. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. §§ 1313—1326. See Liquidated damages.

PENCIL WRITING is a valid mode of writing, so long as legible. A note written in pencil was held valid while legible. 14 Texas R. 329. And it has been held that a will written with a pencil, could not on this account be annulled. 1 Phillim. R. 1. 2 Id. 173.

PENDANT, Pendent. O. Eng. and L. Fr. [from Lat. pendens.] Pending; during. "Pendant the writ." 1 Leon. 44.

PENDENTE LITE. Lat. Pending the suit; during the actual progress of a suit; during litigation. Lite pendente. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 23.

Pendente lite nihil innovetur, [innovandum.] Pending the suit nothing should be changed. Co. Litt. 344 b. During the pendency of a suit, no change should be made in the property which is the subject of it, as by a conveyance by one of the parties, which may affect the rights of his opponent. Cross on Lien, 140. The effect of this maxim, however, is not to annul the conveyance, but only to render it subservient to the rights of the parties in the litigation. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 406. See 20 Howard's R. 106.

PENDERE. Lat. In the civil law. To hang; to be in suspense. Calv. Lex.

To be attached, as fruit to a tree. Id. See Fructus pendentes.

To depend upon, or grow out of. Id.

To pay, as a penalty. Id.

PENDICLE. Sc. In Scotch law. A piece of ground. 7 Wils. & Shaw's R. 245. "All and haill that small piece or pendicle of arable land." 1 Bell's App. Cas. 499.

PENDING, (or DEPENDING.) A term applied to a writ, sometimes from the day of the teste, and sometimes from the day of the return. 5 Co. 47 a, 47 b, Gilbert Littleton's case.

PENDRE. L. Fr. [from Lat. pendere.] To hang, (execute.) Pendu; hung, or hanged. Jugement de estre treyne et pendu; judgment to be drawn and hanged. Britt. c. 23. The L. Lat. pendutus, derived from pendu, occurs in the laws of the Ripuarians, tit. 79. Spelman.

PENES. Lat. In the possession; in one's possession or power; under one's control. A distinction was made in the civil law, between this term and apud, (with, or in;) which had a less forcible and comprehensive meaning. Dig. 50. 16. 63.

PENSA. L. Lat. [from Lat. pendere, to weigh.] In old English law. A weight. Ad pensam; by weight. The ancient way of paying into the exchequer as much money for a pound sterling as weighed twelve ounces troy. Lowndes' Essay upon Coin, 4. Cowell. This was distinguished from payment de numero, by count.

In old records. A wey (weigh) of salt or cheese, containing two hundred and fifty-six pounds. Cowell.

PENSATA. L. Lat. Weighed. See Libra pensa.

PENSIO. Lat. [from pendere, to pay.] In the civil law. A payment, properly, for the use of a thing. Calv. Lex.

PER AVERSIONEM. Lat. In the civil law. By turning away. A term applied to that kind of sale where the goods are taken in bulk, and not by weight or measure, and for a single price; or where a piece of land is sold as containing in gross, by estimation, a certain number of acres. Pothier, Contr. of Sale, num. 256, 309. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 144 a. So called because the buyer acts without particular examination or discrimination, turning his face, as it were, away. Calv. Lex. voc. Aversione. It seems to be nearly of the same import with the common English phrases "in gross," "by the lot" or "lump."

PER BOUCHE. L. Fr. By the mouth; orally. 3 How. St. Trials, 1024.

PER CAPITA. Lat. By heads; according to the number of persons; as individuals; share and share alike. A term of the civil law, extensively used in the modern English and American law of distribution and descent of estates. Where several persons are equally near of kin to a deceased intestate, or stand in equal degree, they take equally per capita, that is, according to their own persons, and in their own rights, without reference to the stocks from which they have sprung. 2 Bl. Com. 218. 2 Kent's Com. 425—428, and notes. 4 Id. 391, 392. 2 Williams on Exec. 1285. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 194. See Capita. Caput, In capita.

PERAMBULATIO. L. Lat. In old English law. Perambulation; a perambulation. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 15, § 1.

PERAMBULATION. [Lat. perambulatio, from perambulare, from per, through, and ambulare, to walk.] A walking through, about or over; a going round a place to settle its boundaries, or for other purposes. See De perambulatione facienda. Sir William Blackstone has given at length the form of a perambulation of a forest, from the Rolls of 29 Edw. I. Bl. Mag. Cart. Introd. cviii. note. The perambulation was made before justices assigned for the purpose, in presence of the foresters and verderors, by the oath of twenty-four men, who traced the boundaries of the forest minutely by metes and bounds; and their perambulation was afterwards enrolled of record.

M. 7 Edw. III. 37. "The defendant challenged touts peravaile." Dyer, 25.

PERCENNARIUS. L. Lat. In old English law. A parcener; one of several commoners. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 24, § 11.

PERCEPTURA. L. Lat. In old records. A wear; a place in a river made up with banks, dams, &c. for the better convenience of preserving and taking fish. Paroch. Ant. 120. Cowell.

PERCH. [L. Lat. pertica.] A measure of land containing five yards and a half, or sixteen feet and a half in length; otherwise called a rod or pole. Cowell. 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. [607,] 617, § 6. Originally of no fixed length. Spelman, voc. Pertica.

PERCLOSE, Perclos. L. Fr. In old practice. The latter part or conclusion, (of a writ, plea or indictment.) Yearb. M. 7 Hen. VI. 18. 1 Leon. 109. 3 Id. 230.

PERCUTERE. Lat. In old English law. To strike. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 1, § 4. Percutere duellum; to strike the duel; to engage or join in the combat. Bract. fol. 139.

Percussit; (he) struck. Fleta, ub. sup. An essential word in old indictments. 5 Co. 122 a, Long's case. 11 Mod. 229.

Perdonavimus; we have pardoned. An emphatic word in the old charters of pardon. Reg. Orig. 310. Dyer, 34.

Perdonatio. A pardoning; a pardon. Carta perdonationis; a charter of pardon. See Reg. Orig. 308—312 b.

PERDRE. L. Fr. To lose. Pert; loses. Fet Assaver, § 45. Perdu; lost. Id. § 46.

PERDUELLIO. Lat. [from perduellis, an open enemy.] In the civil law. Treason; the crime of open hostility against the state or prince; whatever was attempted directly against the being or safety of the republic, or of the prince, or his ministers. Calv. Lex. Inst. 3. 1. 5. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 12, num. 20. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 18, § 1341.

PEREGRINATIO. Lat. In old English law. Pilgrimage. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 8, § 1.

PEREMPTORIUS. Lat. [from perimere, to destroy; to take away or defeat entirely.] In the civil law. That which destroys or defeats, not for a time, but forever. Exceptions were so called because they operated as a perpetual bar to the action, and entirely destroyed the foundation of it; (perpetuæ et peremptoriæ sunt, quæ semper agentibus obstant, et semper rem de qua agitur perimunt.) Inst. 4. 13. 9. The term exceptio peremptoria, was taken from the civil law by Bracton, and hence the English peremptory, as applied to a defendant's plea. Bract. fol. 240, 399 b. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 36, § 3.

PEREMPTORY. [from Lat. peremptorius, q. v.] Literally and radically, that which destroys, (quod perimit,) or wholly and at once defeats; as a peremptory plea, (q. v.)

That which disposes of a matter at once, and without delay; that which admits of no delay or argument; absolute; imperative; decisive; final. As a peremptory mandamus or rule, (qq. v.)

That which requires no cause to be shown; arbitrary; capricious; as a peremptory challenge, (q. v.)

PEREMPTORY CHALLENGE. In criminal practice. A species of challenge which a prisoner is allowed to have against a certain number of jurors, without showing any cause. See Challenge peremptory.

PEREMPTORY EXCEPTION. A pleading having the legal effect of a general demurrer. 1 Texas R. 364.

PEREMPTORY MANDAMUS. In practice. A writ of mandamus which absolutely requires an act to be done, without any alternative of showing cause against it. Usually granted on the return of an alternative mandamus, where such return is found insufficient in law or false in fact. 3 Steph. Com. 683, 694. 2 Burr. Pr. 180.

PEREMPTORY PLEA. In practice. A plea founded upon matter which tends to impeach the plaintiff's right of action itself, or goes to destroy the ground of action entirely; a plea in bar of the action.* Steph. Pl. 46. Id. Appendix, Note (19.) 3 Steph. Com. 576.

PEREMPTORY RULE. In practice. An absolute rule; a rule without any condition or alternative of showing cause. See Absolute rule.

PERENTER, Perentre. L. Fr. Between. Litt. sect. 58.

PERFECT. In practice. To complete in form of law. To perfect bail is to justify after exception, so as to render them absolute. 1 Burr. Pr. 110. To perfect judgment is to enter it on record, and to file and docket the record. Id. 263.

Perfectum est cui nihil deest secundum suæ perfectionis vel naturæ modum. That is perfect to which nothing is wanting, according to the measure of its perfection or nature. Hob. 151.

PERGAMENUM. L. Lat. In old practice. Parchment. In pergameno scribi fecit. 1 And. 54.

PERICULOSUS. Lat. [from periculum, danger.] Dangerous; perilous. Periculosum est res novas et inusitatas inducere. It is perilous or hazardous to introduce new and untried things. Co. Litt. 379 a. New inventions (though of a learned judge in his own profession,) are full of inconvenience. Id. ibid.

Periculosum existimo quod bonorum virorum non comprobatur exemplo. I think that dangerous which is not warranted or approved by the example of good men. 9 Co. 97 b, Sir George Reynel's case.

PERICULUM. Lat. In the civil law. Peril; danger; hazard; risk. Dig. 18. 6. Cod. 4. 48. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 58, § 8.

Periculum rei venditæ, nondum traditæ, est emptoris. The risk of an article sold, but not yet delivered, is the buyer's. When the contract of sale has been rendered binding by giving earnest, or by part payment, or part delivery, or by a compliance with the requisitions of the statute of frauds, the property, and with it the risk, attaches to the purchaser. 2 Kent's Com. 498, 499. This maxim is taken from the civil law, though it is differently applied, and is thus expressed in the Institutes: Periculum rei venditæ statim ad emptorem pertinet, tametsi adhuc ea res emptori tradita non sit; the risk of a thing sold immediately attaches to the buyer, although the article itself be not yet delivered to him. Inst. 3. 24. 3. In the Digests, the rule was thus expressed: Perfecta emtione, periculum ad emtorem respiciet. Dig. 18. 6. 8. In the Code, post perfectam venditionem, omne commodum et incommodum quod rei venditæ contingit, ad emtorem pertinet. Cod. 4. 48.

PERILS OF THE SEA, (or SEAS.) In maritime and insurance law. Natural accidents peculiar to the sea, which do not happen by the intervention of man, nor are to be prevented by human prudence. 3 Kent's Com. 216. Piracy, however, is a peril of the seas. Id. ibid. 1 Phillips on Ins. 648. Under perils of the sea are comprehended those of the winds, waves, lightning, rocks, shoals, running foul of other vessels, and in general all causes of loss and damage to the property insured, arising from the elements and inevitable accidents, other than those of capture and detention. Id. 635. See Story on Bailm. §§ 512—522. Under "perils of the seas, rivers," &c. in a policy, the ordinary risks of canal navigation are covered, although canals are not mentioned. 6 Ohio St. R. 553.

PERINDE VALERE. L. Lat. (To be equally valid.) In English ecclesiastical law. The name of a writ of dispensation granted to a clerk that being defective in his capacity to a benefice or other ecclesiastical function, was, de facto, admitted to it. So called from the emphatic words of the Latin form, the faculty being declared to be equally effectual to the party dispensed with, as if he had been actually capable of the thing for which he was dispensed with, at the time of his admission. Stat. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21. Cowell.

PERIOD. A space of time; any portion of complete time.

"The word period has its etymological meaning, but it also has a distinctive signification, according to the subject with which it may be used in connection. It may mean any portion of complete time, from a thousand years or less to the period of a day; and when used to designate an act to be done or to be begun, though its completion may take an uncertain time, as for instance the act of exportation, it must mean the day on which the exportation commences, or it would be an unmeaning and useless word in its connection in the statute." Wayne, J. 20 Howard's R. 579.

PERJURIUM. Lat. [from perjurare, to forswear; from per and jurare, to swear.] In civil and old English law. Perjury; the breach of an oath; the making a false oath. Cum contigerit quod juratores falsum fecerint sacramentum et ita commiserint perjurium; when it shall happen that the jurors make a false oath, and so commit perjury. Bract. fol. 288 b. Fleta defines it to be a lie, confirmed by an oath; (mendacium cum juramento firmatum.) Fleta, lib. 5, c. 22, § 3; lib. 2, c. 1, § 20.

PERJURY. [from Lat. perjurium, q. v.] In criminal law. False swearing; the making a false oath; the breach of an oath. Anciently called oath-breach, or oath-broken. See Othesworth.—The judicial affirmation of a falsehood on oath. Bell's Dict. 2 Swinton's R. 300.—A crime committed when a lawful oath is administered, in some judicial proceeding, to a person who swears wilfully, absolutely and falsely, in a matter material to the issue or point in question. 3 Inst. 164. 4 Bl. Com. 137. 4 Steph. Com. 267. See 2 Russell on Crimes, 596, (Am. ed.) and the criticism in the note. Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, §§ 2198—2232. This common law definition has been modified in England by statute. 4 Steph. Com. 267. 2 Russell on Crimes, 604, et seq.

In the United States, the definition of perjury is generally fixed by the local laws of each state. See Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, §§ 2169—2197. Lewis' U. S. Crim. Law, 547—557. 2 Russell on Crimes, (Am. ed. 1850,) 596, 597, note.

PERMISSIVE WASTE. That kind of waste which is a matter of omission only; as by suffering a house to fall for want of necessary reparations. 2 Bl. Com. 281. 3 Steph. Com. 503. 4 Kent's Com. 76, et seq. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 266.

PERMUTATIO. Lat. [from permutare, to exchange.] In the civil law. Exchange; barter. Dig. 19. 4. Cod. 4. 64.

PERNANCY. [from L. Fr. parner, to take.] Taking; a taking or receiving, as of the profits of an estate. Actual pernancy of the profits of an estate is the taking, perception or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom. 2 Bl. Com. 163.

PERNOCTARE. Lat. [from per, through, and nox, night.] In the civil law. To pass the night; to pass the whole night. Dig. 50. 16. 166.

PERNOR. [from L. Fr. parnour, or pernour, q. v.] A taker. Pernor of profits is the taker or receiver of the profits of an estate. Cowell.

PERNOUR. L. Fr. A taker. Le pernour on le detenour; the taker or the detainer. Britt. c. 27.

Perpetua lex est nullam legem humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse, et clausula quæ abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. It is a perpetual law that no human and positive law can be perpetual, and a clause [in a law] which precludes the power of abrogation is void ab initio. Bacon's Max. 77, in reg. 19.

PERPETUAL CURACY. In English ecclesiastical law. A place of divine worship, having parochial rights (particularly those of baptism and sepulture,) of which the incumbent is not removable at pleasure by the rector or vicar of any supposed mother church. 1 Wooddes. Lect. 198.

PERPETUATING TESTIMONY. In practice. The taking of testimony in order to preserve it for future use, as where it is in danger of being lost before the matter to which it relates can be made the subject of judicial investigation. This is usually done by bill filed in equity for that purpose, and sometimes by proceedings at law. 3 Bl. Com. 450. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 1505, et seq. Story's Eq. Pl. § 600, et seq.

PERPETUITY. The quality of indefinite duration without change. A quality by which an estate becomes inalienable either perpetually, or for a very long period. A modification of an estate by which it is made inalienable perpetually or indefinitely. See 4 Kent's Com. 264.

The estate itself, so modified or perpetuated.

In more technical language,—a future limitation, restraining the owner of an estate from aliening the fee-simple of the property, discharged of such future use or estate, before the event is determined, or the period is arrived, when such future use or estate is to arise. If that event or period be within the bounds prescribed by law, it is not a perpetuity. Sanders on Uses and Trusts, 196.—A future limitation, whether executory or by way of remainder, and of either real or personal property, which is not to vest until after the expiration of, or will not necessarily vest within, the period fixed and prescribed by law for the creation of future estates and interests; and which is not destructible by the persons for the time being entitled to the property subject to the future limitation, except with the concurrence of the individual interested under that limitation. Lewis on Perpetuity, 164.

PERQUIRERE. L. Lat. [from per, through, and quærere, to obtain.] In feudal law. To gain or acquire; to acquire by one's own act; to purchase. Breve perquirere; to purchase a writ. Cowell.

Perquisitio. Purchase. 2 Bl. Com. 241. Acquisition by one's own act or agreement, and not by descent. Id. ibid. See Purchase.

Perquisitor. A purchaser; one who first acquired an estate to his family; one who acquired an estate by sale, by gift, or by any other method, except only that of descent. 2 Bl. Com. 220.

Perquisitum. Purchase. Bract. fol. 65. Co. Litt. 3 b, 18 b. An estate acquired by purchase, that is, by one's own act, and not by descent; (prædium quod quis non à patre vel majoribus possidet, sed quo suâ industriâ vel pecuniis comparato gaudet.) Spelman.

PERSECUTIO. Lat. [from persequi, q. v.] In the civil law. A following after; a pursuing at law; a suit or prosecution.

Properly, that kind of judicial proceeding before the prætor which was called extraordinary. Calv. Lex.

In a general sense, any judicial proceeding, including not only actions (actiones) properly so called, but other proceedings also. Id.

PERSEQUI. Lat. In the civil law. To follow after; to pursue or claim in form of law. An action is called a jus persequendi. See Actio.

PERSEWAR. O. Sc. In old Scotch law. Pursuer; plaintiff or prosecutor. See Pursuer.

PERSON. [from Lat. persona, q. v.] A human being, considered as the subject of rights, as distinguished from a thing, (res,) whether animate or inanimate. See Persona.

PERSONA. Lat. In civil and old English law. A person. Persona est homo, cum statu quodam consideratus; a person is a human being, considered with reference to a certain status, condition or quality. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 3, § 75. Homo vocabulum est naturæ; persona, juris civilis; man is a term of nature; person, a term of law. Calv. Lex. Omnis persona est homo, sed non vicissim; every person is a man, (human being,) but not vice versa. Id. Persona is a character or capacity, homo cum statu, a man under particular circumstances, conditions and relations. Tayl. Civ. Law, 247.

Persona conjuncta æquiparatur interesse proprio. A personal connection [literally, a united person, union with a person,] is equivalent to one's own interest; nearness of blood is as good a consideration as one's own interest. Bacon's Max. 72, reg. 18. "The law hath that respect of nature and conjunction of blood, as in divers cases it compareth and matcheth nearness of blood with consideration of profit and interest, yea, and in some cases alloweth of it more strongly." Id. ibid. 13 Mees. & W. 253, 254, arg. The interest of a personal connection is sometimes regarded in law as that of the individual himself. Broom's Max. [407.]

PERSONA. L. Lat. In old English law. A parson. Glanv. lib. 4, c. 1. Spelman. 1 Bl. Com. 384. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 29.

PERSONA STANDI IN JUDICIO. L. Lat. Capacity of standing in court or in judgment; capacity to be a party to an action; capacity or ability to sue. See Personable. A phrase frequently used in Bracton, and derived probably from that source. Habent enim servi personam standi in judicio contra omnes de injuriis sibi factis; for slaves have a capacity of prosecuting against all persons for injuries done to themselves. Bract. fol. 155 b. A slave might in certain cases bring an assise against his own lord; much more shall he have a right of suit against one who had no right in him; (multo fortius personam habebit standi in judicio versus eum qui nihil juris habet in eo.) Id. fol. 196. The phrase is of common occurrence in the modern books. 1 Rob. Adm. R. 198, 201. Spencer, J. 15 Johns. R. 83. 1 Kent's Com. 68.

PERSONABLE. [L. Lat. personabilis, from persona, capacity.] In old English law. Able to maintain a plea in court; having capacity to sue. Cowell. Derived probably from the phrase persona standi in judicio, (q. v.)

Of capacity to take a thing granted or given. Plowd. 27 a, arg. But in the case here cited, it is used as two words, person able. "There is a maxim that when a remainder is appointed to one, he to whom it is appointed ought at that time to be a person able, and to have capacity to take the remainder, or else it shall be void." Id.

PERSONAL. [Lat. personalis, from persona, q. v.] Of the person; belonging to, or following the person; as a personal chattel, (q. v.)

Relating to, or affecting the person; against the person; as a personal action, (q. v.)

PERSONAL ACTION. [Lat. actio personalis.] In practice. An action against the person, (actio in personam;) an action founded on personal obligation. An action by which a person claims a debt, or personal duty, or damages in lieu thereof, or by which a person claims a satisfaction in damages for some injury done to his person or property.* 3 Bl. Com. 117.

PERSONAL ASSETS. Personal property in the hands of an executor or administrator, chargeable with the debts or legacies of the testator or intestate, and applicable to that purpose.* 2 Williams on Exec. 1408. See Assets.

PERSONAL CHATTELS. Things moveable which may be annexed to, or attendant on the person of the owner, and carried about with him from one part of the world to another. 2 Bl. Com. 387.

PERSONAL CONTRACT. A contract respecting personal property, as a lease of a stock of cattle, or other goods, for years, rendering rent; as distinguished from a lease for years, which is a real contract. 3 Co. 22 a, Walker's case.

PERSONAL ESTATE. Personal property, (q. v.) "Personal estates," in a will, may pass real property. 11 East, 246.

PERSONAL LIBERTY. The right or power of locomotion, of changing situation, or moving one's person to whatsoever place one's own inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law. 1 Bl. Com. 134.

PERSONAL PROPERTY. That kind of property which usually consists of things temporary and moveable, but includes all subjects of property not of a freehold nature, nor descendible to the heirs at law. 2 Kent's Com. 340. See definitions of this term in 1 N. Y. Rev. St. [388,] 379, § 3. 2 Id. [702, § 33,] 587, § 34.

"PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES" has sometimes been construed to mean, "administrators or executors," and sometimes to mean the "next of kin." 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 1065 b, and note. See 2 Williams on Exec. 966. The term "legal representatives" is, in its ordinary sense, synonymous with "executors or administrators." Id. ibid.

PERSONAL RIGHTS. See Rights of persons.

PERSONAL SECURITY. A person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation. 1 Bl. Com. 129.

PERSONAL STATUTES. In English law. Statutes which respect personal transitory contracts, as common loans or insurances. So defined by Lord Mansfield, who distinguishes between local and personal statutes. 2 W. Bl. 234, 246.

In foreign and modern civil law. Those statutes (laws) which have principally for their object the person, and treat only of property incidentally. Story's Confl. of Laws, § 13.—A personal statute, in this sense of the term, is a law, ordinance, regulation or custom, the disposition of which affects the person, and clothes him with a capacity or incapacity, which he does not change with every change of abode; but which, upon principles of justice and policy, he is assumed to carry with him wherever he goes. 2 Kent's Com. 456. Chancellor Kent considers this application of the word statute a perversion, and protests against its introduction into American jurisprudence. Id. note.

PERSONAL THINGS, in the old books, include personal rights and duties. Personal things cannot be done by another. Finch's Law, b. 1, ch. 3, num. 14. Suit of court could not be done by another. Id. ibid. A man cannot excuse himself of a contempt by attorney, but in proper person. Id. ibid.

Personal things cannot be granted over, as matters of pleasure, ease, trust and authority. Id. ibid. num. 15. A license to hunt in my park, to go to church over my ground, to come into my house, to eat and drink with me, cannot be granted over. Id. ibid. A. licenseth B. to do an act; B. cannot grant this license to another. Id. ibid.

Personal things die with the person. Id. ibid. num. 16. When a corporal hurt or damage is done to a man, as to beat him, &c. if he or the party beaten die, the action is gone. Id. ibid.

PERSONALIS ACTIO. Lat. In the civil law. A personal action; an action against the person, (in personam.) Dig. 50. 16. 178. 2.

PERSONALIS ACTIO. Lat. In old English law. A personal action. A term of the civil law, employed by Bracton, and the literal translation of which has been adopted in the common law, as the title of one of the leading divisions of civil actions. Bract. fol. 159 b, 284 b.

PERSONALITER. Lat. In old English law. Personally; in person. Si debitor personaliter inveniatur; if the debtor be personally found. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 33. See Id. lib. 3, c. 15, § 5. Personaliter compareat; shall personally appear. 3 How. St. Trials, 111.

PERSONALITY. In foreign and modern civil law. That quality of a law which concerns the condition, state and capacity of *persons. By the personality of laws, foreign jurists generally mean all laws which concern the condition, state and capacity of persons. Story's Confl. of Laws, § 16.

PERSONALTY. Personal property; including every thing moveable, whether animate or inanimate, when the law considers them to be the subject of property, and sometimes things quasi moveable, as tenant's fixtures; and whether tangible or not, such as choses in action, or things which cannot be beneficially obtained without suit; and also some descriptions of interests connected with and issuing out of realty, such as leases for years. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 4. Personalty is principally distinguished from realty by its actual or supposed mobility, and the want of that durability which accompanies all real property, and all permanent rights issuing out of it. Id. 84.

An abstract of personal. In old practice, an action was said to be in the personalty where it was brought against the right person, or the person against whom in law it lay. O. N. B. 92. Cowell.

PERSONATION. [Lat. personatio, from persona, a person.] The acting as a person, or for a person; the representation of a person; an acting in the character of another. See False personation.

PERSONE. L. Fr. A parson. En mesme la manere est de persone de un esglise; in the same manner is it with the parson of a church. Britt. c. 48.

PERSONERO. Span. In Spanish law. An attorney. So called, because he represents the person of another, either in or out of court. Las Partidas, part 3, tit. 5, l. 1.

PERSONNE. Fr. A person. This term is declared by the civil code of Louisiana to be applicable to men and women, or to either. Art. 3522, num. 25.

Perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Plain truths are not to be proved. Co. Litt. 16 b. Quoted by Lord Coke as the reason why Littleton never cited authority, except where the case was rare or doubtful.

PERTE. L. Fr. Part. Jugement de perte pur perte; judgment of part for part, (member for member.) Britt. c. 25.

PERTINENS. Lat. [from pertinere, to belong.] In old English law. Pertaining; belonging; appurtenant; appendant. 4 Co. 38 a, Tyrringham's case.

Used in the laws of Canute, in the sense of a relative, (cognatus.) Spelman.

PERTINENTIÆ. L. Lat. [from pertinere, to belong.] In old English law. Appurtenances, or, as anciently written, appertinances; in Scotch law, pertinents; things belonging, or incident to another (principal) thing. Reg. Orig. 1. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 11. Appurtenances had sometimes their own appurtenances, called pertinentiæ pertinentiarum. Thus, to the right of feeding and pasture, themselves appurtenant to a tenement, were appurtenant the right of way, and free ingress and egress; (habent hujusmodi pertinentiæ suas pertinentias, sicut ad jus pascendi et ad pasturam pertinet via et liber ingressus et egressus.) Bract. fol. 232. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 18, § 3.

PERTINENTS. In Scotch law. Appurtenances. "Parts and pertinents," "parts, pendicles and pertinents," are formal words in old deeds and charters. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 112, 118. Bell's Dict. Cum omnibus partibus, pendiculis, aliisque pertinentiis; with all the parts, pendicles and other pertinents. 36 Eng. Law & Eq. R. 20.

PERTURBATION. In ecclesiastical law. Disturbance; the disturbance of pews or seats in a church. 1 Phillim. R. 323.

PERTURBIA. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. Disturbance; Scotticè, distroublance. 1 Pitc. Crim. Trials, part 2, p. 72. Called also perturbacio.

PERVISE, Parvise. [L. Lat. pervisus, parvisia.] A church porch; the outer court of a palace; the palace yard at Westminster. A place where clients and their counsel used to meet for the purpose of consultation. Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ c. 51. Spelman. Dugdale, speaking of the "Pervyse of Pawles," observes that "formerly each lawyer and serjeant, at his pillar in St. Paul's Church, heard his cli-

PETTY. Small; inferior. A word framed from the Fr. petit, and sometimes used indiscriminately with it. See Petit.

PETTY AVERAGE. In maritime law. A term used to denote such charges and disbursements as, according to occurrences and the custom of every place, the master necessarily furnishes for the benefit of the ship and cargo, either at the place of loading or unloading, or on the voyage; such as the hire of a pilot for conducting a vessel from one place to another, (formerly called lodemanage,) towage, light money, beaconage, anchorage, bridge toll, quarantine and such like. Park on Ins. 100. The particulars belonging to this head depend, however, entirely upon usage. Abbott on Ship. 404.

PETTY BAG. [L. Lat. parva baga.] In English practice. A name given to one of the offices belonging to the common law court in chancery, from the little sack or bag anciently used for keeping the writs relating to such matters wherein the crown was immediately or mediately concerned. 3 Bl. Com. 49.

PETTY CONSTABLE. In English law. The ordinary kind of constable in towns and parishes, as distinguished from the high constable of the hundred. See Constable. The distinction is expressed in American law by the same words.

PETTY LARCENY. See Petit larceny.

PEYNE. O. Eng. and L. Fr. Pain; penalty. 3 Leon. 8.

PEYS. L. Fr. In old English law. Weight; weights. Britt. c. 30. Peyser, peiser; to weigh. Id. ibid.

PHAROS. Lat. In maritime law. A light-house. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 1, sec. 7.

PHYSICAL FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact, the existence of which may be perceived by the senses; such as the sound of a pistol-shot; a man running; impressions of human feet on the ground. Burr. Circ. Evid. 130. See a particular enumeration of these. Id. 253. Defined by Mr. Bentham, "a fact considered to have its seat in some inanimate being, or, if in an animate being, by virtue, not of the qualities by which it is constituted animate, but of those which it has in common with the class of inanimate beings." 1 Benth. Jud. Evid. 45.

PICCAGE. [L. Lat. piccagium, from Fr. piquer, to perforate, or pick.] In old English law. Money paid at fairs for leave to break the ground, to set up booths or stalls. Cowell. Spelman.

PICKERY. Sc. [O. Sc. pykerie.] In Scotch law. Petty theft. Bell's Dict. 2 Pitc. Crim. Trials, 43.

PIED POUDRE. L. Fr. [L. Lat. pede pulverosus.] In old English law. Dusty-foot. A term applied to itinerant merchants, chapmen or pedlars, who attended fairs. Cowell. Skene de Verb. Signif. voc. Pedepulverosus. Usually written as one word, piepoudre. 4 Taunt. 533.

PIER, Piere. L. Fr. [from Lat. pater.] In old English law. Father; a father. Britt. c. 109.

PIGHTEL. [L. Lat. pictellum.] In old conveyancing. A small parcel of land enclosed with a hedge; a little close. Cowell. Derived by Cowell from Ital. piccolo, little, but by Spelman from L. Lat. pictatium, a scrap.

PIGNERARE. Lat. [from pignus, a pledge.] In the civil law. To pledge; to deposit on pledge, (pignori ponere.) Calv. Lex.

PIGNORATIO. Lat. [from pignorare, q. v.] In modern civil law. The taking of cattle doing damage, by way of pledge, till satisfaction is made. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 10, § 1242. Corresponding with the distress and impounding of the common law.

PIGNORATITIA ACTIO. Lat. In the civil law. An action of pledge, or founded on a pledge, which was either directa, for the debtor, after payment of the debt, or contraria, for the creditor. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 13, §§ 824—826. Dig. 13. 7. Written pignoraticia, ibid.

PIGNUS. Lat. In the civil law. A pledge or pawn; a delivery of a thing to a creditor, as security for a debt.

A thing delivered to a creditor as security for a debt. This is the sense in which the word is employed in the Institutes. Pignoris appellatione eam proprie rem contineri dicimus, quæ simul etiam traditur creditori, maxime si mobilis sit; under the title of pignus (pledge,) we declare, is properly included the thing itself, which at the same time is delivered to the creditor, especially if it be movable. Inst. 4. 6. 7. It was thus distinguished from a hypotheca, which was valid without delivery. Id. ibid. And see Dig. 13. 7. 9. 2. Story, J. 1 Sumner's R. 73, 81. But a pignus might also be good without delivery. Dig. 13. 7. 1.

In an exact sense, pignus was properly applied to moveables, and hypotheca to immoveables. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 1006. But the word was sometimes taken in a more general sense. Id. ibid. Story on Bailm. § 290 a. See Dig. lib. 20, per tot. Gaius, in the Digests, derives pignus from pugnus, the fist or hand, because things which are given in pledge are delivered into the hand. Dig. 50. 16. 238. 2.

PILLORY. [L. Fr. pillorie; L. Lat. pillorium, pilloria; collistrigium.] In criminal law. An engine of wood made to punish offenders, intended, as Spelman observes, more for the infliction of disgrace than pain, (ad ludibrium magis quam pœnam;) the head and face of the offender being exposed to public view, through an opening which fitted the neck in such a manner that it could not be drawn back, the hands also being secured through similar openings; very significantly described by its old Saxon name healsfang, (neck-grasp,) of which the Lat. collistrigium is an imitation. For a particular description of the manner in which this punishment was inflicted, see the case of Rex v. Beardmore, 2 Burr. 792.

Cowell inclines to derive pillory from the Gr. πύλη, a gate, and ὁράω, to see. Spelman prefers the Fr. pilleur, a cheat, as denoting the class of offenders on whom the punishment was at first principally inflicted. Both, however, leave it uncertain.

PILOT. In maritime law. A steersman; a person particularly acquainted with the navigation of certain waters, and employed to steer vessels through them.* —A person taken on board a vessel at a particular place, for the purpose of conducting her through a river, road or channel, or from or into a port. Abbott on Ship. 195. Story, J. 10 Peters' R. 108, 123.—A person qualified and appointed by proper authority, to conduct vessels in and out of particular harbors, or along certain coasts, at a certain fixed rate, depending on the draught of water. Brande. It is the duty of the master engaged in a foreign trade, to put his ship under the charge of a pilot, both on his outward and homeward voyage, when he is within the usual limits of the pilot's employment. 3 Kent's Com. 175, 176, and note. The pilot, while on board, has the exclusive control of the ship. He is considered as master pro hac vice. Id. ibid.

PILOTAGE. The navigation of a vessel by a pilot; the duty of a pilot. Story, J. 10 Peters' R. 121, 123.

The charge or compensation allowed for piloting a vessel. Abbott on Ship. 198, 199.

PIN MONEY. Money allowed to, or settled upon a wife, for the purpose of supplying her with dress and the means of defraying her other personal expenses. See Sugden's Law of Property, 162, 170, and note.

PINCERNA. Lat. In old English law. Butler; the king's butler, whose office it was to select out of the cargo of every vessel laden with wine, one cask at the prow and another at the stern, for the king's use. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 22.

PIPE ROLL. A great roll kept in the English Exchequer, said to be so called from its resemblance in shape to a pipe. Spelman. But, according to Lord Bacon, it was so called "because the whole receipt is finally conveyed into it by the means of divers small pipes or quills, as it were water into a great head or cistern." Bacon's Works, iv. 133. Called by Madox "the most stately record of the exchequer, and the great medium of charge and discharge of rents, farms and debts due to the crown." Hist. Exch. vol. ii. p. 114. There are other rolls under this name. See Hubback's Evid. of Succession, 624—626.

PIPOWDER, Piepoudre. [Fr. pied poudre, q. v.] In English law. The name of a court held for fairs and markets. See Court of piedpoudre. Pipowder courts were formerly appointed to be held at fairs in the town and borough of Westchester, New-York. Bolton's Hist. of Westchester, i. 194.

PIRACY. In public criminal law. Robbery or forcible depredation on the high seas, without lawful authority, and done animo furandi, in the spirit and intention of universal hostility. 1 Kent's Com. 183. It is the same offence at sea with robbery on land. Id. ibid. See Whart. Am. Crim. Law, §§ 2816—2855.

PIRATE. Eng. and Fr. [Lat. pirata, from Gr. πειρειν, to cross or roam over.] A sea robber;* one who maintains himself by pillage and robbing at sea. Cowell.—A robber on the high seas. Webster.—A rover, according to the seeming radical sense of the word. "A pirate is a rover and a robber upon the sea." 3 Inst. 113. Pirata est hostis humani generis; a pirate is an enemy of the human race. Id. ibid. And see Santerna, part 4, n. 50. Stracha de Nautis, part 3, n. 30.—One who, without a commission from any sovereign, of his own authority, roams over the sea, for the sake of plunder. Casaregis, disc. 64, n. 4. And see Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 12, sect. 28.

PIRUS. Lat. In old English law. A pear tree. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 2.

PISCARIA. L. Lat. [from piscis, fish.] In old English law. Fishery; a fishery. Reg. Orig. 156. Sometimes translated piscary, (q. v.)

PISCIS. Lat. Fish. Called nomen collectivum, as being used to denote both the singular and plural. 5 Co. 35 a, Playter's case.

ΠΙΣΤΙΚΟΣ, Πιστικὸς. Gr. [from πίστις, faith.] In maritime law. The master of a ship; he to whom the government of a ship was entrusted. Laws of Oleron, art. 1, obs. 1 Peters' Adm. Dec. Appendix, vi. Calv. Lex.

PISTOR. Lat. In old English law. A baker; the baker. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 83. See his duties described, ibid.

PIT AND GALLOWS. [L. Lat. fossa et furca.] In old Scotch law. The right to punish thieves by drowning and hanging. 2 Pitc. Crim. Trials, 43.

PIX. Lat. A mode of testing coin. The ascertaining whether coin is of the proper standard is, in England, called pixing it; and there are occasions on which resort is had for this purpose to an ancient mode of inquisition called the trial of the pix, before a jury of members of the Goldsmith's Company. 2 Steph. Com. 540, note.

PIXIS. L. Lat. In old pleading. A box. Cro. Jac. 664. "Trover was brought de una pixide, Anglicè, a box full of bands," &c. Id. ibid. A box for deeds and muniments. Latch, 195.

PLACE. An old word for pleas. Thus the court of Common Pleas is sometimes called the court of Common Place. Stat. 4 Hen. VII. c. 24. "Common banke" is translated "Common Place." Litt. sect. 94. The expression "Clerk of the Place" occurs frequently in the Year Books. P. 2 Hen. VI. 3. M. 3 Hen. VI. 24. H. 3 Hen. VI. 2. H. 4 Hen. VI. 6. T. 7 Hen. VI. 2. H. 8 Hen. VI. 21. See Common Place.

PLACE WHERE. A phrase used in the older reports, being a literal translation of locus in quo, (q. v.) "Who was seized of the place where in fee." 6 Mod. 158. "The plaintiff's cattle escaped into the place where." Id. 198. See 1 Leon. 60, et passim.

PLACEA. L. Lat. In old records. A place. Coram uno justitiario placeæ ubi placitum motum; before one justice of the place where the plea was moved, (suit commenced.) Reg. Orig. 186. Reg. Jud. 84 b. This word had not always the sense of locus, but rather that of a plot or piece of ground. Provideatur ei in loco competenti, quædam placea quæ ei sufficere possit ad mesuagium; there shall be provided for her, in a suitable place, a certain piece (of ground) which may suffice her for a messuage. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 24, § 13. See Platea.

PLACITA JURIS. L. Lat. Pleas, or determinations, (that is, arbitrary rules) of law. A term used by Lord Bacon, to denote such rules of law as do not belong to the class of maxims or conclusions of reason, and which he describes as "particular and positive learnings of laws," "grounds and positive learnings received with the law and set down." Bacon's Max. pref. Id. 55, reg. 12.

Receditur a placitis juris, potius quam injuriæ et delicta maneant impunita. Positive rules of law will be dispensed with, rather than crimes and wrongs should remain unpunished. Bacon's Max. 55, reg. 12. Lord Bacon gives the following, among other illustrations of this maxim: "It is a positive ground [of law, or placitum juris] that the accessory in felony cannot be proceeded against until the principal be tried; yet if a man, upon subtilty and malice, set a madman by some device to kill him, [another?] and he doth so, now forasmuch as the madman is excused, because he can have no will or malice, the law accounteth the incitor as principal, though he be absent, rather than the crime shall go unpunished." Id. 57.

PLACITUM COMMUNE. L. Lat. In old English law. A common plea or action. Cum placitum debiti sit quoddam placitum commune, et in charta libertatis contineatur quod communia placita non sequantur cur' Reg' sed in certo loco teneantur; since a plea of debt is a kind of common plea, and in the Charter of Liberty, (Magna Charta,) it is contained that common pleas shall not follow the king's court, but shall be held in a certain place. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 18.

PLAGA. Lat. [L. Fr. playe.] In old English law. A wound. Fecit ei insultum et quandam plagam ei fecit in tali loco; made an assault upon him, and gave him a certain wound in such a place. Bract. fol. 144. Properly, a wound made by a cutting instrument, (an incised wound.) Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, § 3. Plaga and vulnus, (wound,) were synonymous, though plaga was the more usual word in indictments. 5 Co. 121 b, Long's case.

PLAGIARIUS. Lat. In the civil law. A man-stealer; a kidnapper. Dig. 48. 15. 1. 4 Bl. Com. 219.

PLAGIUM. Lat. In the civil law. Man-stealing; kidnapping. The offence of enticing away and stealing men, children and slaves. Calv. Lex. The persuading a slave to escape from his master, or the concealing or harboring him without the knowledge of his master. Dig. 48. 15. 6. A term used in Scotch law. 2 Brown's R. 288.

PLAID. O. Fr. In old European law. An assembly of the kings and great men of the realm. Houard, Anc. Loix des Franc. sect. 10. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (1.)

A court of justice. Id. ibid.

PLAIE. L. Fr. A wound. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 12.

PLAINT. [L. Fr. pleynte.] In English practice. A private memorial tendered in open court to the judge, wherein the party injured sets forth his cause of action. A proceeding in inferior courts, by which an action is commenced without original writ. 3 Bl. Com. 373. This mode of proceeding is commonly adopted in cases of replevin. 3 Steph. Com. 666.

PLAINTIFF. [L. Fr. pleyntyfe, pleintife, from pleyndre, to complain; L. Lat. querens.] In practice. The complaining party in an action at law; the party bringing an action, and so named on the record. It is the old French word, with merely the spelling modernized. See Pleyntyfe.

In the case of the Bank of Salina v. Henry, it was said by the Supreme Court of New-York that, in the legal as well as in the ordinary use of the term, no one can strictly and properly be denominated a plaintiff in an action, unless he is named as such on the record. Bronson, J. 1 Hill's R. 555, 557. But the decision in this case was reversed by the Court of Errors, who held that the word plaintiff extended to a party in interest as plaintiff, although not the plaintiff on the record. 5 Hill's R. 523—547. This was in construction of an act of the legislature, entitled "An act to prevent usury," passed May 15th, 1837.

PLANTATIO. Lat. [from plantare, to plant.] In the civil law. Planting; one of the modes of acquiring property by accession, (accessio, q. v.) Si Titius alienam plantam in solo suo posuerit, ipsius erit; et ex diverso, si Titius suam plantam in Mœvii solo posuerit, Mœvii planta erit; si modo utroque casu radices egerit; if Titius have set another man's plant in his own ground, it will be his own; and on the other hand, if Titius have set his own plant in Mævius' ground, the plant will be Mævius', provided that in either case it have taken root. Inst. 2. 1. 31. This passage is taken word for word (except the error of Menii for Mœvii,) by Bracton, who gives no authority, but adds, unde versus,

Quicquid plantatur, seritur vel inædificatur,
Omne solo cedit, radices si tamen egit.

(whence the verse, "whatever is planted, sown or built, all goes with the soil, provided it have taken root.") Bract. fol. 10. In Fleta, the reading of the passage is somewhat varied, but there is the same error of Menius for Mœvius. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 13.

PLANUS, Planum. Lat. In the Roman law. Plain; level; not elevated. De plano; from or on a level, as opposed to pro tribunali, from a tribunal or judgment seat. The prætor or magistrate was figuratively said to hear causes (cognoscere) de plano, when he did so without the ceremony of occupying the tribunal, as while walking abroad, &c. Calv. Lex.

PLATEA. L. Lat. In old English law. A clear or open space of ground; a plat or plot of ground. Provideatur ei in loco competenti, quædam platea quæ ei sufficere possit ad messuagium; there shall be provided for her in a suitable place, a certain plat or space which may be sufficient for a messuage for her. Bract. fol. 97 b. In the corresponding passage in Fleta, the word is written placea, (q. v.)

A wide place; a court yard. 1 Ld. Raym. 607, arg. A barn-yard. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 9.

PLAY. L. Fr. In old English law. A plea, or action. Si le play soit ailleurs que en nostre court; if the plea be elsewhere than in our court. Britt. c. 26. Sicome play de dette et de covenaunt; as a plea of debt and of covenant. Id. ibid. Pendaunt le play. Id. c. 27. Comencement del play. Id. c. 46. Obligacion est —mere de play; obligation is the mother of an action. Id. c. 28.

PLAYE. L. Fr. [from Lat. plaga.] In old English law. A wound. Et puis vist le coroner, et les jurors ove luy, voer le cors, et les playes et les coupes; and then shall the coroner go, and the jurors with him, to view the body, and the wounds, and the strokes [or marks of blows.] Britt. c. 1.

PLE. L. Fr. In old English law. A plea or suit. Les ples le roy; the pleas of the crown. Mirr. c. 4. 9 Co. pref. v.

A plea, (pleading.) Ceo n'est ple; this is no plea. Yearb. T. 18 Hen. VI. 2. Le ple est double. H. 8 Hen. VI. 13.

PLEA. [L. Fr. plee, ple, play; L. Lat. placitum; Sax. pleo, pleoh, from pleah, loss, peril, according to Spelman.] In old English law and practice. A suit or action. This sense of the word has been preserved in modern declarations, in which the plaintiff complains of the defendant "of a plea (L. Lat. de placito, that is in action) of debt," or whatever the form of action may be. See De placito. It is preserved, also, in the phrase "to hold plea," which still occurs in the books.

An allegation made by a party in a cause; a pleading.* Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (1.) That which either party alleges for himself in court. Cowell. See Plead.

In a stricter sense. An allegation of fact in a cause, as distinguished from a demurrer. Steph. Plead. Appendix, Note (26.) See Plead.

In modern practice. An answer or allegation of fact which a defendant, in an action at law, opposes to the plaintiff's declaration. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (26.) The word has obtained this sense by a process of gradual restriction of meaning, which may also be observed in the successive definitions of placitum, the corresponding Latin word.

In equity practice. A special answer, showing or relying upon one or more things, as a cause why the suit should be either dismissed, or delayed, or barred. Mitford's Chanc. Pl. 219. Story's Eq. Plead. § 649.

PLEA IN ABATEMENT. In practice. A plea which goes to abate the plaintiff's action, that is, to suspend or put it off for the present. 3 Bl. Com. 301. Called, also, a dilatory plea, (q. v.)

PLEA IN BAR. In practice. A plea which goes to bar the plaintiff's action, that is, to defeat it absolutely and entirely. 1 Burr. Pr. 162. 3 Bl. Com. 303. Anciently termed a bar, (q. v.)

PLEAD. [L. Fr. pleder; L. Lat. placitare, qq. v.] Originally and radically,—to litigate; to carry on a plea, (suit.) This sense appears in the L. Lat. placitare, and L. Fr. pleder, (qq. v.) and is preserved in the word implead, which is still used.

In a stricter sense,—to conduct that part of an action which consisted in the allegations of the respective parties.* To make allegation in a cause. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Notes (1,) (18.) See Pleading. This, when the pleadings were oral, seems to have corresponded very closely with the modern popular sense of the word, (to argue at the bar, or address a jury.)

In a still stricter sense,—to make an allegation of fact in a cause. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (26.) It is a general rule of pleading, that a party, at each successive stage of the process, must demur or plead to the allegation of his adversary. Id. 138.

In the strictest sense,—to make that allegation of fact, on the part of a defendant, which follows and is opposed to *the plaintiff's declaration. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (26.) In practice, the plaintiff is said to declare, the defendant to plead, the plaintiff to reply, &c.

PLEADER. [L. Fr. pleador, pledor; O. Fr. pleideoir; L. Lat. placitans advocatus.] A person professionally employed to manage another's cause for him, particularly to plead orally, or argue for him in court. The use of professional pleaders or advocates may be traced, among some of the continential nations, to a period extremely remote. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (8.) In the Assizes of Jerusalem, the term pleader (pledeoir) is used as nearly synonymous with counsel, (conseill.)

PLEADING. In common law practice. The process of making allegation in a cause, consisting of a series of written statements proceeding from the parties in alternate order, and so adapted to each other as to develop of themselves the essential point in controversy, or subject for the decision of the court, which is termed the issue.

That stage of the proceedings in an action, which commences when the defendant has appeared, and terminates with the production of an issue between the parties.

That peculiar system or science of statement established in the common law of England, consisting of a variety of rules, (with accompanying forms,) by which the allegations of the respective parties are so regulated as to produce a single, certain and material issue between the parties, and to produce it with the least delay and confusion. Steph. Pl. 1. Id. 123—137, et per tot.

In equity. The formal method of placing the statements of the respective parties to a suit before the court; a less technical procedure than pleading at law, the substance of the statements being regarded rather than their precise verbal form.

PLEADINGS. [L. Lat. placita.] The individual allegations of the respective parties to an action at common law, proceeding from them alternately, in the order and under the distinctive names following: the plaintiff's declaration, the defendant's plea, the plaintiff's replication, the defendant's rejoinder, the plaintiff's sur-rejoinder, the defendant's rebutter, the plaintiff's surrebutter; after which they have no distinctive names.

In equity. The formal written allegations or statements of the respective parties in a suit, to maintain or defeat it; consisting of the plaintiff's bill, the defendant's answer, and the plaintiff's replication. Story's Eq. Pl. § 4, and note.

PLEAS OF THE CROWN. [L. Lat. placita coronæ.] In English law. Criminal prosecutions. So called, because conducted at the suit of the crown.* 3 Bl. Com. 40.

Criminal law. The title of several standard works on criminal law, as Hale's Pleas of the Crown, Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, and others.

PLEBEYOS. Span. [from Lat. plebeius, from plebs, q. v.] In Spanish law. Commons; those who exercise any trade, (arte,) or who cultivate the soil. White's New Recop. b. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 6, and note.

PLEBISCITUM. Lat. In the Roman law. A law enacted by the plebs or commonalty, (that is, the citizens, with the exception of the patricians and senators,) at the request, or on the proposition of a plebeian magistrate, such as a tribune; (quod plebs, plebeio magistratu interrogante, (veluti tribuno,) constituebat.) Inst. 1. 2. 4. Tayl. Civ. Law, 197.

PLEBS. Lat. In the Roman law. The commonalty, or citizens, exclusive of the patricians and senators. Plebis appellatione, sine patriciis et senatoribus, cæteri cives significantur. Inst. 1. 2. 4. Dig. 50. 16. 238, pr.

PLEDABLE. L. Fr. That may be brought or conducted, as an action, or plea, as it was formerly called. Britt. c. 32. See Pleder.

PLEDER. L. Fr. In old English law. To plead; to conduct an action. La forme et la manere de pleder parsonels plees pledables par attachments de cors; the form and the manner of pleading personal pleas pleadable by attachments of the body. That is, the manner of conducting personal actions which may be brought by attachment. Britt. c. 32.

PLEYNTYFE. L. Fr. [from pleyndre, to complain.] In old English law. Plaintiff; a plaintiff; a complaining party. Nul jugement ne se poit faire de meyns que de iii persones, cestasaver, de un juge, de un pleyntyfe, et de un defendaunt; no judgment (or judicial action in a suit) can take place with less than three persons, that is to say, a judge, a plaintiff and a defendant. Britt. c. 22.

This is the form of the word as it occurs throughout Britton. In the Year Books it is commonly written pleintife. In Littleton and the older reports in French, it is written plaintife, which has been converted into the modern word plaintiff, by the mere change of a letter. Litt. sect. 195. Dyer, 55, et passim. Plaintife is used throughout the older editions of Coke's commentary on Littleton, as an English word. Britton applies the word to the complaining party in an appeal and in a real action. Britt. c. 22, 75.

PLEYTO. Span. [from L. Lat. placitum?] In Spanish law. The pleadings in a cause. White's New Recop. b. 3, tit. 7.

PLUMBUM. Lat. In the civil law. Lead. Dig. 50. 16. 242. 2.

PLURAL. [Lat. pluralis, from plus, pluris, more.] Containing more than one; consisting of two or more; designating two or more. Webster.

Pluralis numerus est duobus contentus. The plural number is contained in two. 1 Rol. R. 476. It is a rule of construction, that where a statute speaks of a thing as a right, in the plural number, the singular is included. Co. Litt. 369 a. Kent, C. 20 Johns. R. 693, 727.

PLURALITER. L. Lat. In the plural. 10 East, 158, arg.

PLURIES. Lat. In practice. Oftentimes; many times; frequently. The emphatic word of a clause inserted in the Latin forms of writs which issued in the third instance, after a first and second (or alias) writ of the same kind had been already issued without effect. Præcipimus tibi, (sicut PLURIES præceperimus) quod, &c.: We command you, (as we have often times commanded you,) that, &c. This clause has been literally translated, with the rest of the form, in modern writs, and the word pluries retained as the name both of the clause and the writ itself; the writ being in such case termed a pluries writ. 1 Tidd's Pr. 147. Bracton and Fleta use the word sæpius, which is identical in meaning: Præcipimus tibi sicut SÆPIUS præceperimus, &c. Bract. fol. 441 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 67, § 4. In the Register, the pluries clauses in writs are brought in by way of recital, thus: Rex vic. salutem. Cum PLURIES tibi præceperimus quod, &c.; The king to the sheriff, greeting: Whereas we have many times commanded you, that, &c. Reg. Orig. 77 b, et passim.

PLURIS PETITIO. Lat. In Scotch practice. A demand of more than is due. Bell's Dict.

PLURISVE. Lat. In the civil law. Or more. This expression was held to import not an indefinite, but a small amount. Dig. 50. 16. 192.

Plus peccat author quam actor. The originator or instigator of a crime is a worse offender than the actual perpetrator of it. 5 Co. 99 a, Flower's case. Applied to the crime of subornation of perjury. Id. ibid.

Plus valet unus oculatus testis quam auriti decem. One eye-witness is of more weight than ten ear-witnesses, (or those who speak from hearsay.) 4 Inst. 279.

This maxim (or regula juris, as Lord Coke terms it,) is merely a line from Plautus, slightly varied:

> Pluris est oculatus testis unus, quam auriti decem:
> Qui audiunt audita dicunt: qui vident, plane sciunt.
> Truculentus, Act ii. Scen. vi.

(One eye-witness is worth more than ten ear-witnesses; they who hear, say what they hear; they who see, know clearly.)

PLUSORS. L. Fr. Many; several. Kelham.

PO. LO. SUO. An old abbreviation of the words ponit loco suo, used in warrants of attorney. Towns. Pl. 431. 1 Instr. Cler. 12.

POACHING. In English criminal law. The unlawful entry upon land, for the purpose of taking or destroying game; the taking or destruction of game upon another's land, usually committed at night. Steph. Crim. Law, 119, et seq. 2 Steph. Com. 82. 4 Id. 307. The term seems to be rather a popular than a legal one.

POBLADOR. Span. In Spanish law. A colonizer; he who peoples; the founder of a colony. 11 Howard's R. 624, arg.

POCKET RECORD. A statute so called. Brownl. (part 2,) 81.

POCKET SHERIFF. In English law. A sheriff appointed by the sole authority of the crown, without the usual form of nomination by the judges in the exchequer. 1 Bl. Com. 342. 3 Steph. Com. 23.

POLICE. Fr. Policy; a policy. Police d'assurance; a policy of insurance; the contract of insurance. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 6, art. 2.

POLICE DE CHARGEMENT. Fr. In French law. A bill of lading. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 2.

POLICY. [from Ital. polizza, a note or memorandum in writing.] The written form in which a contract of insurance is expressed; a written instrument expressive of a contract of insurance, and by the execution of which the insurance is effected; a contract of insurance formally expressed in writing.* A mercantile instrument in writing, by which one party, in consideration of a premium, engages to indemnify another against a contingent loss, by making him a payment in compensation, whenever the event shall happen by which the loss is to accrue. 2 Steph. Com. 172. See 3 Kent's Com. 257. 14 Howard's R. 362.

POLETRIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Poultry. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 87.

POLL. [Lat. caput.] A head; an individual person. More commonly used in the plural. See Polls.

POLL. [L. Fr. polle.] Cut or shaved smooth or even; cut in a straight line, without indentation. A term anciently applied to a deed, and still used, though with little of its former significance. 2 Bl. Com. 296. See Deed poll.

To POLL. In practice. To single out, one by one, of a number of persons. To examine each juror separately, after a verdict has been given, as to his concurrence in the verdict. 1 Burr. Pr. 238.

POLLS. [Lat. capita, q. v.] Heads; individuals; persons singly considered. A challenge to the polls, (in capita,) is a challenge to the individual jurors composing the panel, or an exception to one or more particular jurors. 3 Bl. Com. 358, 361.

POLLARDS. A foreign coin of base metal, prohibited by statute 27 Edw. I. c. 3, from being brought into the realm, on pain of forfeiture of life and goods. 4 Bl. Com. 98. It was computed at two pollards for a sterling or penny. Dyer, 82 b.

A species of trees. Ambl. 134.

POLLICITATIO. Lat. [from pollicitare, to promise.] In the civil law. A promise, without mutuality. Dig. 50. 12. 3. Grotius de Jur. Bel. lib. 2, c. 11, § 3.

POLL-MONEY. [Lat. capitatio.] A tax ordained by act of parliament 18 Car. 2, c. 1, by which every subject in the kingdom was assessed by the head or poll, according to his degree. Cowell. A similar personal tribute was more anciently termed poll-silver. Id.

POLL-TAX. A tax levied by the head or poll; a capitation tax. Webster. A tax laid, in some of the United States, upon all male inhabitants of the state between certain ages. Rev. Stat. of Mass. (ed. 1836,) c. 7, § 1.

POLYGAMIA. Græco-Lat. [from Gr. πολὺς, many, and γάμος, marriage.] In old English law. Polygamy, (q. v.) Polygamia est plurium simul virorum uxorumve connubium; polygamy is the marriage of several husbands or wives at the same time. 3 Inst. 88.

POLYGAMY. [from Gr. πολὺς, many, and γάμος, marriage.] In criminal law. Literally, the marrying of many. The offence of having several wives or husbands at the same time; or more than one wife or husband at the same time. 3 Inst. 88. See Polygamia.

Polygamy is enumerated among offences by Lord Coke, but in modern law the term has been dropped, and bigamy, a term of the canon law, expressive of a different and merely spiritual offence, has been substituted in its place. See Bigamy.

ΠΟΛΥΣΗΜΑ, Πολύσημα. Gr. [from πολὺς, many, and σῆμα, a sign.] Of many significations. Grot. de Jur. Bell. lib. 2, c. 16, § 4.

POMARIUM. L. Lat. [from pomum, an apple.] In old English law. An apple-tree. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 2.

In old pleading. An orchard. Cro. El. 854.

POND is defined by Callis, "a standing ditch cast by labour of man's hand, in his private grounds, for his private use, to serve his house and household with necessary waters; but a pool is a low plat of ground by nature, and is not cast by man's hand." Callis on Sewers, [82,] 103.

Ponderantur testes, non numerantur. Witnesses are weighed, not counted; that is, they are estimated by the weight or importance of their testimony, and not by their number. 1 Stark. Evid. 554. Mr. Best suggests that testimonia or probationes would be better than testes, as the rule is clearly not confined to verbal evidence. Best on Evid. 426, § 389.

PONDUS. Lat. In old English law. Poundage; literally, weight. A duty anciently paid to the king, according to the weight and measure of merchants' goods. Pat. 1 Hen. III. m. 10. Cowell.

PONDUS REGIS. Lat. In old English law. The king's weight; the standard weight appointed by the king. Cowell. 1 Bl. Com. 276.

PONE. Lat. (Put.) In English practice. The name of a writ by which the proceedings in an action in the county court may be removed into one of the superior courts. 3 Bl. Com. 34, 36, 195. So called from the initial word of the mandate of the writ: Pone, ad petitionem petentis, coram justitiariis nostris, &c. loquelam quæ est in comitatu tuo, &c.; Put, at the request of [the demandant,] before our justices, &c. the plaint which is in your county court, &c. Reg. Orig. 6. 3 Bl. Com. Appendix, No. i. sect. 3.

PONE. Lat. (Put.) In English practice. The name given to the writ of attachment which formerly issued, on the non-appearance of a defendant at the return of the original writ, to compel his appearance. 3 Bl. Com. 280. So called from the initial word of the mandate of the writ; Pone per vadium et salvos plegios G. de E. quod sit coram, &c.; Put by gage and safe pledges, G. of E. that he be before, &c. Reg. Jud. 1. 3 Bl. Com. Appendix, No. iii. sect. 2. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 12. This writ is still retained in the action of replevin. 3 Steph. Com. 666.

PONERE. L. Lat. In old English law. To put. A word of constant occurrence, and very various signification.

To put upon; to lay; to impose or assess, as an amercement or tax. Nulla prædictarum misericordiarum ponatur nisi per sacramentum proborum et legalium hominum, &c.; none of the aforesaid amercements shall be assessed, unless by the oath of good and lawful men, &c. Magna Charta, c. 14. Nullum tallagium vel auxilium ponatur seu levetur; no tallage or aid shall be imposed or levied. Stat. de Tallagio non Concedendo, c. 1.

To put to; to compel. Ponere ad legem; to put to his law; to compel to wage his law. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 5. Id. c. 63, § 10. Mag. Cart. cited ibid.

To put upon; to rest upon or submit to, as a defendant did upon a jury. Ponit se super patriam; he puts himself upon the country. Bract. fol. 137 b. Ponit se super linguas vestras; puts himself upon your tongues; rests his fate upon your words. Id. fol. 143 b. Et inde ponat se super juratam; and thereof he should put himself upon the jury. Id. fol. 192 b. Said of the plaintiff. Id. ibid. Ponit se inde in Deo et magna assisa; put himself thereof on God and on the grand assise. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 39, § 1.

To put under; to place under liability; as to put under pledge, or "by" pledge, in the ancient phrase. Pone per vadium et salvos plegios; put by gage and safe pledges. See Pone. Ponere per ballium; to put by bail. Rot. Cl. 1 Edw. I. m. 7.

To put or place, in the sense of removal, as from one court to another. Pone coram justitiariis, &c. loquelam, &c.; put before the justices, &c. the plaint, &c.; that is, remove it. See Pone.

To put upon; to place among; to record one's name with others as a juror. De non ponendis in assisis; for not putting on assises. The titles of several old writs. Reg. Orig. 179. F. N. B. 165.

To put in; to put in the place; to substitute. Ponit loco suo; puts in his place.

To put; to set or let. Ad firmam ponere; to put or let to farm.

To put or set to; to affix, as a seal to an exception. See Apponere.

To put, fix or assign; to give or assign a day. Tunc ponant ei diem à die visus sui; then shall they assign him a day from the day of viewing him. Bract. fol. 352 b. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 10, § 17.

To put off, or postpone. Ponere in respectum; to put in respite. Mem. in Scacc. H. 22 Edw. I. Jurata ponitur in respectum; the jury is put in respite. Towns. Pl. 429. Ponatur judicium usque ad bancum; the judgment shall be put off to the bench. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 9, § 4.

PONTAGE. [L. Lat. pontagium, from pons, a bridge.] In old English law. A tax or contribution towards the maintenance or repair of bridges. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 25. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 1, § 16.

A toll for passing a bridge. Cowell. Spelman.

POOL. [Lat. stagnum.] A standing water, without any current or issue. Callis on Sewers, [82,] 102. See Pond.

POPULAR ACTION. An action for a statutory penalty or forfeiture, given to any such person or persons as will sue for it; an action given to the people in general. 3 Bl. Com. 160. See Actio popularis.

POPULISCITUM. L. Lat. In Roman law. An enactment, law or ordinance made by the populus, or whole Roman people; an ordinance made by the comitia centuriata. Adam's Rom. Ant. 193. The proper technical term, however, was lex. Inst. 1. 2. 4. Taylor's Civ. Law, 177, 178.

POPULUS. Lat. In the Roman law. The people; the whole body of the citizens, including, with the plebs or commonalty, the patricians and senators; (appellatione populi universi cives significantur, connumeratis etiam patriciis et senatoribus.) Inst. 1. 2. 4.

POR. L. Fr. For. An old form of pour. Por ce; for this; therefore. Kelham. Por quei; wherefore. Id.

PORT. [from Lat. portus, q. v.] A place for the importation, (bringing in,) and exportation, (carrying out,) of goods and merchandise. This seems to be the radical sense of the word. See Portus. 2 Inst. 148.

A place for the lading and unlading of the cargoes of vessels, and the collection of duties or customs upon imports aud exports. A place, either on the sea-coast, or on a river, where ships stop for the purpose of loading and unloading, from whence they depart, and where they finish their voyages. Curia Philippica, p. 456, n. 35, cited in 7 Martin's (La.) R. 81, N. S. These are the ordinary senses of the word in modern law. See cases of particular construction, 1 Phillips on Ins. 461, et seq.

 Port and harbour are frequently used in law as synonymous terms, a quality derived from the Lat. portus, which undoubtedly expressed the ideas of both. In strictness, however, a clear distinction exists between them; harbour properly denoting the geographical or natural position of a place; port, its civil or artificial character. A harbour is provided by nature for the accommodation or shelter of vessels; a port is established by law for the reception of cargoes. Harbour physically includes port, as the more general term; and ports in fact are almost invariably located in harbours. See 9 Metcalf's R. 377, 378. Hubbard, J. Every port may, therefore, be called a harbour, but every harbour is clearly not a port. A port, according to Lord Hale, is a haven and somewhat more. It is "quid aggregatum, consisting of somewhat that is natural, viz. an access of the sea, whereby ships may conveniently come; safe situation against winds, where they may safely lie, and a good shore where they may well unlade; somewhat that is artificial, as keys and wharves, and cranes and warehouses, and houses of common receipt; and something that is civil, viz. privileges and franchises, viz. jus applicandi, [the right of mooring,] jus mercati, [the right of market,] and divers other additaments given to it by civil authority." Hale, De Portubus Maris, pars 2, c. 2. See 15 East, 295.

PORT. Fr. In French maritime law. Burthen (of a vessel.) Ord. Mar. liv. 1, tit. 10, art. 3.

Size and capacity. Id. liv. 1, tit. 14, art. 2.

PORTARE. L. Lat. In old English practice. To bear; to bring. Portare assisam; to bring an assise. Bract. fol. 177. The term "bring" is used in modern practice, in the same figurative sense. "To bring an action" is an every day phrase.

PORTARI. Lat. In the civil law. To be carried. Distinguished from ferri. Dig. 50. 16. 235.

PORTATICA. L. Lat. In old English law. Port-duties. Hale de Jur. Mar. pars 2, (de port. mar.) c. 6.

PORTENTA IN LEGE. Lat. Monstrosities in law; unheard of positions. Bacon's Arg. Low's case of Tenures, Works, iv. 239.

PORTEOUS, Portuous, Portuis. O. Sc. [from portando, carrying.] In old Scotch practice. A roll or catalogue containing the names of indicted persons, delivered by the justice-clerk to the coroner, to be attached and arrested by him. Otherwise called the Porteous Roll. Bell's Dict. Skene de Verb. Signif. A roll under this name is still regularly made up for each circuit. 1 Pitc. Cr. Trials, part 2, p. 34, note.

Porteous, portuass, porthouse or portase, generally denoted a breviary or mass-book, from its being portable. Id. ibid.

PORTER. L. Fr. [from Lat. portare,

q. v.] To bear. Porter record; to bear record. Britt. fol. 2 b. En cqurte que porte record; in a court which bears record; in a court of record. Id. c. 47. Porter foy; to bear faith. An expression in the old oath of fealty. Britt. c. 29. Reg. Orig. 303. Porter date; to bear date. 1 And. 3. Portant date. Dyer, 93 b.

To bring. Port action; brought action, 1 And. 3. En dett port. Id. 4. Une feme porta briefe de dower; a woman brought a writ of dower. Yearb. T. 1 Edw. III. 1.

Porter and portare were usually applied to writs, and arrainer and arrainare to assises.

PORTGREVE, Portreeve. [L. Lat. portgrefius, portgrevius; from Sax. portgerefa, from port, and gerefa, a reeve, bailiff or presiding officer.] In old English law. The chief officer of a port. Spelman.

The chief officer of a town or city, especially a sea-port town. The chief magistrate of London (now mayor) was called portgreve in the time of William the Conqueror. Spelman. Cowell. See Mayor.

PORTIONER. In Scotch law. The proprietor of a small feu or portion of land. Bell's Dict.

PORTORIUM. L. Lat. [from porta, a gate.] In old European law. A tax or toll levied at the gates of cities, for the reparation of roads. Spelman.

A tax levied at ports; a port duty; Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 8, sect. 6.

PORTMOTE. Sax. [from port, and gemote, a meeting.] In old English law. A court held in ports or haven towns, and sometimes in inland towns also. Cowell. Blount.

PORTUFORIUM. L. Lat. In Scotch practice. Porteous; the porteous or porteous roll, (q. v.) 1 Pitc. Crim. Trials, part 2, p. 34, note.

PORTUS. Lat. [from portare, to carry.] In the civil law. An enclosed place where merchandises are brought in, or imported, and whence they are carried out, or exported; (conclusus locus quo importantur merces, et inde exportantur.) Dig. 50. 16. 59.

An enclosed and protected station [for vessels?] (statio conclusa atque munita.) Id. ibid. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 8, sect. 1.

 The very brief terms in which these definitions are expressed, hardly serve to convey an adequate idea of the meaning of the word. Portus is said to have originally denoted a ware-house, built with particular reference to safety against fire and robbery, (domus mercium reponendarum causâ ita exstructa, ut ab incendiis furtisque tutior securiorque esset,) and standing at a distance from other buildings, (sejuncta ac munita a cæteris contiguis ædificiis;) called insula, from the latter circumstance, and called portus, from portare, to carry, with reference to the carrying in, (importando,) and carrying out (exportando,) of the goods from it. Calv. Lex. Hence the term was afterwards used metaphorically, to denote a safe station for vessels and their cargoes. Id. ibid. Portus, however, clearly occurs in the sense of a natural harbour or haven, in early Roman writers.

Est in secessu longo locus: insula portum
Efficit objectu laterum: quibus omnis ab alto
Frangitur, inque sinus scindit sese unda reductos.
Virg. Æneid. i. 159.

Far in a deep recess, an island's sides
A harbor form against the advancing tides:
Here every sea-wave breaks, and in smooth bays divides.

POSER. L. Fr. To put; to set at; to put a question. Kelham. Et jeo pose; and I put. Yearb. H. 8 Hen. VI. 7.

POSITIVE LAW. Law specifically ordained and adopted for the government of society, as distinguished from natural law.* The sum of those principles which are acknowledged in a state as principles of law, and consequently have authority as such. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 2, § 3.

POSITIVI JURIS. L. Lat. Of positive law. "That was a rule positivi juris; I do not mean to say an unjust one." Lord Ellenborough, 12 East, 639.

POSITO. L. Lat. Put; suppose. Coke, arg. 2 Leon. 176. Keilw. 68.

Posito uno oppositorum, negatur alterum. One of two opposite positions being affirmed, the other is denied. 3 Rol. R. 422.

POSSE. Lat. To be able; to be possible.

Possibility. A thing is said to be in posse, when it may possibly be; in esse, when it actually is. Cowell. Wharton's Lex.

Ability; power. Pro posse suo; to the extent of his power. Bract. fol. 19 b.

A force; a number of persons summoned to assist a sheriff in the execution of process. See Posse comitatus.

POSSE COMITATUS. L. Lat. The power or force of the county. The entire population of a county above the age of fifteen, which a sheriff may summon to his assistance in certain cases; as to aid him in keeping the peace, in pursuing and arresting felons, &c. 1 Bl. Com. 343. The most common instances of the use of this power in England, have been in cases where a possession has been kept upon a forcible entry, or any force or rescue used contrary to the command of the king's writ, or in opposition to the execution of justice. Cowell. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 39. Assumpto secum posse comitatus sui in propria persona fac' executionem præcepti regis; having taken with him the power of his county, shall in proper person make execution of the king's precept. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 68, § 2.

This power is impliedly given by the Constitution of the United States. Federalist, No. 29.

The term posse balliviæ, (power of the bailiwick) occurs in the old books. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 1.

POSSESSIO. Lat. [from possidere, to possess.] In the civil law. That condition of fact under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure, to the exclusion of all others. This condition of fact is called detention, and it forms the substance of possession in all its varieties. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 234, § 229.

This definition is not approved by the learned editor of Mackeldey, who, in an elaborate note on the passage, gives his reasons for dissenting from it. It appears, however, to be more simply and intelligibly expressed than most of the civil law definitions of the word, which, in attempting to give the abstract essence of possession, are often involved in metaphysical subtleties, tending rather to obscure than to illustrate.

 The old civilians, (Paulus in the Digests, quoting Labeo,) derived possessio from pedibus, (the feet,) making it to be a sort of position, or putting down, (quasi positio,) and assigning as the reason, quia naturaliter tenetur ab eo qui ei insistit, (because possession of a thing is naturally held by him who stands upon it.) Dig. 41. 2. 1, pr. Hence the word was commonly analyzed pedum positio, a placing of the feet. The etymology was adopted, with the word itself, by Bracton, and from its peculiar adaptation to the old English idea of the seisin of land, took deep root in the terminology of that branch of the law. 3 Co. 42 a, Ratcliff's case. Through this channel it has found its way even into American law, and the phrase pedis positio (or pedis possessio) is frequently used in our reports to denote an actual corporeal possession, or a mere naked possession without right. The derivation, however, is no doubt radically incorrect, the true component elements of possessio, (or rather the verb possidere, from which it has been formed,) being ponere sedem, to place or fix the seat or abode, though even this is more significant in its application to real than to personal property. According to some, this was, in fact, the etymology given by the Roman jurists themselves, already named, pedibus being considered as a corrupt reading of sedibus. See 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 237, § 229, note. The Lyons ed. of the Corpus Juris, A. D. 1627, has sedibus, and the same reading is adopted in the Kriegel editions now in use. But this supposition weakens the force of insistit, (stands upon,) in the explanation given in the Digests, besides being inconsistent with the uniform current of pedis positio, and pedum positio, through the old English books.

POSSESSIO. Lat. In old English law. Possession; seisin. The detention of a corporeal thing by means of a physical act and mental intent, aided by some support of right; (corporalis rei detentio, i. corporis et animi, cum juris adminiculo concurrente.) Bract. fol. 38 b. See Fleta, lib. 3, c. 15, § 1.

 Bracton treats possessio and seisina as synonymous, and considers possession under a multitude of subdivisions; as civil, (civilis) which was retained only by intention (animo;) natural, (naturalis,) which was held only by the physical act, (corpore;) rightful, (justa,) and wrongful, (injusta;) true, (vera,) and imaginary or fictitious, (imaginaria;) naked, (nuda,) where a person had no right in the thing nor any spark of right, but only a bare placing of the feet, (tantum nudam pedum positionem;) that is, a mere foothold or standing; clothed, (vestita,) as with right, title or prescription; with many others. There was also one kind which consisted of some degree of possession but no right, (aliquid possessionis sed nihil juris) as the possession of a guardian or creditor; another kind which consisted of a good deal of possession and a little right, (multum possessionis et parum juris,) as the possession of an ancestor who died seised, another having the mere right; another kind which consisted of a great deal of possession and some right, (plurimum possessionis et aliquid juris,) as where one held land for a term by the grant of a person who demised it to him, but did not die seised; and a fourth kind, consisting of much possession and much right, (multum possessionis et multum juris,) as where one had the mere right in a thing, and the property of the fee, and the freehold with seisin, but of which he did not die seised. Bract. fol. 39.

POSSESSIO BONORUM. Lat. In the civil law. The possession of goods. More commonly termed bonorum possessio, (q. v.)

POSSESSIO FRATRIS. Lat. In the law of descent. Possession of a brother; an elliptical expression, signifying, in its full meaning, the kind of possession by a brother which would make his sister of the whole blood his heir, in preference to a brother of the half blood. See the maxim infra. Hence it is used in the books to denote the doctrine of the exclusion of the half blood from the succession to estates; a doctrine which, in England, has recently been abolished by statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106. 1 Steph. Com. 385—391. See Broom's Max. 233—235, [404.] And see, as to American law, 4 Kent's Com. 386—389.

Possessio fratris de feodo simplici facit sororem esse hæredem. The brother's possession of an estate in fee simple, makes the sister to be heir. Litt. sect. 8. Co. Litt. 15 b. 3 Co. 41 b, Ratcliff's case. The possession of a brother makes his sister of the whole blood his heir, in preference to a brother of the half blood. See Broom's Max. 233, [404.] This was a rule in the English law of descent down to a late period, and is best illustrated by the example given by Blackstone. If a man had two sons, A. and B. by different venters or wives, these two brethren were not brethren of the whole blood, and, therefore, according to a leading canon of descent, should never inherit to each other, but the estate should rather escheat to the lord. Nay, even if the father died, and his lands descended to his eldest son A. who entered thereon, and died seised without issue; still B. should not be heir to this estate, because he was only of the half blood to A. the person last seised, but it should descend to a sister, (if any,) of the whole blood to A. 2 Bl. Com. 227. See Possessio fratris.

POSSESSION. [from Lat. possessio, from possidere, to possess; from ponere, to put, and sedes, seat.] The state of having a corporeal thing in one's hands or power, or under one's control; or, in the words of the civil law definition,—that condition of fact under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure, to the exclusion of all others. See Possessio.

Possession expresses the closest relation of fact that can exist between a corporeal thing and the person who possesses it, implying either (according to its strict etymology,) an actual physical contact, as by sitting (or, as some would have it, standing) upon a thing; or the power to bring into such contact at pleasure. Thus, the possessor of land is, strictly, one who has actually taken up his residence (qui posuit sedem) upon it; the possessor of a chattel, one who either has it upon, or near his person, or within his reach.

Possession is generally considered in the common law under two leading aspects, viz.: as united with right, and as held without reference to, or in opposition to right; a simple division, which clears the subject of much of the subtlety and intricacy which mark the civilians' mode of treating it. See Possessio.

The elements of the word possession (ponere sedem) would seem to indicate that the term was originally applied chiefly to landed property; and the derivation, ponere pedem, expresses this idea yet more strongly. See Possessio. In the common law, however, possession has always been confined in its application to goods or chattels, seisin being the term invariably used to denote the possession of a freehold estate. See Seisin.

Possession is used in some of the books, in the sense of property. "A possession is an hereditament or chattel." Finch's Law, b. 2, ch. 3.

POSSESSION MONEY. In English practice. An allowance made to the person whom a sheriff puts in possession of goods taken under a writ of fieri facias. Holthouse.

POSSESSOR. Lat. and Eng. One who possesses; one who has possession. See Possessio, Possession.

POSSESSORIUS. L. Lat. [from possessor, q. v.] In old English law. Possessory. In jure possessorio. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 9.

POSSESSORY. Relating to possession; founded on possession; contemplating or claiming possession. See infra.

POSSESSORY ACTION. In practice. An action claiming possession, or the right of possession; an action brought to recover possession. The old writs of entry and assise were actions merely possessory, serving only to regain the possession of lands, but deciding nothing with respect to the right of property. 3 Bl. Com. 180.

In admiralty practice, a possessory suit is one which is brought to recover the possession of a vessel, had under a claim of title. 5 Mason's R. 465. 1 Kent's Com. 371.

An action founded on possession. Trespass for injuries to personal property is called a possessory action, because it lies only for a plaintiff who, at the moment of the injury complained of, was in actual or constructive immediate and exclusive possession. 1 Chitt. Pl. 168, 169.

POSSESSORY JUDGMENT. In Scotch practice. A judgment which entitles a person who has uninterruptedly been in possession for seven years, to continue his possession until the question of right be decided in due course of law. Bell's Dict.

POSSIBILITAS. Lat. In old English law. Possibility; a possibility. Possibilitas post dissolutionem executionis nunquam reviviscatur; a possibility will never be revived after the dissolution of its execution. 1 Rol. R. 321. After a possibility has become executed, it will not be revived by a dissolution of the estate, as by a divorce after intermarriage. Post executionem statûs, lex non patitur possibilitatem; after the execution of an estate, the law does not suffer a possibility. 3 Bulstr. 108.

POSSIBILITY. An uncertain event; a contingency which may or may not happen. An estate founded on such contingency. Of this there are various kinds.

A bare possibility is one that is not coupled with an interest; as that a son may inherit to his father who is living. This is not considered as an estate in law. 1 Steph. Com. 216. 4 Kent's Com. 262. 13 Wendell's R. 178. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 76.

A possibility coupled with an interest, is where the person, who is to take an estate upon the happening of a contingency, is ascertained and fixed. Id. ibid. 4 Kent's Com. 261, 262.

A near or common possibility is such as death, or death without issue, or coverture. 4 Kent's Com. 206.

A remote possibility is such as a remainder to the heirs of a person not in being.* Id. ibid.

POSSIDERE. Lat. [from ponere, to place, and sedes, seat.] To possess. A distinction was made in the civil law, and adopted by Bracton, between possidere, (to possess,) and esse in possessione, (to be in possession.) Aliud est possidere, longe aliud in possessione esse. Dig. 41. 2. 10. 1. Longe aliud est possidere quam esse in possessione. Bract. fol. 167 b. Thus, a guardian, holding in demesne though not in fee, was said to be in possession, though he did not possess. The same language was applied to a bailiff, (procurator,) a domestic, (servus proprius,) a fermor or lessee, (firmarius,) and a tenant at will from day to day, and from year to year. Id. ibid. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 3, § 1.

POSSUMUS. Lat. [from possum, posse, to be able.] We can; we can or may do. Id possumus quod de jure possumus. We can do that which we can do by law. Lane, 116. When we speak of what we can do, we mean what we can do lawfully. Mere physical ability to do an act is not regarded in law.

POST CONQUESTUM. L. Lat. After the Conquest. Bract. fol. 7. Words first used in the titles of the kings of England by Edw. III. A. D. 1328, in order to distinguish the Edwards after the Conquest from those before it. Cowell. Blount.

POST DIEM. Lat. In pleading. After the day. See Solvit post diem.

In old practice. The return of a writ after the day assigned. Cowell. A fee paid in such a case. Id.

POST-FACTUM, or POSTFACTUM. Lat. An after-act; an act done afterwards; a post-act.

Post, in this compound word, is an adverb, having the full sense of afterwards; the word itself being the correlative of antefactum, a fore-act, or previous act. Utrum ne in post-facta—an etiam in ante-facta. A. Gell. Noct. Att. lib. xvii. c. 7. In the derived phrase ex postfacto, however, post has generally been treated by those who have attempted to translate it, not only as a distinct word, but as a preposition governing facto, in violation of one of the simplest rules of grammar. See Ex postfacto.

POST FINE. In old conveyancing. A fine or sum of money, (otherwise called the king's silver,) formerly due on granting the licentia concordandi, or leave to agree, in levying a fine of lands. It amounted to three-twentieths of the supposed annual value of the land, or ten shillings for every five marks of land. 2 Bl. Com. 350.

POST LITEM MOTAM. L. Lat. After suit moved, or commenced. Depositions in relation to the subject of a suit, made after litigation has commenced, are sometimes so termed. 1 Stark. Evid. 319.

After dispute moved; after controversy stirred or begun; after dispute has arisen. In questions of pedigree, it is a rule that declarations made post litem motam are not admissible in evidence; that is, declarations made after a dispute has arisen, out of which a suit has grown, will be excluded. Hubback's Evid. of Succession, 660. Berkley Peerage case, 4 Camp. 401. The line of distinction in such cases is the origin of the controversy, and not the commencement of the suit. Mansfield, C. J. Id. 417.

POSTMAN. In English practice. The senior barrister attending constantly at the bar of the Court of Exchequer, who had the privilege of moving there before the king's Attorney and Solicitor-General and all his majesty's counsel. Bunb. pref. note.

Bunbury, the reporter, had been many years postman at the Exchequer bar. Id. pref.

POST MORTEM. Lat. After death. A name given to inquisitions anciently taken after the death of tenants in capite. Hubback's Evid. of Succession, 584. Now commonly applied to examinations of a dead body by a coroner.

POST-NATUS, (or POSTNATUS.) Lat. After-born. A second son was so called in old English law, as distinguished from the eldest. Est consuetudo in quibusdam partibus, quod postnatus præfertur primogenito et è contrario; it is a custom in some parts, that an after-born son is preferred to the first-born, and è contra. Bract. fol. 76. See Id. fol. 33. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 9.

Born after a particular period or event. Postnati (after-born persons) is used in the books, as the correlative of antenati, to denote the subjects of Scotland born after the union of the crowns, and Americans and British subjects born in the United States after the declaration of independence. 7 Co. 1, Calvin's case. 2 Kent's Com. 56—59. Lord Bacon's Argument, Case of the Postnati of Scotland, Works, iv. 319, 334, 344.

POST NOTE. In mercantile law. A note payable at a future day, as distinguished from a note payable on demand. A note made and issued by a bank or banking association, payable at a future day, and designed as a part of its circulating medium. 22 Penn. St. R. 479. In New-York, notes of this kind are declared illegal. 3 Denio's R. 70. 3 Barbour's R. 226. See 3 Comstock's R. 21.

POST OBIT BOND. [Lat. post obitum, after death.] A bond given by an expectant, to become due on the death of a person from whom he will have property. Wharton's Lex.—A bond or agreement given by a borrower of money, by which he undertakes to pay a larger sum, exceeding the legal rate of interest, on or after the death of a person from whom he has expectations, in case of surviving him. Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Vesey, 125. 1 White's Equity Cases, 344. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 342. These contracts are discouraged by the courts, who hold a strict hand over them.

POST TERMINUM. L. Lat. (After term, or post-term.) The return of a writ, not only after the day assigned for its return, but after the term also, for which a fee was due. Cowell. The fee itself. Id.

POSTEA. Lat. (Afterwards.) In practice. The name given to the entry, on record, of the proceedings on the trial of a cause, including the verdict of the jury; so called from the word (postea) with which it commenced when the proceedings were in Latin; and which has been literally translated in the modern forms: "Afterwards, that is to say," &c. Steph. Pl. 87. 3 Bl. Com. 386. In form, it is the return made by the judge who tried the cause, to the court in banc, of what took place at the trial. In English practice, it is first entered on the back of the nisi prius record, and is the ground upon which judgment is afterwards entered.

POSTERIORITY. [L. Lat. posterioritas.] In old English law. A coming after, or being behind; the correlative of priority. A man holding of two lords, was said to hold of the more ancient lord by priority, and of the later lord by posteriority. Staundf. Prær. Reg. 10, 11. Cowell.

POSTERITY. [Fr. postérité; Lat. posteritas, from posterus, from post, after.] Descendants; those who come after. Declared, by the civil code of Louisiana, to comprehend all the descendants in the direct line. Art. 3522, num. 26.

POSTHUMOUS CHILD. [Lat. posthumus, from post, after, and humus, earth, or humatus, buried.] A child born after the death of its father. 2 Bl. Com. 169. Posthumous children of an intestate inherit in all cases, in like manner as if they were born in the lifetime of the intestate, and had survived him. 4 Kent's Com. 412.

POSTLIMINIUM. Lat. [from post, after, and limen, a threshold.] In the civil law. The return or restoration of a person to a former estate or right; sometimes Englished postliminy. A fiction applied in the case of a person who had been taken a prisoner by an enemy, and afterwards returned from captivity, by which he was supposed never to have been abroad, and was on this ground restored to his former rights. Postliminium fingit eum qui captus est in civitate semper fuisse; postliminy supposes that he who was taken prisoner had always been in the state. Inst. 1. 12. 5. See Dig. 49. 15.

Postliminium included things as well as persons. Paulus, in the Digests, defines it to be jus amissæ rei recipiendæ ab extraneo, et in statum pristinum restituendæ, inter nos ac liberos populos regesque moribus, legibus constitutum. Nam quod bello amisimus, aut etiam citra bellum, hoc si rursus recipiamus dicimur postliminio recipere; (the right of receiving a lost thing from a foreigner, and of restoring it to its former state, established between us and free nations and kings, by customs and by laws. For whatever we have lost in war, or even not in war, if we receive it again, we are said to receive it postliminio.) Dig. 49. 15. 19, pr.

Postliminium is thus analyzed and explained in the Institutes. It is called postliminium from limen, (threshold,) and post, (after.) Wherefore we properly say of one who was taken by an enemy, and afterwards came into our borders or limits, that he has returned postliminio. For as the threshold of a house makes, as it were, the limit or boundary of it, so the ancients chose to call the boundary or border of the empire its threshold. Hence limen (a threshold) came to be used in the sense of a limit, (finis,) and boundary, (terminus.) And hence the word postliminium was framed, and used to signify that a person had returned to the same threshold which he had lost; (ab eo postliminium dictum est, quia ad idem limen revertebatur quod amiserat.) So that now a prisoner who is recovered from an enemy and returns home, is supposed to have returned in postliminy, [that is, in the way explained.] Inst. 1. 12. 5.

POSTLIMINIUM. Lat. In the law of nations. A right which arises from a return in limen, that is, to the borders of one's country. Grotius De Jur. Bell. lib. 3, c. 9, § 2. A term derived from the Roman law, and extensively used in public law. See its etymology explained by Grotius De Jur. Bell. lib. 3, c. 9, § 1. See his whole chapter, De Postliminio. The term is used in maritime law. See Loccenius de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 4.

POSTNUPTIAL SETTLEMENT. A settlement made after marriage upon a wife or children; otherwise called a voluntary settlement. 2 Kent's Com. 173.

POSTULARE. Lat. In the Roman law. To ask or demand; to ask of a judicial tribunal, (pro tribunali petere.) Dig. 39. 2. 4. 8. See Postulatio.

To accuse or denounce. Dig. 3. 1. Calv. Lex.

POSTULATIO ACTIONIS. Lat. In the Roman law. The demand of an action; the request made to the prætor by an actor or plaintiff, for an action, or formula of suit; corresponding with the application for a writ in old English practice. Adam's Rom. Ant. 243. Or, as otherwise explained, the actor's asking of leave to institute his action, on appearance of the parties before the prætor. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 9, num. 12.

POTENTIA. Lat. [from potens, able, from posse, to be able.] In old English law. A possibility. Potentia propinqua; a near or common possibility. 2 Bl. Com. 169. Potentia remotissima; a most remote or improbable possibility. Id. 170.

Power. Potentia debet sequi justitiam, non antecedere. Power ought to follow justice, not go before it. 3 Bulstr. 199, Coke, C. J.

Potentia inutilis frustra est. Useless power is to no purpose. Branch's Pr.

Potest quis renunciare pro se, et suis, juri quod pro se introductum est. One may relinquish for himself and his [heirs,] a right which was introduced for his own benefit. Bract. fol. 20.

POTESTAS. Lat. Power; a power. The word potestas, in Roman law, had several significations; in the person of magistrates, it was called imperium; in the person of children, patria potestas; in the person of a slave, dominium. Dig. 50. 16. 215.

Potestas stricte interpretatur. A power is strictly interpreted. Jenk. Cent. 17, case 29, in marg.

Potestas suprema seipsam dissolvere potest, ligare non potest. Supreme power can dissolve, [unloose] but cannot bind itself. Branch's Pr. Bacon.

Potior est conditio defendentis. The condition of a defendant is the better one. Where both parties are equally in fault, the defendant has the better case, or will be favored in preference to the plaintiff. Lord Mansfield, Cowp. 343. See In pari delicto, &c.

Potior est conditio possidentis. The condition of the party in possession is the better. Where the right or the fault between two parties is equal, the party in possession is favored or preferred. See In æquali jure, &c., In pari causa, &c., In pari delicto, &c.

POULTRY COUNTER, (or COMPTER.) The name of a prison formerly existing in London. 2 Mod. 306. 6 Id. 247. See Counter.

POUND. [from Sax. pund; Lat. libra.] A standard weight, consisting either of twelve ounces, called troy weight, or of sixteen ounces, called avoirdupois weight. See Troy weight, Avoir du pois, Libra.

In New-York, the unit or standard of weight, from which all other weights shall be derived and ascertained, is declared to be the pound, of such magnitude that the weight of a cubic foot of distilled water, at its maximum density, weighed in a vacuum with brass weights, shall be equal to sixty-two and a half such pounds. 1 N. Y. Rev. St. [607,] 617, § 8.

POUND. [L. Lat. parcus.] An enclosure; an enclosed place in which cattle or goods distrained are shut up.* 3 Bl. Com. 12. A pound-overt is one that is open overhead; a pound-covert is one that is close, or covered over, such as a stable or other building.* Id. 13. But, according to Lord Coke, a pound is called open, because the owner may give his cattle meat and drink, without trespass to any other. Co. Litt. 47 b.

POUND BREACH. [L. Lat. parci fractio.] The act or offence of breaking a pound, for the purpose of taking out the cattle or goods impounded. 3 Bl. Com. 12, 146.

POUNDAGE. In practice. An allowance made to a sheriff upon the amount levied under an execution; estimated in England, and formerly in the United States, at so much on the pound.

In old English law. A subsidy to the value of twelve pence in the pound, granted to the king, of all manner of merchandise of every merchant, as well denizen as alien, either exported or imported. Cowell.

POUNT. L. Fr. [from Lat. pons.] In old English law. A bridge. Pountz; bridges. Britt. c. 51.

Pountage; pontage. A tax levied for the repair of bridges. Britt. c. 30.

POUR, Pur. L. Fr. For. Suffit à eux pur seisine pour la proprete; it suffices them for seisin for the property. Britt. c. 37. Pour cheu ke (pour ceo que;) because. Kelham.

POUR AUTRE VIE. L. Fr. For another's life. Pur terme d'autre vie; for the term of another's life. Litt. sect. 56.

POURE, Pouer, Power, Povre. L. Fr. [from Lat. pauper.] Poor. Poure ou ryche; poor or rich. Britt. c. 68. Kelham.

POURE, Pouwer, Poer, Poeir, Poair. L. Fr. Power; force; strength; authority. Kelham.

POUR COMPTE DE QUI IL APPARTIENT. Fr. For account of whom it may concern. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 11, sect. 4, § 3. A phrase in insurance law.

POUR SEISIR TERRES, &c. L. Fr. (For seizing the lands, &c.) In old practice. A writ by which the king seized the land which the wife of a tenant in capite, deceased, had for her dower, if she married without his leave. Cowell.

POURCHASE. L. Fr. A purchase. Cowell. See Purchase.

POURPARTY. L. Fr. [L. Lat. propars, propartis, propartia.] In old English law. Division; a divided share. Literally, for, or as divided, (pour parti ;) a close translation of the Lat. phrase *pro diviso. To make pourparty, is to divide and sever the lands that fall to parceners, which, before partition, they held jointly and pro indiviso. Cowell.

POURPRESTURE, (or PURPRESTURE. [from L. Fr. pourpris, an enclosure.] The wrongful enclosing of another's property, or the encroaching or taking to one's self that which ought to be in common. Holthouse. A species of nuisance by erecting a house, or making an enclosure upon any part of a highway, or common street, or public water, or such like public things. Co. Litt. 277. 4 Bl. Com. 167. See Angell on Tide-waters, ch. 7, p. 198.

Glanville defines pourprestura to be "properly, when any occupation is wrongfully made upon the king, (quando aliquid super dominum regem injuste occupatur ;) as in the king's demesnes, or in public roads, by obstructing them, (vel in viis publicis obstructis ;) or in public waters, by turning them out of their proper channel, (vel in aquis publicis transversis a recto cursu ;) or when any one in a city occupies the king's highway by erecting some building upon it, (vel quando aliquis, in civitate, super regiam plateam, aliquid ædificando occupaverit ;) and generally, whenever any thing is done to the nuisance of the king's tenement, or of the king's way or city. Glanv. lib. 9, c. 11.

Crompton defines pourpresture to be "properly, when a man taketh unto himself or incroacheth any thing that he ought not, whether it be in any jurisdiction, land or franchise; and generally when any thing is done to the nuisance of the king's tenants." Crompt. Jurisd. fol. 152.

POURVEYANCE. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Fr. pourvoire, to provide.] In old English law. The providing corn, (grain,) fuel, victual and other necessaries for the king's house. Cowell. See Purveyance.

POURVEYOR. [from Fr. pourvoire, to provide.] In old English law. An officer of the king or queen, or other great personage, that provided corn (grain) and other victual for their house. Cowell. See Purveyor.

POUSTIE, Poistee. Sc. In Scotch law. Power. 1 Pitc. Crim. Trials, part 1, p. 162. See Liege poustie. A word formed from the Lat. potestas.

POVERS. L. Fr. In old English law. Poor persons. En primes, voit le roy que common droiture soit fait à touts, auxybien as povers come as riches, sans regard de nulluy ; in the first place the king wills that common justice be done to all, as well to the poor as to the rich, without regard to any (without respect of persons.) Stat. Westm. 1, c. 1.

POWER. [Lat. potestas, q. v.] An authority which one gives to another, either to act for him generally, or to do some specific act in his behalf; as to execute a deed, to make a contract, &c. See Power of attorney. An authority which enables one person to do an act for another. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 678.

An authority, as distinguished from an estate. 1 Steph. Com. 505.

In a technical sense. An authority enabling a person to dispose, through the medium of the statute of uses, of an interest, vested either in himself, or in another person. Sugden on Powers, 82. 6 Co. 17 b.—An authority expressly reserved to a grantor, or expressly given to another, to be exercised over lands, &c. granted or conveyed at the time of the creation of such power. Watkins on Conv. 157.—A proviso, in a conveyance under the statute of uses, giving to the grantor or grantee, or a stranger, authority to revoke or alter by a subsequent act the estate first granted. 1 Steph. Com. 505.—A right to limit a use. 4 Kent's Com. 316.—An authority to revoke a use first limited, or to declare a new one. 1 Steph. Com. ub. sup.

Powers are either mere powers of revocation, enabling the grantor simply to recall what he has bestowed, or powers of revocation and new appointment, authorizing the grantor, or some other person, to alter or make a new disposition of the estate conveyed. Id. ibid. All powers are, in fact, powers of revocation and appointment. Every power of appointment is strictly a power of revocation; for it always postpones, abridges or defeats, in a greater or less degree, the previous uses and estates, and appoints new ones in their stead. 4 Kent's Com. 315, 316. See 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 557, et seq.

POWER OF ATTORNEY. An instrument in writing, under seal, by which the party executing it appoints another to be his attorney, and empowers such attorney to act for him, either generally in all matters or business, or specially, to do some specified act or acts in his name and behalf. Formerly, and still occasionally, called a letter of attorney, (q. v.)

POY, Poi. L. Fr. Little; a little. Tout à poy; all but little; very nearly the same; almost the whole of. Kelham. Par poy et par poy; by little and little. Britt. c. 51. Un poy d'enk; a little ink. Kelham.

POYN, Poin, Poine, Poigne. L. Fr. [from Lat. pugnus, fist.] In old English law. Hand. Le rybaud perde son poyn dount il trespassa; the ruffian shall lose his hand, wherewith he has trespassed. Britt. c. 25.

POYND, Poind. Sc. In Scotch law. A distress; goods taken for a debt. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Namare.

POYNINGS' LAWS. A set of statutes enacted in the tenth year of Henry VII. (so called from Sir Edward Poynings being then lord deputy,) regulating the method of passing statutes in Ireland. 1 Bl. Com. 102. By another of these laws it was enacted that all acts of parliament, before made in England, should be of force within the realm of Ireland. Id. 103. 4 Inst. 351, 353.

P'P'M. A contraction of perpetuum. 1 Inst. Cler. 11.

PRACTICA. L. Lat. Practice; the practice of a court. Clerke's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 42.

PRACTICE. [L. Lat. practica, praxis, cursus curiæ.] The course of procedure in courts. The form and manner of conducting or carrying on, in the way either of prosecution or defence, of suits, actions and other judicial proceedings, at law or in equity, civil or criminal, through their various stages, according to the principles and regulations prescribed by law, or by the rules and decisions of the several courts.

In a general sense, practice includes pleading, though it is usually distinguished from it.

PRACTICE COURT. A court attached to the Court of Queen's Bench, and presided over by one of the judges of that court, in which points of practice and pleadings are discussed and decided. Holthouse. It originated from the Bail Court, formerly held by one of the judges, and is still most commonly called by that name. Id.

PRACTICKS. In Scotch law. The decisions of the Court of Session, as evidence of the practice or custom of the country. Bell's Dict.

PRÆBENDA. L. Lat. In old English law. A prebend. Bract. fol. 442 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 10; c. 69, § 3.

An allowance of fodder for horses and cattle. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 76, § 8.

PRÆCEPTORES. L. Lat. Masters. The chief clerks in chancery were formerly so called, because they had the direction of making out remedial writs. Crabb's Hist. Eng. Law, 184, 547. 2 Reeves' Hist. 251. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 12.

PRÆCEPTUM. L. Lat. [from præcipere, to command.] In old criminal law. Command. The act of an accessory who commands another to commit a crime. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 8.

PRÆCIPE. Lat. (Command.) In practice. An original writ, drawn up in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason why he had not done it. 3 Bl. Com. 274. So called from its initial word in the old Latin forms: Rex vicecomiti salutem: PRÆCIPE A. quod juste et sine dilatione reddat B. &c. The king to the sheriff, greeting. Command A. that justly and without delay he render to B. &c. Reg. Orig. 4. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 62, § 6, et seq.

A paper containing the particulars of a writ, filed in the office out of which it is to be issued, and intended as the clerk's instructions for making it out.

PRÆCIPE QUOD REDDAT. L. Lat. (Command—that he render.) In practice. Formal words in a præcipe, or original writ. See Præcipe.

PRÆCIPE QUOD TENEAT CONVENTIONEM. L. Lat. (Command—that he keep the covenant.) In conveyancing. A writ of covenant upon which fines were usually levied at common law. 2 Bl. Com. 350. 3 Id. 156.

PRÆCIPERE. Lat. To command.

The usual word of command in the mandates of the old writs. Mandare (to command,) is used only in some special cases. See Mandamus.

PRÆCIPIMUS. Lat. We command. An emphatic or initial word in most of the old Latin writs. Rex vic. (or A.) salutem: Præcipimus vobis (or tibi,) &c. Reg. Orig. 1, et passim.

PRÆCISE. L. Lat. Specifically. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 22.

PRÆCO. Lat. In the Roman law. A herald or crier. Adam's Rom. Ant. 189, 190.

In modern practice. The crier of a court. Bacon's Works, iv. 316.

PRÆD'. An abbreviation of prædictus. 6 Mod. 176.

PRÆDEDUCERE. L. Lat. [from præ, before, and deducere, to deduct.] In old practice. To deduct first, or in the first instance. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 10.

PRÆDIA. Lat. [pl. of prædium, q. v.] In the civil law. Lands; estates.

Prædia rustica; rural or country estates; estates or lands principally destined for the production of fruits. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 338, § 309.

Prædia urbana; city estates, especially dwelling-houses, whether situated in town or country, stables, walls, building sites, storehouses, granaries and the like. Dig. 50. 16. 198. Id. 8. 4. 1, pr. 1 Mack. Civ. Law, ub. sup. See Prædium urbanum.

PRÆDIA VOLANTIA. L. Lat. Volatile estates. A phrase mentioned by Blackstone, as applied, in the duchy of Brabant, to certain things moveable. 2 Bl. Com. 428.

PRÆDIAL, (or PREDIAL) SERVITUDE. [Lat. servitus prædiorum.] A right which is granted for the advantage of one piece of land over another, and which may be exercised by every possessor of the land entitled against every possessor of the servient land. It always presupposes two pieces of land (prædia,) belonging to different proprietors; one burdened with the servitude, called prædium serviens, and one for the advantage of which the servitude is conferred, called prædium dominans. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 335, § 306. Inst. 2. 3. Dig. 8. 1—6. Bract. fol. 220 b, 221. Schultes on Aquatic Rights, 26.

PRÆDICT'. An abbreviation of prædictus, (q. v.) 10 Mod. 305.

PRÆDICTUS, PRÆDICTA, PRÆDICTUM. L. Lat. In old pleading. Aforesaid; the aforesaid. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 21. A word of constant occurrence in old entries, and varied by different forms of abbreviation; as præd', prædict', p'dc'us, &c. Towns. Pl. 15. Hob. 117. 10 Co. 65. 1 Ld. Raym. 192.

Of the three words, idem, prædictus and præfatus, (all corresponding with the English said, and aforesaid,) idem was most usually applied to plaintiffs or demandants; prædictus to defendants or tenants, places, towns or lands; and præfatus to persons named, not being actors or parties. Towns. Pl. ub. sup. See 11 East, 508, arg. 12 Id. 559. Prædictus refers to the last antecedent. Comb. 461.

PRÆDIUM. Lat. In the civil law. Land; a piece of land; an estate. Called a nomen generale, including ager and possessio. Dig. 50. 16. 115.

Prædium rusticum; a rural or country estate; an estate or piece of land principally destined or devoted to agriculture; an empty or vacant space of ground without buildings. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 338, § 309, and Kaufmann's note.

Prædium urbanum; an urban or city estate; any other than a prædium rusticum; any building, whether in town or country, and whether used for a dwelling, or for business or farming purposes. Id. ibid. and note. Urbanum prædium non locus facit, sed materia. Dig. 50. 16. 198.

Prædium dominans; a dominant or ruling estate. See Prædial servitude.

Prædium serviens; a serving estate. See Id.

PRÆDIUM. Lat. In old English law. Estate; property. Applied to the estate or title of the king, as lord paramount of all the lands in the kingdom. Co. Litt. 1 b. See Dominicum directum.

PRÆDO. Lat. In the Roman law. A robber. See Dig. 50. 17. 126.

PRÆFATUS. L. Lat. In old pleading. Aforesaid. A word of very common use in old entries; sometimes abbreviated præfat', and p'fat'. 6 Mod. 176. See Prædictus.

PRÆFECTURÆ. Lat. In Roman law. Conquered towns, governed by an officer called a prefect, who was chosen in some instances by the people, in others, by the prætors. Butler's Hor. Jur. 29.

PRÆFECTUS. Lat. In the Roman law. A chief officer; a governor or commander. The title of various officers and magistrates. Dig. 1. 11. Id. 1. 12. Id. 1. 15. Cod. 1. 28. Calv. Lex.

In old English law. The chief officer of a hundred, and other divisions. Spelman, voc. Præpositus.

PRÆJUDICIALIS. Lat. [from præ, before, and judicare, to judge.] In the civil law. That which is to be pre-determined, or decided before something else. See Actio præjudicialis.

PRÆJUDICIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Prejudice; detriment; disparagement. Bract. fol. 19. Sine præjudicio melioris sententiæ; without prejudice to the better opinion. Id. fol. 48. A common phrase used by Bracton, when expressing his own opinion on any point.

PRÆMISSA. L. Lat. [from præmittere, to send before.] In old conveyancing. Things sent before; things mentioned, stated or recited before, præmisses or premisses. In modern phraseology, premises. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 10, § 1. See 1 Leon. 117. See Premises.

PRÆMIUM PUDICITIÆ. Lat. The price of chastity; or compensation for loss of chastity. A term applied to bonds and other engagements given for the benefit of a seduced female. Sometimes called premium pudoris. 2 Wils. 339, 340.

PRÆMUNIRE. L. Lat. In English law. To forewarn, or summon. Præmuniantur omnes de comitatu; all persons of the county shall be forewarned. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 19, § 1. Used indifferently with præmonere. Partibus præmonitis; the parties being summoned. Id. ibid.

The name of an offence against the king and his government, though not subject to capital punishment. So called from the words of the writ which issued preparatory to the prosecution: Præmunire facias A. B. quod sit coram nobis, &c.; cause A. B. to be forewarned, that he appear before us to answer the contempt with which he stands charged. 4 Bl. Com. 103. Co. Litt. 129 b.

The statutes establishing this offence, the first of which was made in the thirty-first year of the reign of Edward I., were framed to encounter the papal usurpations in England; the original meaning of the offence called præmunire being the introduction of a foreign power into the kingdom, and creating imperium in imperio, by paying that obedience to papal process which constitutionally belonged to the king alone. Id. 110, 115. The penalties of præmunire were afterwards applied to other heinous offences. Id. 116, 117. 4 Steph. Com. 215—217.

PRÆNOMEN. Lat. Fore-name, or first name. The first of the three names by which the Romans were commonly distinguished. It marked the individual, and was commonly written with one letter; as A. for Aulus; C. for Caius, &c. Adam's Rom. Ant. 35. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 9. Butler's Hor. Jur. 28.

PRÆNOTARIUS. L. Lat. In old English law. Prothonotary. A clerk of the Court of Common Bench. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 36. Id. lib. 4, c. 9, § 2.

Præpropera consilia raro sunt prospera. Hasty counsels are rarely prosperous. 4 Inst. 57.

PRÆPOSITUS. Lat. [from præponere, to put first, or set over.] In old English law. One who was set over others; a chief or presiding officer. The sheriff was the præpositus of the county. LL. Edw. Sen. c. 11. 3 Bl. Com. 36.

Præpositus ecclesiæ; a church-reeve, or warden. Spelman. In Scotch law, the head of a collegiate church. Bell's Dict.

Præpositus hundredi; a hundredary. Spelman.

Præpositus villæ; a town-reeve, (Sax. tungerif.) Id. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 39, § 2.

Præpositus manerii; the overseer of a manor. An officer under the ballivus, (bailiff.) Fleta, lib. 2, c. 76. Called, in law French, provost, (q. v.) LL. Gul. Conq. l. 6, and note.

PRÆSCRIPTIO. Lat. [from præscribere, to write before, (to draw a line before?) to fix a limit.] In the civil law. That mode of acquisition whereby one becomes proprietor of a thing on the ground that he has for a long time possessed it as his own; prescription. Dig. 41. 3. 1 Mackeld.

Civ. Law, 290, § 276. It was anciently distinguished from usucapio, (q. v.) but was blended with it by Justinian. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 6, § 438.

PRÆSCRIPTIO. Lat. In old English law. Prescription. Præscriptio est titulus ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens, ab auctoritate legis; prescription is a title deriving its substance from use and [length of] time, under the authority of law. Co. Litt. 113 a.

PRÆSENS. Lat. [plur. præsentes.] Present. Præsens in curia; present in court. 2 Salk. 544. Præsentes litteræ; the present letters. See Presents. Sciant præsentes et futuri; Know those who are present, and those who are to be. Bract. fol. 34 b.

PRÆSENTIA. Lat. [from præsens, present.] Presence. Præsentia corporis tollit errorem nominis, et veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. The presence of the body, [or corporeal thing itself,] removes [or cures] error of the name; and the truth of the name removes [or cures] error of demonstration or description. Bacon's Max. 96, reg. 25. This maxim is based upon three degrees of certainty, mentioned by Lord Bacon; presence, (præsentia,) name, (nomen,) and demonstration or reference, (demonstratio;) "whereof the presence the law holdeth of greatest dignity, the name in the second degree, and the demonstration or reference in the lowest." Id. ibid. The maxim itself is composed of two parts or branches, which may be separately considered.

Præsentia corporis tollit errorem nominis. The presence of a body, person, or thing, removes [the effect of] error of [in the] name [of it.] If the object of a contract be present, an error in the name does not vitiate it. 2 Kent's Com. 557. Thus, "if I give a horse to J. D. being present, and say unto him, 'J. S. take this,' this is a good gift, notwithstanding I call him by a wrong name." Bac. Max. ub. sup. For the presence of the grantee gives a higher degree of certainty to the identity of the person, than the mention of his name. 2 Kent's Com. ub. sup. "So if I say unto J. S. here, I give you my ring with the ruby, and deliver it with my hand, and the ring bear a diamond, and no ruby, this is a good gift, notwithstanding I name it amiss." Bac. Max. ub. sup.

Veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. The truth of the name or denomination of a thing removes [takes away or obviates the effect of] error in the demonstration [addition or description] of it. If the subject of a contract be once properly and certainly named, a falsity of addition or demonstration, that is, of additional description, will not prejudice it. Thus, "if I grant my close, called Dale, in the parish of Hurst, in the county of Southampton, and the parish likewise extendeth into the county of Berkshire, and the whole close of Dale lieth in the county of Berkshire, yet, because the parcel is especially named, the falsity of the addition hurteth not." Bacon's Max. 100. See 2 Kent's Com. 557. 1 Edw. Ch. R. 189. See Falsa demonstratio non nocet. A maxim frequently applied in the construction of wills. 8 Taunt. 313.

PRÆSES. Lat. In the Roman law. A president, or governor. Dig. 1. 18. 1. Called a nomen generale, including pro-consuls, legates, and all who governed provinces. Id. ibid.

PRÆSIDIUM. Lat. In the civil law. A guard; a fortress; a defence, aid or shelter. See Infra præsidia.

In records of the middle ages,—all household stuff or effects, including particularly gold and silver. Spelman. Every kind of property, real as well as personal, (omnis vis bonorum, tam immobilium quam mobilium.) Id.

PRÆSTARE. Lat. In old English law. To pay, give or render; to make or execute; to perform. See Præstatio. Præstitit sacramentum; made oath, or took an oath. T. Raym. 34. 2 Ld. Raym. 1376. Mem. in Scacc. P. 16 Edw. I.

To make good. Præstare tenetur quodcunque damnum obveniens in mari; [the insurer] is bound to make good any loss happening on the sea. 3 Kent's Com. 291.

In old European law. To lease, or let to farm. Chart. Alaman. 75. Spelman.

PRÆSTARIA, Præstarium. L. Lat. In old European law. A lease or farm, (elocatio, dimissio.) Spelman.

The instrument of letting or leasing, (charta elocationis vel dimissionis.) Id.

The land itself, let or leased; a farm land; (prædium ipsum, elocatum vel dimissum.) Id.

Præstat cautela quam medela. Prevention is better than cure. Co. Litt. 304 b. "As it is in physick, for the health of a man's body, so it is in remedies, for the safety of a man's cause." Id. ibid.

PRÆSTATIO. L. Lat. [from præstare, q. v.] In old English law. A payment or giving; such as a relief (relevium) and a heriot, (heriettum.) Fleta, lib. 3, c. 17, § 1. Id. c. 18. Sometimes Englished prestation, (q. v.)

PRÆSUMERE. Lat. [from præ, before, and sumere, to take.] In civil and old English law. To take before; to presume; to anticipate. See Præsumptio, Presumption.

PRÆSUMITUR. Lat. It is presumed; the presumption is. Præsumatur; it should be presumed; the presumption should be.

Præsumatur pro justitia sententiæ. The presumption should be in favor of the justice of a sentence. Mascard. de Prob. concl. 1237, n. 2. Best on Evid. Introd. 42.

Præsumitur pro legitimatione. The presumption is in favor of legitimacy. 1 Bl. Com. 457. 5 Co. 98 b, Bury's case.

PRÆSUMPTIO. Lat. [from præsumere, (q. v.) Gr. προληψις.] In civil and old English law. Presumption; a presumption. See the definitions in Burr. Circ. Ev. 10, note (a.) Præsumptio probabilis; probable presumption. Co. Litt. 6 b. Præsumptio levis; light or slight presumption. Id. ibid. Called levior, (slighter.) Hub. Præl. Jur. Civ. lib. 22, tit. 3, n. 15. Præsumptio violenta; violent or strong presumption. Co. Litt. ub. sup.

Præsumptio violenta plena probatio. Strong presumption is full proof. Co. Litt. 6 b.

Præsumptio violenta valet in lege. Strong presumption is of weight in law. Jenk. Cent. 56, case 3.

PRÆSUMPTIO FORTIOR. Lat. A strong (literally, stronger) presumption (of fact.) One which determines the tribunal in its belief of an alleged fact, without, however, excluding the belief of the possibility of its being otherwise; the effect of which is to shift the burden of proof to the opposite party, and if this proof be not made, the presumption is held for truth. Hub. Præl. J. C. lib. 22, tit. 3, n. 16. Burr. Circ. Ev. 66.

PRÆSUMPTIO HOMINIS. Lat. The presumption of the man or individual; that is, natural presumption unfettered by strict rule. Heinec. ad Pand. pars 4, s. 124.

PRÆSUMPTIO JURIS. Lat. A presumption of law; the ordinary kind of presumption, in which the law assumes the existence of something, until it is disproved by evidence; a conditional, inconclusive or rebuttable presumption. Best on Evid. 40, § 43. Best on Presump. 20, § 17. 1 Greenl. Evid. § 33.

PRÆSUMPTIO JURIS ET DE JURE. Lat. A presumption of law, and from law, that is, a presumption inferred by law from premises of law. Defined by Alciatus, "dispositio legis aliquid præsumentis, et super præsumpto, tanquam sibi comperto, statuentis;" a disposition of law which presumes something, and upon such presumption, as though ascertained to itself, determines. Alc. Tract de Præs. pars 2, n. 3. "It is called præsumptio juris," says Menochius, "because it is a presumption made by law, and de jure, because the law holds for truth the presumption thus made, and establishes a fixed right upon it." Menochius de Præs. lib. 1, quæst. 3, n. 17. Best on Presumptions, 20, § 17. Called, by the common lawyers, an irrebuttable presumption; an inference which the law makes so peremptorily, that it will not allow it to be overturned by any contrary proof, however strong. Thus, where a cause has once been regularly adjudicated upon by a competent tribunal, from which there either lies no appeal, or the time for appealing has elapsed, the whole matter assumes the form of res judicata, and evidence will not be admitted, in subsequent proceedings between the same parties, to show that decision erroneous. Id. ibid. So, an infant under the age of seven years, is not only presumed incapable of committing felony, but the presumption cannot be rebutted by the clearest evidence of a mischievous discretion. 1 Hale's P. C. 27. 4 Bl. Com. 23. See 1 Greenl. Evid. § 15. Burr. Circ. Ev. 46.

PRÆTEXTUS. Lat. [from prætexere, to cover.] In old English law. A pretext; a pretence or color. Prætextu cujus; by pretence, or under pretext whereof. 1 Ld. Raym. 412.

Prætextu liciti non debet admitti illicitum. Under pretext of legality, what is illegal ought not to be admitted. Wingate's Max. 728, max. 196.

PRÆTOR. Lat. [from præire, to go before.] In the civil law. The chief judicial magistrate among the Romans, who exercised an extensive equity jurisdiction. Hallifax, Anal. lib. 3, c. 8, num. 2. Dig. 1. 14. Cod. 1. 39. Adam's Rom. Ant. 128. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 20, § 30. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. §§ 5, 50.

PRAY IN AID. In old English practice. To call upon for assistance. In real actions, the tenant might pray in aid, or call for assistance of another, to help him to plead, because of the feebleness or imbecility of his own estate. 3 Bl. Com. 300. See Aid-prayer.

PREAMBLE. [from Lat. præ, before, and ambulare, to walk, or go.] The introduction or commencement of a statute, setting forth, by way of recital, the intention of the legislature in framing it, the circumstances which occasioned its passage, &c. In English statutes, it commences with the word "Whereas." In the old French statutes, it commonly began with "Pur ceo que," (forasmuch as,) and in the Latin, with "Quia," "Cum," or words of similar import. See Sedgwick on Stat. & Const. Law, 54—57.

PRE-AUDIENCE. The right of being heard before another. A privilege belonging to the English bar, the members of which are entitled to be heard in their order, according to rank, beginning with the Queen's attorney-general, and ending with barristers at large. 3 Bl. Com. 28, note. 3 Steph. Com. 387, note.

PREBEND. [Lat. præbenda, from præbere, to supply.] In English ecclesiastical law. A stipend or revenue;* that portion which every member or canon of a cathedral church receives, in the right of his place, for his maintenance. Cowell. It is neither a dignity nor a benefice. 5 Taunt. 2.

PREBENDARY. [Lat. præbendarius, from præbenda, q. v.] In English ecclesiastical law. One that has a prebend, (q. v.) Cowell. The stipendiary of a cathedral or collegiate church. Webster.

PRECARIÆ, or PRECES. L. Lat. In old English law. Days' works, which the tenants of some manors were bound, by reason of their tenure, to do for the lord in harvest. Vulgarly called bind-days, which Spelman supposes to be a corruption of biden-days, which in Saxon answered to dies precariæ, (literally, pray-days, or prayed-days,) the Sax. biden signifying to pray. Spelman. Cowell.

PRECARIUM. Lat. [from precari, to pray.] Precarious; held as it were by mere entreaty; depending on the will and pleasure of another. Precarium nomen; a precarious title. Cowell. See Jus precarium.

In the civil law. A gratuitous loan upon request, in which the lender grants the use of the subject in express words, revocable at pleasure. Dig. 43. 26. Bell's Dict.

PRECATORY WORDS. Words of entreaty, request, desire, wish or recommendation, employed in wills, as distinguished from direct and imperative terms. 1 Williams on Exec. 88, 89, and note. Sometimes held to create a trust. 1 Jarman on Wills, [334,] 332.

PRECEDENT. [from Lat. præcedens, from præcedere, to go before.] That which goes before, or takes place before. See Condition precedent.

PRECEDENTS. Authorities to be followed in courts of justice. A term particularly applied to judicial decisions upon points of law arising in any given case. 1 Kent's Com. 475, 476. These are recognized in equity as well as at law. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 18. The old books are full of expressions in support of precedents. See Jenk. Cent. viii. See Stare decisis.

Written forms of proceedings which have been approved by the courts, or by long professional usage, and are to be (usually strictly) followed.* Steph. Pl. 392. Lord Bacon observes that there are political as well as legal precedents. Works, iv. 354.

President (q. v.) occurs as a form of this word, in the old books.

PRECEPT. [from Lat. præceptum, from præcipere, to command.] In practice. A command in writing; a species of writ or process.

In English law. A process issued by a justice of the peace, or other like officer, for the bringing of a person or records before him. Cowell.

A direction sent by the sheriff, under seal, to the proper returning officers of cities and boroughs, commanding them to elect their members to parliament. 1 Bl. Com. 177.

In American practice. A process issued under seal, by the district attorney of a county, to the sheriff, commanding him to summon a jury, &c. 2 N. Y. Rev. St. [206,] 133, §§ 37, 38.

A process in the nature of an attachment against a person. 1 Burr. Pr. 339.

PRECEPT. In Scotch law. An order, mandate or warrant to do some act. The precept of seisin was the order of a superior to his bailie, to give infeftment of certain lands to his vassal. Bell's Dict.

PRECEPT. In old French law. A kind of letters issued by the king in subversion of the laws, being orders to the judges to do or tolerate things contrary to law. Esprit des Loix, liv. 31, c. 2.

PRECEPT. [L. Lat. præceptum, q. v.] In old English criminal law. Instigation or commandment to commit a crime. Bract. fol. 138 b. Cowell.

PRECES. Lat. In the Roman law. Prayers. One of the names of an application to the emperor. Tayl. Civ. Law, 230.

PRECIUM. Lat. In old English law. Price. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 21. See Pretium.

PRECLUDI NON, (or Precludi non debet, ought not to be barred.) In pleading. The commencement of a replication to a plea in bar, being in the following words:—"says that, by reason of any thing in the said plea alleged, he ought not to be barred from having and maintaining his aforesaid action against him the said defendant, because he says," &c. Steph. Pl. 398. So called, from the emphatic words in the old Latin forms, of which the modern form is a translation.

PRECOGNOSCE. Sc. [from Lat. præcognoscere.] In Scotch practice. To examine beforehand. Arkley's R. 232.

PRECOGNITION. In Scotch practice. Preliminary examination. The investigation of a criminal case, preliminary to committing the accused for trial. 2 Alison's Crim. Pract. 134.

PRE-CONTRACT. A contract made before another contract, but having relation especially to marriages. Cowell. 1 Bl. Com. 434.

PREDECESSOR. Lat. and Eng. [from præcedere, to go before.] One who goes or has gone before; the correlative of successor. Applied to a body politic or corporate, in the same sense as ancestor is applied to a natural person. Termes de la Ley, voc. Ancestor. See Ancestor, Antecessor.

In Scotch law. An ancestor. 1 Kames' Equity, 371.

PREDIAL (or PRÆDIAL.) [Lat. prædialis, from prædium, land.] That which arises or comes from the ground.

PREDIAL (or PRÆDIAL) TITHES. [L. Lat. decimæ prædiales.] In English ecclesiastical law. Tithes arising from the profits of lands, as of corn, (grain,) grass, hops and wood. 2 Bl. Com. 24.

PRE-EMPTION. [Lat. præ-emptio, from præ, before, and emptio, a buying.] In English law. The first buying of a thing. A privilege formerly enjoyed by the crown, of buying up provisions and other necessaries, by the intervention of the king's purveyors, for the use of his royal household, at an appraised valuation, in preference to all others, and even without consent of the owner. 1 Bl. Com. 287.

In American law. A privilege enjoyed by government in relation to Indian lands. Congress have the exclusive right of pre-emption to all Indian lands lying within the territories of the United States. 8 Wheaton's R. 543. 1 Kent's Com. 257.

PREE, Pre, Preæ. L. Fr. [from Lat. pratum, q. v.] A meadow. Arrer les prees; to plough the meadows. Britt. c. 5. Dyer, 33. Finch uses pree as an English word. Law, b. 1, ch. 3, num. 27.

PREIGNOTHORY. O. Eng. [L. Lat. pregnotarius.] In practice. Prothonotary. 3 Leon. 48, 128.

PREJUDICE. [from Lat. præjudicium, from præ, before, and judicare, to judge.] Literally, a judging beforehand; a judging before examination.

Detriment; damage; loss.

PREMISES, (properly PREMISSES, from Lat. præmissa, q. v.) Literally, things put before, or stated before; matter previously stated or set forth.

In conveyancing. One of the formal and orderly parts of a deed or conveyance, consisting of all that precedes the habendum; including the date, the parties' names and descriptions, the recitals, (if any,) the consideration and the receipt thereof, the grant, the description of the things granted, and the exceptions, (if any.) See 2 Bl. Com. 298. 1 Steph. Com. 449. Shep. Touch. 75. Burton's Real Prop. 167, 168. Cruise's Dig. tit. xxxii. ch. 21. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 333. The office of this part of the deed is said to be, "rightly to name the grantor and grantee, and to comprehend the certainty of the thing granted." Shep. Touch. ub. sup. Co. Litt. 6 a.

In modern conveyancing, the word premises is also used to denote merely the thing demised or granted by the deed. This departure from the proper meaning of the word is noticed by Sheppard. Shep. Touch. 75. It seems to have occurred at a very early period. See Fleta, lib. 3, c. 10, § 1. In the expression, "messuage or dwelling-house, and premises," the word "premises" may include another messuage. 3 M. & S. 169.

The subject matter insured in a policy. 4 Campb. 89.

PREMIUM. [from Lat. præmium, reward.] The sum paid or agreed to be paid by an assured to the insurers, as the consideration for the insurance; being a certain rate per cent. on the amount insured. 1 Phillips on Ins. 205. 3 Kent's Com. 253.

The price of a risk. See Prime.

PRENDA. Span. In Spanish law. Pledge. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 7.

PRENDER. L. Fr. [from prendre, from Lat. prehendere, to take.] Taking; the power or right of taking a thing before it is offered. A thing was said to lie in prender, where it was something to be taken by the party to be entitled to it, such as estovers in woods; and to lie in render, where it was something to be paid or rendered to the party by another, such as rent. See the difference between these explained in Brownl. & Goldsb. 35.

PRENDER DE BARON. L. Fr. In old English law. A taking of husband; marriage. An exception or plea which might be used to disable a woman from pursuing an appeal of murder against the killer of her former husband. Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 3, c. 59.

PREROGATIVE. [from Lat. prærogativa, from præ, before, and rogare, to ask.] Literally, the privilege of being asked first; or, according to Blackstone, something that is required or demanded before, or in preference to all others.

In English law. That special pre-eminence which the king [or queen] has over and above all other persons, in right of his [or her] regal dignity. A term used to denote those rights and capacities which the sovereign enjoys alone, in contradistinction to others. 1 Bl. Com. 239.

This term is usually derived from the Lat. prærogativa or prærogativus, which was used among the Romans to denote a precedence among the centuries or tribes in voting, or the privilege of voting first; the century or tribe which had such privilege being so called from præ, before, and rogare, to ask or give a vote. Adam's Rom. Ant. 97. Crabb's Hist. Eng. Law, 204. According to Lord Coke, prerogative denotes, in its proper sense, the privilege of the royal assent to acts passed by the houses of parliament, which must be asked and obtained before such acts can become laws. Co. Litt. 90 b.

PREROGATIVE COURT. In English law. A court established for the trial of all testamentary causes, where the deceased had left bona notabilia within two different dioceses; in which case, the probate of wills belonged to the archbishop of the province, by way of special prerogative. And all causes relating to the wills, administrations or legacies of such persons were originally cognizable herein, before a judge appointed by the archbishop, called the judge of the Prerogative Court; from whom an appeal lay to the privy council. 3 Bl. Com. 66. 3 Steph. Com. 432.

The name of a court in the state of New-Jersey. Rev. Stat. tit. 7, c. 4.

PREROGATIVE WRIT. In practice. A writ issued upon some extraordinary occasion, and for which it is necessary to apply by motion to the court; a writ not issuing as of mere course, without showing some probable cause why it should be granted. 3 Bl. Com. 132. The writs of procedendo, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, habeas corpus and certiorari belong to this class. 3 Steph. Com. 681, et seq.

Prerogative writs have also been distinguished from writs ministerially directed, viz. those issued to the sheriff; the prerogative writs being generally directed to no sheriff or minister of the court, but to the public or private parties whose acts are the subject of complaint. 2 Burr. 855. 3 Steph. Com. 681, note.

PRESBYTER. Lat. [from Gr. πρεσβύτερος, elder, from πρεσβύς, old.] In civil and ecclesiastical law. An elder; a presbyter; a priest. Cod. 1. 3. 6, 20. Nov. 6.

PRESCRIBE. To claim, or allege a title to a thing, on the ground of long or immemorial usage.* A person is said to prescribe that he and his ancestors have used, time out of mind, to have common of pasture in such a close, which is called prescription in a man and his ancestors. 3 Bl. Com. 264. Or he is said to prescribe that he, and all those whose estate (L. Fr. que estate,) he has, have used for such length of time to have common, &c.; which is technically called prescribing in a que estate. Id. 264, 265.

PRESCRIPTION. [from Lat. præscriptio, q. v.] A mode of acquiring title to property by long and continued usage.* A title acquired by use and time to incorporeal hereditaments, such as a right of way, or of common.* 2 Bl. Com. 264. It is a usage annexed to the person of the owner of an estate, as distinguished from custom, which is properly a local usage. Id. 263, 264. As to the American law of prescription, see 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 153—162. United States Digest, Prescription.

PRESCRIPTION, TIME OF. A length or period of time sufficient to establish the right of prescription, or title by prescription. This, in England, was formerly identical with time immemorial, or time out of memory, a period referring to the beginning of the reign of Richard I. But now, by the statute of 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, the time of prescription in certain cases has been shortened. 2 Steph. Com. 35—39.

PRESENCE. [Lat. præsentia.] The fact of being in a particular place, considered with relation to some act done in the same place. This is either actual, as where the person is within the same enclosure and in actual sight, or constructive, as where the person is so near as to be held to be present in contemplation of law.

In criminal law, mere presence at the commission of a crime is not sufficient to constitute a person a principal or even an accessory, unless he aids, assists or abets others. 1 Hale's P. C. 439. See 1 Wisconsin R. 159, 166.

As to what is a sufficient presence of witnesses at the execution of a will, see 4 Kent's Com. 515, 516, and cases cited ibid. 10 Grattan's R. 106. 1 Leigh's R. 6.

To PRESENT. [L. Lat. præsentare.] In English ecclesiastical law. To offer a clerk to the bishop of the diocese, to be instituted. 1 Bl. Com. 389.

In criminal law. To find or represent judicially, as a grand jury present certain offenees. See Presentment. Held to be an essential word. 2 Show. 454.

PRESENTATION. In ecclesiastical law. The act of a patron or proprietor of a living, in offering a clerk to the ordinary for institution.

PRESENTMENT. L. Fr. and Eng. In criminal law. The notice taken by a grand jury of any offence, from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them; as the presentment of a nuisance, a libel and the like, upon which the officer of the court must afterwards frame an indictment, before the party presented can be put to answer for it. 4 Bl. Com. 301.

In a more general sense, a presentment includes inquisitions of office, and indictments by a grand jury. Id. ibid. Thus in indictments, the jury are said to present upon their oath. See Indictment.

PRESENTS. Present letters or instrument. A word of constant occurrence in deeds, bonds, and various other instruments, framed immediately from the Lat. præsentes, which was used with literæ, as formal words of description in old conveyancing. Omnibus ad quos præsentes literæ pervenerint, salutem: To all to whom the present letters shall come, Greeting. The word literæ was sometimes suppressed, thus: Pateat universis per præsentes; Be it known to all men by the presents. West's Symbol. pars 1, lib. 2, sect. 535. Noverint universi per præsentes; Know all men by the presents. Id. sect. 482. This led to the use of præsentes as a substantive, and ultimately to the English word presents in its plural form: "Be it known unto all men by these presents." West's Symbol. sect. 483. "Know all men by these presents."

Another mode of expression formerly in use was, "To all Christian people to whom this present writing shall come," &c. Id. sect. 465.

PRESIDENT. [Lat. præses.] In English law. A title formerly given to the king's lieutenant in a province; as the President of Wales. Cowell.

PRESIDENT. An old though corrupted form of precedent, (q. v.) used both as a French and English word. Le president est rare. Dyer, 136. See Freem. 265. Presidents without a judicial examination do not make a law. Hardr. 98, arg. See 3 Leon. 28. Vaugh. 154.

PRESS. In old practice. A piece or skin of parchment, several of which used to be sewed together in making up a roll or record of proceedings. See 1 Bl. Com. 183. Towns. Pl. 486.

PREST, (and afterwards PRIST.) L. Fr. [from Lat. paratus.] In old pleading and practice. Ready. Prest averrer; ready to prove. Yearb. P. 11 Hen. VI. 8. M. 12 Hen. VI. 13. Prest de prover. Britt. c. 22. A formal word at the conclusion of pleas and replications, expressive of a tender and acceptance of issue. Prest, &c. was a more common form. See Yearb. 8 Edw. III. 20. T. 8 Edw. III. 11. See Prist, Culprit.

Prest à passer; ready to pass, that is, to give a verdict. M. 3 Edw. II. 56. See Passer.

PREST. In old English law. A duty in money to be paid by the sheriff upon his account in the exchequer, or for money left or remaining in his hands. Cowell.

PRESTATION. [Lat. præstatio, from præstare, q. v.] In old English law. A payment or performance; the rendering of a service. A toll, custom or duty. See Præstatio.

PRESUMPTION. [L. Fr. presumpcion, from Lat. præsumptio, from præsumere, (q. v.) to take before.] In the law of evidence. Literally, a taking beforehand. The taking of a fact to be so, before it certainly appears. Locke on Hum. Underst. b. 4, c. 14, s. 4.—The taking of a fact or proposition to be true, before it is positively shown or certainly known to be so. Burr. Cir. Evid. 9. A process of reasoning by which a fact not known is deduced or inferred from one or more facts known. Id. ibid. Called, by some of the civilians, argumentum. A process of probable reasoning from one or more facts to others, exercised by common sense, and founded on the usual course of things; (argumentum verisimile, communi sensu perceptum ex eo quod plerumque fit aut fieri intelligitur.) Matthæus de Crim. in lib. 48, Dig. tit. 15, c. 6. Best, J. 4 B. & Ald. 95, 124. Lord Tenterden, Id. 161. Otherwise termed natural presumption. See Præsumptio.

The result of a process of reasoning from one fact to another, or from one or more facts to others; an inference. A conclusion, judgment or belief, as to the truth of some proposed matter of fact, arrived at and formed by a process of inference from other facts. Burr. Circ. Evid. 9, 10, and notes.—An inference as to the existence of a fact not actually known, arising from its necessary or usual connection with others which are known. 1

Stark. Evid. 23, 24. See 3 Id. 1234.—A probable inference which our common sense draws from circumstances usually occurring in such cases. 1 Phill. Evid. 436.—A probable consequence drawn from facts, as to the truth of a fact alleged, but of which there is no direct proof. Wills' Circ. Evid. 17.—An inference affirmative or disaffirmative of the existence of a disputed fact, drawn by a judicial tribunal, by a process of probable reasoning, from some one or more matters of fact, either admitted in the cause, or otherwise satisfactorily established. Best on Presumptions, 12, § 11. See 1 Greenl. Evid. §§ 14—48. See Præsumptio.

An assumption or proposition; such as the presumption of sanity. Burr. Circ. Evid. 38, 39. A principle or rule; as a presumption of law. Id. ibid. Vinnius, Jurispr. Contr. lib. 4, tit. 36.

PRESUMPTION OF FACT. [Lat. præsumptio hominis; præsumptio facti.] In the law of evidence. The process of inferring one fact from another, or one or more facts not known, from one or more other facts known, by the exercise of the natural faculties of judgment and common sense, without reference to any technical rules. The process of deducing or inferring certain facts proposed and disputed, by reasoning from certain other facts shown; both species of facts being made the subjects of actual inquiry, with the view of ascertaining the truth of their existence in particular cases. Burr. Circ. Ev. 51—59. The species of presumption exercised and applied by juries on the trial of issues of fact. Id. 53, 54. Otherwise called præsumptio hominis, (q. v.)

The result of such a process of reasoning from facts to facts. A presumption or inference derived wholly and directly from the circumstances of the particular case to which it is applied, by means of the common experience of mankind, without the aid or control of any rules of law whatever.* 1 Greenl. Evid. §§ 44, 48.

PRESUMPTION OF LAW. [Lat. præsumptio juris.] In the law of evidence. An inference or intendment made by law, or the court, from facts appearing or proved in a particular case.* Best on Pres. § 15. 1 Greenl. Evid. §§ 15, 33. Burr. Circ. Evid. 42, 45.—An assumption or proposition of law, founded on facts proved.* Otherwise termed legal presumption. In legal presumption, there is no special inference or process of reasoning from fact to fact, as there is in natural presumption. What is called legal presumption is properly assumption; a legal presumption is a proposition of law, or the application to a certain fact proved, of a rule previously established. 6 Lond. Law Mag. 354. Burr. Circ. Ev. 43, 50.

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE. In the law of evidence. Evidence presenting facts from which a presumption may be drawn as to the existence of other facts. See Presumption. That species of indirect evidence which, when presented to the mind, in connection with any fact sought to be established, suggests or induces, with more or less force, a presumption or belief as to the truth of such fact. Burr. Circ. Evid. 79. A species of circumstantial evidence. Id. 7, 76. In all cases of probable reasoning, the proof is said to be presumptive, and the inference to which it gives rise, a presumption. Best on Presumptions, 4, § 3. When the conclusion of the existence of a principal fact does not follow necessarily from the facts proved, but is deduced from them by probable inference, the evidence is said to be presumptive, and the inference drawn, a presumption. Id. 12, § 11. See 1 Greenl. Evid. § 13.

Evidence of facts, admitting of explanation or contradiction, as distinguished from conclusive evidence. Burr. Circ. Ev. 89.

PRESUMPTIVE HEIR. A person who, if his ancestor should die immediately, would, in the present circumstances of things, be his heir. See Heir presumptive.

PRETENSED, Pretenced. [L. Lat. prætensum.] In old English law. Pretended; claimed. Where a party out of possession of lands or tenements, claimed or sued for the possession, he was said to have a pretensed right and title, (jus prætensum.) Cowell. Dyer, 74 b.

PRETIUM, Precium. Lat. Price; value.

In the civil law. The price of a thing sold, which properly consisted in counted money; (pretium in numerata pecunia consistere debet.) Inst. 3. 24. 2. Pretium constitui oportet, nam nulla emptio sine pretio esse potest; the price ought to be fixed, for there can be no purchase without a price. Id. Dig. 18. 1. 2. 2 Kent's Com. 477.

Pretium succedit in locum rei. The price succeeds in place of the thing [sold.] Calv. Lex. citing Gœddœus. A maxim quoted in the early English books. 2 Bulstr. 312.

PRETIUM AFFECTIONIS. Lat. The price of affection. A price or value set upon a thing or estate by the owner, exceeding the just value, and growing out of the affection he has for it.* Pothier, Contr. of Sale, num. 244.

PRETORIUM, Prætorium. Lat. In Scotch law. A court-house, or hall of justice. 3 How. St. Trials, 425.

PRIER. L. Fr. To pray. Prioins; we pray. Yearb. II. 1 Edw. II. 3.

PRIMA FACIE. Lat. On the first face; at the first view. See Facies. A phrase derived from the civil law, in which it occurs in precisely its modern sense. Interdum evenit ut exceptio, quæ primâ facie justa videtur, tamen inique noceat; it sometimes happens that an exception, which at first view seems just, yet operates as a bar unjustly. Inst. 4. 14, pr. See the phrase repeated, Id. 4. 14. 1, 2. Bracton uses it in the same sense. Et quod primâ facie valere debent, videtur; and it seems that, primâ facie, they ought to be valid. Bract. fol. 29. Licet videatur, primâ facie, quod, &c.; though it seems, primâ facie, that, &c. Id. fol. 175. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 44, § 7. Id. c. 60, § 21.

PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE. That kind of evidence which, not being inconsistent with the falsity of an hypothesis, nevertheless raises such a degree of probability in its favor that it must prevail, if it be accredited by the jury, unless it be rebutted, or the contrary proved. 1 Stark. Evid. 544, [453.]—Evidence which, if uncontradicted or unexplained, is sufficient to determine the matter at issue. 6 Lond. Law Mag. 373.

PRIMA TONSURA. Lat. In old English law. The first mowing; the first crop of grass. Cro. Car. 362. Roscoe's Real Act. 486. Called "fore-crop." 7 East, 200. A grant of a right to have the first crop of grass. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 181.

PRIMÆ IMPRESSIONIS. L. Lat. Of the first impression; without precedent. Freem. 87, arg. A term applied to a new case, or one which has not occurred before; or to a question which is raised for the first time. Com. 224, arg. Eyre, J. 5 Mod. 23. 1 Vern. 94. Platt, J. 19 Johns. R. 310. "The question here, as there, is primæ impressionis; the case here, as there, is the first of its kind." Story, J. 3 Mason's R. 116, 125. The expression is applied to actions, returns, motions and other proceedings. Freem. 431. Holt, C. J. 5 Mod. 21. Mansfield, C. J. 4 Taunt. 3. 1 Id. 492, arg. The Gunpowder Plot was called by Lord Coke, in his argument as attorney-general in the case, an offence primæ impressionis. 2 How. State Trials, 167.

PRIMÆ (or PRIMARIÆ) PRECES. Lat. In the civil law. An imperial prerogative, by which the emperor exercised the right of naming to the first prebend that became vacant after his accession, in every church of the empire. Goldast. Constit. Imper. tom. 3, p. 406. 1 Bl. Com. 381.

PRIMAGE. In mercantile law. A small allowance or compensation paid by the shipper or consignor of goods, to the master of the vessel, over and above the freight, for his care and trouble as to the goods. 3 Kent's Com. 232, note. It is a customary payment, and is expressed in bills of lading as "primage and average accustomed."

PRIMATE. [from Lat. primus, first.] In English law. A chief ecclesiastic; a prelate of supreme dignity and authority; the title of an archbishop. The Archbishop of Canterbury is styled "Primate of all England, and Metropolitan;" (Metropolitanus et Primus totius Angliæ.) The Archbishop of York is styled "Primate of England, and Metropolitan;" (Primus et Metropolitanus Angliæ.) 1 Chitt. Bl. Com. 380, note.

PRIMARY CONVEYANCES. Those common law conveyances, (otherwise termed original,) by means of which an estate is created or first arises. 2 Bl. Com. 309. They include feoffments, gifts, grants, leases, exchanges and partitions. Id. 310.

PRIME. Fr. [from Lat. premium, reward, or primo, first.] In French law. The price of the risk assumed by an insurer; premium of insurance. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 3, sect. 1, §§ 1, 2.

PRIMER. L. Fr. First. See infra. Primerement; in the first place. Kelham.

PRIMER FINE. In old English practice. A fine or payment which was due to the king on suing out the writ of præcipe, at the commencement of the proceedings to levy a fine of lands. 2 Bl. Com. 350.

PRIMER SEISIN. [L. Lat. prima seisina.] In old English law. A right which the king had, when any of his tenants in capite died seised of a knight's fee, to receive of the heir (provided he were of full age,) one whole year's profits of the lands, if they were in immediate possession; and half a year's profits, if the lands were in reversion expectant on an estate for life. 2 Bl. Com. 66. It was a feudal burthen, only incident to the king's tenants in capite. Id. ibid.

PRIMITIÆ. Lat. In English law. First fruits; the first year's whole profits of a spiritual preferment. 1 Bl. Com. 284. Crabb's Hist. 252.

PRIMOGENITURE. [from Lat. primogenitura, from primogenitus, first born, q. v.] In English law. The privilege of the first-born or eldest son. The right of the eldest son to inherit his ancestor's estate, in exclusion of younger sons. 2 Bl. Com. 214. 1 Steph. Com. 369. See 4 Kent's Com. 375, note.

PRIMOGENITUS. Lat. [from primo, first, and genitus, born or begotten.] In old English law. A first born or eldest son. Bract. fol. 33.

PRIMUM DECRETUM. Lat. In the canon law. The first decree; a preliminary decree granted on the non-appearance of a defendant, by which the plaintiff was put in possession of his goods, or of the thing itself which was demanded. Gilb. For. Rom. 32, 33. The term is also used in admiralty law. The Exeter, 1 Rob. Adm. R. 175.

PRIMUS. Lat. First. A fictitious name used, with Secundus, Tertius, Quartus, &c. by Roman jurists, in their illustrations; like the modern A. B. C. &c. Dig. 37. 11. 2. 5.

PRINCEPS. Lat. In the civil law. The prince; the emperor. Quod principi placuit, legis habet vigorem; the emperor's pleasure has the force of law. Inst. 1. 2. 6.

Princeps legibus solutus est. The emperor is released from the laws; is not bound by the laws. Dig. 1. 3. 31. See an explanation of this rule. Hallifax, Anal. pref. vi. vii. note.

PRINCEPS. Lat. In old English law. The king. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 26. Princeps et respublica ex justa causa possunt rem meam auferre. The king and the state [the government,] may take my property for just cause. 12 Co. 13. Translated in Branch's Principia to mean the very reverse.

PRINCIPAL. L. Fr. [from Lat. principalis, from princeps, chief.] Head; chief; principal. Les principals fesours; the principal or chief actors. Britt. c. 5. Le principal. Id. c. 23. Le principal dettour; the principal debtor. Id. c. 28.

PRINCIPAL. [Lat. principalis, q. v.] In criminal law. A chief actor or perpetrator, as distinguished from an accessory. A principal in the first degree is he that is the actor or absolute perpetrator of the crime; and, in the second degree, he who is present, aiding and abetting the fact to be done. 4 Bl. Com. 34. See Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, §§ 112, 116.

In the law of contracts. A chief debtor; one who is liable in the first instance, as distinguished from a surety who is liable for him, in case of his default; or one whose obligation is prior to that of another which is founded on it. In this and the foregoing sense, the word is directly taken from the French, in which both forms of expression, le principal fesour, and le principal dettour, are used in their modern sense. See infra.

A chief or head; one who orders or instructs another; one who appoints, directs or employs another to act for him, as distinguished from an agent, or person appointed by him. Otherwise termed a constituent or employer. The word, in this sense, has the meaning of dominus in the civil law. Story on Agency, § 3. See United States Digest, Principal and Agent.

PRINCIPAL CHALLENGE. In practice. A challenge of a juror for a cause which carries with it, primâ facie, evident marks of suspicion either of malice or favor; as that a juror is of kin to either party within the ninth degree; that he has an interest in the cause, &c. 3 Bl. Com. 363.

PRINCIPAL FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact sought and proposed to be proved by evidence of other facts (termed evidentiary facts) from which it is to be deduced by inference. Otherwise termed factum probandum. 3 Benth. Jud. Evid.

3. Burr. Circ. Evid. 3, 119. A fact which is the principal and ultimate object of an inquiry, and respecting the existence of which a definite belief is required to be formed. Id. 3.

PRINCIPALIS. Lat. [from princeps, first or chief.] In civil and old English law. Principal; a principal debtor. Principalis debitor. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 63, § 5. Called capitalis debitor, (chief debtor.) Id. § 6. Principalis debet semper excuti antequam perveniatur ad fidei-jussores. The principal ought always to be discussed, before resort is had to the sureties. 2 Inst. 19. See Discussion. A rule of the civil law, the meaning of which is not apprehended in Branch's Principia.

A principal or chief criminal, as distinguished from an accessory. Otherwise called persona principalis. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 27, § 19.

Principal; chief. Placitum principale; a chief or principal plea or suit. Otherwise called loquela principalis. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 23, §§ 12, 13.

PRINCIPIA. Lat. [plur. of principium, q. v.] Principles; maxims; axioms; fundamental rules; elements; beginnings. Principia probant, non probantur. Principles prove; they are not proved. 3 Co. 50 a, Ratcliff's case. Fundamental principles require no proof; or, in Lord Coke's words, "they ought to be approved, because they cannot be proved." Id. ibid.

Principiis obsta. Withstand beginnings; oppose a thing in its early stages, if you would do so with success. This is put down by Branch among legal maxims, but is most absurdly translated, "Oppose principles," and the error is literally copied in Wharton's Lexicon.

Principiorum non est ratio. There is no reasoning of principles; no argument is required to prove fundamental rules. 2 Bulstr. 239.

PRINCIPIUM. Lat. [from princeps, first.] In civil and old English law. A beginning. In principio donationis; at the commencement of the gift. Bract. fol. 17 b. Cujusque rei potissima pars principium est. The chiefest or most essential part of any thing is the beginning or origin. Dig. 1. 2. 1. Adopted by Lord Coke. 10 Co. 49 a, Lampet's case. Co. Litt. 248 b.

A principle; a maxim. Analyzed by Lord Coke in his peculiar manner, to be quasi primum caput, (the first head) from which many cases have their original or beginning. Co. Litt. 303 a.

Prior tempore potior jure. [He who is] before in time, is preferred in right. The first occupant of bona vacantia has the best right. Broom's Max. 330. A creditor who first issues execution to a sheriff, is entitled to have his writ first executed. Id. 334.

PRINCIPLE. A fundamental truth; an original cause; a motive. McLean, J. 14 Howard's R. 175. In patent law, a principle is not patentable. Id. ibid. Eyre, C. J. 2 H. Bl. 495. But see Id. ibid. 1 Mason's R. 470. 1 Gallison's R. 478. Nelson, J. (dissenting,) 14 Howard's R. 183, et seq. According to Mr. Justice Story, the principle of a machine means the modus operandi, or that which applies, modifies or combines mechanical powers to produce a certain result; and, so far, a principle, if new in its application to a useful purpose, may be patentable. See 1 Mason's R. 470.

PRIS. A contraction of patris. 1 Inst. Cler. 11.

PRIS, Prise. L. Fr. Taken. Si soit pris et encoupe; he shall be taken and charged. Britt. c. 11.

Imprisoned. Rot. Parl. 4 Hen. IV.

PRISA. L. Lat. [from Fr. prise, q. v.] In old English and Scotch law. A taking; a seizure of goods. Spelman. De prisis factis per vicecomites; of takings made by sheriffs. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 32. See Id. lib. 2, c. 50, § 21. Skene de Verb. Signif. See Prise.

PRISAGE. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Fr. prise, a taking, q. v.] In old English law. A right on the part of the crown of taking two tuns of wine from every ship (English or foreign) importing into England twenty tuns or more, one before and one behind the mast; which, by charter of Edward I. was exchanged into a duty of 2*s.* for every tun imported by merchant strangers, and called butlerage, because paid to the king's butler. 1 Bl. Com. 314, 315. Hale's Anal. sect. viii. See Hale de Jur. Mar. pars 3, c. 2. Id. pars 2, c. 6. And see Calthrop's R. 1, 2, 20, 23, 24.

PRISE. L. Fr. [from prendre, to take.] A taking. De prises del avers; of the takings of beasts. Britt. c. 27. La torcenouse prise et la torcenouse detenue; the tortious taking and the tortious detention. Id. ibid.

PRISE. Fr. In French law. Prize; captured property. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 9. See Prize.

Capture, by a naval force. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 12, sect. 18, § 1.

PRISE. [L. Fr. prise; L. Lat. prisa, qq. v.] In old English law. Things taken of the king's subjects by purveyors; provisions taken for the king's use. Cowell. Artic. sup. Chart. c. 2. 2 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 233. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 50, § 21.

PRISEL EN AUTER LIEU. L. Fr. A taking in another place. A plea in abatement in the action of replevin. 2 Ld. Raym. 1016, 1017.

PRISO. L. Lat. [L. Fr. prison, from prise, taken.] In old English law. A prisoner; a captive in war. Spelman.

A prisoner, or imprisoned malefactor. Prisones vero, sic imprisonati; but prisoners so imprisoned. Bract. fol. 123. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 26, § 5.

PRISON. L. Fr. [from prise, a taking.] In old English law. A prison; a place where persons taken for crimes are confined. Si ascun home moerge en prison, si volons nous que le coroner voet veyer le cors; if any man die in prison, we will that the coroner go to view the body. Britt. c. 11.

Imprisonment. Punys par prison et par fyn; punished by imprisonment and by fine. Id. c. 20. Prison forte et dure; strong and hard imprisonment. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 12.

Confinement of the person, as by duress. Par feffements faits à force en prison; by feoffments made by compulsion in confinement. Britt. c. 114.

A prisoner. (Lat. priso.) More commonly written, in this sense, prisoun, or prison'. Britt. c. 11.

PRISON. [from L. Fr. prison, from prise, a taking; L. Lat. prisona; Lat. carcer, qq. v.] A place of confinement of persons, either for safe keeping, or by way of punishment. A public building devoted to such purposes.

A place for the detention of debtors; more correctly expressed by the word gaol, (q. v.)

In criminal law. A place for the detention of persons charged with offences, and committed for trial. 2 N. Y. Rev. St. [754,] 632, § 1.

A place for the confinement of persons sentenced to imprisonment, upon conviction for any offence. Id. ibid. A place of punishment for crime.

 This word is purely French, occurring in precisely its present form in Britton, whose eleventh chapter is entitled "De Prisons." Bracton makes use of both the L. Lat. prisona and the pure Lat. carcer, to express it. See Prisona. Prison and gaol are frequently used as synonymous in modern law, though in strictness prison properly signifies a place of punishment for crime; gaol, a place of safe keeping and detention. It is said, however, that prison originally signified merely a place of safe keeping, and not of punishment, and to show this, reference is made to the observation of Lord Coke,—carcer ad homines custodiendos non ad puniendos dari debet, (a prison ought to be assigned for the custody of men, not for their punishment.) Co. Litt. 260. Lord Coke, however, merely quoted from Bracton, with a slight alteration; the passage in the latter author running thus: carcer ad continendos et non puniendos haberi debeat. Bract. fol. 105. A reference to the context in Bracton will show that the meaning of these words has been altogether misapprehended. In the first place, the chapter in which they are found is devoted to the subject of punishments, being entitled, "De generibus pœnarum quibus homines afficiuntur propter eorum iniquitates;" (of the kinds of punishments with which men are visited on account of their iniquities.) Bract. lib. 2, tract. 1, c. 6. Under this head of punishments, Bracton proceeds to enumerate, with others, corporis coertionem, scilicet imprisonamentum, vel ad tempus, vel imperpetuum, (coercion or restraint of the body, to wit, imprisonment, either for a time, or perpetually, i. e. for life.) He then remarks that a person should be punished in no other way than according to his sentence, (non alio modo puniatur quis quam secundum quod se habeat condempnatio.) He states, however, that the keepers of prisons were in the habit of ordering those who were sentenced to imprisonment to be kept in chains; (solent præsides in carcere continendos damnare ut in vinculis contineantur,) but remarks that severities of this kind were condemned by law, because a prison ought to be kept (i. e. by those having charge of it) as a place of custody and not of punishment; (sed hujusmodi interdicta sunt à lege, quia carcer ad continendos et non puniendos haberi debeat.) Bract. fol. 104 b, 105. The whole drift of the chapter is to show that punishments should not be extended beyond their proper limits, and particularly, that where imprisonment was inflicted as a punishment, it should be attended with no unnecessary severities. This explanation clearly leads to the conclusion that a prison was, in Bracton's time, a place of punishment, as is directly shown, indeed, by other expressions of the same author; (sc. pœna carceris; the punishment of the prison,) and by the very common expression of Britton, punys par prison et par fyn. Fleta speaks of the cruelties inflicted upon prisoners in aggravation of their punishment, such as hanging up by the feet, loading with iron, &c. in terms of condemnation. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 26, §§ 4, 5. And see the whole chapter.

PRISONA. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. prison, q. v.] In old English law. Prison; a prison; a place of confinement. Captus et in prisona detentus; taken and detained in prison. Bract. fol. 17, 123. Jaceat in prisona nostra per unum annum et unum diem; he shall lie in our prison for a year and a day. Cart. de For. c. 10. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 26, De prisonis.

A place of punishment for crime. Pœna imprisonamenti. Bract. fol. 104 b. See Prison. Bracton uses the three words prisona, carcer and gaola, to denote a place of confinement or imprisonment. Of these, carcer (prison) seems to signify any place or building devoted to the express purpose of confining persons, either on accusations of crime or after sentence of imprisonment. Bract. fol. 105, 123. Gaola (gaol) has the narrower sense of a building devoted to the confinement of persons charged with crimes. Id. fol. 109, 110. Prisona (prison,) on the other hand, has a much broader meaning than carcer, importing not only a common place of confinement, but any place of confinement, such as a private house, where a person is restrained of his liberty, or a state of duress without reference to the place of it. Id. fol. 16 b, 122 b, 123 b.

Imprisonment. Puniatur per prisonam unius anni; he shall be punished by imprisonment for one year. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 24, § 2.

PRISONER. [L. Fr. prisoner, prisoun; L. Lat. priso.] A person restrained of his liberty upon any action, civil or criminal, or upon commandment. Cowell.

A person who has not his liberty freely to go at all times, to all places, whither he will, without bail or mainprise; whether he be detained in the open field, or in the street, or in his own house, as well as in the common gaol.* Termes de la Ley, voc. Imprisonment.

A person confined in a prison, either upon a criminal charge, or on a conviction and sentence. See Prison.

A person on trial for crime. "The prisoner at the bar." The jurors are told to "look upon the prisoner." The court, after passing sentence, gives orders to "remove the prisoner."

PRIST. L. Fr. Ready. A formal word used in the days of oral pleading, to express a tender of or joinder in issue. Sa comen, prist, &c. Son several, prist, &c. Her common, ready, &c. His several, ready, &c. Yearb. H. 6 Edw. III. 10. Ne unques seisi, prist, &c. Seisi, prist, &c. Never seised, ready, &c. Seised, ready, &c. P. 6 Edw. III. 68. Car nostre baron morust seisi, Prist, &c. Ald. Vostre baron ne morust point seisi, Prist, &c. Ash. Quod sic. Prist, &c. For our husband died seised; Ready, &c. Ald. Your husband did not die seised; Ready, &c. Ash. It was so; Ready, &c. P. 8 Edw. III. 4.

PRIVATE ACT. An act which only operates upon particular persons and private concerns. 1 Bl. Com. 86. See Private statute.

PRIVATE CORPORATION. A corporation founded by a private individual, or the stock of which is owned by private persons, such as a hospital or college, a bank, an insurance, turnpike or rail-road company.* 2 Kent's Com. 275.

PRIVATE NUISANCE. Any thing done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements or hereditaments of another. Finch's Law, 188. 3 Bl. Com. 216. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 1067, § 2461.

PRIVATE RIGHTS. Those rights which appertain to a particular individual or individuals, and relate either to the person, or to personal or real property. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 3.

PRIVATE PROPERTY, (as protected from being taken for public uses,) is such property as belongs absolutely to an individual, and of which he has the exclusive right of disposition; property of a specific, fixed and tangible nature, capable of being had in possession and transmitted to another, such as houses, lands and chattels. 29 Mississippi R. 21, 32.

PRIVATE STATUTE (or ACT.) A statute which operates only upon particular persons, and private concerns. 1 Bl. Com. 86.—An act which relates to certain individuals, or to particular classes of men. Dwarris on Statutes, 629.—A statute which concerns only a particular species; a particular thing, or a particular person. 4 Co. 76 a. 1 Term R. 125. A statute which relates to a particular place or town. 4 Co. 76 b. Skin. 350. And see Hale's Hist. Com. Law, (Runnington's ed.) 3. Generally speaking, statutes are public, and a private statute may rather be considered as an exception to a general rule. It operates upon a particular thing or private persons. 1 Kent's Com. 459.

PRIVATE WAY. A right which a person has of passing over the land of another. See Way.

PRIVATE WRONGS, (otherwise termed CIVIL INJURIES.) The violation of public or private rights, when considered in reference to the injury sustained by the individual, and consequently as subjects for civil redress or compensation. 3 Steph. Com. 356.

PRIVATEER. In international law. A private armed vessel, duly commissioned by government to cruise during war against the commerce of the enemy. 1 Kent's Com. 95—100.

PRIVATUM. Lat. Private; privy. Privatum jus; private law. Inst. 1. 1. 4. Privatum concilium; privy council. Hale's Anal. sect. iii.

Privatum commodum publico cedit. Private good yields to public. Jenk. Cent. 223, case 80. The interest of an individual should give place to the public good. Id. ibid.

Privatum incommodum publico bono pensatur. Private inconvenience is made up for by public benefit. Jenk. Cent. 85, case 65. Broom's Max. 3, [5.]

Privatis pactionibus non dubium est non lædi jus cæterorum. There is no doubt that the rights of others [third parties] cannot be prejudiced by private agreements. Dig. 2. 15. 3, pr. Broom's Max. [545.]

PRIVATUS. Lat. A private person or individual.

Privatorum conventio juri publico non derogat. An agreement of private individuals does [can] not derogate from public or common right, [or cannot impair or affect a common right.] Dig. 50. 17. 45. 1. Broom's Max. [543.] Quoted by Lord Coke, in the words, Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare. Co. Litt. 166 a. And Pacta privata non derogant juri communi. 7 Co. 23 b, Butt's case.

PRIVEMENT. L. Fr. Privately; privily; secretly; not visibly. Aperment ou privement; openly or privily. Mem. in Scacc. 18 Edw. I. Privement enceint; secretly pregnant; not known or observed to be so. See Grossement. Finch's Law, lib. 2, c. 3, p. 117.

PRIVIES. Persons connected together by some relation other than that of actual contract between them; persons whose interest in an estate is derived from the contract or conveyance of others. Privies are properly always distinguished from parties, from whom they derive their title, though sometimes made to include them. See Privy, Privity.

PRIVIGNUS. Lat. In the civil law. A son of a husband or wife by a former marriage; a step-son. Dig. 38. 10. 4. 6. Calv. Lex. Cooper's Justin. Inst. Notes, *429.

PRIVILEGE. [from Lat. privilegium, q. v.] An exemption or immunity from some general duty or burden; a right peculiar to some individual or body. According to its etymology,—a law, or provision or exception of law in favor of an individual, (quasi priva, or privata lex.) A peculiar right or favor granted by law, contrary to the common rule. See 14 Texas R. 115. See Privilegium.

PRIVILEGE FROM ARREST. In practice. A privilege from arrest on civil process, enjoyed either permanently, as by ambassadors, public ministers, and their servants, married women, &c.; or temporarily, as by members of Congress and of State legislatures, during their attendance at the session of their respective houses, and in going to and returning from the same; attorneys, solicitors and counsellors, during their actual and necessary attendance on their respective courts; parties to a suit and witnesses, while going to, attending and returning from court, and other persons designated by law. See 1 Burr. Pr. 89—92.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION. In the law of evidence. A communication made to a counsel, solicitor or attorney, in professional confidence, and which he is not permitted to divulge; otherwise called a confidential communication. 1 Stark. Evid. 185. 2 Id. 320.

In the law of libel. A communication, statement or publication made by a person affecting the character of another, but which is privileged or protected by the occasion or circumstances under which it is made, and will not support an action without proof of express malice.* 3 Howard's R. 266.

PRIVILEGED COPYHOLDS. In English law. Those copyhold estates which are said to be held according to the custom of the manor, and not at the will of the lord, as common copyholds are. They include customary freeholds and ancient demesnes. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 709, § 919. See Privileged villenage.

PRIVILEGED DEBTS. Debts to which a preference in payment is given out of the estate of a deceased person, or out of the assets of an insolvent.

PRIVILEGED DEED. In Scotch conveyancing. A deed or instrument in the execution of which, certain solemnities or formalities are dispensed with; such as the attestation of witnesses, &c. Bell's Dict.

PRIVILEGED VILLENAGE. In old English law. A species of villenage mentioned by Bracton, in which the tenants held by certain and determinate services; otherwise called villein-socage. Bract. fol. 209. Now called privileged copyhold, including the tenure in ancient demesne. 2 Bl. Com. 99, 100. See Privileged copyholds.

PRIVILEGIUM. Lat. [from privus, particular, and lex, law.] In the Roman law. A private law; properly, a special law of the kind called constitutio, ordained by the emperor. A special constitution, either conferring a reward on an individual for some act of merit, or inflicting an extraordinary punishment; but which was not to serve as a precedent. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 3, §§ 59, 60. Inst. 1. 2. 6. Called, also, jus singulare, (a particular law,) beneficium, (a benefit or favor,) constitutio personalis, (a personal law.) Calv. Lex. But the civilians usually made a distinction between these terms. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. ub. sup. And see Tayl. Civ. Law, 234, 235.

An ex post facto law. See 1 Bl. Com. 46, note (e.)

In modern civil law, privilegium (privilege) is said to denote, in its general sense, every peculiar right or favor granted by the law, contrary to the common rule. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 182, § 189.

PRIVILEGIUM. Lat. In old English law. A privilege. Privilegium est beneficium personale, et extinguitur cum persona. A privilege is a personal benefit or favor, and is extinguished with the person. 3 Bulstr. 8.

Privilegium non valet contra rempublicam. Privilege is of no force against the commonwealth. Even necessity does not excuse, where the act to be done is against the commonwealth. Bacon's Max. 32, in reg. 5. Broom's Max. [14.]

PRIVILEGIUM CLERICALE. L. Lat. In old English law. The clerical privilege; benefit of clergy. Clericus privilegium allegans clericale; a clerk alleging his clerical privilege. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, § 12. And see Id. lib. 2, c. 69, § 1. See Benefit of clergy. Privilegium was used indifferently with beneficium, in the civil law.

PRIVITY. [L. Fr. privitie.] Connection; interest; mutuality of interest; such as subsists between the immediate parties to a contract, as between lessor and lessee; otherwise called personal privity, or privity of contract. 3 Co. 23 a, Walker's case. Litt. sect. 460, 461. But this does not seem to be privity in its proper sense, for privies are they who are not parties. See Privy.

A derivative kind of interest, founded upon, or growing out of the contract of another, as that which subsists between an heir and his ancestor, between an executor and testator, and between a lessor or lessee and his assignee.* 3 Co. 23 a, Walker's case.

Privity is divided into various kinds, in the books; but with little uniformity of arrangement, or clearness of expression. See Co. Litt. 271. 8 Co. 42 b. Whittingham's case. Plowd. 363.

PRIVY. A person who has an interest in an estate created by another; a person having an interest derived from a contract or conveyance to which he is not himself a party. Thus, an heir is privy to the conveyance of his ancestor, an executor to the contract of his testator, and an assignee of a lessor or lessee to the contract of the original parties. Privies are clearly distinguished from parties, in the proper sense of the terms.* "He is a privy who is not a party." Plowd. 363.

PRIVY COUNCIL. In English law. The principal council of the sovereign, composed of the cabinet ministers, and other persons chosen by the king or queen as privy councillors. Called, by way of eminence, the council. 1 Bl. Com. 229. 2 Steph. Com. 479, 480. The judicial committee of the privy council acts as a court of ultimate appeal in various cases. Id. 482. 3 Id. 425, 432.

PRIVY SEAL. In English law. A seal used in making out grants or letters patent, preparatory to their passing under the great seal. 2 Bl. Com. 347.

PRIVY SIGNET. In English law. The signet or seal which is first used in making out grants and letters patent, and which is always in the custody of the principal secretary of state. 2 Bl. Com. 347.

PRIVY VERDICT. In practice. A verdict given privily to the judge out of court, but which was of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court. 3 Bl. Com. 377. Now disused.

PRIZE. [from L. Fr. prise, taken.] In international law. A captured vessel; a vessel and cargo captured by a public or private armed vessel of a belligerent, exercising the right of war.* 1 Kent's Com. 100, 101, et seq.

Captured property regularly condemned by the sentence of a competent prize court. Id. 102.

PROBABILITY. In the law of evidence. Likeness to truth; verisimilitude. Butler's Analogy, Introd. The likelihood of a proposition or fact being true or false, from its conformity or repugnancy to our general knowledge, observation and experience. Locke on Hum. Underst. b. 4, c. 15, ss. 3, 4. See Wills' Circ. Ev. 5. Burr. Circ. Ev. 80, 81.

PROBABLE CAUSE. In practice. Reasonable cause for the prosecution of a person. In an action for malicious prosecution, the question of probable or reasonable cause for the prosecution, however numerous or complicated the facts upon which it depends, is one of law and not of fact. 2 Selden's R. 384.

PROBABLE EVIDENCE. Presumptive evidence is so called, from its foundation in probability. Butler's Analogy, Introd.

PROBABLE REASONING. [Lat. argumentum verisimile.] In the law of evidence. Reasoning founded on the probability of the fact or proposition sought to be proved or shown; reasoning in which the mind exercises a discretion in deducing a conclusion from premises. Burr. Circ. Evid. 22, 23.

PROBARE. Lat. To prove. Necessitas probandi incumbit illi qui agit. The necessity of proving lies upon him who sues. Inst. 2. 20. 4. The burden of proof rests upon the complainant. Probare est fidem facere judici; to prove is to convince or satisfy the judge. Theory of Pres. Proof, 20.

PROBATE. [Lat. probatio, from probare, to prove.] Official proof, particularly the proof of a will, made by the executor before the ordinary, surrogate or probate judge; which, in England, is done either in common form, that is, upon the executor's own oath, or per testes, (by the witnesses) in more solemn form of law, as in case where the validity of the will is disputed. 2 Bl. Com. 508. The latter form is the one in use in the United States.

The copy of a will (which has been proved, supra,) made out under the seal of the ordinary, surrogate or probate judge, and delivered to the executor with a certificate of its having been proved. 2 Bl. Com. 508.

In a larger sense, all the proceedings on proving a will, including the proof itself, the copy of the will and certificate. 2 Bl. Com. ub. sup. In the canon law, probate consisted of probatio, the proof of the will by the executor, and approbatio, the approbation given by the ecclesiastical judge to the proof. 4 Reeves' Hist. 77.

PROBATIO. Lat. [from probare, to prove.] In the civil law. Proof. Ei incumbit probatio qui dicit, non qui negat, (q. v.) Dig. 22. 3. 2. Probatio viva; living proof; proof by witnesses vivâ voce. Bract. fol. 400. Co. Litt. 6 b.

Probationes debent esse evidentes, (id est) perspicuæ et faciles intelligi. Proofs ought to be evident, that is, clear and easy to be understood. Co. Litt. 283 a.

Direct evidence, as distinguished from indirect or circumstantial. J. Voet ad Pand. lib. 22, tit. 3, n. 15. Burr. Circ. Evid. 2, note.

PROBATIO PLENA. Lat. In the civil law. Full proof; proof by two witnesses, or a public instrument. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, ch. 9, num. 25. 3 Bl. Com. 370.

PROBATIO SEMI-PLENA. Lat. In the civil law. Half-full proof; half proof. Proof by one witness, or a private instrument. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 9, n. 25. 3 Bl. Com. 370.

PROBATION. In Scotch law. Proof, or, more properly, evidence. Bell's Dict.

Probatis extremis, præsumuntur media. The extremes being proved, the intermediate proceedings are presumed. 1 Greenl. Evid. § 20. Where authority is given by law to executors, administrators, guardians or other officers, to make sales of lands, upon being duly licensed by the courts, and they are required to advertise the sales in a particular manner, and to observe other formalities in their proceedings, the lapse of sufficient time, (which in most cases is fixed at thirty years,) raises a conclusive presumption that all the legal formalities of the sale were observed. Id. ibid. Here, the license to sell and the deed given are the two extremes which must be proved; the intermediate proceedings are presumed.

PROBATIVE. In the law of evidence. Having the effect of proof.

PROBATIVE FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact (an evidentiary fact) which actually has the effect of proving a fact sought. 1 Benth. Jud. Evid. 18.

PROBATOR. Lat. [from probare, to prove.] In old English law. A prover or approver. A person who, when indicted for treason or felony, and arraigned for the same, confessed the fact before plea pleaded, and appealed, or accused others, his accomplices in the same crime, in order to obtain his pardon. Bract. fol. 152. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, §§ 17, 18. Cowell. 4 Bl. Com. 330.

PROBUS HOMO. L. Lat. In old English law. A good man. Probi homines; good men. Per sacramentum proborum hominum de visneto; by the oath of good men of the visne or neighborhood. Mag. Cart. Johan. c. 20. This follows the original Articles, c. 9. The Magna Charta, 1 Hen. III. (c. 15,) reads, Per sacramentum proborum et legalium hominum de visneto. And so reads the Charter of 9 Hen. III. c. 14.

PROBUS ET LEGALIS HOMO. L. Lat. A good and lawful man. A phrase particularly applied to a juror or witness who was free from all exception. 3 Bl. Com. 102. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. c. 14. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 25, § 4.

PROCEDENDO, (or De procedendo ad judicium; of proceeding to judgment.) In practice. A writ by which a cause which has been removed from an inferior to a superior court by certiorari, or otherwise, is sent down again to the same court, to be proceeded in there, where it appears to the superior court that it was removed on insufficient grounds. Cowell. 1 Tidd's Pr. 408, 410. 3 Steph. Com. 681.

In English practice. A writ issuing out of chancery, in cases where the judges of subordinate courts delay giving judgment, commanding them to proceed to judgment.* 3 Bl. Com. 109. 3 Steph. Com. 681.

A writ by which the commission of a justice of the peace is revived, after having been suspended. 1 Bl. Com. 853.

PROCEED. In practice. To go; to be founded on. Cases are said to "proceed upon a principle." 3 East, 377. See Go.

To go on; to go on in a certain course, or in order to attain a certain end; to go on or act in form of law. See Proceedings.

PROCEEDING. In practice. A going on in form of law; an act done in form of law, as before a court or judicial officer; a judicial act, directed against persons or property, and contemplating some ultimate remedial object.

PROCEEDINGS. In practice. The steps or measures taken in the course of an action, including all that are taken. The proceedings of a suit embrace all matters that occur in its progress judicially. Gardiner, J. 2 Selden's R. 319, 320.

In a narrower sense,—the proceedings in a cause or matter, as entered on record; the record history of the case. Id. ibid.

PROCEEDS. Money obtained from the sale of property; money, goods or other articles of value, arising, proceeding or obtained from the sale of property; goods purchased with money obtained from the sale of other goods.

In commercial and insurance law, a return cargo is the proceeds of the outward cargo, or the sale of the outward cargo. But the term proceeds is sometimes properly applied to a return cargo when there has been no actual sale, as where it has been purchased on the credit of the cargo exported. 12 Mass. R. 71. And it has been said that the term proceeds would apply to the same goods sent back without sale, on the return voyage. 1 Phillips on Ins. 179, 180.

PROCERES. Lat. Nobles; lords. The House of Lords in England is called in Latin Domus Procerum. See Dom. Proc.

PROCES. L. Fr. [from proceder, to proceed.] Proceeding; mode of proceeding. De proces en assises. Britt. c. 46.

PROCÈS-VERBAL. Fr. In French law. An authentic minute of an official act, or statement of facts. Buchanan. Webster.

An inventory. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 9, art. 22.

PROCESS. [L. Fr. proces; L. Lat. processus, from procedere, to proceed.] In practice. In a general sense,—the entire proceedings in any action or prosecution, real or personal, civil or criminal, from the beginning to the end.* It is equivalent to proceeding; progressive action; the progressive course of a business from its commencement to its termination. Marshall, C. J. 10 Wheaton's R. 1. In the old books, "the process" in an action is said to be "continued" from one term to another.

In a stricter sense,—a generic term for writs of the class called judicial, of which there are again subordinate divisions, as mesne process, jury process, final process, &c.

In old practice. The means used to compel a defendant to appear in court in compliance with the original writ; consisting of a verbal monition or warning, and the successive writs of attachment, (or pone,) distringas, and capias ad respondendum. 3 Bl. Com. 279—282. Otherwise called original process. Id. 279.

PROCESS. In patent law. A means or method employed to produce a certain result or effect, either by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, or of one substance to another, irrespective of any machine or mechanical device. In this sense, a process is patentable. Grier, J. 15 Howard's R. 267, 268.

The function or effect of a machine. In this sense, a process is not patentable. Id. 268.

A process, eo nomine, is not made the subject of a patent in our act of Congress. It is included under the general term "useful art." Id. 267.

PROCESS ROLL. In practice. A roll used for the entry of process to save the statute of limitations. 1 Tidd's Pr. 161, 162.

PROCESSIONING. In American law. A proceeding authorized by statute for ascertaining, marking and establishing the boundary lines of lands. In North Carolina, this is done by an officer called a processioner, appointed by the county courts to procession the lands of such persons as desire it. Revised Code, (ed. 1855,) ch. 88, p. 479. In Tennessee, it is done by the county surveyor. Code of Tennessee, (ed. 1858,) §§ 2020, 2024. In both states, a jury is summoned, if required.

This proceeding seems to be derived from the old English practice of perambulation, (q. v.)

PROCESSUS. L. Lat. [from procedere, to proceed.] In old practice. Process; proceeding; the course of judicial proceeding; the course of proceeding in an action. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 4. See Stet processus.

Processus legis est gravis vexatio; executio legis coronat opus. The process of law is a grievous vexation; the execution of the law crowns the work. Co. Litt. 289 b. The proceedings in an action while in progress are burdensome and vexatious; the execution, being the end and object of the action, crowns the labor, or rewards it with success.

PROCHEIN, Procheyn, Prochaine, Procain. L. Fr. [from Lat. proximus.] Next; nearest. Procheyn heire; next heir. Britt. c. 42. Le prochein du saunke; the next of blood. Id. c. 1. Plus procheyn heire; nearer heir. Id. c. 118, 119. Car toutes sount owelment plus procheynes; for all are equally next or nearer [of blood.] Id. c. 119.

PROCURATOR PROVINCLÆ. Lat. In the Roman law. A provincial officer who managed the affairs of the revenue, and had a judicial power in matters that concerned the revenue. Adam's Rom. Ant. 178.

PROCURATORIUM. L. Lat. [from procurator, q. v.] In old English law. The procuratory or instrument by which any person or community constituted or delegated their proctor or proctors to represent them in any judicial court or cause. Cowell. A proxy. Clerke's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 7.

PROCURATORY OF RESIGNATION. In Scotch law. A form of proceeding by which a vassal authorizes the feu to be returned to his superior. Bell's Dict. It is analogous to the surrender of copyholds in England. Wharton's Lex.

PROCURATOUR. L. Fr. [from Lat. procurator, q. v.] A proctor; an agent or attorney for another. Britt. c. 4. Par procuratours ou par baillyfs. Id. c. 42.

PROCURATRIX. Lat. In old English law. A female agent or attorney in fact; as a mother in behalf of her children. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 4, § 4.

PROCUREUR. Fr. In French law. An advocate, proctor or attorney. Brande.

PRODES HOMES. L. Fr. In old English law. Discreet men. A title given to the barons, or other military tenants, who were called to the king's council. Cowell. Artic. sup. Cart.

PRODIGUS. Lat. In the civil law. A spendthrift or prodigal; one who spent without measure and without end, (qui neque modum neque finem expensarum habet;) one who squandered or recklessly dissipated his property. Inst. 2. 12. 3.

PRODUCTIO SECTÆ. L. Lat. In old English law. Production of suit; the production, by a plaintiff, of his secta or suit, that is, a number of persons prepared to confirm what he had stated in his count, (or intentio.) This was done at the time of counting, or immediately after, and was expressed by the phrase at the end of the count or declaration: "Et inde producit sectam," (and thereupon, or thereof, he produces suit;) translated in the modern forms: "And therefore he brings suit." Et inde statim producat sectam sufficientem, duos ad minus, vel tres, vel plures, si possit; and thereupon he should immediately produce a sufficient suit, two at least, or three or more, if he can. Bract. fol. 410. See Id. 159, 314 b. Steph. Pl. 429, and note.

PRODUCTION OF SUIT. [L. Lat. productio sectæ.] In pleading. The formula, "And therefore he brings his suit, &c.," with which declarations always conclude. Steph. Pl. 428, 429. See Productio sectæ.

PROFER. [L. Lat. proferus, profrus, from L. Fr. proferer, to produce.] In old English law. An offer or proffer; an offer or endeavor to proceed in an action, by any man concerned to do so. Cowell. A judicial offer to do some act. See Proferus.

A return made by a sheriff of his accounts into the exchequer; a payment made on such return. Cowell. See Proferus.

PROFERT, (he produces;) PROFERT IN CURIA, or CURIAM, (he produces in court.) In old practice. The production in court, by a party, of an instrument alleged by him in pleading; or rather, the entry made on the record, that the party so produced the instrument.*

In modern practice. An allegation formally made in a pleading, where a party alleges a deed, that he shows it in court, it being in fact retained in his own custody. Steph. Pl. 67. Where either party alleges any deed, he is, in general, obliged to make profert of such deed, that is, to produce it in court simultaneously with the pleading in which it is alleged. Id. 66. On profert being made, the deed is, by intendment of law, immediately in the possession of the court. 3 Salk. 119. 6 Man. & Gr. 277, note. Oyer (q. v.) and profert seem to have been abolished in England by the common law procedure act. See 25 Eng. Law & Eq. R. 304.

PROFERUS, Profrus. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. proferer or profrer, to offer.] In old English practice. An offer or proffer; an offer made in court; a judicial offer to do some act. Called, in old English, profer, (q. v.) Si autem proferum quod coram coronatoribus et vic' fecerint, advocaverint coram justic'; but if they shall maintain before the justices the offer [to accuse their accomplices] which they made before the coroners and sheriffs. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 16. Mr. Barrington observes that "the word profrus is a very uncommon one, but signifies the same with the plaintiff's suit, [secta;] this is the sense of the French word profre in Britton, which answers to the producit se, [offers himself."] Barr. Obs. Stat. 226. It probably corresponded with the obtulit or optulit (qq. v.) of Bracton and Fleta. But it also had a more general sense, as just explained.

An accounting in the exchequer; a return made by officers of their accounts into the exchequer. Quod omnes vic', firmarii, ballivi libertatum, et alii qui ad profrum scaccarii venire debent; that all sheriffs, farmers, bailiffs of liberties and others who ought to come to the profer of the exchequer. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 32, § 2.

PROFICUUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Profit. Proficuum terræ; profit of land. Reg. Orig. 95. Cum proficuo exituum; with the profit of the issues. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 70, § 1. Proficua; profits. Bract. fol. 49. Hale's Anal. sect. xxiv. 3 Man. Gr. & Scott, 92.

PROFITS. The produce of lands; as in the phrase "rents, issues and profits." Under this word, it has been held that land itself will pass. Co. Litt. 4 b. Com. Dig. Grant, E. 5. Cro. Eliz. 190. 17 Johns. R. 548.

The avails of business; as of a partnership. See Story on Partn. §§ 18—29.

A division sometimes made of incorporeal hereditaments, as distinguished from easements, which tend rather to the convenience than the profit of the claimant. 2 Steph. Com. 2.

PROGENER. Lat. In the civil law. A grandson-in-law. Dig. 38. 10. 4. 6.

PROHÆREDES. L. Lat. In old European law. Persons acting for heirs, or in place of heirs. Marculf. lib. 2, c. 17. Spelman.

Remote heirs. Chart. Alam. n. 50. Spelman.

PROHIBITION. In practice. A writ to forbid a court from proceeding in a cause depending before it, on the suggestion that the cognizance of such cause does not belong to it.* Cowell. In England it issues, properly, only out of the court of King's (or Queen's) Bench, but may also be had in some cases, out of the Court of Chancery, Common Pleas or Exchequer, and may be directed either to inferior courts of common law, or to the courts christian, university courts, or court of admiralty, where they concern themselves with any matter not within their jurisdiction. 3 Bl. Com. 112. 3 Steph. Com. 685.

In American practice, a similar writ has been adopted. 2 Burr. Pr. 182. 12 Grattan's R. 17.

Prohibetur ne quis faciat in suo quod nocere possit alieno. It is forbidden for any one to do or make on his own land, what may injure another's. 9 Co. 59 a, Aldred's case.

PROINDE. L. Lat. Therefor. . 2 Mod. 33.

PROJECTIO. Lat. [from projicere, to cast up.] In old English law. A throwing up of earth by the sea. Used by Sir Matthew Hale as a synonyme of alluvio, (q. v.)

PROJICERE. L. Lat. In old practice. To cast (an essoin.) Fleta, lib. 6, c. 10, § 12.

PROLES. Lat. Issue; offspring; progeny. Cowell.

In a stricter sense, issue of a lawful marriage. Id. Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 39, note.

PROLETARIUS. Lat. In the Roman law. Of a mean condition. The proletarii included those among the common people (plebs) whose fortunes were below a certain valuation. A. Gell. Noct. Att. lib. xvi. c. 10. Calv. Lex.

PROLYTÆ. Græco-Lat. In Roman law. A name given to students of law in the fifth year of their course; as being in advance of the Lytæ, or students of the fourth year. Brissonius. Calv. Lex. See Lytæ.

PROMATERTERA. Lat. In the civil law. A great-grandmother's sister. Inst. 3. 6. 3.

PROMISE. [Lat. promissio, from promittere, to promise.] An undertaking or engagement by one person to another, either in words or in writing, to do or not to do some particular thing. Properly, an undertaking by parol, or not under seal; a promise by deed being technically called a *covenant. 2 Steph. Com. 108. A promise is distinguished from an agreement or contract, by its not importing or implying mutuality; it being, in other words, an unilateral engagement only. See Contract

Of this quality a common promissory note furnishes a familiar illustration.* The word promise is used to denote the engagement of a person, without regard to the consideration for it, or corresponding duty of the other party. Chitty on Contracts, 2.

PROMISSIO. Lat. In old English law. A promise. Promissio rei incertæ nullius juris esse reputatur; a promise of an uncertain thing is held to be of no validity. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 24.

PROMISSOR. Lat. [from promittere, to promise.] In the civil law. A promiser; properly the party who undertook to do a thing in answer to the interrogation of the other party, who was called the stipulator. The stipulator asked, "Promittis?" or, more commonly, "Spondes?" (Do you promise or engage?) The promissor replied, "Promitto," (I promise,) or "Spondeo," (I undertake.) Inst. 3. 16. 1. Id. 3. 17, pr. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, §§ 24, 25.

PROMISSORY NOTE. In mercantile law. A written promise by one person to another, for the payment of money at a specified time, absolutely and at all events. 3 Kent's Com. 74.—A written engagement by one person to pay another person therein named, absolutely and unconditionally, a certain sum of money, at a time specified therein. Story on Prom. Notes, § 1.—A promise or engagement, in writing, to pay a specified sum at a time therein limited, or on demand, or at sight, to a person therein named, or to his order, or bearer. Byles on Bills, 1, 4. Otherwise called a note of hand. A promissory note must be for the payment of a sum named, absolutely, and be payable to a particular person. 35 Maine R. 364. 23 Mississippi R. 233. 13 Georgia R. 55. See United States Digest, Promissory note.

PROMITTERE. Lat. In the civil law. To promise. "Promittis? Promitto;" (Do you promise? I do promise,) was one of the forms of words by which an obligation might be contracted. Inst. 3. 16. 1. But the more common word of engagement was "Spondeo," (I undertake.) Id. ibid. Id. 3. 17, pr.

PROMULGARE. Lat. [quasi provulgare, to publish.] In the Roman law. To make public; to make publicly known; to promulge or promulgate.

Promulgare legem originally signified to make the proposal of a law publicly known, in order that every one might be able to take it into consideration, before it was voted upon in the comitia. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 3, § 5. In the time of Justinian, it had acquired its present meaning,—to publish or make known a law, after its enactment. Proœm. Inst. § 1.

PROMULGATE. [from promulgare, q. v.] To make public; to make a law known, after its enactment or passage.* 1 Kent's Com. 458. Promulge is used by Cowell.

PROMYS. L. Fr. Promised. A qui certeyne terre soit promys, et dount escriptz sount faitz; to whom certain land is promised, [engaged to be conveyed,] and of which the writings are made. Britt. c. 36.

PRONEPOS. Lat. In the civil law. A great-grandson. Inst. 3. 6. 1. Dig. 38. 10. 1. 5. Bract. fol. 67.

PRONEPTIS. Lat. In the civil law. A great-granddaughter. Inst. 3. 6. 1. Dig. 38. 10. 1. 5. Bract. fol. 67.

PRONUNCIATIO. Lat. [from pronunciare, to pronounce.] In old English law. Delivery of judgment on a verdict. Bract. fol. 289.

PRONUNCIATION. L. Fr. A sentence or decree. Kelham.

PRONURUS. Lat. In the civil law. The wife of a grandson or great grandson. Dig. 38. 10. 4. 6. Brissonius.

PROOF. [Lat. probatio, q. v.] The establishment of one or more facts by evidence. The satisfactory establishment of the truth or falsity of some alleged matter of fact, by evidence adduced for the purpose.* Things established by competent and satisfactory evidence are said to be proved. 1 Greenl. Evid. § 1.

That which convinces the mind of a truth. Domat's Civ. Law, part 1, b. 3, tit. 6.—That which demonstrates, makes clear or ascertains the truth of a fact or point in issue.* 3 Bl. Com. 367.—Any thing which serves, either immediately or mediately, to convince the mind of the truth or falsehood of a fact or proposition. Best on Evid. 7, § 10.

The result or effect of evidence. 1 Greenl. Evid. § 1. Wills' Circ. Evid. 2. Burr. Circ. Evid. 1, 196. Evidence which produces a satisfactory impression upon the mind, or creates a persuasion or assurance of the truth of the fact sought to be established. Id. ibid.

The result of direct evidence. The word is used in this sense by some of the continental civilians. Poth. Oblig. part 4, c. 3, sect. 2. J. Voet ad Pand. lib. 22, tit. 3, n. 15.

Evidence in general. Proof and evidence are constantly used in practice, as synonymous, and are sometimes so treated in the books. See Evidence. Properly speaking, however, evidence is only the medium of proof; proof is the effect of evidence. Wills' Circ. Evid. 2. 1 Greenl. Evid. § 1. See Evidence, Prove.

PROPARS. L. Lat. [L. Fr. pourparti.] In old English law. Division of lands among parceners; partition. Breve de proparte; a writ of partition. Bract. fol. 276, 278 b. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 6, § 36.

An allotted share, or pourpart. Cowell, voc. Pourparty.

PROPATRUUS. Lat. In the civil law. A great-grandfather's brother. Inst. 3. 6. 3. Bract. fol. 68 b.

PROPER. [Lat. proprius, q. v.] Peculiar; particular; one's own. In proper person, (in propria persona;) in one's own person.

PROPERTY. [Lat. proprietas, from proprius, peculiar, private, one's own.] That which is proper or peculiar to one; that which belongs to one; that which is one's own; that to which one has an unrestricted and exclusive right, including all that is one's own, whether corporeal or incorporeal. Property, in this sense, denotes the things themselves which are the subjects of right, as in the expressions "real property," "personal property."

The right by virtue of which a thing belongs to one, or is one's own; ownership; dominion; the unrestricted and exclusive right to a thing; the right to dispose of the substance of a thing in every legal way, to possess it, to use it, and to exclude every one else from interfering with it. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 269, § 259. The exclusive right of using and disposing of a subject as one's own. Bell's Dict. Tayl. Civ. Law, 476. This is the strict legal sense of the word, as in the expressions "property in land," "property in chattels." Things are regarded in law not as property, but as the objects of property. 2 Bl. Com. 15. Property has been judicially defined, the right or interest which one has in lands or chattels. Tilghman, C. J. 6 Binney's R. 94. Spencer, C. J. 17 Johns. R. 283. See 1 Comstock's R. 20, 24. 3 Kernan's R. 396. The right of property is that sole and despotic dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world, in total exclusion of the right of any other individual in the universe. 2 Bl. Com. 2. The right of property consists in the free use, enjoyment and disposal of all a person's acquisitions, without any control or diminution, save only by the laws of the land. 1 Id. 138.

Property is the highest right a man can have to any thing; being used for that right which one has to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which no way depends on another man's courtesy. Spencer, Ch. J. 17 Johns. R. 281, 283. As applied to lands, the term includes every species of title, inchoate or complete. It is supposed to embrace those rights which lie in contract, those which are executory, as well as those which are executed. Marshall, C. J. 4 Peters' R. 512.

In old English law, the term property was used in a limited sense, as denoting the ownership of chattels, in contradistinction to estate, which denoted an interest in lands. "The ownership of a chattel personal," says Finch, "is termed a property." Law, b. 2, c. 17. "The right of things personal," says Lord Hale, "is called propriety." Anal. sect. xxvi. Propriety, closely following the Lat. proprietas, seems to have been the original form of the word.

"PROPERTY" is a word of extensive import in wills, and will carry real as well as personal estate, unless associated with words which explain or control it. 1 Jarman on Wills, 658, 663, (566, 570, Perkins' ed.) So, the expression "all my property," will carry an estate of inheritance, if there be nothing in the other parts of the will to limit or control the operation of the words. 4 Kent's Com. 535.

"Property," in a policy of insurance, has been held to include current bank bills owned by the assured, on board the vessel. 5 Metcalf's R. 1.

PROPINQUITY. [from L. Lat. propinquus, q. v.] In Scotch law. The relationship which exists among the members of a family or their descendants. Bell's Dict.

PROPINQUUS. Lat. In old English law. Near; near of kin. Propinquior excludit propinquum, propinquus remotum, remotus remotiorem; the nearer [heir] excludes the near; the near [excludes] the remote; the remote [excludes] the remoter.

Bract. fol. 64. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 11. Quoted by Lord Coke. Co. Litt. 10 b.

PROPIOR SOBRINO, PROPIOR SOBRINA. Lat. In the civil law. The son or daughter of a great uncle or great aunt, paternal or maternal. Inst. 3. 6. 5.

PROPIOS (or PROPRIOS.) Span. In Spanish American law. Certain portions of ground laid off and reserved, on the foundation of a town, as the unalienable property of the town, for the purpose of erecting public buildings, markets, &c. or to be used in any other way, under the direction of the municipality, for the advancement of the revenues or the prosperity of the place. 12 Peters' R. 442, note.

PROPONE. [from Lat. proponere, q. v.] In Scotch law. To state. To propone a defence, is to state or move it. 1 Kames' Equity, pref.

PROPONENT. [Lat. proponens, from proponere, q. v.] In ecclesiastical practice. The title of a party making or propounding an allegation. "And the party proponent doth allege and propound as before." 4 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 170, 171, et seq.

PROPONERE. Lat. In old English practice. To offer, present or exhibit; to set forth; to propound; Scotticè, to propone. After the parties had appeared in court, and the writ had been read and heard, the first step in the proceedings was for the demandant to propound, offer or state his count, (debet petens proponere intentionem suam,) &c. Bract. fol. 255 b. See Id. 266 b, 313 b. Debet sic actionem proponere; he ought to propound his action thus. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 21.

PROPORCITAS, Proportatio. L. Lat. In old records. The purport, tenor or substance of a thing; a report or relation of a matter. Called proport. Spelman.

In old Scotch law. A verdict; called the proport or report of the jury or assise. Quon. Attach. c. 68. Skene, in loc. Spelman.

PROPORTIONALITER. L. Lat. In old English law. Proportionally; in proportion. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 9, § 14.

PROPORTUM. L. Lat. In old records. Purport; intention, or meaning. Cowell. Blount. Carta. Rogeri de Quincy, 31 Hen. III.

PROPOSITUM. Lat. [from proponere, to purpose, or aim at.] Purpose; design; object. Voluntas et propositum distinguunt maleficium. Will and design distinguish crime, [are essential to constitute crime.] Bract. fol. 136 b.

PROPOSITUS. L. Lat. [from proponere, to propose.] In the law of descents. The person proposed, (persona proposita;) the person from whom succession is to be traced or degrees of consanguinity reckoned. 2 Bl. Com. 224. Id. 254, in table.

PROPOUND. [from Lat. proponere, q. v.] In ecclesiastical practice. To present or offer; to set forth or state. See Proponent. To propound a will, is to present it to the proper court for probate. 4 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 167, 169.

PROPRE. L. Fr. [from Lat. proprius, q. v.] Proper; own. Sa propre persone; his proper person. Britt. c. 121.

PROPRIEDAD. Span. [from Lat. proprietas.] In Spanish law. Property. White's New Recop. b. 1, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2.

PROPRIETAS. Lat. [from proprius, q. v.] In the civil and old English law. Property; that which is one's own; ownership. See Property.

Proprietas plena; full property, including not only the title, but the usufruct, or exclusive right to the use. Calv. Lex.

Proprietas nuda; naked or mere property or ownership; the mere title, separate from the usufruct. Id.

Proprietas totius navis carinæ causam sequitur. The property of the whole ship follows the condition of the keel. Dig. 6. 1. 61. If a man builds a vessel from the very keel with the materials of another, the vessel belongs to the owner of the materials. 2 Kent's Com. 362.

PROPRIETAS. Lat. In feudal law. Allodial property, as distinguished from beneficium. 1 Rob. Ch. V. App. note viii.

PROPRIETAS. L. Lat. Propriety; proper meaning or application. Proprietas verborum est salus proprietatum. The propriety of words [observance of the proper import of words,] is the safety [salvation, safeguard] of properties. Jenk. Cent. 16, case 28.

Proprietates verborum servandæ sunt. The proprieties of words [proper meanings of words,] are to be preserved or adhered to. Jenk. Cent. 136, case 78.

PROPRIETY. In old English law. Property. "Propriety in action; propriety in possession; mixed propriety." Hale's Anal. sect. xxvi.

PROPRIO VIGORE. L. Lat. By its or their own force, or intrinsic meaning.

2 Powell on Devises, 167. 3 East, 516. 1 Id. 33. Cas. temp. Hardwicke, 113.

PROPRIUS, Proprium. Lat. Peculiar; private; proper; exclusive; one's own. Proprius servus; one's own slave. Inst. 2. 14, pr. Proprius judex; a proper judge; one that properly had jurisdiction. Sometimes called suus judex; one's own judge. Bract. fol. 401. De proprio vivat; should live on his own means. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 71, § 3.

PROPTER. Lat. On account of; for.

Propter affectum; on account of bias or favorable inclination. Co. Litt. 156 b.

Propter defectum; on account of defect, deficiency, or incompetency. Id. ibid.

Propter delictum; on account of crime. Id. ibid.

Propter honoris respectum; on account of respect of honor or rank. Id. ibid. 3 Bl. Com. 362, 363.

Propter defectum sanguinis; on account of failure or deficiency of blood; as by dying without heirs. 2 Bl. Com. 245.

Propter delictum tenentis; on account of the crime of the tenant, as if his blood were attainted. Id. ibid.

Propter majorem securitatem; for greater security. Yearb. M. 8 Hen. VI. 16.

Propter sævitiam aut adulterium; on account of cruelty or adultery. 2 Kent's Com. 125.

PROPUGNACULUM. Lat. A bulwark; a defence. Propugnaculum hæreditatis; the fortress or defence of an inheritance. Bacon's Arg. Case of Impeachment of Waste; Works, iv. 217.

PROROGATION. In English law. The continuance of parliament from one session to another. 1 Bl. Com. 186, 187.

PROSECUTE. [Lat. prosequi, q. v.] To follow up; to carry on an action or other judicial proceeding.

To proceed against a person judicially; to proceed against a person criminally. See Prosecution.

PROSECUTIO. Lat. In old English law. A following up; pursuit. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 2.

PROSECUTION. [Lat. prosecutio, from prosequi, to follow up.] In practice. The following up, or carrying on of a judicial proceeding.

In a stricter sense,—the carrying on of a judicial proceeding in behalf of a complaining party; as distinguished from defence. See Prosequi.

In the strictest sense,—the carrying on of a criminal proceeding in behalf of the state or government, as by indictment or information. 4 Bl. Com. 301. The state or government, as carrying on such a proceeding.

PROSECUTOR. In criminal law. One who prosecutes another for a crime in the name of the government.

PROSECUTRIX. In criminal law. A female prosecutor.

PROSEQUI. Lat. In old English law. To follow after; to pursue or prosecute. An action is called by Bracton jus prosequendi, a right of prosecuting; and this, he observes, is to distinguish it from an exception, (exceptio, or plea,) by which we do not follow after another, but are rather followed by another, (qua non persequimur alium, sed magis ab alio prosequuti [sumus.]) Bract. fol. 98 b. The word in the civil law definition (which Bracton obviously borrowed) is persequendi. See Actio. What induced this change does not appear, but the substituted word has always maintained its footing in English law, and the common terms prosecute and prosecution, (qq. v.) are clearly framed from it.

PROSOCRUS. Lat. In the civil law. A wife's grandmother. Dig. 38. 10. 4. 6.

PROSTERNERE. Lat. In old English law. To throw down; to break or pull down; to abate. Prostratus, thrown down. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 1, § 19.

ΠΡΩΤΑ, Πρῶτα. Gr. The name given to the first part of the Digests or Pandects, comprising the first four books. Dig. Proœm. (De Conf. Dig.) § 2. Cod. 1. 17. 2, § 2.

PROTECTIO. Lat. [from protegere, to cover or shelter.] Protection; defence; shelter from wrong; support of right.

Protectio trahit subjectionem, et subjectio protectionem. Protection draws with it subjection, and subjection protection. 7 Co. 5 a, Calvin's case. The protection of an individual by government is on condition of his submission to the laws; and such submission, on the other hand, entitles the individual to the protection of the government. Broom's Max. 35.

PROTECTION. In English law. A writ by which the king might, by a special prerogative, privilege a defendant from all personal and many real suits for one year at a time, and no longer, in respect of his being engaged in his service out of the realm. 3 Bl. Com. 289. See Reg. Orig. 22 b. F. N. B. 28 B. Now disused.

PROTECTION. In maritime law. A certificate given by a public notary to a seaman, certifying that the bearer named therein is a citizen of the United States.

PROTECTOR OF SETTLEMENT. In English law. An appellation given, under the late statute of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, to the person who, in family settlements, is the owner of the first estate of freehold prior to an estate tail, and whose consent is necessary to enable the tenant in tail to bar an ulterior estate, that is, an estate taking effect on the determination of the estate tail.* 1 Steph. Com. 237, 533.

PROTEST. A solemn declaration against an act about to be done, or already done, expressive of disapprobation or dissent; or made with the view of preserving some right which, but for such declaration, might be taken to be relinquished, or of exonerating the party protesting from some liability which might otherwise attach to him. See 1 Bl. Com. 168.

In mercantile law. A formal statement in writing by a public notary, under seal, that a certain bill of exchange or promissory note (describing it,) was, on a certain day, presented for payment or acceptance, and that such payment or acceptance was refused, whereupon the notary protests against the parties for the loss or damage which may arise therefrom. See Story on Bills, § 276, and note. 3 Kent's Com. 93. 9 Metcalf's R. 174. 1 Comstock's R. 186. 1 Wisconsin R. 264. United States Digest, Promissory note.—A solemn declaration written by the notary, under a fair copy of the bill, stating that the payment or acceptance has been demanded and refused, the reason, if any, assigned, and that the bill is therefore protested. Grier, J. 17 Howard's R. 607. The court in this case decided that a mistake in copying or deciphering the abbreviations and flourishes with which the Christian name of the acceptor's agent is enveloped, does not vitiate the protest. Although, in a technical sense, the term protest means only the formal declaration drawn up and signed by the notary, yet, as used by commercial men, it includes all the steps necessary to charge an endorser. 2 Ohio R. (N. S.) 345.

A declaration made by the master of a vessel before a notary, consul or other authorized officer, at the first port reached after some damage sustained by stress of weather, stating the particulars, and showing that the damage was not occasioned by his misconduct or neglect; or, in other words, giving a circumstantial account of the accidents which have occurred, and protesting against them. This is called noting the protest, which is afterwards extended, that is, set forth in writing in full detail, sworn to by the master and officers, and attested by the notary. Jacobsen's Sea Laws, 373. 3 Kent's Com. 213, note.

PROTESTATION. In pleading. An oblique allegation or denial of some fact, protesting, (protestando,) that such a matter does or does not exist, and at the same time avoiding a direct affirmative or denial. 3 Bl. Com. 311. Where the pleader passed over, without traverse, any traversable fact alleged, and at the same time wished to preserve the power of denying it in another action, he made, collaterally or incidentally to his main pleading, a declaration importing that this fact was untrue, which was called a protestation, and it had the effect of enabling the party to dispute in another action the fact so passed over. Steph. Pl. 235, (Am. ed. 1824.) This formula was abolished in English practice by Rule Hil. T. 4 Will. IV.

"PROTESTED FOR NON-PAYMENT." These words, in mercantile law, have come to have a technical meaning. In them is included not only the idea that the bill is past due, but that payment of it has been demanded; and not being paid, it is therefore dishonored. They mean that the process necessary to dishonor the bill, to wit, demand, refusal of payment and the drawing up of a formal protest, has been gone through with. All this is included in and meant by the term "protested." 2 Douglas' (Mich.) R. 425, cited in 1 Wisconsin R. 264, 278.

notary, Preignothory. [L. Lat. protonotarius, from Gr. πρῶτος, first, and Lat. notarius, a notary, prænotarius.] A chief clerk in the English courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas; (literally, a chief notary.) Cowell. Spelman, voc. Protonotarius. 1 Tidd's Pr. 43, 45, 47. This office was abolished on the establishment of the modern office of masters, (q. v.) Stat. 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 30.

The chief clerks of some American courts are called prothonotaries.

PROTOCOL. [from L. Lat. protocollum, q. v.] The first draught, or rough minutes of an instrument or transaction; the original copy of a despatch, treaty or other document. Brande. 8 Texas R. 210. See Protocollum. Protocols are sometimes called "matrixes of title." 7 Texas R. 359.

In old Scotch practice. A book, marked by the clerk-register, and delivered to a notary on his admission, in which he was directed to insert all the instruments he had occasion to execute; to be preserved as a record. Bell's Dict.

PROTOCOLLUM. Græco-Lat. [Gr. πρωτοκολλον.] In the civil law. A brief note or memorandum of a transaction made by a notary, for the purpose of being afterwards extended or written out in full, (quod breviter et succincte notatur à tabellione, ut extendi deinde atque absolvi possit.) Calv. Lex. A hasty note of a transaction, as it were prima collectio rerum, the first getting together of matters. Id. Derived, according to some, from Gr. πρῶτος, first, and κολλα, glue or wax, referring to the wax spread over the tablets used for writing; or, according to others, from κῶλον, a member, being the first member or part of the writing. Id.

Protocollum, (Gr. πρωτοκολλον,) among the Romans seems to have originally signified a formal caption or heading of instruments drawn by tabelliones, (notaries;) or, more particularly, a writing at the head of the paper used by these officers, containing the name of the comes sacrarum largitionum, (chief officer of the imperial treasury,) and the time when the instrument was made. Nov. 44. It seems to have served the purpose of an official stamp. In the forty-fourth Novel, the tabelliones are forbidden to write their instruments upon any other paper than such as contained this protocollum at the head.

PROTOCOLO. Span. In Spanish law. The original draft or writing of an instrument which remains in the possession of the escribano, or notary. White's New Recop. lib. 3, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2. Id. § 3, note.

PROUT. As. Prout he declared. 12 Mod. 25. Prout moris est; as is the custom (or practice of the court.) 3 How. St. Trials, 112, 113. Called "a word of reference." Id. 6. Prout lex postulat; as the law requires. Vaugh. 260.

PROUT PATET PER RECORDUM. L. Lat. As appears by the record; as appears of record. Words of reference to a record, used in old pleadings and entries. T. Raym. 50. 1 Ld. Raym. 93. Comb. 299. 11 East, 565. Otherwise expressed, prout constat per recordum. 2 Salk. 428.

PROVE. [from L. Fr. prover; from Lat. probare, to prove.] To establish by evidence; to make out a case or claim by evidence. "Proof generally shall be intended by a jury; and making it appear and proving are the same thing." Freem. 53. See Proof.

PROVER. [L. Lat. probator.] In old English law. A person who, on being indicted of treason or felony, and arraigned for the same, confessed the fact before plea pleaded, and appealed or accused others his accomplices in the same crime, in order to obtain his pardon. 4 Bl. Com. 329, 330.

PROVER. L. Lat. [from Lat. probare.] In old English law. To prove; to establish or make good. Prist à prover par son cors; ready to prove by his body. Britt. c. 22. Prest de prover en toutz les maneres que la court vodra agarder; ready to prove in all manners that the court shall award. Id. ibid. Et si la chartre et le done soient dedits, soient proves, et si elz soient proves, &c.; and if the charter and the gift be denied, they shall be proved, and if they be proved, &c. Id. c. 93.

PROVIDED ALWAYS. [L. Lat. proviso semper.] Words by which a proviso in deeds is most properly introduced. Cro. Car. 128. See Proviso. The word "provided" will constitute a condition. 21 Alabama R. 89.

PROVINCIA. L. Lat. In old English law. A county. Spelman. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 1. Id. lib. 4, c. 5, § 4.

PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTIONS. In English law. The decrees of provincial synods held under the divers archbishops of Canterbury, from Stephen Langton, in the reign of Hen. III. to Henry Chichele, in the reign of Henry V. and adopted also by the province of York in the reign of Henry VI. 1 Bl. Com. 83. These constituted a part of the canon law of England. Id. ibid.

PROVINCIAL COURTS. In English law. The several archi-episcopal courts in the two ecclesiastical provinces of England.

PROVINCIALIS. Lat. In the civil law. One who has his domicil in a province, (provincia.) Dig. 50. 16. 190.

PROVING OF THE TENOR. In Scotch practice. An action for proving the tenor of a lost deed. Bell's Dict.

PROVISIONE VIRI. Lat. By provision of the husband. 12 East, 209, arg.

PROVISO. Lat. In old conveyancing. Provided. A word by which a condition might be created. Litt. sect. 329. Shep. Touch. 121, 122.

Proviso est providere præsentia et futura, non præterita. [The office of] a proviso is to provide for the present and future, not the past. 2 Co. 72.

PROVISO. In conveyancing. A condition inserted in a deed, on the observance whereof the validity of the deed depends. Cowell. So called from its initial words in the old Latin forms: PROVISO semper quod, &c.; "Provided always, that," &c. See Proviso, supra.

A clause or part of a clause in a statute, the office of which is either to except something from the enacting clause, or to qualify or restrain its generality, or to exclude some possible ground of misinterpretation of its extent. Story, J. 15 Peters' R. 445.

PROVISO, Trial by. In English practice. A term applied to a trial where it is brought on by a defendant, which may be done in cases where the plaintiff, after issue, neglects to proceed to trial according to the course and practice of the court. In trials of this kind, the defendant gives notice of trial, makes up the nisi prius record, and issues jury process. The term proviso is derived from a proviso contained in the venire or distringas to the sheriff, that if two writs shall come to his hands, he shall execute one of them only. 3 Bl. Com. 357. 2 Tidd's Pr. 760, 761.

PROVISOR. L. Lat. In old English law. A provider, or purveyor. Spelman. One who made interest for some ecclesiastical appointment in advance, or before there was a vacancy. See the Statute of Provisors, 25 Edw. III. st. 6. Mr. Barrington observes that the word might not be improperly rendered a provident looker-out. Obs. Stat. 276, note [g.]

PROVISUM EST. Lat. It is provided. Initial words of provisions in old statutes. Stat. Marlb. c. 1.

PROVOURS. L. Fr. Provers. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 15. See Prover.

PROX' SEQUEN'. An abbreviation of proximo sequente, (next following.) Com. 232.

PROXENENTA. Græco-Lat. [from Gr. προξενητὴς, an interpreter, or negotiator of bargains.] In the civil law. A broker; one who negotiated or arranged the terms of a contract between two parties, as between buyer and seller; one who negotiated a marriage; a match-maker. Dig. 50. 14. 2. Calv. Lex. Budæus Comm. Ling. Græc. cited ibid.

PROXIES. In English law. Yearly payments made by parish priests to their bishop or archdeacon, on account of visitation. Cowell.

PROXIMUS. Lat. Next. Proximus est cui nemo antecedit; supremus est quem nemo sequitur. He is next whom no one precedes; he is last whom no one follows. Dig. 50. 16. 92. See Id. 50. 16. 155.

PROXY. [Lat. procurator, q. v.] One who represents another; one who acts for, and in place of another.

One who is appointed or deputed by another to vote for him. Members of the House of Lords in England have the privilege of voting by proxy. 1 Bl. Com. 168.

In American law, it has been held that the members of a corporation are not entitled to vote by proxy at elections of officers, unless authorized by the act of incorporation. 2 Green's (N. J.) R. 233. See 1 Paige's R. 598. 2 Kent's Com. 295, note.

PROXY. In English law. The written appointment of a proctor in suits in the ecclesiastical courts. 4 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 141, 162, 164.

PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE. L. Fr. Since the last continuance. The name of a plea which a defendant is allowed to put in, after having already pleaded, where some new matter of defence arises after issue joined; such as payment, a release by the plaintiff, the discharge of the defendant under an insolvent or bankrupt law, and the like. 3 Bl. Com. 316. 2 Tidd's Pr. 847. 1 Burr. Pr. 232. So called with reference to the ancient practice of continuing a cause by formal entries on the record, the matter of defence being stated to have arisen since the last continuance of the cause. Steph. Pl. 64. The entry of continuances having been abolished in English practice, the plea is now commonly denominated a plea to the further maintenance of the action. Id. 65. A plea puis darrein continuance is a waiver of all previous pleas. 1 Burr. Pr. 424. 26 Vermont R. 305.

PUISNE, Puisnee, Pune. L. Fr. In English law. Younger. Taunt avera pusne fitz que l'eyne; the younger son shall have as much as the elder. Britt. c. 119. Le pusne frere. Id. ibid.

PUPILLUS. Lat. In the civil law. A male ward or infant under the age of puberty; a person under the authority of a tutor, (q. v.) Pupilla; a female ward. Inst. 1. 20. 7. Dig. 26. 1. 3. See Id. 50. 16. 239. Sometimes translated pupil, as in Scotch law. 2 Swinton's R. 532.

Pupillus pati posse non intelligitur. A pupil or infant is not supposed to be able to suffer, that is, to do an act to his own prejudice. Dig. 50. 17. 110. 2. 2 Kent's Com. 245.

PUPILLARIS SUBSTITUTIO. Lat. In the civil law. Pupillar substitution; the substitution of an heir to a pupil or infant under puberty. The substitution by a father, of an heir to his children under his power, disposing of his own estate and theirs, in case the child refused to accept the inheritance, or died before the age of puberty. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 6, num. 63. It was expressed in the following form: Titius filius hæres mihi esto; et si filius mihi hæres non erit, sive hæres erit, et prius moriatur quam in suam tutelam venerit, tunc Seius hæres esto; let Titius, my son, be my heir, and if my son will not be my heir, or if he become heir and dies before arriving at puberty, let Seius be my heir. Inst. 2. 16, pr. Dig. 28. 6.

PUR AUTRE VIE. L. Fr. For another's life. 2 Bl. Com. 120, 183.

PUR CEO QUE. L. Fr. [L. Lat. pro eo quod.] Literally, for this that; forasmuch as; inasmuch as; considering that; because. Et pur ceo que damage purra avener à nous; and forasmuch as damage may happen to us. Britt. c. 68. A common phrase in the old books, where a recital is made, or reason assigned. Sometimes written pur coe ke. Conf. Cartar. 25 Edw. I.

PUR TANT QUE. L. Fr. Forasmuch as; because; to the intent that. L. Fr. Dict. Kelham.

PURALLE, Puraille, Poral, Purlieu. L. Fr. Perambulation. Kelham. The borders of a forest or chase. L. Fr. Dict.

PURCHASE, Purchas, Pourchas. L. Fr. Acquisition. "De Purchas" is the title of the thirty-third chapter of Britton, in which he treats of the acquisition of title to property by occupancy; as by the taking of wild beasts, fish, bees, &c.; by accession and other modes. Al purchas de choses corporeles ne suffist nul don sauns le bail de la seisine; for the acquisition of corporeal things, no gift is sufficient, without delivery of seisin. Britt. c. 33.

Purchase; acquisition of lands by conveyance. Id. c. 35, 36.

An estate itself, so acquired by purchase. Ascune foitz returne purchas al donour; sometimes a purchase shall return to the donor. Id. c. 37.

PURCHASE. [L. Fr. purchas; L. Lat. perquisitio.] In the law of real property. Acquisition of lands or tenements by any other means than by descent or inheritance.* The possession of lands and tenements which a man hath by his own act or agreement, and not by descent from any of his ancestors or kindred. Litt. sect. 12. 2 Bl. Com. 241. Id. 201. 2 Wooddes. Lect. 150.—Acquisition by a party's own act, as distinguished from acquisition by act of law.* Purchase properly includes every lawful mode of coming to an estate by the act of a party, as opposed to the act of law. 1 Steph. Com. 355. This is the definition and division adopted by Mr. Stephen, who observes that it is impossible to reduce all titles to the alternative of descent or purchase, (the division of Blackstone) and that as to escheat, more particularly, (which is usually classed under the head of purchase,) it seems clear that it is neither the one nor the other. 1 Steph. Com. 354, note (c.) The latter view, which has been adopted from Mr. Hargrave, seems to be fully sustained by the words of Littleton himself,—"which a man hath by his own act or agreement." Litt. sect. 12. See 2 Chitt. Bl. Com. 201, notes. And it is expressly approved by Chancellor Kent. 4 Kent's Com. 373.

The radical meaning of the word purchase is well illustrated by the use of the L. Fr. purchas, (from which it is immediately taken) in the old books. Thus, Britton speaks of purchasing (acquiring) a thing by occupancy. Purchase may be made, he observes, by the shutting up of fish, and other wild animals, as of bees; (purra len purchaser par enclostrure de pessons, et de autre sauvagine, sicome des ees.) Britt. c. 33. See Purchas.

PURCHASE. In the law of contracts. Acquisition by a person's own act; the acquisition of property for a consideration, consisting generally of money. See Purchase money.

PURCHASE MONEY. In the law of contracts. The consideration or price paid, or agreed to be paid, in money, by the purchaser of property, especially of real estate.

PURCHASER. [L. Fr. purchasour; L. Lat. perquisitor.] A person who acquires an estate in lands by his own act or agreement; a person who takes, or comes to an estate, in any other manner than by inheritance. See Purchase.

One who acquires property by sale, or for a consideration; a buyer, (Lat. emptor.)

PURE. [Lat. purus; L. Fr. pure, puyr.] Clear; simple; unmixed or unqualified. A pure feoffment was distinguished from a conditional one. Britt. c. 39.

PURE VILLENAGE. [L. Lat. purum villenagium.] In old English law. That kind of villenage where the service performed was uncertain and indeterminate, the tenant not knowing at evening what service he would have to do in the morning, (ubi sciri non poterit vesperè quale servitium fieri debet manè;) or, in other words, where he was bound to do whatever was commanded him. Bract. fol. 26.

PURGARE. Lat. In the civil law. To clean, cleanse or scour, as a ditch, trench or sewer. Dig. 43. 21. 1. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 18, § 1.

PURGATIO. Lat. [from purgare, q. v.] In old English law. A cleansing or scouring. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 18, § 1.

PURGATION. [Lat. purgatio, from purgare, to purge, clear or cleanse.] In old English law. The clearing a person's self of a crime of which he was generally suspected, and accused before a judge. Cowell.

Canonical purgation was made by the party's taking his own oath that he was innocent of the charge, which was supported by the oath of twelve compurgators, who swore they believed he spoke the truth. 4 Bl. Com. 368. To this succeeded the mode of purgation by the single oath of the party himself, called the oath ex officio, of which the modern defendant's oath in chancery is a modification. 3 Id. 447.

Common or vulgar purgation, (vulgaris purgatio,) was another name for the trial by ordeal, (q. v.) 4 Id. 342.

PURGE. To cleanse; to clear; to clear or relieve from some imputation. A contempt is said to be purged, when the party relieves himself from the charge.

PURGED OF PARTIAL COUNSEL. In Scotch practice. Cleared of having been partially advised. A term applied to the preliminary examination of a witness, in which he is sworn and examined whether he has received any bribe or promise of reward, or has been told what to say, or whether he bears malice or ill-will to any of the parties. Bell's Dict.

PURGISER. L. Fr. To violate; to defile. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 14.

PURLIEU. L. Fr. [another, or a corrupted form of pourallee, a part perambulated.] In old forest law. Land adjoining to a forest, which was originally within the forest, but was afterward disafforested by perambulation, (pouraille,) whence its name. Manwood, 317, 318. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 484, § 625. 2 Stra. 1119.

PURPARLER. L. Fr. To speak of, or speak about; to confer, or consult. Ne compassay ne purparlay; neither compassed nor consulted about. Britt. c. 22.

PURPARS, Perpars. L. Lat. In old records. The share of an estate after partition; purparty, (q. v.) Paroch. Ant. 502. Cowell. See Propars.

PURPARTY, Purpartie. [L. Fr. pour parti; L. Lat. pro diviso; as divided.] A share or portion; a share after division.* That part or share of an estate which being first held in common by coparceners, is by partition allotted to any of them. Cowell. Et solonc cele estente soit faite a chescun parcener la livere de sa purparty; and according to such extent shall livery be made to each parcener of her several portion. Britt. c. 71. La purparty que est allot al puisne; the part which is allotted to the youngest. Litt. sect. 258.

The word is Englished purpart, in some of the modern books. 6 Penn. St. (Barr's) R. 234.

PURPENSED. L. Fr. Premeditated. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 1.

PURPORT. [L. Lat. proportum, from Fr. pour, for, and porter, to carry.] Meaning; import; substantial meaning; substance. The purport of an instrument means the substance of it as it appears on the face of the instrument, and is distinguished from tenor, which means an exact copy. MS. Buller, J. 2 East's P. C. 983. Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, § 342.

PURPRESTURA. L. Lat. In old English law. Purpresture, (q. v.) Et qui de cetero vastum vel purpresturam sine licentia nostra, in illis [boscis] fecerint vel essartum, de vastis purpresturis et essartis respondeant; and those who, without our permission, shall make waste or purpresture in those [woods] or assart, shall answer for those wastes, purprestures and assarts. Cart. de For. 6 Hen. III. c. 4. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, §§ 2, 3. Id. c. 52, § 25. Id. lib. 4, c. 6, § 3.

PURPRESTURE. [L. Lat. purpræstura, purprestura, porprestura; from L. Fr. pourprendre, to take away entirely.] Properly, a clandestine encroachment and appropriation of a neighbor's land; (terræ alienæ clandestina subtractio, ejusdemque vicinæ ascriptio.) Spelman. A species of nuisance by enclosing or building upon land that should be common or public. Co. Litt. 277 b. See Pourpresture.

PURVEYANCE, Purveiance. L. Fr. [from purveier or purvoire, to provide.] A provision; the provision of a statute; a statute. En le purveiance de Merton; in the statute of Merton. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 22.

PURVEYANCE. L. Fr. and Eng. [from pourvoire, to provide.] In old English law. A providing of necessaries for the king's house. Cowell. A buying at the king's price. Hale's Anal. sect. viii. See Pourveyance.

PURVEYOR. In old English law. An officer who provided or bought articles for the king's use, and at the king's price. Called, in the statute 36 Edw. III. c. 2, a hateful name, (heignous nome) and changed to that of achator, (q. v.) Barringt. Obs. Stat. 289.

PURVIEW, Purvieu. L. Fr. [from purveier, to provide.] Provided. A word very commonly used in the old French statutes, to introduce a chapter or distinct provision. Purview est que; it is provided that. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 1. Purview est ensement; it is provided likewise. Id. c. 2. See Id. c. 20. 1 And. 67. Used in modern law as an English word, to denote the enacting clause of a statute, or the entire body of a statute. See infra.

PURVIEW. [See supra.] The providing part of a statute; that which follows the preamble, and contains the direct and express provision of the law. Lord Coke speaks of the statute of 3 Hen. VIII. c. 12, as "standing upon a preamble and a purview." 12 Co. 20.—The body of an act or statute; that part of it which consists of direct and express provisions, as distinguished from provisoes and saving clauses.* "A saving clause in a statute is to be rejected, when it is directly repugnant to the purview or body of the act." 1 Kent's Com. 462. See Purveyance.

To PUT IN. [Lat. ponere.] In practice. To place in due form before a court; to place among the records of a court. A phrase very commonly applied to the acts of parties in judicial proceedings, particularly to those of defendants. "To put in bail," "to put in a plea or answer," &c. are expressions in daily use.

To PUT IN URE. In old statutes. To put in practice or effect; to carry into effect. See Ure. Sometimes written to "put in use."

To PUT OUT. To open. To put out lights; to open or cut windows. 11 East, 372.

To PUT UPON. [L. Lat. ponere super.] In practice. To rest upon; to submit to; as a defendant "puts himself upon the country." See Country.

PUTAGIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Fornication on the part of a woman. Glanv. lib. 7, c. 12. Bract. fol. 88. Spelman. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 15, § 4.

Q.

Q. A letter used in the Roman law, in various abbreviations. Q. D. E. R. F. P. D. E. R. I. C. for Quid de ea re fieri placeret, de ea re ita censuerunt, (what it might be their pleasure to have done on that subject, on that subject they have so determined.) An abbreviation used in writing out decrees of the senate. Tayl. Civ. Law, 576. Calv. Lex.

QAR. L. Fr. For. Fet Assaver, § 45.

Q'D. A contraction of quod, in old pleading. 1 Instr. Cler. 12.

QUA. L. Lat. As. "The debt, quà debt, was instantly due." Lord Ellenborough, 8 East, 433. "Interest, quà interest." Lord Kenyon, 1 Id. 195. "The judge, quà judge, cannot know." Vaugh. 147.

QUACUNQUE VIA DATA. Lat. Whichever way given; in whichever view of the case. Lord Mansfield, 2 Burr. 980. Story, J. 2 Gallison's R. 26. 1 Id. 637. 11 Metcalf's R. 276. Shep. Touch. 367.

QUADRAGESIMA. Lat. The fortieth. The first Sunday in Lent is so called because it is about the fortieth day before Easter. Cowell.

QUADRAGESMS. The third volume of the year books of the reign of Edward III. So called, because beginning with the fortieth year of the reign. Crabb's Hist. Eng. Law, 327. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, c. 8.

QUADRANS. Lat. In old English law. A farthing; a fourth part or quarter of a penny.

Before the reign of Edward I. the smallest coin was a sterling or (silver) penny marked with a cross or traverse strokes, by the guidance of which a penny, upon occasion, might be cut in halves for a half penny, or into quarters for farthings or fourth parts, till, to avoid the fraud of unequally cutting, King Edward I. A. D. 1279, coined half pence and farthings in round distinct pieces. Cowell. Spelman, voc. Denarius, citing Stow, p. 306, where some curious old verses are given.

QUADRANTALIS. L. Lat. [from quadrans, q. v.] In old English law. Of the value or price of a quarter or farthing. Panis quadrantalis; the farthing loaf. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 9. Britton, in the parallel passage, has the word ferlinges, (q. v.) Britt. c. 30. But the word is not taken notice of either by Spelman or Cowell.

QUADRANTATA TERRÆ. L. Lat. The fourth part of an acre, according to Cowell. But Spelman makes it to be the fourth part of a yard-land. Spelman, voc. Fardella.

QUADRARIUM. L. Lat. In old records. A quarry, or stone-pit. Paroch. Ant. 208. Cowell.

QUADRIENNIUM. Lat. [from quatuor, four, and annus, year.] The four years' course of studying the civil law, before arriving at the code or imperial constitutions. Inst. proœm. Tayl. Civ. Law, 39.

QUADRIENNIUM UTILE. Lat. In Scotch law. The term of four years allowed to a minor, after his majority, in which he may by suit or action endeavor to annul any deed to his prejudice, granted during his minority. Bell's Dict. Whishaw.

QUADRIPARTITE. Divided into four; of four parts. A term applied, in conveyancing, to an indenture executed in four parts.

QUADRUPLICATIO. Lat. In the civil law. A pleading on the part of a defendant, following the triplicatio, (q. v.) and corresponding to the rebutter at common law. The third pleading on the part of the defendant. Inst. 4. 14. 3. 3 Bl. Com. 310. Called, in Scotch law, quadruply. 3 How. St. Trials, 78.

Bracton adopts the term, though he gives the pleading itself a different place in the series, making it the third pleading on the part of the plaintiff, corresponding with the surrejoinder of common law pleading. Bract. fol. 400 b. This is occasioned by his omission of the duplicatio, which, in the civil law series, as given in the Institutes, followed immediately after the replicatio, though, in the Digests, the duplicatio is omitted. Dig. 44. 2. 2. 3. The same omission occurs in Fleta. Lib. 6, c. 36, § 10.

Quæ ab hostibus capiuntur, statim capientium fiunt. Things which are taken from enemies immediately become the property of the captors. 2 Burr. 693. See Inst. 2. 1. 17. Grotius de Jur. Bell. lib. 3, c. 6, § 12. In the Institutes, here cited, the reading is, Quæ ex hostibus capimus, jure gentium statim nostra fiunt. What we take from enemies, by the law of nations immediately becomes ours. In the Digests, the reading is, Quæ ex hostibus capiuntur, jure gentium statim capientium fiunt. Things which are taken from enemies, by the law of nations immediately become the property of the captors. Dig. 41. 1. 5. 7. Statim, however, is held to mean "when the battle is over;" when all immediate pursuit has ceased, and all hope of recovery is gone. Lord Mansfield, 2 Burr. ub. sup. See Statim.

Quæ ab initio inutilis fuit institutio, ex postfacto convalescere non potest. An institution which was at the beginning of no use or force, cannot acquire force from after matter. Dig. 50. 17. 210. See Quod ab initio, &c.

Quæ accessionum locum obtinent, extinguuntur cum principales res peremptæ fuerint. Things which hold the place of accessories are extinguished when the principal things are destroyed. 2 Poth. Oblig. 202. Broom's Max. 373.

Quæ ad unum finem loquuta sunt non debent ad alium detorqueri. Words which are spoken to one end, [or with reference to one object,] ought not to be perverted to another. 4 Co. 14 a. The sense of words charged as slanderous is to be collected from the cause and occasion of speaking them. Id. ibid.

Quæ cohærent personæ a persona separari nequeunt. Things which cohere to, or are closely connected with the person, cannot be separated from the person. Jenk. Cent. 28, case 53. Applied to the joinder of husband and wife as parties to actions. Id. ibid.

Quæ communi lege derogant stricte interpretantur. [Statutes] which derogate from the common law are strictly interpreted. Jenk. Cent. 221, case 72.

Quæ contra rationem juris introducta sunt, non debent trahi in consequentiam. Things which are introduced contrary to the reason of law ought not to be drawn into a precedent. 12 Co. 75. Precedents which are utterly against law and reason are void. Id. ibid.

Quæcunque intra rationem legis inveniuntur, intra legem ipsam esse judicantur. Things which are found within the reason of a law are supposed to be within the law itself. 2 Inst. 689.

Quæ dubitationis causa tollendæ inseruntur, communem legem non lædunt. [Clauses] which are inserted [in an instrument] for the purpose of removing doubt, do not affect the common law. Co. Litt. 205 a. Litt. sect. 331. In the Digests, the maxim reads, Quæ dubitationis tollendæ causa contractibus inseruntur, jus commune non lædunt. Dig. 50. 17. 81.

QUÆ EST EADEM. L. Lat. [L. Fr. que est le mesme, which is the same.] In old pleading. Formal words used in pleas in actions of trespass, the defendant alleging that the plaintiff gave him leave to enter on the land, and that he entered accordingly, quæ est eadem transgressio, (which is the same trespass) of which the plaintiff complains. Holthouse.

Quæ incontinenti fiunt inesse videntur. Things which are done incontinently [or simultaneously with an act,] are supposed to be inherent [in it; to be a constituent part of it.] Co. Litt. 236 b. The very elliptical form of this maxim renders a close translation difficult. It seems to be condensed from Bracton's pacta quæ incontinenti donationi apponantur,—inesse videntur. Bract. fol. 16 b.

Quæ in partes dividi nequeunt, solida a singulis præstantur. Things [or services] which cannot be divided into parts, are rendered entire severally, [that is, by each several feoffee.] 6 Co. 1 a, Bruerton's case. Co. Litt. 149 b. A maxim applied to the apportionment of rents and services.

Quæ inter alios acta sunt nemini nocere debent, sed prodesse possunt. Things which are done between others (or third parties) ought not to injure a person, but may benefit him. Branch's Pr. See Res inter alios, &c.

Quæ in testamento ita sunt scripta ut intelligi non possint, perinde sunt ac si scripta non essent. Things which are so written in a will that they cannot be understood, are the same as if they had not been written at all. Dig. 50. 17. 73. 3.

Quæ legi communi derogant non sunt trahenda in exemplum. Things which dero-gate from the common law are not to be drawn into precedent. Branch's Pr.

Quælibet concessio fortissime contra donatorem interpretanda est. Every grant is to be interpreted most strongly against the grantor. Co. Litt. 183 a. Every man's grant shall be taken by construction of law most forcible against himself. Id.

Quælibet jurisdictio cancellos suos habet. Every jurisdiction has its limits. Jenk. Cent. 139, case 85.

QUÆ NIHIL FRUSTRA. L. Lat. Which (does or requires) nothing in vain; which requires nothing to be done, that is to no purpose. 2 Kent's Com. 53.

Quæ non valeant [prosunt] singula, juncta juvant. Things which may have no force singly, united have an effect. Branch's Pr. 3 Bulstr. 132. 1 Ventr. 278. Words in an instrument which are ineffective when taken singly, operate when taken conjointly. Broom's Max. 294, [450.]

QUÆ PLURA. L. Lat. (What more.) In old English practice. A writ which lay where an inquisition had been made by an escheator in any county, of such lands or tenements as any man died seised of, and all that was in his possession was imagined not to be found by the office; the writ commanding the escheator to inquire what more (quæ plura) lands and tenements the party held on the day when he died, &c. F. N. B. 255 A. Reg. Orig. 293. Cowell.

Quæ propter necessitatem recepta sunt, non debent in argumentum trahi. Things which are admitted on the ground of necessity ought not to be drawn into question. Dig. 50. 17. 162.

Quæ præter consuetudinem et morem majorum fiunt, neque placent neque recta videntur. Things which are done contrary to the custom of our ancestors, neither please nor appear right. 4 Co. 78.

QUÆRAS de dubiis, legem bene discere si vis:
Quærere dat sapere quæ sunt legitima vere.

Inquire about doubtful points, if you would learn the law well; to inquire into, is the way to know what is really lawful, [what the law really is.] Litt. sect. 443.

QUÆRE. Lat. Inquire; see; examine; look into. A word constantly used in the books to denote a doubtful point, or to direct further inquiry into a point or matter stated. Perkins, ch. 4, s. 296. Id. ch. 5, s. 350. Quære de hoc; inquire of this, or about this. Id. ch. 9, s. 585. Quære inde. Dyer, 24. Tamen quære; however, inquire. Perk. ch. 1, ss. 44, 45, 105, 106. Ideo quære; therefore inquire. Id. ch. 1, s. 39; ch. 4, s. 261. Ideo quære certitudinem inde, &c.; therefore inquire into the certainty thereof. Id. ch. 4, s. 269. Quære, quid inde venit; quære what became of it. 6 Mod. 253. The word is used also in the statement of questions. Sed quære si tenens elongaverit; but quære if the tenant should have eloigned. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 45, § 3.

A question or doubt. "It was a quære." 12 Mod. 18.

QUÆRENS NIHIL CAPIAT PER BILLAM. L. Lat. The plaintiff shall take nothing by his bill. A form of judgment for the defendant. Latch, 133.

QUÆRENS NON INVENIT PLEGIUM. L. Lat. The plaintiff did not find a pledge. A return formerly made by a sheriff to a writ requiring him to take security of the plaintiff to prosecute his claim. Cowell.

Quæ rerum natura prohibentur nulla lege confirmata sunt. Things which are forbidden by the nature of things are [can be] confirmed by no law. Dig. 50. 17. 188. 1. Branch's Pr. Positive laws are framed after the laws of nature and reason. Finch, L. 74.

QUÆRITUR ut crescunt tot magna volumina legis?
In promptu causa est,—crescit in orbe dolus.

The question is asked, why the volumes of the law multiply so fast? The reason is at hand,—fraud increases in the world. 3 Co. 82 a, Twyne's case. "To one who marvelled what should be the reason that acts and statutes are continually made at every parliament, without intermission and without end, a wise man made a good and short answer, both which are well composed in verse." (See the verse just given.) Id. ibid.

Quæ sunt minoris culpæ sunt majoris infamiæ. [Offences] which are of a lower grade of guilt are of a higher degree of infamy. Co. Litt. 6 b. Lord Coke here alludes to the infamous punishments of pillory, branding and cropping, which were formerly inflicted on minor offences.

QUÆSTIO. Lat. [from quærere, to inquire.] In the civil law. The question; the torture; inquiry or inquisition by inflicting the torture; bodily torment inflicted in order to extort the truth, (ad eruen- dam veritatem.) Dig. 47. 10. 15. 41. Id. 48. 18.

QUÆSTOR. Lat. [from quærere, to seek or collect.] A Roman magistrate whose office it was to collect the public revenue, (qui publicas pecunias conquirebat.) Varro de L. L. iv. 14. Dig. 1. 13. Cod. 1. 30.

QUÆSTOR SACRI PALATII. Lat. Quæstor of the sacred palace. An officer of the imperial court at Constantinople, with powers and duties resembling those of a chancellor, (cancellarius.) Calv. Lex.

QUÆSTUS. Lat. In old English law. Acquisition; purchase. See Questus.

QUALE JUS. Lat. (What kind of right.) In old English law. A judicial writ which lay where a man of religion, (as an abbot, &c.) had judgment to recover land, before execution was issued; commanding the sheriff to inquire what right the plaintiff had to recover, and what damages he had sustained. Reg. Jud. 8, 16, 17. The object of the writ was to ascertain whether the recovery had, or had not been collusive, in order to evade the statute of mortmain.

QUALIFIED FEE. In English law. A fee having a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end; otherwise termed a base fee. 2 Bl. Com. 109. 1 Steph. Com. 225. An interest which may continue forever, but is liable to be determined, without the aid of a conveyance, by some act or event, circumscribing its continuance or extent. 4 Kent's Com. 9. See Base fee.

QUALIFIED PROPERTY. A temporary or special interest in a thing, liable to be totally divested on the happening of some particular event. 2 Kent's Com. 347. It is a species of interest growing out of possession, and arising either from the nature of the thing or chattel possessed, as in the case of animals feræ naturæ; or from a transfer of possession from the general owner, as in case of bailment, pledge or distress. 2 Bl. Com. 391—396. 2 Steph. Com. 73. 2 Kent's Com. 347—350.

By the statute 13 Will. III. c. 2, it was enacted that the commissions of the judges in the superior courts should be made, not as formerly, durante bene placito, (during pleasure,) but quamdiu bene se gesserint, as long as they shall conduct themselves well. Id. ibid. The clause is often used in old letters patent. Cowell.

Quamvis aliquid per se non sit malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. Although a thing may not be bad in itself, yet, if it is of bad example, it is not to be done. 2 Inst. 564.

Quamvis lex generaliter loquitur, restringenda tamen est, ut, cessante ratione, ipsa cessat. Although a law speaks generally, yet it is to be restrained, so that when its reason ceases, it should cease also. 4 Inst. 330.

QUANDO ACCIDERINT. L. Lat. (When they shall happen, or come to hand.) In practice. The technical name of a judgment entered against an executor or administrator, where it is directed to be satisfied out of assets which may afterwards come to the hands of the defendant. 2 Arch. Pr. 147. 2 Burr. Pr. 97.

Quando abest provisio partis, adest provisio legis. When the provision of the party is wanting, the provision of the law is at hand. 6 Vin. Abr. 49.

Quando aliquid mandatur, mandatur et omne per quod pervenitur ad illud. When any thing is commanded, every thing by which it can be accomplished is also commanded. 5 Co. 115 b, Foliamb's case. When the law commands a thing to be done, it authorizes the performance of whatever may be necessary for executing its command. Broom's Max. 201, [366.] Thus, constables, whose duty it is to see the peace kept, may, when necessary, command the assistance of others. Id. ibid. So a sheriff may summon the posse comitatus for a similar purpose. 5 Co. ub. sup.

Quando aliquid prohibetur, prohibetur et omne per quod devenitur ad illud. When any thing is prohibited, every thing by which it is reached is prohibited also. 3 Inst. 48. That which cannot be done directly, shall not be done indirectly. Broom's Max. 202, [367.]

prohibetur et per obliquum. When any thing is prohibited from being done directly, it is prohibited indirectly also. Co. Litt. 223 b. Wingate's Max. 618, max. 159.

Quando aliquis aliquid concedit, concedere videtur et id sine quo res uti non potest. When a person grants any thing, he is supposed to grant that also without which the thing cannot be used. 3 Kent's Com. 421. When the use of a thing is granted, every thing is granted by which the grantee may have and enjoy such use. Id. ibid.

Quando charta continet generalem clausulam, postaque descendit ad verba specialia quæ clausulæ generali sunt consentanea, interpretanda est charta secundum verba specialia. When a deed contains a general clause, and afterwards descends to special words which are agreeable to the general clause, the deed is to be interpreted according to the special words. 8 Co. 154 b, Altham's case.

Quando de una et eadem re duo onerabiles existunt, unus, pro insufficientia alterius, de integro onerabitur. When there are two persons liable for one and the same thing, one of them, in case of default of the other, shall be charged with the whole. 2 Inst. 277.

Quando dispositio referri potest ad duas res, ita quod secundum relationem unam vitiatur, et secundum alteram [aliam] utilis sit, tunc facienda est relatio ad illam ut valeat dispositio. When a disposition [in a will] may be referred to two things, so that according to one reference it is destroyed, and according to the other it is effectual, such a reference must be made that the disposition shall have effect. 6 Co. 76 b, Sir George Curson's case.

Quando diversi desiderantur actus ad aliquem statum perficiendum, plus respicit lex actum originalem. When different acts are required to the formation of any estate, the law chiefly regards the original act. 10 Co. 49 a, Lampet's case. When to the perfection of an estate or interest, divers acts or things are requisite, the law has more regard to the original act, for that is the fundamental part on which all the others are founded. Id. ibid.

Quando [cum] duo jura concurrunt in una persona, æquum est ac si essent in diversis. When two rights meet in one person, it is the same thing as if they were in different persons. 4 Co. 118 a, arg. Shep. Touch. 34. That is, they still remain separate rights, and do not merge together into one.

Quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, concedere videtur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. When the law grants any thing to any one, it is considered to grant that also without which the thing itself cannot exist. 5 Co. 47 a, Franklin's case. When the law grants a thing to any one, it is considered to grant him also whatever is essential to constitute it, or is necessarily incident to it. The last clause of this maxim is sometimes varied thus: et id per quod devenitur ad illud; the means of attaining it. 1 Kent's Com. 464. The law is well settled that whenever a power is given by a statute, every thing necessary to the making it effectual is given by implication. Douglas, C. J. 2 Florida R. 597.

Quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, omnia incidentia tacite conceduntur. When the law grants any thing to any one, all the incidents [of such thing] are tacitly granted; [are granted by implication.] 2 Inst. 326. Hob. 234. The grant of a thing carries all things included, without which the thing granted cannot be had. Id.

Quando lex est specialis, ratio autem generalis, generaliter lex est intelligenda. When a law is special, but its reason [or object] general, the law is to be understood generally. 2 Inst. 83.

Quando licet id quod majus, videtur et licere id quod minus. When the greater is allowed, the less seems to be [is considered as] allowed also. Where a man may devise the land itself, it seems he may devise the trees or grass growing upon the land. Shep. Touch. 429.

Quando plus fit quam fieri debet, videtur etiam illud [ipsum] fieri quod faciendum est. When more is done than ought to be done, that which is to be done is still considered to be done. 8 Co. 85 a, Sir Richard Pexhall's case. Where more is done [under a power] than ought to be done, that portion for which there was authority shall stand, and the act shall be void quoad the excess only. Broom's Max. 76, [131.]

Quando res non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When a thing is of no effect as I do it, it shall have effect as far as [or in whatever way] it can. Lord Mansfield, C. J. Cowp. 600. Deeds are to be so construed as to operate according to the intention of the parties, if by law they may; and if they cannot in one form, they shall operate in that which by law will effectuate the intention. Broom's Max. 238, 239, [415.] 2 Smith's Lead. Cas. 294.

Quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis, generaliter statutum est intelligendum. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason or object of it general, the statute is to be construed generally. 10 Co. 101 b, Beawfage's case.

QUANTITY, as applied to an estate, denotes the duration and extent of the interest which the tenant has in the tenement; as whether for years, for life or in fee. 2 Bl. Com. 103.

QUANTUM MERUIT. Lat. (As much as he deserved.) In pleading. The common count in an action of assumpsit for work and labor, founded on an implied assumpsit or promise on the part of the defendant to pay the plaintiff as much as he reasonably deserved to have for his labor. 3 Bl. Com. 161. 1 Tidd's Pr. 2. So termed from the emphatic words in the old Latin forms. Under the late pleading rules of the English courts, this count, and the quantum valebant (infra) are considered as virtually abolished. 1 Chitt. Pl. 288.

QUANTUM VALEBANT. Lat. (As much as they were worth.) In pleading. The common count in an action of assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, founded on an implied assumpsit or promise, on the part of the defendant, to pay the plaintiff as much as the goods were reasonably worth. 3 Bl. Com. 161. 1 Tidd's Pr. 2. So termed from the emphatic words in the old Latin forms, though valerent (should be worth) was the word actually used in laying the promise; (super se assumpsit, et eidem T. adtunc et ibidem fideliter promisit, quod ipse idem W. tantas denariorum summas quantas (quantum) bona mercimonia et merchandizæ illa, tempore venditionis et deliberationis eorundem, rationabiliter VALERENT, eidem T. cum inde postea requisitus esset, bene et fideliter solvere et contentare vellet.) Towns. Pl. 416. Valebant was used in the averment that followed, that the goods were worth a certain price. Id. ibid.

QUARANTINE, properly QUARENTINE or QUARENTENE. [L. Lat. quarentena; L. Fr. quarentine.] The period of forty days. 2 Bl. Com. 135.

The privilege of a widow to continue in the chief house of her husband for forty days after his death. Id. ibid. See Quarentine.

A period of time originally consisting of forty days, but now of variable length, during which a vessel from certain coasts or ports, said or supposed to be infected with certain diseases, is not allowed to communicate with the shore, except under particular restrictions. Brande. The word is derived by this author from the Ital. quaranto, forty.

QUARE. Lat. Wherefore; why. A formal word in various old writs, especially writs of trespass. Reg. Orig. 93—112. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, §§ 11, 12.

QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT. L. Lat. (Wherefore he broke the close.) In pleading. The technical name of the action of trespass for an illegal entry upon land or premises. So called from the emphatic words of the original writ by which it was formerly commenced; the defendant being summoned to show wherefore he broke the plaintiff's close, (ostensurus quare clausum querentis fregit.) Reg. Orig. 93 b, 96, 99. 3 Bl. Com. 209, 281.

QUARE EJECIT INFRA TERMINUM. L. Lat. (Wherefore he ejected within the term.) In old practice. A writ which lay for a lessee where he was ejected before the expiration of his term, in cases where the wrong-doer or ejector was not himself in possession of the lands, but his feoffee, or another claiming under him. 3 Bl. Com. 199, 206. Reg. Orig. 227. F. N. B. 197 S.

QUARE IMPEDIT. L. Lat. (Wherefore, or why he hinders.) In English practice. A writ or action which lies for the patron of an advowson, where he has been disturbed in his right of patronage; so called from the emphatic words of the old form, by which the disturber was summoned to answer why he hinders the plaintiff. 3 Bl. Com. 246, 248. 3 Steph. Com. 661. Reg. Orig. 30 b. F. N. B. 32 E. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 16. It is one of the few real actions still retained in use.

QUARE INCUMBRAVIT. L. Lat. (Wherefore, or why he incumbered.) In old English practice. A writ or action which lay against a bishop, after judgment in an action of quare impedit, where he had incumbered the church with a clerk pending the action. 3 Bl. Com. 248. Reg. Orig. 32 b. F. N. B. 48 D. 3 Steph. Com. 661, note (q.)

QUARE NON ADMISIT. L. Lat. (Wherefore, or why he did not admit.) In English practice. A writ which lies to recover damages against a bishop for refusing to present the clerk of the prevailing party in an action of quare impedit, after being directed to do so by the writ of ad admittendum clericum. 3 Bl. Com. 250. 3 Steph. Com. 665, note (l.) Reg. Orig. 32. F. N. B. 47 C.

QUARE OBSTRUXIT. L. Lat. (Wherefore he obstructed.) In old English practice. A writ which lay for one who, having a liberty to pass through his neighbour's ground, could not enjoy his right because the owner had straitened or obstructed it, (quare obstruxit vel coarctavit.) Cowell. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 2.

QUAREL, Querel. L. Fr. [from Lat. querela, q. v.] In old English law. A complaint, or suit. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 28. 2 Inst. 213.

QUARENTENA. L. Lat. [L. Fr. quarentyne; from quarante, forty.] In Saxon and old English law. A furlong; a quantity of land containing forty perches. Chart. Withlaf. Reg. Mercior. apud Ingulf. LL. Hen. I. c. 17. Spelman. Co. Litt. 5 b.

QUARENTENA, (or QUARENTENA MULIERUM.) L. Lat. In old English and Scotch law. Quarentine; widow's quarentine. Item necessaria habet uxor, usque ad quarentenam, nisi ei fuerit sua dos citius assignata; also the wife has her necessaries during her quarentine, unless her dower have been sooner assigned her. Bract. fol. 60 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 10. Infra quarentenam,—infra quadraginta dies; within the quarentine,—within the forty days. Bract. fol. 96. Dotes et quarentenam. Stat. Rob. III. Reg. Scot. c. 30, [c. de viduis, 22.] Skene de Verb. Sign.

QUARENTINE, Quarantine. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Fr. quarante, forty; L. Lat. quarentena, quarentina.] A space of forty days allowed a widow after the death of her husband, to remain in his chief messuage or mansion-house, during which time her dower shall be assigned her. This privilege was first given by Magna Charta, and the provision is still the law in England, and probably in all the United States. Mag. Chart. c. 7. Britt. c. 103. Co. Litt. 34 b. 2 Bl. Com. 135. 1 Steph. Com. 253. 4 Kent's Com. 61.

The word quarentine itself is not in Magna Carta. "Maneat [vidua] in capitali mesuagio ipsius mariti sui per quadraginta dies post obitum mariti sui, infra quos assignetur ei dos sua." Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 7. In King John's charter, it reads: "Maneat in domo mariti sui per quadraginta dies post mortem ipsius, infra quos assignetur ei dos sua." C. 7. In the original articles of the charter, it reads: "Maneat in domo sua per xl dies post mortem ipsius, et infra terminum illum assignetur ei dos." C. 4.

This word is written by Blackstone quarantine, which is the form adopted in most of the modern books. 2 Bl. Com. ub. sup. 4 Kent's Com. ub. sup. Lord Coke, however, writes it quarentine, which, doubtless, was its original form, as is shown by the use of the word in the law French of Britton, and the invariable occurrence of quarentena, in the Latin of Bracton, Fleta and the Register. See Quarentena. Mansionnes—ou eles purrount demorer lour quarentines; houses where they may stay their quarentines. Britt. c. 103.

QUARESME. L. Fr. [from Lat. quadragesima.] In old English law. Lent. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 51. Yearb. M. 7 Edw. III. 14.

QUARREL. [L. Fr. quarel; Lat. querela.] In old English law. A complaint or plaint; an action; a cause of action; a controversy or debate. By the release of all quarrels, not only actions depending in suit, but causes of action and suit also were released. 8 Co. 153 a, Altham's case. Termes de la Ley.

QUARTA, Quartalis, Quartalium. L. Lat. [from quartus, fourth.] In old European law. A fourth part; a quarter. Spelman.

In old English law. A quart; the fourth part of a gallon. Jalones, potellos et quartas; gallons, pottles and quarts. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 14. Anciently, a peck; the fourth part of a bushel. Spelman. Bussellos, dimidios et quartas; bushels, halves and quarts, (quarters.) Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 13.

QUARTER. L. Fr. In old English law. The fourth part of a day. Ascun purra etre seisi en le jornaunt, de ascun tenement en son demeyne come de fee, et avaunt midy, en mesme le quarter, le purra il doner; one may be seised in the morning of any tenement in his demesne, as of fee, and before noon, in the same quarter, he may give it. Britt. c. 80. The division of a day into four quarters is also mentioned by Bracton. Bract. fol. 264.

QUARTER OF A YEAR consists but of ninety-one days, the additional six hours not being regarded. Co. Litt. 135 b.

QUARTER SALES. In New-York law. One quarter of purchase money. A name given to covenants in a lease in fee, that in case the lessee should sell the lands, he or the purchaser should pay to the lessor, his heirs, &c., one fourth of the purchase money it should be offered for. See 2 Selden's R. 467. A species of fine for alienation.

QUARTER SEAL. In Scotch law. A seal kept by the director of the chancery; in shape and impression the fourth part of the great seal, and called in statutes the testimonial of the great seal. Bell's Dict.

QUARTER SESSIONS, (or GENERAL QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.) In English law. A criminal court held before two or more justices of the peace, (one of whom must be of the quorum,) in every county, once in every quarter of a year. 4 Bl. Com. 271. 4 Steph. Com. 335.

QUARTERING. In English criminal law. The dividing a criminal's body into quarters, after execution. A part of the punishment of high treason. 4 Bl. Com. 93.

QUARTERIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. A quarter. A measure of grain, consisting of eight bushels, struck. Spelman. Cowell. The London quarter (quarterium Londini) was fixed by Magna Charta, (9 Hen. III. c. 25,) as the standard measure of the kingdom. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 9; c. 12, § 1.

The quarter of a year, (quarterium anni.) Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, §§ 9, 10, 21.

QUARTO DIE POST. L. Lat. (On the fourth day after.) In practice. The name given to the fourth day inclusive after the return of a writ, upon which, if a defendant appeared, it was sufficient. 3 Bl. Com. 278. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 11. Hence called the appearance day, and anciently, dies amoris, (day of indulgence.) 1 Tidd's Pr. 107. Crabb's Hist. 218. It was the first day in full term, on which the courts sat for the dispatch of business. 3 Bl. Com. ub. sup. 1 Tidd's Pr. ub. sup. A similar period of four days was allowed in the civil and canon law, and formerly in equity practice. Gilbert's For. Rom. c. 3.

QUASH. [L. Lat. quassare, cassare; L. Fr. quasser.] In practice. To overthrow; to abate; to annul; to make void, (cassum facere.) Spelman. 3 Bl. Com. 303. To set aside a writ or other proceeding for some formal defect, not reaching to the merits of the case. The terms "quash" and "dismiss" were distinguished in 24 Mississippi R. 462.

QUASI. Lat. As if; as it were; as though. A term derived from the civil law, and applied to acts, persons, proceedings, estates, &c. where they partake so far of the nature of other acts, &c. as to be assigned to the same general head, though not strictly and properly belonging to it. See Tayl. Civ. Law, 67. It is, in other words, used to denote resemblance with a difference, and may be rendered in English by the expressions "species of," "improper," and sometimes, "implied," "presumed," &c. See infra. Pothier calls it an adverb of impropriety, (adverbium improprietatis.) Poth. Oblig. part 2, ch. 3, art. 8, sect. 2.

QUASI CONTRACT. [Lat. quasi contractus.] In the civil law. An implied contract; an improper contract; a contract in which the obligation was founded on the consent of the parties, not actually expressed, but implied or presumed by law. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 19, num. 1. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 28, § 966. It was an intermediate head under which those obligations were ranked, which, while they could not properly be considered as arising out of contract, could not, on the other hand, be said to originate in wrong or malfeasance. Inst. 3. 28, pr. See Civil Code of Louis. art. 2272.

QUASI DELICT, (or OFFENCE.) [Lat. quasi delictum.] In the civil law. An improper offence; an unlawful act, done through negligence, without ill design. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 26, num. 1. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 5, § 1112. It was the head under which those acts were ranked which could not be said to arise either out of pure malfeasance, or contract. Inst. 4. 5, pr. See Civ. Code of Louis. art. 2294.

QUASI DEPOSIT. In the law of bailment. A kind of implied or involuntary deposit, which takes place where a party comes lawfully to the possession of another person's property, by finding it. Story on Bailm. § 85.

QUASSER. L. Fr. To quash. Quasse; quashed. Yearb. T. 10 Edw. III. 12. M. 8 Hen. VI. 30.

QUATER COUSIN. "The very name of cater, or (as it is more properly wrote) quater cousins, is grown into a proverb, to express, by way of irony, the last and most trivial degree of intimacy and regard." Blackst. Law Tr. 6.

QUATUOR PEDIBUS CURRIT. L. Lat. Runs upon four feet; runs upon all fours. A term used to denote an exact correspondence. See All fours. Nullum simile quatuor pedibus currit. No simile holds in every thing. Co. Litt. 3 a. "It does not follow that they (a trust and an equity of redemption) run quatuor pedibus." 1 W. Bl. 145.

QUAY. Fr. In French marine law. A space on the side of a harbour for the lading and unlading of merchandize. Ord. Mar. liv. 1, tit. 1, art. 4.

QUE. L. Fr. That. Volons que si; we will that if. Britt. c. 67. Issi que; so that. Id. ibid.

Who. Cely que homage doit faire; he who ought to do homage. Id. c. 60. Ceux que ount pris; those who have taken. Id. c. 20.

Which. Les services que à vous appendent; the services which belong to you. Id. c. 68.

Whose. See Que estate.

Than. Par baillyfs autres que par les nos; by other bailiffs than ours. Id. c. 27.

QUE DONERA? L. Fr. To whom will he give? To whom is the gift to be made? An expression substituted by Lord Coke, in place of Que dirra? in the statute Modus Levandi Fines. The language of the statute is,—le justice dirra, "Que dirra, Sir Robert?" et nosmera un des parties; the justice shall say, "What saith Sir R.?" and shall name one of the parties. Lord Coke reads "Que donera?" and translates "who is the conusee, that he may give it?" and the serjeant names him. 2 Inst. 510.

QUE EST LE MESME. L. Fr. Which is the same. A phrase anciently used in a defendant's plea, in an action of trespass, denoting a positive justification of the very act complained of by the plaintiff. Cowell. The same with the more modern Latin phrase, Quæ est eadem, (q. v.)

QUE ESTATE. L. Fr. [L. Lat. cujus statum, or quem statum.] Whose estate. A term formerly used in pleading, in deriving a title from another, particularly in claiming a prescription; the party averring that he and those whose estate he has, (que estate il ad,) have been used to enjoy the right claimed, &c. See Prescribe. It is a term of general description, used to avoid the necessity of showing in what manner particularly, the estate passed. Termes de la Ley. Steph. Pl. 324. See Id. 305.

QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY. A fund created by a charter of Queen Anne, (confirmed by statute 2 Ann. c. 11,) for the augmentation of poor livings, consisting of all the revenue of first fruits and tenths, which was vested in trustees forever. 1 Bl. Com. 286.

QUEEN CONSORT. In English law. The wife of a reigning king. 1 Bl. Com. 218.

QUEEN DOWAGER. In English law. The widow of a king. 1 Bl. Com. 223.

QUEEN GOLD. [L. Lat. aurum reginæ.] In English law. A revenue reserved to the queens of England, from a very early period, out of the demesne lands of the crown, which was expressly appropriated to their use, distinct from the king. 1 Bl. Com. 220, 222. It has not been exacted since the death of Henry VIII. except on one occasion, in the reign of Charles I. Id. 221.

QUEEN REGNANT. In English law. A queen who holds the crown in her own right; as the first Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Anne, and the present Queen Victoria. 1 Bl. Com. 218. 2 Steph. Com. 465.

QUEEN'S BENCH. The English court of King's Bench is so called during the reign of a queen, as at present. 3 Steph. Com. 403.

QUEEN'S (or KING'S) COUNSEL. In English law. Barristers called within the bar, and selected to be the queen's (or king's) counsel, learned in the law; answering, in some measure, to the advocates of the revenue, (advocati fisci,) among the Romans. They cannot be employed in any cause against the crown, without special license. 3 Bl. Com. 27. 3 Steph. Com. 386.

QUEEN'S (or KING'S) EVIDENCE. In English law. An accomplice in a felony, who is admitted as evidence for the crown against his accomplices;* one to whom a hope is held out that if he will fairly disclose the whole truth, as a witness at the trial, and bring the other offenders to justice, he shall himself escape punishment. 4 Steph. Com. 398, 399.

QUEEN'S PRISON. In English law.

A prison appropriated to the debtors and criminals confined under process, or by authority of the superior courts at Westminster, the Marshalsea Court and Palace Court, and the High Court of Admiralty, and also to persons imprisoned under the bankrupt law. It was established by statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, consolidating into one, the Queen's Bench, the Fleet, and the Marshalsea Prisons. 3 Steph. Com. 254.

QUENS, Quenz. L. Fr. In old English law. Earl. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 2.

QUER'. An abbreviation of querens, (plaintiff.) 1 Inst. Cler. 12.

QUERELA. Lat. [from queri, to complain.] In the civil law. A complaint. A name given to the three actions of querela testamenti inofficiosi, querela inofficiosæ donationis, and querela inofficiosæ dotis. Calv. Lex. Oldendorpius. Prateus. Called by the milder name of complaint, because the relatives between whom it lay, were not supposed to accuse and litigate in the ordinary way. Voss. Inst. Orat. lib. 1, c. 6, § 2. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 18, § 580.

QUERELA INOFFICIOSI TESTAMENTI. Lat. In the civil law. A complaint of an inofficious or undutiful will. A species of action allowed to a child that had been unjustly disinherited or passed over in its parent's will, to rescind the will, which was complained of, not as being illegally made, but as not being consistent with parental duty, (non ex officio pietatis.) Inst. 2. 18, pr. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 18. 2 Kent's Com. 327. It was grounded on the delicate fiction that the testator was not of sound mind when he made the will, (hoc colore, quasi non sanæ mentis fuerint, cum testamentum ordinarent.) Inst. ub. sup.

QUERELA. L. Lat. [L. Fr. querele; from queri, to complain.] In old English law. A complaint or plaint in an action; a plaintiff's count or declaration. Proponat querens querelam suam et intentionem; the plaintiff shall propound or exhibit his complaint and count. Bract. fol. 57.

An action preferred in any court of justice. Cowell. A cause of action; a controversy, or debate. 8 Co. 153, Altham's case. Hence the old English querel, quarel and quarrel, (q. v.) in the sense of action, or cause of action. Id. ibid. 2 Inst. 213.

QUERELE, Querrel. L. Fr. In old English law. A complaint; an action. A oyer et terminer toutes quereles del people; to hear and determine all the complaints of the people. Britt. fol. 1. Yearb. P. 18 Hen. VI. 5.

QUERENS. Lat. [from queri, to complain.] In old English practice. A plaintiff; the plaintiff or complaining party. Bract. fol. 98 b, 214, 240, et passim. 8 Co. 153 b. The complaining party in a personal action; as petens, (demandant,) was, in a real action. Actor, sive sit petens sive querens. Bract. fol. 106 b. But querens was used in assises. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7.

QUERKE. L. Fr. [from Lat. quercus.] In old English law. An oak. Querkes; oaks. Yearb. M. 11 Hen. VI. 3. Dyer, 35 b, (Fr. ed.)

QUESTA. L. Lat. In old records. A quest; an inquest, inquisition or inquiry, upon the oaths of an empanelled jury. Cowell.

QUESTION. [Lat. quæstio.] A name given to the rack used to extort confession from criminals. 4 Bl. Com. 325. See Quæstio.

QUESTUS, Quæstus. Lat. [from quærere, to seek, to get or acquire.] In old English law. Land which was gained not by hereditary succession, but by one's own labor and industry, (quæ suo sibi quisque comparat labore et industriâ;) purchase land, (terra perquisita.) Spelman. Aut habet hæreditatem tantum, aut questum tantum, aut hæreditatem et questum; either has inheritance only, or purchase only, or both inheritance and purchase. Glanv. lib. 7, c 1. Spelman quotes from the Book of Ramsey, (written in the reign of King Stephen,) a passage which carries this sense of the word as far back as the Saxon King Ethelred.

 From questus, (or quærere, its root,) was framed, at an early period in European law, the compounds conquestus, conquestum, denoting, properly, that which was gotten together, as by the labor of several, (quasi ἀπὸ τοῖς συνέργοις.) Spelman. Hence the French conquest, which Lindenbrog, (commenting on the Capitular. Carol. lib. 4, c. 74,) defines "acquisitions of goods made during marriage," (acquisitions de biens faictes durant le mariage;) which is precisely the signification of the word in Scotch law. See Conquest.

That conquest was originally used in English law in the sense of acquisition or purchase, and was improperly and abusively (ceu per adulterium) employed to express the ideas of victory and martial subjugation, (now inseparable from it) is clearly shown by Spelman, who traces it to the peculiar circumstances under which the great Norman Conquest of England was accomplished. William the First was called "the Conqueror," (Lat. conquestor,) because he succeeded to the throne of England not by hereditary right, but on the bequest of Edward the Confessor; that is, (according to the old French idiom,) by quest and conquest, commonly called purchase. But as the enforcement of his right, thus acquired, was accomplished by means of the signal victory obtained over Harold and the Saxons, the ideas of victory and subjugation became so strongly attached to his peculiar title of Conquestor, as gradually to obscure, and finally to supplant its original and proper meaning.

QUESTUS EST NOBIS. L. Lat. Hath complained to us. Initial words of various old writs in the Register. Reg. Orig. 92, 93.

QUI, Qi, Qy. L. Fr. Who; whom. De ceux qui par engyn ount; of those who by fraud have. Britt. c. 4. Cely de qui sount tenus; him of whom they are holden. Id. c. 78. Ne poit saver par qui ne par quex; cannot know by whom (sing.) nor by whom (plur.) Id. c. 6.

Qui doit inheriter al pere doit inheriter al fitz. He who should have been heir to the father shall be heir to the son. 2 Bl. Com. 223. Broom's Max. [389.]

QUI. Lat. Who; he who. The initial word of numerous maxims. See infra.

Qui adimit medium, dirimit finem. He who takes away the mean, destroys the end. Co. Litt. 161 a. He that deprives a man of the mean by which he ought to to come to a thing, deprives him of the thing itself. Id. ibid. Litt. sect. 237. See Qui destruit, &c.

Qui aliquid statuerit, parte inaudita altera, æquum licet dixerit, haud æquum fecerit. He who determines any matter without hearing both sides, though he may have decided right, has not done justice. 6 Co. 52 a, Boswell's case. A quotation from Seneca. Traged. fo. 55, Medea, 195. 4 Bl. Com. 283.

Qui alterius jure utitur, eodem jure uti debet. He who uses the right of another, ought to use the same right, [that is, ought to use it subject to the rights and liabilities pertaining to it.] Broom's Max. [356.]

Qui bene interrogat, bene docet. He who questions well, teaches well. 3 Bulstr. 227. Information or express averment may be effectually conveyed in the way of interrogation. Id. ibid.

Qui bene distinguit, bene docet. He who distinguishes well, teaches well. 2 Inst. 470. In both these maxims, docet is translated in Branch's Principia, "learns."

Qui concedit aliquid, concedit omne id sine quo concessio est irrita. He who grants any thing, grants every thing without which the grant is fruitless. Jenk. Cent. 32, case 63.

Qui contemnit præceptum, contemnit præcipientem. He who contemns [contemptuously treats] a command, contemns the party who gives it. 12 Co. 97, Countess of Shrewsbury's case.

Qui cum alio contrahit, vel est, vel esse debet non ignarus conditionis ejus. He who contracts with another either is, or ought to be, not ignorant of his condition. Dig. 50. 17. 19. Story's Confl. Laws, § 76.

Qui destruit medium, destruit finem. He who destroys the mean, destroys the end. 10 Co. 51 b, Lampet's case. Co. Litt. 161 a. Shep. Touch. 342.

Qui ex damnato coitu nascuntur inter liberos non computantur. They who are born of a condemned [or illicit] connection, are not counted among children. Bract. fol. 5. Co. Litt. 8 a. 2 Bl. Com. 247. Bastards are held to be nullius filii, the children of nobody. Id. ibid. Broom's Max. 221, [390.]

Qui facit per alium, facit per se. He who acts through another, acts of himself. 1 Bl. Com. 429, 474. Otherwise expressed, Qui per alium facit, per seipsum facere videtur. He who acts by another is considered as acting of himself. Co. Litt. 258 a. He who does an act through the medium of another party, is in law considered as doing it himself. Broom's Max. 373, [643.] An agent is merely the medium through which the principal himself acts. The fundamental principle of the law of agency, and a maxim of almost universal application. Story on Agency, §§ 440, 442. 7 Man. & Gr. 32, 33. See 1 Selden's R. 48, 53.

Qui habet jurisdictionem absolvendi, habet jurisdictionem ligandi. He who has jurisdiction to loosen, has jurisdiction to bind. 12 Co. 60. Applied to writs of prohibition and consultation, as resting on a similar foundation. Id. ibid.

Qui hæret in litera, hæret in cortice. He who sticks, [stops] in the letter, stops in the rind, [or outer covering.] Co. Litt. 54 b. 5 Co. 4 b, Lord Mountjoy's case. 11 Co. 34 b, Powlter's case. 2 Eden, 55. Grose, J. 12 East, 372. He who stops in the mere letter of an instrument, (goes no farther than the mere words of it,) stops in its outer covering, and does not reach its essential meaning. Words are the mere cortex, rind, or bark of an instrument or statute, and are not to be paused upon or dwelt upon, to the neglect of the heart, pith or inner substance.* He who considers merely the letter of an instrument, goes but skin-deep into its meaning. Broom's Max. [534.] Where the intention is clear, too minute a stress should not be laid on the strict and precise signification of words. 2 Bl. Com. 379. Broom's Max. ub. sup. See Cortex, Bark.

This is one of the most familiar maxims of the law, but its literal meaning is scarcely expressed by the common translation, "He who sticks to the letter, sticks to the bark," which besides being rude, is grammatically inaccurate, and does not express the full force of hæret, which does not imply adhesion to a thing, but rest or pause upon or in it; hesitancy; a going no farther. The English word "stick" had precisely this meaning, and is often used in the old books to denote hesitancy on the part of a judge. See Hærere.

Lord Bacon, citing this maxim, pushes the figure still farther. "This is not worthy the name of cortex; it is but muscus corticis, the moss of the bark." Argument in Case of the Postnati of Scotland; Works, iv. 333.

Qui in jus dominiumve alterius succedit, jure ejus uti debet. He who succeeds to the right or property of another, ought to use his right [ought to exercise it as the assignor himself would have exercised it.] Dig. 50. 17. 177, pr. The assignee of property takes it subject to all the liabilities, and clothed with all the rights which attached to it in the hands of the assignor. Broom's Max. [356.]

Qui jure suo utitur, nemini facit injuriam. He who uses his own right, harms no one. Branch's Pr. Another form of the civil law maxim Non videtur vim facere, &c. (q. v.)

Qui jussu judicis aliquod fecerit, non videtur dolo malo fecisse, quia parere necesse est. He who does any thing by command of a judge, [or one lawfully exercising judicial authority,] is not supposed to have acted from a wrong or improper motive, because it was his bounden duty to obey. 10 Co. 76 a, b. Broom's Max. 48, [69.]

Qui non habet, ille non dat. He who has not, gives not. He who has nothing to give, gives nothing. A person cannot convey a right that is not in him. If a man grant that which is not his, the grant is void. Shep. Touch. (by Preston,) 243. Watkins on Conv. (by Preston,) 191. See Nemo dare potest, &c.

Qui non habet in crumena, luat in corpore. He who has not [the means of satisfaction] in his purse, must pay in his body. If a man cannot pay his fine, he must go to prison. 4 Bl. Com. 380. Otherwise expressed, Qui non habet in ære, luat in corpore. 2 Inst. 173. Si in ære non habeat, in pelle luat. 1 Kent's Com. 423.

Qui non obstat quod obstare potest, facere videtur. He who does not prevent [a thing] which he can prevent, is considered to do [as doing] it. 2 Inst. 146.

Qui non improbat, approbat. He who does not condemn, approves. 3 Inst. 27.

Qui non prohibet quod prohibere potest, assentire videtur. He who does not forbid [an act] which he can forbid, is supposed to assent [to it.] 2 Inst. 305. Otherwise expressed, Qui non prohibet cum prohibere possit, jubet. He who does not forbid [a thing being done] when he can forbid it, commands [it.] 1 Bl. Com. 430. Negligence is a kind of implied consent. Id. ibid. See Grotius de Jur. Bell. lib. 2, c. 21, § 2, n. 2.

Qui obstruit aditum, destruit commodum. He who obstructs a way, passage or entrance, destroys a benefit or convenience. Co. Litt. 161 a. He who prevents another from entering upon land, destroys the benefit which he has from it. Id. ibid.

Qui "omne" dicit, nihil excludit [excipit.] He who says "all" excludes or excepts nothing. 11 Co. 59 b, Foster's case. Shep. Touch. (by Preston,) 90.

Qui peccat ebrius, luat sobrius. He who sins when drunk, shall be punished when sober. Cary's R. 133. Broom's Max. [14.]

Qui potest et debet vetare, jubet. He who can and ought to forbid a thing [if he do not forbid it,] directs it. 2 Kent's Com. 483, note.

Qui primum peccat, ille facit rixam. He who first sins makes the strife. He who does the first wrongful act is chargeable as the cause of the quarrel. Branch's Max.

Qui prior est tempore, potior est jure. He who is before in time is the better in right. Priority in time gives preference in law. Co. Litt. 14 a. 4 Co. 90 a, Drury's case. 3 East, 93. A maxim of very extensive application, both at law and in equity. Broom's Max. 329—335, [260.] 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 64 d. Story on Bailm. § 312. 24 Mississippi R. 208.

Qui rationem in omnibus quærunt, rationem subvertunt. They who seek a reason in [for] every thing, subvert reason. 2 Co. 75 a, Lord Cromwell's case. A sentence quoted from Theophrastus, in Met. There are some things for which no reason can be given, and for which no reason should be sought or required. Broom's Max. 66, [117.]

Qui semel actionem renunciaverit, amplius repetere non potest. He who has once relinquished his action, cannot bring it again. 8 Co. 59 a, Beecher's case. A rule descriptive of the effect of a retraxit and nolle prosequi.

Qui semel est malus, semper præsumitur esse malus in eodem genere. He who is once criminal, is presumed to be always criminal in the same kind, or way. Cro. Car. 317. Best on Evid. 345. He who has once committed an offence, is supposed always to have an inclination to repeat it.

Qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus. He who experiences the benefit, ought also to feel [or bear] the burden. He who enjoys the benefit or advantage of a thing, ought also to be subject to the burden or disadvantage connected with it. 2 Inst. 489. A maxim expressed in a hexameter line, and one of the most extensive application in the law. He who enjoys the benefit arising from a title to land, must bear the burden of the incumbrances attached to it, and of the covenants that run with the land. Broom's Max. 313, [552.] Bacon's Use of the Law, 31. Shep. Touch. 178. All who are to receive benefit from the construction of a thing, must be contributory to its construction. 5 Co. 100 a, Rooke's case. So, in partnership, the agreement to share in the profits of the concern carries with it a corresponding liability for the debts or losses. Broom's Max. 315, [554.] So, a principal will not be allowed to avail himself of the benefits of a transaction by his agent, without at the same time subjecting himself to its burthens. Story on Agency, § 389. And, in equity, the rule has an extensive application. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 469.

Qui sentit onus, sentire debet et commodum. He who bears the burden of a thing, ought also to experience the advantage arising from it. 1 Co. 99 a, Shelley's case. As a principal is bound by the acts of his authorized agent, so he may take advantage of them. Broom's Max. 317, [559.] This is the converse of the preceding maxim.

QUI statuit aliquid, parte inaudita altera,
Æquum licet statuerit, haud æquus fuit.

He who determines any thing, without hearing both parties, though he may have determined justly, has not himself been just. A quotation from Seneca, which has been adopted as a maxim of the common law. 4 Bl. Com. 283. See Qui aliquid statuerit, &c.

Qui tacet, consentire videtur. He who is silent, is supposed to consent; the silence of a party implies his consent. Jenk. Cent. 32, case 64. Id. 68, case 30. Id. 226, case 87. The principle of the doctrine of implied waiver, of the validity of proceedings by default, &c. and of the doctrine of equitable estoppel in equity. Thus, if a person having the legal title to property, stands by and acquiesces in the sale of it by another person claiming or having color of title, he will be estopped afterwards in asserting his title against the purchaser. 2 Kent's Com. 483, note. So, where the owner of land stands by and suffers another who supposes he has an absolute title to the estate, to expend money in improvements and erections on the land, without giving any notice of his own claim, he will not be permitted to avail himself of such improvements, without paying a full compensation therefor. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. §§ 388, 389. See 1 Story's R. 493. As to the application of the rule in the law of evidence, see 1 Greenl. Evid. § 199.

This maxim is immediately derived from the canon law, and is otherwise expressed with still more brevity, Qui tacet consentit; he who is silent, consents. Bonifacius de Reg. Juris in Sexto, reg. 43. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 162, Kaufmann's note. The civilians have generally supposed it to be of too sweeping a nature, and have accordingly qualified it by the maxim laid down in the Digests, Qui tacet non utique fatetur, sed tamen verum est eum non negare. He who is silent does not thereby confess, but yet it is true that he does not deny. Dig.

50. 17. 142. But, according to Dr. Kaufmann, these two rules apply to matters that are wholly distinct; consensus belonging to the doctrine of contracts alone, while confessio relates merely to proceedings.

QUI TAM. L. Lat. (Who as well.) The name given to an action brought by an informer, where part of the penalty or forfeiture sued for, is given to the king, the state, the poor, or to some public use, and the other part to the informer or prosecutor. So termed from the emphatic words of the clause in which the plaintiff was described in the old forms: QUI TAM pro domino rege, &c. quam pro seipso in hac parte sequitur; who sues as well for the king, &c. as for himself, in this behalf. 3 Bl. Com. 160.

Qui tardius solvit, minus solvit. He who pays more tardily [than he ought,] pays less [than he ought.] Jenk. Cent. 58. A maxim of the civil law, in which minus had the technical sense of negation, which is entirely lost sight of in the common English translations. See Minus. Minus solvit admits of (if it does not here require) the translation, "pays not at all;" the maxim importing that a failure to pay at the time stipulated amounts to a breach of the promise to pay, though payment be actually made afterwards.

Qui timent, cavent et vitant. They who fear, take care and avoid. Branch's Pr.

Qui vult decipi, decipiatur. Let him who chooses to be deceived, be deceived. Where a man procures a fraud to be committed on himself, he must bear the consequences of it, and cannot take advantage of his own wrong to the prejudice of another. Shep. Touch. (by Preston,) 56.

QUIA. Lat. Because. A word particularly appropriated to express the cause (causa) or consideration of a grant, in old conveyances. Co. Litt. 204 a.

Scito quod ut modus est, si conditio, quia causa. Bract. fol. 18 b.

QUIA DATUM EST NOBIS INTELLIGI. L. Lat. Because it is given to us to understand. Formal words in old writs. Rot. Parl. 4 Hen. IV.

QUIA DOMINUS REMISIT CURIAM. L. Lat. In old practice. Because the lord hath remised or remitted his court. A clause inserted at the conclusion of a writ of right, where it was brought, in the first instance, in the king's court; the lord in whose court-baron it regularly ought to be first brought, having waived or remitted his right. 3 Bl. Com. 195. Id. Appendix, No. i. sect. 4.

QUIA EMPTORES. Lat. (Because the purchasers.) The title of the statute of Westminster 3, 18 Edw. I. c. 1, which provided that from thenceforth it should be lawful for every freeman or freeholder to sell his lands or tenements or part thereof at his pleasure, so that, however, the feoffee should hold such lands or tenements of the chief lord of the same fee, by the same services and customs by which his feoffor before held them. Cap. 1. So called from its initial words: QUIA EMPTORES terrarum et tenementorum de feodis magnatum, &c. 2 Bl. Com. 91. See Barringt. Obs. Stat. 167. See the New-York case of De Peyster v. Michael, 2 Selden's R. 467.

QUIA IMPROVIDE EMANAVIT. L. Lat. Because it issued improvidently, or unadvisedly. Ambl. 61. 3 East, 128.

QUIA TIMET. Lat. (Because he fears or apprehends.) In equity practice. The technical name of a bill filed by a party who seeks the aid of a court of equity, because he fears some future probable injury to his rights or interests. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 826. Bills quia timet are so called in analogy to certain writs of the common law, whose objects were of a similar nature; and they are, in themselves, in the nature of writs of prevention to accomplish the ends of precautionary justice. Id. §§ 825, 826.

QUICK. Living; alive. "Quick chattel must be put in pound-overt, that the owner may give them sustenance; dead need not." Finch's Law, b. 2, ch. 6. See Quyke.

Quicquid acquiritur servo, acquiritur domino. Whatever is acquired by the servant is acquired for the master. Pulling on Merc. Accounts, 38, note. Whatever rights are acquired by an agent, are acquired for his principal. Story on Agency, § 403.

Quicquid est contra normam recti, est injuria. Whatever is against the rule of right, is a wrong. 3 Bulstr. 313.

Quicquid in excessu actum est, lege prohibetur. Whatever is done in excess is prohibited by law. 2 Inst. 107.

Quicquid judicis auctoritati subjicitur, novitatf non subjicitur. Whatever is subjected to the authority of a judge is not subjected to novelty. Whatever is left to the discretion of a judge, as in cases without precedent, is not for that reason left to the caprice of novelty or innovation. 4 Inst. 66.

Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit. Whatever is planted in the soil, belongs to the soil, [or becomes a part of it.] A maxim derived from the civil law, and embodying the general common law rule, that whatever is planted in the soil passes with it. See this rule and its exceptions considered, in Broom's Maxims, 177—189, [298—310.]

By an extension of the meaning of the word plantatur, this maxim has also been applied in the law of fixtures. Wentworth Offic. Exec. 145. Broom's Max. 189, [310,] et seq. 2 Smith's Lead. Cas. 114. 2 Steph. Com. 261. But in the civil law, plantatio is confined to its proper signification; ædificatio or inædificatio being the words used to express artificial additions or accessions to the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 29, 30, 31.

Quicquid solvitur, solvitur secundum modum solventis,—quicquid recipitur, recipitur secundum modum recipientis. Whatever is paid, is paid according to the manner of [directed or intended by] the payer,—whatever is received, is received according to that of the receiver. Halk. Max. 149. Broom's Max. [638.]

QUID. Lat. What. A word used in old writers, as preliminary to definition. Thus Sheppard, in his Touchstone, arranges his subjects under the two general heads of Quid, (what,) and Quotuplex, (of how many kinds.) Shep. Touch. 37, 50.

QUID JURIS CLAMAT. L. Lat. (What right he claims.) In old English practice. A writ which lay for the grantee of a reversion or remainder, where the particular tenant would not attorn, for the purpose of compelling him. Termes de la Ley. Cowell.

QUID PRO QUO. Lat. What for what; something for something. An equivalent, or consideration; that which is given in exchange for another thing; that which is done in consideration of another thing. Answering to the Gr. συνάλλαγμα, a reciprocal performance of both parties to a contract. Cowell. 2 P. Wms. 219.

QUIET ENJOYMENT, Covenant for. In conveyancing. An ordinary covenant in deeds, whereby the grantor agrees that the grantee shall hold the land, undisturbed by himself or others. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 374. 4 Kent's Com. 471.

QUIETA CLAMANTIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Quit-claim. Charta de quieta clamantia; a charter or deed of quit-claim. Bract. fol. 33 b. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 1. Called also quietè clamantia, (q. v.) And in some old records, quieta clamatio. Par. Ant. 220. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 39, § 6.

QUIETANCIA, Quietantia. L. Lat. In old English law. A quittance, acquittance, or testimonial of receipt. Cowell.

QUIETARE. L. Lat. To quit, acquit, discharge or save harmless. A formal word in old deeds of donation and other conveyances. Cowell.

QUIETE. Lat. Quietly; in quiet; peaceably. A formal word in ancient deeds. Habendam et tenendam,—liberè et quietè, honorificè, benè et in pace; to have and to hold—freely and quietly, honorably, well and in peace. Bract. fol. 35. Bracton, in his exposition of the form from which these words are extracted, observes that by the word quietè, (quietly,) the donor means that the donee shall have quiet and peace, so that he may enjoy the thing given peaceably, and not be disquieted. See Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 5. It seems to be the germ of the modern covenant for quiet enjoyment.

QUIETE CLAMANTIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Quit-claim. Bract. fol. 33 b.

QUIETE CLAMARE. L. Lat. In old conveyancing. To quit-claim; to renounce all pretension of right and title. Cowell. Quietum clamare is used by Fleta, Littleton and Coke.

QUIETUM CLAMARE. L. Lat. In old conveyancing. To quit-claim. Noverint universi per præsentes me, A. de B. remisisse, relaxasse, et omnino de me et heredibus meis quietum clamasse C. de D. totum jus, &c.; Know all men by the presents, that I, A. of B. have remised, released, and altogether from me and my heirs, have quit-claimed to C. of D. all the right, &c. Litt. sect. 445. See Fleta, lib. 5, c. 37, § 5.

QUIETUS, Quittus. L. Lat. In old English law. Quit; clear; free; acquitted; discharged. Nisi capitalis debitor monstraverit se inde esse quietum versus eosdem plegios; unless the principal debtor show that he is discharged thereof against the same pledges. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III.

c. 8. Quod quieti sint imperpetuum de omnibus purpresturis, &c.; that they be forever quit of all purprestures, &c. Cart. de For. 9 Hen. III. c. 4. Recedet inde reus quietus imperpetuum; the defendant shall go quit thereof forever. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 63, § 12.

QUIETUS. L. Lat. In exchequer practice. A word used by the clerk of the pipe, and auditors in the exchequer, in their acquittances or discharges given to accountants; usually concluding with an abinde recessit quietus, (hath gone quit thereof;) which was called a quietus est. Cowell.

An acquittance or discharge. "C. W. passed his accounts to Lady day, 1724, and had his quietus for each year, to that time." Bunb. 316, case 400. See Hardr. 189.

This word is used in American law, and applied to the discharge of an executor or administrator. See 4 Mason's R. 133. 3 Florida R. 233.

QUIETUS. L. Lat. In old practice. The dismissal or removal of a judge from the bench. "After this time, Sir Francis Pemberton received his quietus, and afterwards practiced again in all the courts in Westminster Hall, but without the bar, as a serjeant." 2 Show. 94. "This vacation, Sir Robert Sawyer had his quietus." 3 Mod. 143. See Id. 239.

Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. Every one may renounce or relinquish a right introduced for his own benefit. 2 Inst. 183. Wingate's Max. 483, max. 123. 4 Bl. Com. 317. Every man can renounce a benefit which the law would have introduced for his own convenience. Broom's Max. 310. Any one may, at his pleasure, renounce the benefit of a stipulation, or other right, introduced entirely in his own favor. Id. [546.] A general maxim, applied to the relinquishment of claims, defences and other rights upon which a party may insist if he chooses. Id. 309—313, [547—552.] Best on Evid. Introd. 103. Every man may waive rights the benefit whereof exclusively belongs to himself. Story on Agency, § 463. So a person may renounce a constitutional provision made for his own benefit. 6 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 47. Cowen, J. Id. 48. See 4 Ohio St. R. 376.

This maxim is obviously derived from those of the civil law. Unicuique licet contemnere hæc quæ pro se introducta sunt. Dig. 4. 4. 41. Omnes licentiam habent his quæ pro se introducta sunt, renunciare. Cod. 2. 3. 29. Bracton repeats it in nearly the modern form: Potest quis renunciare pro se et suis juri quod pro se introductum est. Bract. fol. 20.

QUILLE. Fr. In French marine law. Keel; the keel of a vessel. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 6, art. 8.

QUINDENA. L. Lat. In old English law. The quinzim, quinsieme, or fifteenth day after a feast. Stat. Westm. 2, pr. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 35.

A fortnight; double the period of a septimana, (seven-night or week.) Fleta, lib. 1, c. 24, § 5. "That which we call this day fortnight, excluding the day, the French and the law phrase calls this day fifteen days, or quindena, including the day." Bacon's Arg. Jurisdiction of Marches, Works, iv. 265.

QUINQUE PORTUS. Lat. In old English law. The Cinque Ports. Spelman. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 8.

QUINSIEME, Quinzime. L. Fr. and Eng. In old English law. A fifteenth; a tax so called. Cowell. See Fifteenth.

QUINTO EXACTUS. Lat. In old practice. Called or exacted the fifth time. A return made by the sheriff, after a defendant had been proclaimed, required or exacted, in five county courts successively, and failed to appear; upon which he was outlawed by the coroners of the county. 3 Bl. Com. 283.

QUIRE OF DOVER. In English law. A record in the Exchequer, showing the tenures for guarding and repairing Dover Castle, and determining the services of the Cinque Ports. 3 How. St. Trials, 868.

QUIT. [L. Lat. quietus, q. v.] Free; clear; discharged; released; acquitted or absolved.

QUIT-CLAIM. [L. Lat. quieta clamantia, quieta clamatio; L. Fr. quiet-claime; quiteclamaunce.] In conveyancing. The release or relinquishment of a claim. A deed by which some right, title, interest or claim which one person has, or is supposed to have, in or to an estate held by another, is released or relinquished.

A conveyance corresponding with a release, at common law, in which the grantor covenants only against those who claim under himself, and not against adverse and paramount titles. Of this class are all deeds given by public officers, such as administrators, sheriffs, &c. who covenant only for the regularity of their own proceedings. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 302.

To QUIT-CLAIM. [L. Lat. quietè clamare, quietum clamare.] In conveyancing. To release or relinquish a claim; to execute a deed of quit-claim. See Quit-claim.

QUIT RENT. [L. Lat. quietus redditus.] A yearly rent, by the payment of which the tenant goes quit and free of all other services. 2 Bl. Com. 42. Spelman, voc. Quietus redditus. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 228.

In some of the United States, a fee farm rent is so termed. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 239, [231.] See Id. note (a.)

QUITE CLAMAUNCE. L. Fr. Quit-claim. Britt. c. 85.

QUITTUS. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. Quit; free. Quittos et immunes; quit and clear. 1 Pitc. Cr. Trials, part 2, p. 72.

QUO ANIMO. Lat. With what intention or motive. "It was for them to consider quo animo the windows and shutters were broken." Lord Kenyon, 1 East, 615. Used frequently as a substantive, in lieu of the single word animus, design or motive. "The quo animo is, in each case, the real subject of inquiry." 1 Kent's Com. 77. 2 Id. 382. See Animo, Animus.

QUO JURE. L. Lat. (By what right.) In old English practice. A writ which lay for one that had land in which another claimed common, to compel the latter to show by what title he claimed it. Cowell. F. N. B. 128 F. Reg. Orig. 156 b. Britt. c. 59.

QUO MINUS. L. Lat. (By which—less.) In English practice. A process peculiar to the Court of Exchequer; being the writ by which all actions in that court were, until recently, required to be commenced. So termed from the emphatic words of the old Latin form, in which the plaintiff suggested that he was the king's farmer or debtor, and alleged that the defendant had done him the injury complained of, by which he was less able (quo minus sufficiens existit) to pay the king his debt or rent. 3 Bl. Com. 45, 286. Id. Appendix, No. iii. sect 4. This was abolished by the statute 2 Will. IV. c. 39.

QUO WARRANTO. L. Lat. (By what warrant.) In old English practice. A writ, in the nature of a writ of right for the king, against him who claimed or usurped any office, franchise or liberty, to inquire by what authority he supported his claim, in order to determine the right. 3 Bl. Com. 262. It lay also in case of non-user, or long neglect of a franchise, or mis-user, or abuse of it; being a writ commanding the defendant to show by what warrant he exercises such a franchise, having never had any grant of it, or having forfeited it by neglect or abuse. 3 Bl. Com. 262. It has long been superseded in practice by the proceeding by information in the nature of a quo warranto, which is the usual proceeding also in American practice. Id. 263. 1 Id. 485. 3 Steph. Com. 689—693. Cole on Informations, 110—168. 2 Kent's Com. 313, and note. United States Digest, Quo warranto.

QUOAD. Lat. As to; as far as concerns. Lord Ellenborough, 12 East, 409. 2 Mod. 66.

QUOAD HOC. Lat. As to this; so far as this is concerned. Bract. fol. 31.

QUOAD SACRA. Lat. As to sacred things; for religious purposes. Lord Campbell, 6 Bell's Appeal Cases, 336.

Quod ab initio non valet, [in] tractu temporis non convalescet. That which is not valid at the beginning, shall not gain force by lapse of time. Co. Litt. 35 a. Noy's Max. 16. 2 Co. 55 b, Buckler's case. 4 Co. 2 b, Vernon's case. Finch's Law, b. 1, ch. 3. That which was originally void, does not by lapse of time become valid. Broom's Max. 77, [132.] A maxim of very general importance in practice, in pleading, and in the application of legal principles to the occurrences of life. Id. ibid. Derived from the civil law, in which it is expressed, Quod ab initio vitiosum est, non potest tractu temporis convalescere. Dig. 50. 17. 29. Quæ ab initio inutilis fuit institutio, ex postfacto convalescere non potest. Dig. 50. 17. 210. Wherever any contract or conveyance is void, either by a positive law, or upon principles of public policy, it is deemed incapable of confirmation. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 306. See 3 *Penn. Quod ædificatur in area legata, cedit legato. Whatever is built on ground given by will, goes to the legatee. Broom's Max. [315.]

Quod alias bonum et justum est, si per vim vel fraudem petatur, malum et injustum efficitur. What otherwise is good and just, if it be sought by force and fraud, becomes bad and unjust. 3 Co. 78 a, Fermor's case. "The common law doth so abhor fraud and covin, that all acts, as well judicial as others, and which of themselves are just and lawful, yet being mixed with fraud and deceit, are, in judgment of law, wrongful and unlawful." Id. ibid. See 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 239.

Quod alias non fuit licitum, necessitas licitum facit. What otherwise was not lawful, necessity makes lawful. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 14.

Quod approbo non reprobo. What I approve, I do not reject; I cannot approve and reject (Scotticè, approbate and reprobate) at the same time; I cannot take the benefit of an instrument, and at the same time repudiate it. Broom's Max. [558.] See Approbate and reprobate.

Quod constat clare non debet verificari. What appears clearly ought not to be verified, [averred, i. e. proved.] Hardr. 81, arg. 10 Mod. 150.

Quod constat curiæ, opere testium non indiget. That which appears to the court, needs not the aid of witnesses. 2 Inst. 662.

Quod contra legem fit, pro infecto habetur. That which is done against law, is regarded as not done at all. 4 Co. 31 a, French's case.

Quod contra rationem juris receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias, [consequentia.] That which has been received or admitted against the reason of the law, is not to be drawn into precedents. Dig. 1. 3. 14. Id. 50. 17. 141. Adopted in the common law. 12 Co. 75. See Bacon, de Augm. Scient. lib. 8, app. 2.

QUOD COMPUTET. L. Lat. (That he account.) In practice. The first or interlocutory judgment in the action of account, requiring the defendant to account before auditors. 3 Bl. Com. 163. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 447. Pulling on Merc. Acc. 124.

QUOD CUM. L. Lat. (That whereas.) In pleading. The emphatic words used in the commencement of the old Latin declarations, where the charge was made (as it was in most actions,) by way of recital, and literally translated in the modern forms, "that whereas." Pro eo videlicet quod cum; "for this, to wit, that whereas," or in the later English forms, "for that whereas." It was an improper form in the action of trespass, in which the matter complained of was required to be positively averred without recital; and the rule is still the same in regard to the English "Whereas." Steph. Pl. 388. 16 Mees. & W. 36.

Quod cum, however, was sometimes held to amount to an affirmative allegation. Plowd. 128.

QUOD CURIA CONCESSIT. L. Lat. Which the court granted. A phrase in the old reports. Yearb. M. 4 Hen. VI. 19. Id. M. 9 Hen. VI. 40. 6 Mod. 28.

Quod demonstrandi causa additur rei satis demonstratæ, frustra fit. That which is added, for the purpose of demonstration, to a thing already sufficiently demonstrated, is done to no purpose. 10 Co. 113 a, Arthur Legat's case.

Quod dubitas, ne feceris. What you doubt of, do not do. In a case of moment, especially in cases of life, it is safest to hold that in practice which hath least doubt and danger. 1 Hale's P. C. 300. Bacon's Works, iv. 487.

QUOD EI DEFORCEAT. L. Lat. (That he deforces him.) In old practice. A writ which lay for tenants in tail, or tenants in dower, or by the curtesy or for term of life, where they had lost their lands by default in a præcipe quod reddat brought against them. F. N. B. 155 B. Reg. Orig. 171.

QUOD PARTES REPLACITENT. L. Lat. (That the parties do replead.) The form of the judgment on award of a repleader. 2 Salk. 579.

QUOD PERMITTAT. (That he permit.) In old English law. A writ which lay for the heir of him that was disseised of his common of pasture, against the heir of the disseisor. Cowell. Termes de la Ley

Reg. Orig. 155 b, 156. It was also a remedy for the enforcement of other privileges. Id. 155.

QUOD PERMITTAT PROSTERNERE. L. Lat. (That he permit—to abate.) In old practice. A writ, in the nature of a writ of right, which lay to abate a nuisance. 3 Bl. Com. 221.

Quod populus postremum jussit, id jus ratum esto. What the people have last enacted, let that be the established law. A law of the Twelve Tables, the principle of which is still recognized. 1 Bl. Com. 89.

Quod principi placuit, legis habet vigorem. That which has pleased the prince, has the force of law. The emperor's pleasure has the force of law. Dig. 1. 4. 1. Inst. 1. 2. 6. A celebrated maxim of imperial law. See Bract. fol. 107. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 17, § 7. Seld. Diss. ad Flet. c. 3, §§ 2, 3, 4, 5.

Quod quis ex culpa sua damnum sentit, non intelligitur damnum sentire. The damage which one experiences from his own fault is not considered as his damage. Dig. 50. 17. 203.

Quod quis sciens indebitum dedit hac mente, ut postea repeteret, repetere non potest. That which one has given, knowing it not to be due, with the intention of re-demanding it, he cannot recover back. Dig. 12. 6. 50.

QUOD RECUPERET. L. Lat. That he do recover. The ordinary form of judgments for the plaintiff in actions at law. 1 Arch. Pr. 225. 1 Burr. Pr. 246. Expressed at length, in the old records,—Ideo consideratum est QUOD prædictus A. RECUPERET versus præfatum C. &c. 1 Instr. Cler. 14. Literally translated in the modern forms, "Therefore it is considered that the aforesaid [plaintiff] do recover against the aforesaid [defendant,"] &c.

Quod remedio destituitur, ipsa re valet, si culpa absit. That which is without a remedy, is valid by the [mere force of the] thing [or act] itself, if there be no fault. Bacon's Max. 40, reg. 9. Or, as the maxim may be analyzed, the mere act of a party (ipsa res,) if no fault attach to it, (si culpa absit,) will sometimes avail (valet) to give him a right for which the law has provided no express remedy, (quod remedio destituitur.) The principle of remitter and other extra-judicial remedies allowed by law. 3 Bl. Com. 20. Broom's Max. 101—104, [160.]

Quod semel aut bis existit, prætereunt legislatores. What happens once or twice, legislators pass over, [i. e. they do not provide for extraordinary cases.] A translation of a saying of Theophrastus quoted by Paulus in the Digests. Τὸ γὰρ ἅπαξ ἢ δὶς παραβαίνουσιν οἱ νομοθέται. Dig. 1. 3. 6. See Ad ea quæ frequentius, &c.

Quod semel meum est, amplius meum esse non potest. That which is once mine cannot be more mine. Co. Litt. 49 b. A party in possession needs not to have delivery of possession made to him. 2 Bl. Com. 314. Shep. Touch. 212. Dr. Wooddesson supposes this maxim to be taken from the Institutes. Quod proprium est ipsius, amplius ejus fieri non potest. Inst. 2. 20. 10. 1 Wooddes. Lect. Introd. Lect. 5, p. lxxi. note.

QUOD SI CONTINGAT. L. Lat. That if it happen. Words by which a condition might formerly be created in a deed. Litt. sect. 330.

Quod sub certa forma concessum vel reservatum est, non trahitur ad valorem vel compensationem. That which is granted or reserved under a certain form, is not [permitted to be] drawn into valuation or compensation. Bacon's Max. 26, reg. 4. That which is granted or reserved in a certain specified form, must be taken as it is granted, and will not be permitted to be made the subject of any adjustment or compensation on the part of the grantee. Quoted by Cowen, J. 2 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 423.

This maxim is best illustrated by Lord Bacon's own words and examples. "The law permitteth every man to part with his own interest, and to qualify his own grant as it pleaseth himself, and therefore doth not admit any allowance or recompense, if the thing be not taken as it is granted. So, in all profits à prender, if I grant common for ten beasts, or ten loads of wood out of my copse, or ten loads of hay out of my meadows, to be taken for three years, he [that is, the grantee,] shall not have common for thirty beasts, or thirty loads of wood or hay the third year, if he forbear for the space of two years; here the time is certain and precise. So, if the place be limited, as if I grant estovers to be spent in such a house, or stone towards the reparation of such a castle, although the grantee do burn of his fuel, and repair of his own charge, yet he can demand no allowance for that he took it not." Bacon's Max. 26, 27. See Broom's Max, 305, [350.]

Quod subintelligitur non deest. What is understood is not wanting. 2 Ld. Raym. 832.

Quod tacite intelligitur deesse non videtur. What is tacitly understood is not considered to be wanting. 4 Co. 22 a.

Quod voluit non dixit. What he intended he did not say, or express. He may have intended so, but he did not say it. An answer sometimes made in overruling an argument that the law-maker or testator meant so and so. 1 Kent's Com. 468, note. 4 M. & S. 522, arg. If a will be uncertain or unintelligible on its face, it is as if no will had been made. Kent, C. 1 Johns. Ch. R. 235.

QUOD VI AUT CLAM. See Vi aut Clam.

Quomodo quid constituitur, eodem modo dissolvitur. In whatever way a thing is constituted, in the same way is it dissolved; (a record by a record, writing by writing, parliament by parliament, parol by parol.) Jenk. Cent. 74, case 40.

QUONIAM ATTACHIAMENTA. L. Lat. (Since the attachments.) One of the oldest books in the Scotch law; so called from the two first words of the volume. Bell's Dict. Still sometimes cited in argument, in the Scotch courts. 7 Wilson & Shaw's R. 9.

QUORUM. Lat. Of whom; whereof. This genitive plural of the common pronoun qui, has in modern law become a substantive, being used in the titles of justices of the peace, and through this channel has finally been adopted as an ordinary word, to denote a certain number of persons whose presence is requisite at meetings of public or private bodies, for the transaction of business. The process by which this appropriation of the word has been effected may be traced as follows:

In the commissions by which justices of the peace were originally appointed, (and the form of which in England is still retained with little change,) they were all appointed jointly and severally, to keep the peace, and any two or more of them to inquire of, and determine felonies and other misdemeanors; in which number some particular justices, or one of them, were directed to be always included, and no business to be done without their presence, the words of the commission running thus: QUORUM aliquem vestrum, A. B. C. D. &c. UNUM esse volumus; (of whom we will one or some of you, A. B. C. D. &c. to be one.) Whence the persons so named were usually called "justices of the quorum." The practice of appointing only a select number of justices, eminent for their skill and discretion, to be of the quorum, has in modern times been in a great degree discontinued, almost all of them being advanced to that dignity, and named in the quorum clause. 1 Bl. Com. 351. So that the title, though still retained, has lost much of its ancient significancy.

The association, in this way, of the word quorum, with a particular number of justices, without whose presence no business could be done, led by a natural and easy transition to the adoption of the same word to express a required number of any description of associated persons, for the transaction of their proper business, which is its prevalent modern meaning.

QUOT. In old Scotch law. A twentieth part of the moveable estate of a person dying, which was due to the bishop of the diocese within which the person resided. Bell's Dict.

Quoties dubia interpretatio libertatis est, secundum libertatem respondendum erit. As often as [whenever] the interpretation of liberty is doubtful, the answer should be on the side of liberty. Dig. 50. 17. 20.

Quoties idem sermo duas sententias exprimit, ea potissimum excipiatur, quæ rei gerendæ aptior est. Whenever the same language expresses two meanings, that should be adopted which is the better fitted for carrying out the subject matter. Dig. 50. 17. 67.

Quoties in stipulationibus ambigua oratio est, commodissimum est id accipi quo res de qua agitur in tuto sit. Whenever the language of stipulations is ambiguous, it is most fitting that that [sense] should be taken by which the subject matter may be protected. Dig. 45. 1. 80.

Quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas, ibi nulla expositio contra verba [expressa] fienda est. As long as there is no ambiguity in the words [of an instrument,] there should be no interpretation made against the [express] words. Wingate's Max. 24, max. 16. Co. Litt. 147 a. In the absence of ambiguity, no exposition shall be made which is opposed to the express words of the instrument. Broom's Max. [477.] A leading maxim in the construction of deeds and statutes. 2 Bl. Com. 379. 1 Kent's Com. 468, note. 2 Id. 555. See 1 Duer on Ins. 159, note. It is not, however, allowed to prevail so as to defeat the manifest intent and object of the parties to an instrument, where it is clearly discernible on the face of the instrument, and the ignorance or blunder or mistake of the parties has prevented them from expressing it in the appropriate language. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 168.

RACHATER. L. Fr. To redeem; to re-purchase, (or buy back.) Kelham.

RACHETUM. L. Lat. [from O. Fr. rachapter, rachater, racheter, to redeem; from achater, or acheter, to buy.] In old Scotch law. A pecuniary satisfaction or composition for an offence, answering to the Saxon weregild. Stat. 1 Rob. Reg. Scot. c. 3. Spelman.

Theft-bote, or thief-bote. Id. Skene de Verb. Signif. Stat. 2 Rob. Br. c. 7, cited ibid.

RACHIMBURGII, Rachinburgii. L. Lat. [from Germ. ratha, or racht, Sax. race, a cause, matter or argument.] In old European law. Rachenburgers or Rakenburghs; judges among the Salians, Ripuarians and some other nations of Germany who sat with the count (comes) in his court called mallum, and were generally associated with him in all matters. L. Salic. titt. 52, 59. L. Ripuar. tit. 32, § 3. Capitul. Carol. lib. 5, c. 14. Spelman. The word was found by Spelman in an old MS. copy of the Laws of Canute. Montesquieu writes it rathimburges. Esprit des Loix, liv. 30, c. 18.

RACK RENT. A rent of the full value of the tenement, or near it. 2 Bl. Com. 43. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 228.

RADECHENISTRES. A word used in Domesday Book, which Spelman interprets to mean freemen. Domesd. fol. 18, Titt. Glowc. Berchelay. Spelman.

RADOUB. Fr. In French law. Repair. The repairing or repair of a vessel. Ord. Mar. liv. 2, tit. 9, art. 3.

RAENCON, Raancon, Ranceoun. L. Fr. A ransom, or fine. Ou par ranceoun ou par amercement. Art. sup. Cart.

RAGEMAN, Ragman. A statute, so called, of justices assigned by Edw. I. and his council, to go a circuit through all England, and to hear and determine all complaints of injuries done within five years next before Michaelmas, in the fourth year of his reign. Spelman.

Ragman, Rageman or Raggeman, (L. Lat. Raggemannus,) occurs in old records in the sense of a blank charter, or recognizance. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 215, note [u.]

RAGMAN'S (or RAGIMUND'S) ROLL. In Scotch law. A roll or record said to have been made by direction of one Ragimund, a legate from Rome, who, calling before him all the beneficed clergymen in the kingdom, caused them, on oath, to give in the true value of their benefices, according to which they were afterwards taxed by the court of Rome.* Whishaw. After being taken away by the English, it was restored, with other deeds and instruments, by Edward III. Baker's Chron. fol. 127. Cowell.

RAIL FENCES are real property, and pass under the word land. 1 Comstock's R. 564.

RAISE. To create, or constitute. To raise a use, is to create it. 1 Steph. Com. 332, 333. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 462, et seq. Raisable; that may be raised. Lord Hardwicke, C. 6 Mod. 489.

RAN. Sax. In Saxon and old English law. Open theft, or robbery, (aperta ra- pina.) Leg. Saxon. Canuti R. c. 58. Spelman. Lamb, Archaion. fol. 125.

RANGER. In forest law. A sworn officer of the forest, whose office chiefly consists in three points: to walk daily through his charge, to see, hear and inquire as well of trespasses as trespassers in his bailiwick; to drive the beasts of the forest, both of venery and chace, out of the deafforested into the forested lands; and to present all trespasses of the forest at the next courts holden for the forest. Cowell. Manwood, cited ibid.

RANK. In English law. Excessive; too large in amount; as a rank modus. 2 Bl. Com. 30.

RANKING. In Scotch law. The arrangement of the claims of creditors in a certain order, showing their legal priorities; a statement showing the order in which the claims of creditors are to be paid out of a fund.* Bell's Dict. Answering to the English marshalling.

RANSOM. [L. Fr. raunsom, raunsome, rancon, raencon; L. Lat. redemptio.] Redemption from the power of another. A sum paid to redeem a person from captivity, imprisonment or punishment; or to redeem property from seizure.

In old English law. A species of fine. According to Lord Coke, "it is all one with a fine, for by the payment of the fine, the party redeems himself from imprisonment that attends the fine, and then there is an end [finis] of the business." Co. Litt. 127 a. See 4 Bl. Com. 380. Britton uses both terms in close connection. Sur peyne de raunsome et de fyn; on pain of ransom and of fine. Britt. c. 11.

A severe or heavy kind of fine, beyond the ordinary amount. The old rule was that where a statute spoke both of a fine and ransom, the ransom should be treble to the fine at least. Cowell. Dyer, 232. 4 Bl. Com. 380. Spelman calls it mulcta gravissima, the severest kind of fine.

RANSOM. In international law. The redemption of captured property from the hands of an enemy, particularly of property captured at sea. 1 Kent's Com. 104.

A sum paid or agreed to be paid for the redemption of captured property. Id. 105. Otherwise called a ransom debt. Id. 107.

The contract by which a ransom is agreed to be paid. The instrument containing such contract. Otherwise called a ransom contract, and a ransom bill. Id. 104—107.

RANSOM BILL. In international law. A contract by which a sum of money is agreed to be paid for the ransom of property captured at sea, and containing also other stipulations as to the return of the vessel, &c. 1 Kent's Com. 105, 106. A ransom bill, when not locally prohibited, is a war contract, protected by good faith and the law of nations. Id. 104.

Ransoms are little known in the commercial law of England, being prohibited by statute except in some peculiar cases. They are, however, recognized among other maritime nations, and have never been prohibited in the United States. Id. 104, 105. See 2 Gallison's R. 325.

RAP. L. Fr. Rape. Rap de femme. Britt. c. 1.

RAPE. [L. Lat. rapa.] In English law. An intermediate division between a shire and a hundred; or a division of a county, containing several hundreds. 1 Bl. Com. 116. Cowell. It seems to be peculiar to the county of Sussex. Id. ibid.

RAPE. [L. Fr. rap de femme; L. Lat. raptus mulierum.] In criminal law. The violation, or carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly, and against her will. 4 Bl. Com. 210. Cowell. Spelman, voc. Raptus. 1 Russell on Crimes, 675. Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, § 1124, 1156.

RAPE OF THE FOREST. [L. Lat. raptus forestæ.] In old English law. Trespass committed in a forest by violence. Cowell. Spelman. LL. Hen. I. c. 11.

RAPE-REEVE. In English law. The chief officer of a rape, (q. v.) 1 Bl. Com. 116.

RAPERE. Lat. In old English law. To ravish. See Rapuit.

RAPINA. Lat. [from rapere, to drag, or carry away forcibly.] In the civil law. The violent taking from the person of another, of money or goods for the sake of gain; robbery from the person. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 23, num. 1, 2. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 2, § 1071.

In old English law. Open and violent larceny from the person; robbery. Stat. 14 Car. II. c. 22. Cowell. 4 Bl. Com. 242.

RAPTOR. L. Lat. [from rapere, to ravish.] In old English law. A ravisher. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 12.

RAPUIT. Lat. [from rapere, to ravish.] In old English law. Ravished. A technical word in old indictments. 2 East, 30. Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, § 401.

RASE. [L. Lat. raseria, from Lat. rasus, shaved or scraped.] In old English law. Strike; struck measure; that in which the commodity measured was made even with the top of the measure, by scraping or striking off all that was above it.* An old ordinance for bakers, brewers, &c. provided that toll should be taken "by the rase, and not by the heap or cantel." Cowell quotes the provision, but strangely overlooks the meaning it so clearly expresses, and makes rase (raseria) to be "a measure of corn, now disused."

To RASE. [from Lat. radere, to scrape.] To rub or scrape; to rub out. An indenture was said to be rased. Perkins, ch. 2, ss. 122, 123, et seq. A word was said to be rased. Id. s. 128. See 3 P. Wms. 433, arg.

RASURA. L. Lat. [from Lat. radere, to scrape.] In old English law. A rasure. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, §§ 3, 4.

RASURE. [L. Fr. rassure, rasoure, from Lat. rasura, from radere, to scrape.] A scraping off; the removal of one or more words from an instrument, by scraping the writing off or out. One of the modes by which a deed or other instrument may be avoided, or rendered of no effect. 2 Bl. Com. 308. Shep. Touch. 55, 68, 71. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 29, § 4. Rasure is properly distinguished from obliteration, which is effected by marking out the writing with pen and ink, or blotting it out by other means; but the terms are sometimes used as synonymous. See 18 Johns. R. 499.

RASUS, Rasum. L. Lat. [from radere, q. v.] In old English law. Rased; erased. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 12.

Struck; scraped off. Mensura rasa; struck measure. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 1.

RASUS. L. Lat. In old English law. A rase; a measure of onions, containing twenty flones, and each flonis twenty-five heads. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 12.

RATA. L. Lat. In old English law. A rate; a proportion. 4 Mod. 79. Juxta ratam præd'; according to the rate aforesaid. Dyer, 82, (Fr. ed.)

RATAM REM HABERE. Lat. In the civil law. To hold a thing ratified; to ratify or confirm it, (comprobare, agnoscere.) Dig. 46. 8. 12. 1, et per tot.

RATE. An assessment. Callis on Sewers, Appendix, 352.

RATE OF EXCHANGE. In commercial law. The actual price at which a bill, drawn in one country upon another country, can be bought or obtained in the former country, at any given time. Story on Bills, § 31.

RATER. An assessor. Laws of the Col. of New Plymouth, A. D. 1643, 1689.

RATIFICARE. Lat. [from ratus, valid, and facere, to make.] In old conveyancing. To ratify. Ratificasse; have ratified. A formal word in deeds of confirmation. Litt. sect. 515. Lord Coke observes that "it is equipollent to confirmare." Co. Litt. 295 b.

RATIFICATION. [from Lat. ratificare, q. v.] The confirmation of a previous act done either by the party himself or by another; confirmation of a voidable act. See Story on Agency, §§ 250, 251. 2 Kent's Com. 237.

RATIHABITIO. Lat. [from ratus, approved, and habere, to hold.] In civil and old English law. A holding as approved; approval or ratification. Dig. 46. 8. Ratihabitio mandato æquiparatur. Ratification is equivalent to express command. Dig. 46. 3. 12. 4. See Id. 50. 17. 152. 2. See Omnis ratihabitio, &c. Story on Agency, § 239. Per ratihabitionem quæ retrotrahitur ad disseysinam; by the ratification which relates back to the disseisin. Bract. 174 b.

RATIO. Lat. Reason; a reason; the reason. See Ratio legis.

An account. Reddere rationem; to give an account. Cowell.

A cause. See Ratione.

RATIO LEGIS. Lat. The reason or occasion of a law; the occasion of making a law. Blackst. Law Tr. 3. Grotius distinguishes between ratio and mens, the meaning or intent of a law. De Jur. Bell. lib. 2, c. 16, § 8. Ratio legis est anima legis; mutata legis ratione, mutatur et lex. The reason of a law is the soul of the law; when the reason of a law is changed, the law also is changed. 7 Co. 7 a, Milborn's case. Ratio legis est anima legis. The reason of a law is the soul of a law. Jenk. Cent. 45, case 86.

RATIONABILIS. Lat. [from ratio, q. v.] In old English law. Reasonable. Quam longum esse debet [rationabile tempus] non definitur in lege, sed pendet ex discretione justitiariorum; how long ["a reasonable time"] ought to be, is not defined in law, but rests in the discretion of the justices. Co. Litt. 56 b. See De rationabili, De rationabilibus.

RATIONE. Lat. By reason; on account.

Ratione impotentiæ; on account of inability. A ground of qualified property in some animals feræ naturæ, as in the young ones, while they are unable to fly or run. 2 Bl. Com. 394. Hale's Anal. sect. xxvi.

Ratione loci; by reason of place. A ground of ownership in rabbits and hares. Hale's Anal. sect. xxvi.

Ratione privilegii; by reason of privilege. A ground of ownership in birds or beasts of warren. Id. ibid.

Ratione soli; on account of the soil; with reference to the soil. Said to be the ground of ownership in bees. 2 Bl. Com. 393.

Ratione tenuræ; by reason of tenure; as a consequence of tenure. 3 Bl. Com. 230. 1 M. & S. 435.

A phrase in old pleading. Not the same as "by reason of being owner and proprietor." Le Blanc, J. 1 M. & S. 441. Ratione tenuræ implies ex vi termini, something originally annexed to the holding. Id. ibid.

RAUNSOM, Raunsome. L. Fr. In old English law. Ransom; a fine; a severe kind of fine. Sur peyne de raunsome; on pain of ransom. Britt. c. 11. Per raunsome simple ou graund, solonc le fait; by an ordinary or a great ransom, according to the fact. Id. ibid. Puny par prison et greve raunsom. Id. c. 48.

RAVISHED. In criminal practice. A material word in indictments for rape. Whart. Am. Crim. Law, § 401.

RAVISHMENT. [Lat. raptus.] In old English law. A forcible taking away, as of a ward. Co. Litt. 79 b. See 3 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 179. It was applied to both sexes. Co. Litt. ub. sup. 3 Bl. Com. 141. A woman might be ravished without carnal knowledge. Jones, J. Latch, 218.

RAZE. To erase. In the great case of proceedings in parliament relative to the liberty of the subject, (3 Car. I. A. D. 1628) Mr. Selden, who had taken an active part in the debate, was charged with "razing a record." 3 How. St. Trials, 156.

RAZON. Span. [Lat. ratio.] In Spanish law. Cause, (causa.) Las Partidas, part. 4, tit. 4, l. 2.

RE. FA. LO. An abbreviation of re*cordari facias* lo*quelam*, (q. v.)

RE, verbis, scripto, consensu, traditione,
Junctura, vestes sumere pacta solent.

From the thing [itself,] from words, from writing, from consent, from delivery, from union, agreements usually take their vestments. A couplet formerly in use, framed to express (in aid of the memory) the six different modes in which obligation might be contracted, which were fancifully termed its vestments or garments, that is, the forms in which it was clothed. It is twice quoted by Bracton, who explains the six forms in detail. Bract. fol. 16 b. Id. fol. 99—101. It is thus expressed in the prose of Britton: Obligation doit estre vestue de v. maneres de garnementz; de chose, de parole, de escript, de unite de volounte, de bail, de joynture. Britt. c. 28. It seems to be a mere extension of the fourfold division of the Institutes: Aut re, aut verbis, aut literis, aut consensu. Inst. 3. 14. 2. And see Dig. 44. 7. 52.

RE, Rei, Rey. L. Fr. King; a king. Kelham.

REAL. [L. Fr. reale; Lat. realis, from res, a thing.] In the civil law. Relating or belonging to, or founded upon a thing, (res,) as distinguished from personal, which related to a person, (persona.) Calv. Lex. This is the proper sense of the word.

In the common law. Relating or belonging to, arising from or founded upon lands, tenements or hereditaments. See Real action, Real estate, Things real. This sense of the word is derived from the feudal law, in which land was considered of paramount importance to all other things, as subjects of property, claiming as it were, the epithet of res, κατ' ἐξοχήν. The barbarous Latin word realis occurs (though rarely) in the civil law, in the sense first above given, but is used by Bracton and subsequent writers in the common law sense of the term. See Realis.

REAL. L. Fr. [from re, king.] In old English law. Royal; regal; belonging to the king. Yearb. P. 6 Edw. III. 48.

REAL ACTION. [L. Fr. accion reale; L. Lat. actio realis, placitum reale.] An action for the recovery of real property; an action relating to real property; an action whereby the plaintiff, or demandant, claims the specific recovery of any lands, tenements or hereditaments.* 3 Steph. Com. 459. 3 Bl. Com. 117, 118.

This term seems to be an accommodation of the actio in rem of the civil law, res being used in the feudal sense of land. The res for which the civil law action lay, might be a personal chattel, as well as land. Inst. 4. 6. 1, 14. Story's Confl. of Laws, § 530.

The threefold division of actions into real, personal and mixed, is obviously taken from the civil law. Inst. 4. 6. 1, 20.

REAL ASSETS. Lands or real estate in the hands of an heir, chargeable with the payment of the debts of the ancestor. 2 Bl. Com. 244, 302. 2 Williams on Exec. 1436. See Assets by descent.

REAL CHYMIN. L. Fr. In old English law. The royal way; the king's highway, (regia via.) Yearb. P. 6 Edw. III. 48.

REAL CONTRACT. In the civil law. A contract in which the obligation arose from the thing (ex re) itself, which was the subject of it. Inst. 3. 14. 2. Id. 3. 15. Real contracts were those in which, besides the consent of the parties, the delivery of some thing was required to perfect the obligation. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 15, num. 1.

In the common law. A contract respecting real property, as a lease of land for years. 3 Co. 22 a, Walker's case.

REAL ESTATE. Landed property, including all estates and interests in lands which are held for life or some longer period of duration.* An estate in fee or for life in land, not comprehending terms for years or any interest short of a freehold. 3 Kent's Com. 401.

In New-York, the term "real estate" has been declared by statute to be equivalent in meaning to "land," (1 R. S. [387,] 379, § 2,) and to "lands, tenements and hereditaments," (Id. [750,] 741, § 10;) and has been otherwise "construed to include every estate, interest and right, legal and equitable, in lands, tenements and hereditaments, except such as are determined or extinguished by the death of an intestate, seised or possessed thereof, or in any manner entitled thereto, and except leases for years, and estates for the life of another person." Id. [744, 755,] 745, § 27.

REAL ESTATE BROKER. One who engages in the purchase and sale of real estate as a business and occupation, and so holds himself out to the public in that character and capacity. 26 Penn. St. R. 138.

REAL EVIDENCE. [Lat. evidentia rei vel facti.] All evidence of which any object belonging to the class of things is the source; persons also included, in respect of such properties as belong to them in common with things. 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 26. This term has been recently introduced from the civil law. Best on Evid. 221, § 178.

REAL INJURY. In the civil law. An injury arising from an unlawful act, as distinguished from a verbal injury which was done by words. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 25, num. 3, 4.

REAL PROPERTY consists of lands, tenements and hereditaments. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 49.

REAL RIGHT. In Scotch law. A right of property in a subject; a jus in re. Bell's Dict.

REAL (or PRÆDIAL) SERVITUDE. In the civil law. A right which one estate or piece of land (prædium) owes to another estate. See Prædial servitude.

REAL STATUTES. In the civil law. Statutes which have principally for their object, property, and which do not speak of persons, except in relation to property. Story's Confl. of Laws, § 13. See Statute.

REAL THINGS, (or THINGS REAL.) In the common law. Such things as are permanent, fixed and immoveable, which cannot be carried out of their place, as lands and tenements. 2 Bl. Com. 15. Things substantial and immoveable, and the rights and profits annexed to, or issuing out of them. 1 Steph. Com. 156.

This expression is, in strictness, clearly pleonastic, the sense of thing (res) being already implied in the word real, as will at once appear by giving it a Latin form, res reales. See Real.

REAL WRONG. In old English law. An injury to the freehold; "that which meddleth with the freehold otherwise than it ought; and is a discontinuance or ouster." Finch's Law, b. 3, ch. 4.

REALE. L. Fr. Real. Accions personelles ou reales. Britt. fol. 1 b.

REALE, Real. L. Fr. Royal. Kelham.

REALIS. L. Lat. In old English law. Real; relating to land. Quædam [actiones] sunt reales, et quædam sunt personales; some actions are real, and some are personal. Bract. fol. 159 b. Secundum quod placitum fuerit reale vel personale; according as the plea is real or personal. Id. fol. 1 b. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 1, § 1. Id. lib. 2, c. 13, § 4.

REALITY. In foreign law. That quality of laws which concerns property or things, (quæ ad rem spectant.) Story's Confl. Laws, § 16. See Personality.

REALTY. The quality of being real, or relating to lands and tenements.* Things real. 1 Steph. Com. 156.

REASONABLE. Agreeable to reason; just; proper. See Reasonable time.

Ordinary or usual. Reasonable care is ordinary care, (q. v.) Reasonable common imports what is usual. Lord Ellenborough, 6 M. & S. 49. See Id. 69.

REASONABLE PART. In old English law. That share of a man's goods which the law gave to his wife and children after his decease. 2 Bl. Com. 492.

REASONABLE TIME cannot be made the subject of abstract definition. What is a reasonable time must be determined by the circumstances of the particular case. See 22 Alabama R. 414.

RE-ASSURANCE. A contract made by the first insurer of property with another insurer, by which he has the entire sum he has insured, re-assured to him, for the purpose of obtaining indemnity against his own act.* 3 Kent's Com. 278, 279. Otherwise called re-insurance. 1 Phill. on Ins. 146.

Re-assurance is prohibited in England, except in special cases, by statute 19 Geo. II. c. 37, § 4.

RE-ATTACHMENT. [L. Lat. re-attachiamentum.] In old English practice. A second or repeated attachment. Cowell. Reg. Jud. 35.

REAUME, Reaugme, Reame. L. Fr. Realm. Kelham.

REAVER. L. Fr. To have again, or have back; to re-have. Britt. c. 93.

RE-BAIL. In old English law. To redeliver. 3 Leon. 150. See Bail.

REBEAUX, Rebealx, Rebeux. L. Fr. Rebels; disobedient persons. Kelham.

REBELLIO. Lat. In old English law. Rebellion. Stat. Marlbr. c. 7.

REBELLION, Commission of. In equity practice. A process of contempt issued on the non-appearance of a defendant. See Commission of rebellion.

REBELLIS. Lat. In old English law. A rebel. Stat. Marlbr. c. 7.

REBOTABLE. L. Fr. [from reboter, q. v.] That may be rebutted, put or thrust back, or barred; barrable, rebuttable. Le madle est receyvable, et la femme rebotable; the male is receivable, (may be admitted,) and the female rebuttable, (may be rejected.) Britt. c. 119.

REBOTER, Rebouter. L. Fr. To put or thrust back; to repel; to bar; to rebut; to reject. Reboter l'assise; to bar the assise. Britt. c. 77. Si jeo puisse reboter l'un, jeo reboteray l'autre; if I may rebut the one, I shall rebut the other. Yearb. T. 9 Edw. III. 12.

REBUT. [from L. Fr. reboter, q. v.] In pleading and evidence. To repel; to meet or counteract the effect of opposing allegations or evidence. See Rebutter.

REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION. In the law of evidence. A presumption which may be rebutted by evidence. Otherwise called a disputable presumption. A species of legal presumption which holds good until disproved. Best on Pres. § 25. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 33.

REBUTTER. [from L. Fr. reboter; to thrust back, repel or bar.] In pleading. A defendant's answer of fact to a plaintiff's surrejoinder; the third pleading in the series on the part of the defendant. Steph. Pl. 59. 3 Bl. Com. 310. Co. Litt. 303 b.

Rebutter, in the old books, had also the general sense of bar or estoppel. Bro. Abr. Barre, num. 23, 25. Cowell. Co. Litt. 365 a. Shep. Touch. 182. And it is still occasionally used in this sense. Story, J. 1 Sumner's R. 263.

REBUTTING EVIDENCE. Evidence adduced on the part of a plaintiff or prosecutor to repel or counteract evidence on the part of a defendant or prisoner.

RECAL. In practice. To reverse a judgment on writ of error for error in fact. 1 Arch. Pr. 281. 16 Wendell's R. 48.

RECAPTION. [from Lat. recaptio, from re, again, and captio, a taking.] A retaking, or taking back. A species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured, (otherwise termed reprisal,) which happens when any one has deprived another of his property in goods or chattels personal, or wrongfully detains one's wife, child or servant. In this case, the owner of the goods, and the husband, parent or master may lawfully claim and retake them, wherever he happens to find them, so it be not in a riotous manner, or attended with a breach of the peace. 3 Inst. 134. 3 Bl. Com. 4. 3 Steph. Com. 358.

In English practice. A writ to recover damages against a person who, pending a replevin for a former distress, distrains again for the same rent or service.* 3 Bl. Com. 150.

RECEDERE. Lat. [from re, back, and cedere, to go.] In old practice. To go back; to recede; to draw back. Possunt contrahentes recedere de contractu; the contracting parties may draw back from the contract. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 58, § 3.

To retire or be dismissed from court. Quietus recedet; shall go quit. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 21, § 7. Recedunt sine die; go without day. Id. lib. 2, c. 39, § 1. Recedet inde reus quietus imperpetuum; the defendant shall go quit thereof forever. Id. c. 63, § 12.

Receditur a placitis juris, potius quam injuriæ et delicta maneant impunita. Positive rules of law (as distinguished from maxims or conclusions of reason,) will be receded from, [given up or dispensed with] rather than crimes and wrongs should remain unpunished. Bacon's Max. 55, reg. 12. See Placita juris.

RECEIPT. [L. Fr. resceit.] An acknowledgment in writing of having received a sum of money, goods or other valuable consideration; an acquittance. As to its effect, see 1 Greenl. Evid. § 212. An acknowledgment of the receipt of the consideration money constitutes a formal clause in all deeds of conveyance.

In old practice. Admission of a party to defend a suit, as of a wife on default of the husband in certain cases. Litt. sect. 668. Co. Litt. 352 b. Called, also, defensio juris. Id. ibid.

RECEIPTMENT. [L. Fr. resceitment, q. v.] In old English law. The receiving or harboring a felon knowingly, after the commission of a felony. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 14. 2 Inst. 182. Answering to the Scotch resetting or resset, (q. v.)

RECEIPTOR. In practice. A person to whom goods levied on by a sheriff are delivered, on his undertaking (called a receipt,) to deliver the same to the sheriff, on demand, or to pay the amount of the execution, with costs. 5 Hill's R. 588, 590. See Story on Bailm. § 124.

RECEIVER. L. Fr. To receive; to admit. Si la feme pria destre receive et soit receive; if the wife pray to be received and is received. Litt. sect. 668.

RECEIVER. [L. Lat. receptor.] In criminal law. One who receives stolen goods from thieves, and conceals them. Cowell. This was always the prevalent sense of the word in the common as well as the civil law. Id.

RECEIVER. In equity practice. An officer appointed by a court of chancery or equity, to take possession of the property of a defendant, or of property which is the subject of litigation, and to hold the same and apply the profits, or dispose of the property itself under the direction of the court; with the view of more effectually securing the rights of the complainant or other parties who may be entitled.*—An indifferent person between the parties, appointed by the court to receive the rents, issues or profits of land or other thing in question in the court, pending the suit, where it does not seem reasonable that either party should do it. Wyatt's Prac. Reg. 355. The appointment of a receiver is applied for by bill, petition or motion, and is a common preliminary proceeding to the winding up of the affairs of a partnership or incorporated company, as well as an ordinary adjunct to a judgment creditor's bill. See Edwards on Receivers, 1—18.

A receiver is an officer of the court which appoints him, but cannot sue in a foreign jurisdiction for the property of the debtor. 17 Howard's R. 322. See the distinction between a receiver in chancery under a creditor's bill, and an assignee in bankruptcy explained. Id. ibid.

RECEIVER (of MONEYS.) In old law. (L. Fr. recevor or rescevor de deniers; L. Lat. receptor denariorum.) A term used in connection with bailiff, (q. v.)

RECENS INSECUTIO. L. Lat. In old English law. Fresh suit; fresh pursuit. Pursuit of a thief immediately after the discovery of the robbery. 1 Bl. Com. 297. Recens secta; fresh suit. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 24, § 3.

RECEPTAMENTUM. L. Lat. [L. Fr. recettement.] In old English law. Receiptment; the receiving (Scotch, resetting,) or harboring a felon after the commission of the crime. Bract. fol. 152 b. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 8.

RECEPTARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To receive; to harbor (a felon.) Jurare debent quod utlagatos, murdritores, robbatores et burglatores non receptabunt, nec eis consentient; ought to swear that they will not harbor outlaws, murderers, robbers and burglars, nor will consent [or be privy] to them. Bract. fol. 115 b.

RECEPTATOR. Lat. [from receptare, q. v.] In civil and old English law. A receiver or harborer of a robber or other felon. Dig. 47. 16. Bract. fol. 115 b. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 16. Id. lib. 2, c. 52, § 9. Feud. Lib. 2, tit. 53, § 8.

RECEPTOR. Lat. [from recipere, to receive.] In old English law. Receiver; a receiver. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 33.

Receptor denariorum; receiver of moneys. Id. lib. 2, c. 70, §§ 7, 9.

Receptrix. A female receiver. Yearb. M. 19 Hen. VI. 10.

RECESSUS. Lat. [from recedere, to go back.] In old English law. A going from; a going off or out of land. Cum libero accessu et recessu; with free access and recess, [ingress and egress.] Bract. fol. 231 b.

RECESSUS MARIS. Lat. In old English law. A going back; reliction or retreat of the sea. Hale de Jur. Mar. pars 1, c. 6.

RECETOUR, Recettour. L. Fr. In old English law. A receiver or harborer of a felon; an accessary after the fact. Britt. c. 24. One who received and concealed a returned outlaw. Id. c. 12.

RECETTEMENT. L. Fr. In old English law. Receiptment; the receiving and harboring a felon. Del consentment ou del recettement de ceux felons à escient; of consenting to, or harboring such felons knowingly. Britt. c. 1.

RECHASER. L. Fr. To drive back. Yearb. M. 11 Hen. VI. 4.

RECHATE. L. Fr. Ransom. Faire rechat' du char et du saunk; to make ransom of flesh and of blood. Yearb. M. 7 Edw. II. 214.

RECHATER. L. Fr. To ransom; to buy back. Kelham.

RECIDIVE. Fr. In French law. The state of a person who commits a second offence, after condemnation or punishment for a previous one; a relapse. Bouvier.

RECITAL. [L. Lat. recitatio.] In conveyancing. The formal preliminary statement in a deed or other instrument, of such deeds, agreements or matters of fact as are necessary to explain the reasons upon which the transaction is founded. 2 Bl. Com. 298. The recital is contained in the premises (q. v.) of a deed, and usually commences with the formal word "whereas," which, when there are several recitals in succession, is repeated accordingly; "and whereas." As to its effect, see 1 Leon. 122. And see Burr. Sett. Cas. 23.

In pleading. The statement of matter as introductory to some positive allegation, beginning, in declarations, with the words "For that whereas," or in the old Latin forms with pro eo quod cum, (q. v.) See Steph. Pl. 388, 389.

RECLAIMING BILL. In Scotch practice. A bill or written pleading, stating the grounds on which a judgment of the Lord Ordinary, or of the whole court, is expected to be altered. Bell's Dict.

RECLAMER. L. Fr. To reclaim; to make a claim; to challenge. Kelham.

RECOGNITIO. L. Lat. [from recognoscere, q. v.] In old English law. An assise. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. c. 12. Bract. fol. 164 b. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 1, § 7.

A jury, as distinguished from an assise proper. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 367.

The verdict of an assise. Cowell. Strictly the act of the jury in hearing and inquiring into the truth of the case, in order to the making up of their verdict.

A recognizance. See Recognizance.

RECOGNITOR. L. Lat. [from recognoscere, q. v.] In old English law. A person impanelled on an assise, as jurator was one impanelled on a jury. Recognitores in assisis, juratores in juratis. Bract. fol. 351 b. Id. fol. 111 b.

RECOGNITURA. L. Lat. In old practice. To recognize. See Recognoscere.

RECOGNIZANCE, Recognisance. [from L. Fr. reconisaunce; L. Lat. recognitio, qq. v.] In practice. An acknowledgment upon record; an acknowledgment of a debt upon record.* An obligation of record, entered into before some court of record, or magistrate duly authorized, with condition to do some particular act; as to appear at the assizes, or criminal court, to keep the peace, to pay a debt, or the like. It resembles a bond, but differs from it in being an acknowledgment of a former debt upon record. 2 Bl. Com. 341.

The undertaking of special bail in a civil action at law, of which the bail piece is a memorandum.* 3 Bl. Com. 291.

In old practice. An assise; the inquisition or verdict of an assise. Cowell. See Reconisaunce, Recognitio.

To RECOGNIZE. [L. Lat. recognoscere, q. v.] In practice. To examine, or try; to inquire so as to know. "The assise came to recognize if," &c., were the first words of the record of an assise of novel disseisin. 9 Co. 1 a, Dowman's case.

This old word is still retained in the entry of the award of jury process on the record, the sheriff being directed to summon a jury "to recognize, &c.," that is, to recognize or try the truth of the issue between the parties. 3 Bl. Com. 352. See Recognoscere.

RECOGNOSCERE. Lat. [from re, again, and cognoscere, to know; L. Fr. reconustre.] In old practice. To acknowledge. Idem B. venit in eadem curia, et recognovit totam prædictam terram, cum pertinentiis, esse jus ipsius A.; the said B. came into the said court, and acknowledged the whole of the said land, with the appurtenances, to be the right of the said A. Bract. fol. 73 b.

To recognize; that is, to try or examine, as a jury; to inquire so as to know the truth. Parati sacramento recognoscere si B. pater C. de N. fuit seysitus; prepared on oath to recognize if B. the father of C. of N. was seised. Id. fol. 294. Ad recognoscendum super sacramentum suum si prædictus C. prædictum D. robbavit; to recognize upon their oath, if the said C. robbed the said D. Id. fol. 111 b, 112. See Fortescue, de L. L. Angliæ, c. 25, note. Assisa venit recognitura, (the assise came to recognize,) were the first words of the record of an assise of novel disseisin. Litt. sect. 234.

The word recognoscere is said to have originally had, in this application, its literal sense,—to know again, to call to remembrance, to declare upon recollection; juries having been originally composed of witnesses, or persons cognizant, of their own knowledge, of the fact in question. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (40.)

RECONISAUNCE. L. Fr. A recognizance (to keep the peace.) Britt. c. 16.

The inquisition of an assise or jury. Petite assise est reconisaunce de xii jorours, del droit le pleyntyfe sur la possession. Id. c. 42.

RECONQUIS. L. Fr. Recovered; reobtained. Britt. c. 59.

RECONUSTRE. L. Fr. To recognize. A reconustre sur lour serment; to recognize upon their oath. Britt. c. 45.

RECONVENIRE. Lat. In the canon and civil law. To make a cross demand upon the actor, or plaintiff. 4 Reeves' Hist. 14, and note (r.)

RECONVENTIO. Lat. [from reconvenire, q. v.] In the civil and canon law. A cross demand by the reus (defendant) upon the actor (plaintiff;) a proceeding in the nature of a cross bill in equity. Halifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 1, n. 40. Calv. Lex. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 22, § 9. Gilb. For. Rom. 45, 46. Story's Eq. Pl. § 402. Considered to be the origin of a cross bill. Id. ibid.

RECONVENTION. A cross demand. A term used in practice in the states of Louisiana and Texas, derived from the reconventio (q. v.) of the civil law. Reconvention is not identical with set-off, but more extensive. See 6 Texas R. 414. 5 Id. 501, 504.

RECOPILACION DE INDIAS. Span. A collection of Spanish colonial law, promulgated A. D. 1680. See Schmidt's Civ. Law, Introd. 94.

RECORD. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Lat. recordum, from Fr. recorder, Lat. recordari, to call to mind, to recite or testify on recollection.] In practice. An instrument containing an account of the proceedings of a court of justice, particularly in an action at law, and intended as an authentic memorial of such proceedings. A history of the proceedings in an action at law, consisting of entries of the various acts of the parties and of the court, arranged in the order of their occurrence, expressed in the formal language prescribed by precedent, connected together by the peculiar entries called continuances, and terminating with the judgment of the court upon the whole matter.

In England, the peculiar material upon which the record has always been written, forms an essential part of the definition of the word. Hence Lord Coke has defined a record to be "a memorial or remembrance in rolls of parchment, of the proceedings and acts of a court of justice." Co. Litt. 260 a. And Mr. Serjeant Stephen observes that "a record signifies a roll of parchment, upon which the proceedings or transactions of a court are entered or drawn up by its officers, and which is then deposited in its treasury, in perpetuam rei memoriam." 3 Steph. Com. 583. In the United States, paper has universally supplied the place of parchment as the material of the record, and the roll form has, on that account, fallen into disuse; but, in other respects, the forms of the English records have, with some modifications, been generally adopted. In a late case, a record was defined "a memorial of a proceeding or act of a court of record, entered in a roll for the preservation of it." 1 Hempstead's R. 214.

 The use of records, in the technical sense just considered, is altogether peculiar to the common law, and they have always been regarded by that law with very peculiar consideration. Constituting the only strict and proper proof of the proceedings of the court in which they are preserved, they are also regarded as proof of so transcendant and absolute a nature, as to admit of no contradiction, or, in Lord Coke's language, they "import in themselves such incontrollable credit and verity, as they admit no averment, plea or proof to the contrary." Co. Litt. 260 a. 3 Steph. Com. 583. See 25 Alabama R. 116. And the peculiar privilege of some courts to have these memorials has, of itself, created the great leading distinction, equally recognized in English and American law, between courts of record and courts not of record. 3 Bl. Com. 24.

The practice of recording (thus peculiar to the common law,) has been very satisfactorily shown by Mr. Serjeant Stephen to be essentially of Norman origin. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (11.) The term record, is itself, as he observes, in its immediate derivation, French; or rather, it is a French word adopted in English without change, as will appear from the use of it in Britton. Et en tiel cas volons que lour roules porten record; and in such case we will that their rolls shall bear or carry record, that is, shall have the force of record. Britt. c. 1. Enroulment de court que porte record; enrollment of a court which bears record, that is, of a court of record. Id. c. 28. Record is from recorder; and the latter word anciently signified, in the Norman law, to recite or testify on recollection, as occasion might require, what had previously passed in court, which was the duty of the judges and other principal persons who presided at the placitum,—thence called recordeurs. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (11.) In fact, all over France, at this early period, the only mode of proving what took place in the courts, seems to have been by the testimony of witnesses, by whom, as Montesquieu observes, they proved what had been already done, said, or judicially decreed, (on prouvoit par temoins ce qui s'étoit déja passé, dit, ou ordonné en justice.) This was what they called the proceeding by record, (par ce que s'appelloit la procedure par record.) Esprit des Loix, liv. 28, c. 34. The same thing conclusively appears from the Assises de Jerusalem, referred to by Mr. Stephen.

The proper original of the English record is considered by the last named author to have been an occasional memorandum (distinctly mentioned in the Assises de Jerusalem,) drawn up by the Francic pleader to confirm the recollection of his judges, and which, by a gradual progress, (not now to be traced,) took the shape of an official contemporaneous minute of the proceedings; and, no longer merely subordinate to a record or judicial report, became itself invested with that name and character. "Whether this change," observes Mr. Stephen, "had fully taken place at the date of Glanville's treatise, (in the reign of Henry II.) that work does not enable us accurately to decide.—However, we find at least very shortly after this period, the practice of recording, in the present sense of the term, was in full operation." The series of records, now extant, begins with the reign of Richard I. and the earliest of them are to be found in the collection called Placitorum Abbreviatio. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (11.) Bracton frequently refers to the irrotulationes (enrollments,) as important parts of the proceedings in an action, and occasionally gives forms of them. Bract. fol. 16, 292, 299 b. The same author, in citing the judicial decisions of that period, distinctly mentions the rotuli or rolls on which they were recorded, sometimes distinguishing in what part of the roll the case was to be found.

It may not be out of place to advert here, briefly, to the principal features of this very important judicial instrument. The ancient record was, as its form clearly indicates, a contemporaneous minute of the proceedings in an action, drawn up by an officer of the court, containing an entry of every act done in court, either by the parties or by the court itself, which, (as every thing done in an action was then done in open court,) embraced all the proceedings in the suit,—the appearances and pleadings of the parties, prayer and allowance of imparlance, prayer and allowance of oyer, award of jury process, proceedings at the trial, verdict of the jury and judgment of the court, with the various intermediate and incidental proceedings. Its contemporaneous character appears every where on its face, the proceedings being uniformly entered in language of the present tense, and as of present occurrence. The plaintiff "complains" and "brings suit;" the defendant "comes and defends," and "prays judgment;" the "jury come" and "say upon their oath;" and the judgment o the court is, that "it is considered," &c

Another distinctive feature of the old record was its continuances, or the entries of the adjournments of the court from one day or term to another, by which the parties were temporarily dismissed and appointed to appear again, and by which its various parts were at the same time most effectually connected together. It was this peculiar principle of construction, by which the record was made to follow the action step by step, and to reflect every proceeding in it just as it occurred, which gave it from an early period the stamp of the very highest authority as a judicial memorial. Kept constantly under the eye of the court, and by its own officer, it necessarily became the evidence in itself, of what it contained, admitting, indeed, of no extrinsic proof whatever. The great and obvious importance of the record in this particular, led to a corresponding degree of care in framing it. By the consummate skill of the Anglo-Norman pleaders, its language was gradually elaborated to the highest degree of precision and uniformity, its various parts studiously adapted to each other and logically fitted together, until, by the force of constant repetition, and under the sanction of the courts for a succession of centuries, the whole instrument settled at last into a fixed form of expression, which admitted of (as it required) no variation. In this way, the record came to be, at an early period, and before the discontinuance of oral pleadings, next after the original writ, the most important document in an action, prescribing indeed the form of all the other proceedings, which constituted its component parts. This is very forcibly shown in the fact that, when written pleadings were introduced, they were framed precisely as they had before appeared on the record, and were virtually mere extracts from it. Steph. Pl. 35, (Am. ed. 1824.) Hence arose what has always been a leading principle of practice, that every proceeding in an action intended or required to appear on the record, must be framed in the language of the record, and with reference to its place on that instrument, or, in other words, must be framed with the same exactness as the record itself. See Anthon's Law Student, 266, 267, 273.

Two circumstances, in addition to what has been mentioned, contributed to stamp the record with that character of immutability which has accompanied it down to modern times, and almost to the present day. One was the circumstance of its being kept in Latin, a language admitting of no variation, and the other, the character of inviolability, which preserved it from the slightest degree of alteration after it had been once made up.

The substitution of English for Latin as the language of the record, and of ordinary writing for the "ancient and immutable court hand," which took place in the reign of George II. were innovations upon the ancient system apparently demanded by the times, but viewed by highly competent judges of the period with much apprehension as to their effect upon the durability of the record, as a memorial of the proceedings in an action. See Court hand. How far these apprehensions have been realized in the particular way anticipated, is for English practitioners to determine; but that they have been realized in the general result of impairing the character of the record by reducing it to the level of an ordinary instrument, privileged in no peculiar manner from change, seems apparent in the material alterations which have at length been effected, in England, in the structure of this once inviolable and immutable memorial of judgment. These changes consist principally in omitting all or most of those entries by which the several parts of the record were formerly connected together, (including the entire system of continuances,) by omitting the formal commencements and conclusions of pleadings, which were in fact portions of the record itself, connecting with the pleadings, and by the general modification of the language of the pleadings themselves. In this way the unity of the record has been effectually broken up, and the symmetry of its parts and the uniformity of its language, once thought to constitute its peculiar value, have been obviously impaired.

In some of the United States, similar modifications of the form of the record have been adopted, going in some instances indeed to much greater lengths; and, on the whole, the modern tendency undoubtedly is to place this instrument, in point of dignity and importance, far below the position it once occupied. Latterly, however, the courts have evinced a determination to maintain the record in its proper formal character. See 11 Howard's R. 272, 288. 2 Wallace, Jr. 569. 1 Hempstead's R. 214. 3 Wisconsin R. 362.

pears to be due by the evidence of a court of record; such as a judgment, a recognizance, &c. 2 Bl. Com. 465.

RECORD, Trial by. In practice. A mode of trial in use where a matter of record is pleaded in any action, as a judgment, and the opposite party pleads nul tiel record, that there is no such matter of record existing. The issue arising hereon is tried merely by the record itself, that is, by the inspection of the court, without witnesses or jury; and accordingly upon such issue, the record alleged is ordered to be brought into court, that it may be seen and inspected.* 3 Bl. Com. 331. 3 Steph. Com. 583, 584. A record must be tried by itself, and importing verity, if a party desires to controvert it, the record alone must be relied upon for that purpose, by the introduction of a more perfect record. 28 Mississippi R. 398.

RECORDARE. L. Lat. In American practice. A writ to bring up judgments of justices of the peace. 3 Jones' (N. C.) Law R. 491.

RECORDARI. L. Lat. In old English law. To record. Sed quid si curia recordetur quod querens servitium petitum recognovit, in curia ipsa; but what, if the court should record that the plaintiff acknowledged the service demanded in the court itself. Bract. fol. 157 b. Recordata; recorded. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 9.

RECORDARI FACIAS LOQUELAM. L. Lat. (You cause the plaint to be recorded.) In English practice. A writ by which a suit or plaint in replevin may be removed from a county court to one of the courts of Westminster Hall. 3 Bl. Com. 149. 3 Steph. Pl. 522, 666. So termed from the emphatic words of the old writ, by which the sheriff was commanded to cause the plaint to be recorded, and to have the record before the superior court. Reg. Orig. 5 b.

RECORDATOR. L. Lat. In English law. Recorder. 12 East, 559.

RECORDATUR. L. Lat. (It is recorded.) In old English practice. An entry made upon a record, in order to prevent any alteration of it. 1 Ld. Raym. 211.

RECORDER. L. Fr. In Norman law. To recite or testify on recollection what had previously passed in court. This was the duty of the judges and other principal persons who presided at the placitum,—thence called recordeurs. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (11.) In the Assises de Jerusalem, it is one of the directions given to litigants, that they should collect as many of their own friends as possible in court, and request them to be attentive to what was said, with a view of enabling themselves to retain and record it properly (si que il sachent bien le recorder) at the time of judgment or trial. Assis. de Jerus. c. 44.

In old English law. To state, recite or relate, as a judge did to a jury. Britt. c. 52.

RECORDER. [L. Lat. recordator.] In old English law. A person whom the mayor or other magistrate of any city or town corporate, having jurisdiction or a court of record within their precincts, associated to him for his better direction in matters of justice and proceedings according to law. Cowell.

In modern law. The chief judicial officer of a borough or city, exercising within it, in criminal matters, the jurisdiction of a court of record. Brande. The chief criminal judge of a city.

In some of the United States, as in Pennsylvania and Ohio, registers of deeds are called recorders. Purdon's Dig. 219, (ed. 1857.) Swan's Statutes, 789, ch. 96, (ed. 1854.)

RECORDUM. L. Lat. In old English and Scotch law. A record. Si curia recordetur quod querens, &c. tunc querens recordum illud dedicere poterit, et cognitionem contra recordum curiæ; if the court should record that the plaintiff, &c. then the plaintiff may deny that record, and the acknowledgment, against the record of the court. Bract. fol. 157 b. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 9. Id. c. 53, § 3. Skene de Verb. Sign.

Recorda sunt vestigia vetustatis et veritatis; records are the traces of antiquity and of truth. 2 Roll. R. 296.

RECOUPE, Recoop. [from L. Fr. recouper, to cut again, or to cut out and keep back.] To diminish a claim for damages by cutting out or keeping back a part.* Cowell interprets it, "to defalk or discount." Where a man had ten pounds issuing out of certain lands, and he disseised the tenant of the land, in an assise brought by the disseisee, the disseisor might recoupe the rent in the damages, in order to avoid circuity of action. 5 Co. 30 a, Coulter's case. An executor de son tort is not allowed to retain or recoupe any part of the deceased's goods to satisfy his own debt. Id. ibid. 3 Campb. 282.

This old word has been revived to a considerable extent in modern law. "Where a man brings an action for breach of a contract between him and the defendant, and the latter can show that some stipulation in the same contract was made by the plaintiff, which he has violated, the defendant may, if he choose, instead of suing in his turn, recoupe his damages, arising from the breach committed by the plaintiff, whether they be liquidated or not. The law will cut off so much of the plaintiff's claim as the cross damages may come to." Cowen, J. 22 Wendell's R. 156. See Recoupment.

RECOUPER. The old form of Recoupment, (q. v.)

RECOUPMENT. [from recoupe, q. v.] In practice. Defalcation or discount from a demand. A keeping back something which is due, because there is an equitable reason to withhold it. Reduction or diminution of damages in an action on a contract, from breach of warranty or defects in the performance. The principle of recoupment has been established in the state of New-York in several cases of recent occurrence. 22 Wendell's R. 155. 3 Hill's R. 171, 174. 5 Id. 63, 71, 76. 7 Id. 53. 3 Kernan's R. 151. It is distinguished from set-off. 3 Hill's R. 171. See 2 Kent's Com. 472. Sedgw. Meas. of Dam. ch. 17. In the late Vermont case of Barber v. Chapin, (28 Vermont R. 413, 415,) Redfield, C. J. observed that "the modern use of this term is confessedly so indefinite as to afford no reliable grounds upon which it is safe to proceed." See the different applications of the term shown. Id. ibid.

RECOUSSE. Fr. In French law. Recapture. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 12, sect. 23.

RECOVER. [from L. Fr. recoverer, from Lat. recuperare, qq. v.] To obtain by course of law; to obtain by means of an action, or by the judgment rendered in an action; to succeed in an action. The ordinary judgment for a plaintiff in an action at law is "that he do recover." See Quod recuperet.

RECOVEREE. In old conveyancing. The party who suffered a common recovery; the tenant of the freehold, against whom lands were recovered by the process of a common recovery, and by that means conveyed to the party recovering.* 2 Bl. Com. 357—359.

RECOVERER, Recovrir. L. Fr. [from Lat. recuperare, q. v.] To recover; to obtain by action, or course of law. Le villeyn ne purra jammes recoverer encontre son seigniour; the villein may never recover against his lord. Britt. c. 43. Le seigniour del soil recovera damages vers eux; the lord of the soil shall recover damages against them. Id. ibid. Hence the English recover, which form indeed appears in the French of Littleton. Si home recover debt ou damages. Litt. sect. 504.

RECOVEROR. In old conveyancing. The party recovering lands by the process of a common recovery; the party to whom the lands were, by this process, conveyed.* 2 Bl. Com. 357, 358.

RECOVERY. The obtaining a thing by the judgment of a court, as the result of an action brought for the purpose.

A species of conveyance now abolished or disused. See Common recovery.

RECREANT. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Lat. recreantus, q. v.] In old English law. Cowardly; faint-hearted; yielding to an adversary; acknowledging defeat. "An odious word," by which a combatant in the trial by battel, acknowledged himself to be vanquished, or acknowledged his guilt. See 3 Bl. Com. 340. See Recreantus, Craven.

RECREANTIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Recreancy; cowardice; submission to an adversary; acknowledgment of guilt. Bract. fol. 153. See Recreantus. Called in Glanville and Fleta, recreantisa. Glanv. lib. 2, c. 3. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 18.

RECREANTUS. L. Lat. In old English law. Recreant; cowardly; yielding to an adversary; acknowledging defeat or guilt. Non sufficit quod appellatus cognoscat se fuisse socium suum, vel latronem, vel aliquid consimile ad recreantiam, nisi dicat illud verbum odiosum quod recreantus sit; it is not enough that the appellee acknowledges himself to have been his accomplice, or a robber, or any thing like to recreancy, unless he say that odious word, that he is recreant. Bract. fol. 153.

RECRIMINATION. [from re, back, and crimen, an accusation; L. Lat. compensatio criminis.] A counter-accusation; an accusation made by an accused party against the accuser.* A set-off by a defendant of equal guilt on the part of the complainant in a suit for a divorce, on the ground of adultery. Shelf. Marr. & Div. 440.

RECTARE, Rettare, Retare. L. Lat. In old English law. To accuse; to charge. See Arrectare.

RECTATIO. L. Lat. In old records. A claim of right, or appeal to law for the recovery of it. Chartul. Radinges, MS. cited in Cowell.

RECTATUS, Rettatus. L. Lat. [from L. Lat. rectum; L. Fr. rette, an accusation.] In old English law. Suspected; accused; charged; summoned to answer an accusation, (ad rectum vocatus.) Spelman. Glanv. lib. 1, c. 31. In the old writ De odio et atia, given by Bracton, the sheriff was commanded to summon a jury to inquire "utrum A. de N. captus et detentus in prisona nostra de tali loco, de morte B. unde rectatus et appellatus est, rectatus sit vel appellatus de morte illa odio et atya," &c.; whether A. of N. taken and detained in our prison of such a place, for the death of B. whereof he is accused and appealed, be accused or appealed of that death by hatred and malice, &c. Bract. fol. 123. In the form of the same writ in the Register, rettatus is the word employed. Reg. Orig. fol. 133 b. See Rettatus. Rectati de morte hominis; charged with the death of a man. Bract. fol. 117 b. Rectati de latrocinio; accused of robbery. Id. ibid. See Arrect, Arrectare.

Skene translates this word, "summoned to court to do right," (vocatus in jus ut rectum faciat.) Sken. not. ad Leg. Burg. c. 80. But this is not approved by Spelman. It occurs several times in a special writ issued by Henry III. to certain justices in eyre, and which is given at length in Blount.

RECTE. Lat. In the civil law. Rightly. Dig. 50. 16. 73. As to the interpretation of this word, see Id. ibid.

RECTITUDO. L. Lat. In Saxon and old English law. A right or legal due. Rectitudines; rights. LL. Edw. Conf. c. 30. LL. Hen. I. c. 6. Cowell.

RECTO, De. L. Lat. Of right. See De recto.

RECTOR. Lat. and Eng. [from regere, to govern.] In English ecclesiastical law. A person having the charge or care of a parish church; a parson; literally, the governor of a church. 1 Bl. Com. 384. The word is as old as the time of Bracton, who applies it in precisely its modern sense. Et sciendum quòd tantum rectoribus ecclesiarum parochialium, qui instituti sunt per episcopos et ordinarios, ut personæ; and it is to be known that it [the assise of Utrum] lies only for rectors of parish churches, who are instituted by the bishops and ordinaries, as parsons. Bract. fol. 285 b. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 20, §§ 9—11. It appears to have been used on the continent at an early period. Spelman, voc. Rector ecclesiæ.

RECTOR PROVINCIÆ. Lat. In the Roman law. The governor of a province. Cod. 1. 40.

RECTORY. [L. Lat. rectoria.] In ecclesiastical law. The office of a rector. Spelman, voc. Rectoria.

An entire parish church, with all its rights, glebes, tithes and other profits whatsoever; otherwise commonly called a benefice. Id.

A rector's manse, or parsonage house, (pro mansione seu domicilio rectoris.) Id.

RECTUM. Lat. In old English law. Right; law. Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus justitiam vel rectum. To none will we sell, to none will we deny justice or right. Magna Charta, c. 29. See 2 Inst. 56. De recto deficere; to fail of right; to fail in doing right or justice. Bract. fol. 330 b. A term peculiar to the law of England. Quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliæ rectum esse dicitur; what in the written (civil) law is called jus, in the law of England is said to be rectum. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 1.

A right claimed by a party; a right to land claimed by the writ called a writ of right, (breve de recto.) Præcipimus vobis [tibi,] quod sine dilatione plenum rectum teneatis [teneas] tali de tanto terræ, &c.; we command you that without delay you do full right to such a one, of so much land, &c. Reg. Orig. 1. Bract. fol. 328.

RECTUM, Rettum. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. rette.] In old English law. An accusation or charge of crime; suspicion of crime. Spelman. Illi qui per commune rectum sunt retenti, si plegios invenire possunt standi ad rectum si quis adversus eos loqui voluerit, liberentur; those who are detained upon common accusation [of the county or hundred,] if they can find pledges to stand to the accusation [that is to appear and answer it,] if any one choose to speak against them, shall be discharged. Rog. Hoved. Annal. part. post.

fol. 273 a, n. 40. This passage, given by Spelman from Hoveden, is repeated by the editor of Cowell, but misinterpreted to mean a trial.

In the Register, rettum occurs as a form of this word, closely resembling the Fr. rette, from which it is undoubtedly derived. Reg. Orig. 77 b. See Rettum.

RECTUS. Lat. Right; upright; straight; straight forward; direct. See Rectus in curia, Linea recta.

RECTUS IN CURIA. L. Lat. Right in court; free from charge or impeachment; in a proper position before a court; regularly in court.* One that stands at the bar, and no man objects any thing against him. Cowell. One who has cleared himself of a charge, as by reversing an outlawry in an action, and is thereby restored to his former position.* Id.

Rectus, in this still common phrase, has not only the sense of proper, lawful or regular, but also the radical meaning of upright, expressive of the posture of one who "stands at the bar," and in the confidence of innocence, boldly confronts an adversary. The figurative term "stand" is used in a variety of applications, both in ancient and modern law. See Stand, Stare, Persona standi in judicio.

RECUPERARE. Lat. To recover; to regain; to get again what one has lost, (quod amissum in nostram potestatem redigere.) Calv. Lex.

RECUPERATIO. Lat. [from recuperare, q. v.] In old English law. Recovery; restitution by the sentence of a judge, of a thing that has been wrongfully taken or detained. Co. Litt. 154 a. According to Lord Coke, "it is all one with evictio, in the civil law." Id. ibid.

RECUPERATORES. Lat. [from recuperare, to recover.] In the Roman law. Persons appointed by the prætor, in private actions, to examine the facts, or try the cause. They seem to have been peculiar to actions in which the recovery of some certain thing was demanded by the actor or plaintiff, and are thus distinguished by Dr. Hallifax, from the judices, properly so called. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 8, num. 11.

RECUSANTS. [Lat. recusantes, from recusare, to refuse.] In English law. Persons who refused to attend the service of the Church of England. 4 Bl. Com. 56. Chiefly papists, and otherwise termed popish recusants. Id. ibid. Persons refusing to conform to the ceremonies of the Church of England, or take the oath appointed against papists. 1 Steph. Com. 103.

RECUSATIO JUDICIS. Lat. In the civil and canon law. Refusal or rejection of a judex or judge; disapprobation of, or objection to a person proposed or assigned as a judge. Cod. 3. 1. 16. Decretal. lib. 2, tit. 28, c. 26. Supposed to correspond to the challenge of a juror, in the practice of the common law. 3 Bl. Com. 361.

In Bracton's time, a judge or justice might be objected to, and refused for sufficient cause, as if he were of kin to the demandant, or his dependent, (homo vel subditus,) relative or friend, or the enemy of the tenant, (defendant) or if he had been the party's counsellor, or counter, (narrator) in that or another cause. Bract. fol. 412. But the law has long been otherwise. Co. Litt. 294 a. 3 Bl. Com. ub. sup.

RECUSATIO TESTIS. Lat. In the civil law. Rejection of a witness, on the ground of incompetency. Best on Evid. Introd. 60, § 60.

RED BOOK OF THE EXCHEQUER. [L. Lat. Liber Ruber Scaccarii.] In English law. An ancient manuscript volume kept in the exchequer, containing several miscellaneous treatises; an account of the number of hides of land in several counties before the Conquest; a collection of the escuages under Henry II. Richard I. and John; a description of the ceremonies used at the coronation of Queen Eleanor, wife to Henry III. and other matters. Cowell. It is supposed by Mr. Madox to have been compiled by Alexander de Swereford, Archdeacon of Shrewsbury, and an officer in the exchequer in the latter end of Henry II. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 220, note. But the compiler is otherwise described as Archdeacon of Salop, and treasurer of St. Paul's, who died A. D. 1246, in the 31st year of Henry III. Cowell. See 2 Show. 299.

REDDENDO. L. Lat. [from reddere, to render.] In old conveyancing. Rendering. The formal word by which a rent was reserved to a grantor. Reddendo inde per annum, tantum, ad certos terminos tales; rendering therefor so much per year, at such certain times. Bract. fol. 35. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 7. See Co. Litt. 47 a. Bell's Dict. This was a more grammatically correct expression than reddendum, which was afterwards used, as it agreed with "tali," the grantee, to whom it referred.

REDDENDO SINGULA SINGULIS. Lat. Rendering or assigning separate things to separate persons, or separate words to separate subjects; making distribution; construing distributively. 5 Co. 7 b, Justice Windham's case. An expression used to denote the separation and distribution of the words of an instrument among several subjects, so as to give effect to the intention of the parties. 1 Spence's Chancery, 540. Lord Ellenborough, 11 East, 451.

REDDENDUM. L. Lat. [from reddere, q. v.] In conveyancing. Rendering; yielding. The technical name of that clause in a conveyance by which the grantor creates or reserves some new thing to himself, out of what he had before granted, as "rendering therefor yearly, the sum of ten shillings, or a pepper corn," &c. 2 Bl. Com. 299. 1 Steph. Com. 450, 451. Perkins, ch. 10, ss. 625, 630, 631. That clause in a lease in which a rent is reserved to the lessor, and which commences with the word "yielding," or "rendering."

REDDENS CAUSAM SCIENTIÆ. L. Lat. (Giving the reason of his knowledge.) In Scotch practice. A formal phrase used in depositions, preceding the statement of the reason of the witness' knowledge. 2 How. Stat. Trials, 715.

REDDERE. Lat. In old English law. To render; to pay; to give or yield. Ad debitum reddendum; to pay the debt. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 8. Et si capitalis debitor deficerit in solutione debiti, non habens unde reddat, aut reddere nolit, cum possit; and if the principal debtor fail in payment of the debt, not having wherewith to pay, or shall refuse to pay when able. Id. ibid. See Reddendum, Redditus.

In the civil law. To give back, (retro dare;) to restore. Calv. Lex. Lord Coke, in giving the etymology of redditus, adopts this sense of the word. Reddere est quasi retro dare. 10 Co. 128 a, Clun's case. See Redditus. Reddere, however, had in the civil law the sense of giving also. Verbum reddendi quamquam significatum habet retro dandi, recipit tamen et per se dandi significationem. Dig. 50. 16. 94. And see Id. 89.

REDDIDIT SE. L. Lat. (He has rendered himself.) In old English practice. A term applied to a principal who had rendered himself in discharge of his bail. 7 Mod. 98. Holthouse.

REDDITARIUS. L. Lat. [from redditus, q. v.] In old records. A renter; a tenant. Cowell.

REDDITION. In old practice. A judicial confession and acknowledgment that the land or thing in demand belonged to the demandant, or, at least, not to the person so surrendering. Cowell.

REDDITUS. L. Lat. [from reddere, to render, yield or pay.] In old English law. A rent; a payment; a thing rendered, paid or yielded. Item potest quis esse tenens meus reddendo mihi redditum, et possum redditum illum dare alicui, et attornare tenentem meum ad reddendum redditum illum meo feoffato per manum suam; also a man may be my tenant by rendering (or paying) to me a rent, and I may give that rent to any one, and attorn my tenant to pay that rent to my feoffee with his own hand. Bract. fol. 160.

Reditus is another form of this word, which occurs in the Register. De reditu unius libræ zinziberis; of a rent of one pound of ginger. Reg. Orig. 2. This is the form adopted by Sir W. Blackstone, who makes the radical sense of the word to be, return, (from redire, to return.) 3 Bl. Com. 231. Id. 42. And Lord Coke, even while adopting the orthography redditus, and the etymology, reddere, gives to both the same sense of going back. Reddere est quasi retro dare, et redditus dicitur a reddendo, quia retro it, sc. to the lessor. 10 Co. 128 a, William Clun's case. But this is giving to reddere its civil law sense.

That redditus is the proper form of this word, seems apparent from the passage above quoted from Bracton, in which the derivation from reddere is very clearly pointed out by the mere collocation of the words.

REDDITUS SICCUS. L. Lat. In old English law. Rent seck; dry or barren rent. 2 Bl. Com. 42. Redditus cœcus et siccus. 6 Co. 58 a.

REDDOUR. L. Fr. A rendering. Kelham.

REDEMPTIO. L. Lat. In old English law. A ransom, or fine. Stat. Marlbr. c. 1. Spelman calls it the heaviest kind of fine, (mulcta gravissima,) and makes it to be the same with the Saxon were or weregild.

A ransom. A sum paid as a condition of liberation from confinement. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 42, § 2.

REDEUNDO. Lat. Returning; in returning; while returning. 3 East, 89. 2 Stra. 985.

REDEVANCE. Fr. In old French and Canadian law. Dues payable by a tenant to his lord, but not necessarily in money. Dunkin's Address, 19.

REDHIBERE. Lat. In the civil law. To have again; to have back; to cause a seller to have again what he had before, (facere ut rursus habeat venditor quod habuerit.) Dig. 21. 1. 21, pr.

REDHIBITIO. Lat. [from redhibere, q. v.] In the civil law. A returning, (redditio.) Dig. 21. 1. 21, pr. The returning of a thing purchased to the seller. Id. See Redhibition. Some copies, in place of redditio in this passage, have rehabitio, a re-having.

REDHIBITION. [Lat. redhibitio, from redhibere, to have back.] In the civil law. The returning of a thing purchased to the seller, on the ground of some defect or fraud;* the annulling or undoing of a sale, (venditionis resolutio.) Calv. Lex. The avoidance of a sale on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold, which renders it either absolutely useless, or its use so inconvenient and imperfect, that it must be supposed that the buyer would not have purchased it, had he known of the vice. Civil Law of Louis. art. 2496.

REDHIBITORY ACTION. In the civil law. An action by the buyer of a thing against the seller, to compel the latter to take it back and return the price. Pothier, Contr. of Sale, num. 203. Civ. Code of Louis. art. 2512.

REDHIBITORY DEFECT (or VICE.) In the civil law. A defect in an article sold, for which the seller may be compelled to take it back; a defect against which the seller is bound to warrant. Pothier, Contr. of Sale, num. 203.

REDIMERE. Lat. In old English law. To ransom; to punish by a fine; to compel to pay a fine or ransom. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 36. Cart. de Forest. c. 10.

RE-DISSEISIN. [L. Lat. re-disseisina.] In old English law. A second disseisin of a person of the same tenements, and by the same disseisor, by whom he was before disseised. 3 Bl. Com. 188. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 29. Called, in the statute of Marlbridge, (c. 8,) a repeated disseisin, (iterata disseisina.)

A writ which lay in such case, (breve de redisseisina.) Reg. Orig. 206 b.

REDITUS. Lat. [from redire, to return.] In the civil law. A return; the fruit, profit or income of a thing. Calv. Lex. It is observed that it might also be written redditus, and derived from reddere, to yield. Id. ibid. See Redditus.

In the common law. A rent; rents. Blackstone translates it a compensation or return, (which justifies the derivation from redire, to return,) but he translates it also a render, (which requires the derivation from reddere, to render.) 2 Bl. Com. 41. This form of the word is apparently taken from the civil law. See supra. For reasons why the form redditus is preferred, see Redditus.

Reditus albi. White rents, or blanch farms. 2 Bl. Com. 42. See Blanch ferme.

Reditus quieti. Quit rents. Id. ibid. See Quit rents.

Reditus siccus. Rent seck. Id. ibid. See Rent seck.

REDOBATORES. L. Lat. In old English law. Redubbers. Persons who changed stolen clothes into a new form, making out of a mantle a coat or overcoat, (de mantello tunicam vel supertunicam facientibus.) Stat. Walliæ, 12 Edw. I. Barr. Obs. Stat. 124.

REDUBBOURS. L. Fr. [L. Lat. redobatores, q. v.] In old English law. Persons who knowingly bought stolen clothes, and changed them into another form; (achatauntz ascient dras embles, et les attirent en auter forme.) Britt. c. 29. Cowell.

REDUCE. In Scotch law. To rescind or annul; to declare void judicially. See Reduction.

REDUCTION. In Scotch law. An action brought for the purpose of rescinding, annulling or cancelling some deed, bond, contract or other instrument in writing. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 4, p. 158, 159. See Bell's Dict.

RE-ENTRY. The resuming or retaking a possession that one has lately foregone. Cowell. Particularly applied to land. The entry by a lessor upon the premises leased, on failure of the tenant to pay the rent or perform the covenants in the lease; such re-entry being made pursuant to a proviso contained in the lease.

REEVE, Reve. [from Sax. gerefa, q. v.] In old English law. A ministerial officer appointed to execute process. Crabb's Hist. 25. The shire-reeve answered to the modern sheriff. Id. 1 Bl. Com. 116. An officer appointed to collect taxes or public dues. Spelman, voc. Grafio.

A chief officer or governor; a superintendent, (præfectus, præpositus.) A disposer or director. Co. Litt. 61 b. See Reve.

An officer of a court leet. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 502, § 647.

RE-EXCHANGE. [Fr. rechange; L. Lat. recambium.] In commercial law. The amount which the holder of a bill of exchange which has been protested for non-payment, is entitled to receive from the drawer or indorser, to indemnify him for its non-payment, together with his necessary expenses and interest.* The amount for which a bill of exchange drawn upon the drawer or indorser of an unpaid bill can be purchased by the holder, in the country where the acceptance is made, to indemnify him for its non-payment.* Story on Bills, § 400.

Properly, the current rate of exchange payable on a bill so re-drawn. See 3 Kent's Com. 115, 116. According to Heineccius, it includes all the damage or expenses to which the holder is entitled, (damnum illud omne repetitur sub nomine recambii.) Heinecc. de Camb. c. 4, § 45.

RE-EXTENT. In English practice. A second extent made upon lands or tenements, upon complaint made that the former extent was partially performed. Cowell.

REFECTIO. Lat. [from reficere, q. v.] In civil and old English law. Repair; reparation; restoration; as of a way, &c. Dig. 43. 19. 3. 16. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 1.

REFEREE. In practice. A person to whom a cause pending in a court is referred by the court, to take testimony, hear the parties and report thereon to the court, and upon whose report, if confirmed, judgment is entered.

REFERENCE. In practice. The act of a court in referring a cause or matter pending before it to one or more referees, to examine, take testimony and report to the court.

REFERENDARIUS. L. Lat. In civil and mediæval law. An officer through whom petitions to the emperor were presented, or to whom they were referred. Nov. 10, 113, 124. Cod. 1. 50. 2. Calv. Lex. Brissonius. Supposed to correspond with the officer called "master of requests."

REFERENDARY. [L. Lat. referendarius.] In Saxon law. A master of requests; an officer to whom petitions to the king were referred. Spelman, voc. Referendarius.

REFERENDO SINGULA SINGULIS. Lat. Referring individual or separate words to separate subjects; making a distributive reference of words in an instrument; construing distributively. Lord Ellenborough, 11 East, 322. 2 Powell on Devises, (by Jarman,) 112. See Reddendo singula singulis.

REFERRE. Lat. In old English law. To refer. Referantur ad justiciarios n'ros de banco, et ibi terminentur; they shall be referred to our justices of the bench, and shall there be determined. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 12.

REFFARE. L. Lat. [from Sax. rœfare, to spoil.] In old European law. To rob, or rifle; to plunder. L. Salic. tit. 29, § 6. Spelman. LL. Hen. I. c. 83. Cowell. See Reif.

REFICERE. Lat. In the civil law. To repair; to restore; to reduce a way or road to the original form or state, (ad pristinam formam reducere.) Dig. 43. 19. 3. 15. To restore a thing (as a trench or water-course) to its former state, (in pristinum statum restaurare.) Id. 43. 21. 6. Bracton adopts the word and its definition, (in pristinum statum reformare.) Bract. fol. 233. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 11.

REFOIL, Refoule. L. Fr. [L. Lat. refullum.] A flowing out, or back. Refoil de la mere; ebbing of the sea. Kelham.

REFORM. Literally, to form again; to correct or amend; to treat as corrected or amended. In equity jurisprudence,—to treat an instrument in which an error of fact has been committed, as though such error did not exist; to construe it according to the original intent of the parties.* Equity will reform a contract where there is a mistake of facts. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. §§ 152, 166.

REFULLUM. L. Lat. In old English law. A flowing back. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 4.

REFUTANTIA. L. Lat. In old records. An acquittance or acknowledgment of renouncing all future claim. Cowell.

REG. GEN. An abbreviation of Regula Generalis. 6 East, 1.

REGALE. L. Lat. In old French law. A payment made to the seigneur of a fief, on the election of every bishop or other ecclesiastical feudatory, corresponding with the relief paid by a lay feudatory. Steph. Lect. 235.

REGALIA. Lat. [regalis, royal, from rex, king.] In English law. Royal rights or prerogatives. 1 Bl. Com. 241. The word is used in feudal law. Feud. Lib. 2, tit. 56.

REGARD. L. Fr. Reference; relation. Kelham.

Respect. Id.

Reward; fee; a perquisite or allowance. Id.

REGARD. [L. Lat. regardum, rewardum, from L. Fr. regarder, to look to, or look at.] In forest law. Inspection or supervision of a forest. Manwood. Cowell. See Regardum.

REGARDANT. L. Fr. and Eng. In old English law. A term applied to a villein who was annexed to the land. 2 Bl. Com. 93. So called because he had the charge to do all base or villeinous services within the manor. Co. Litt. 120 a, b.

REGARDATOR. L. Lat. In old forest law. A regarder, (q. v.) Regardatores nostri eant per forestas ad faciendum regardum; our regarders shall go through the forests to make regard. Cart. de For. 9 Hen. III. c. 5.

REGARDER. [L. Lat. regardator, from L. Fr. regardeur, an inspector.] In forest law. An officer of the forest, appointed to supervise all other officers. Crompt. Jurisd. 153. Manwood. Cowell.

REGARDUM. L. Lat. In old forest law. Regard; inspection of a forest. Cart. de For. 9 Hen. III. c. 5. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, §§ 1, 5.

REGIA VIA. Lat. [L. Fr. real chymin.] In old English law. The royal way; the king's highway. Co. Litt. 56 a.

REGIAM MAJESTATEM. Lat. The most ancient treatise extant on the law of Scotland, commonly supposed to have been compiled by order of David I. but shown by Lord Kames not to be older than the reign of David II. Home's Brit. Ant. Essay 1. It consists of four books, and derives its title from the two words with which it commences, like the Regiam potestatem of Glanville, and from this and numerous other points of resemblance, it is now generally admitted, even by Scotch writers, to have been copied from Glanville's treatise. Dr. Robertson observes that "it seems to be an imitation, and a servile one, of Glanville." 1 Robertson's Charles V. Appendix, Note xxv. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 225, 226. Crabb's Hist. 70, 71. 1 Steph. Com. 83, note (l.) Sir Matthew Hale, in his History of the Common Law, (c. x.) goes into a comparison of the two works. The Regiam Majestatem is still quoted in the Scotch courts. See 3 Bell's Appeal Cases, 131, 132. 2 Swinton's R. 409. Skene's Glossary De Verborum Significatione is principally intended as an interpreter of this work.

REGIDOR. Span. In Spanish-American law. A member of a municipal or town council, (ayuntamiento.) 12 Peters' R. 442, note. The body of regidores constituted what was called the regimiento. Id. ibid.

REGIMIENTO. Span. In Spanish American law. The body of regidores, composing a part of the ayuntamiento, or municipal council of a town. 12 Peters' R. 442, note.

REGISTER. An officer authorized to keep a public record, or charged with the custody of records. In the city of New-York, the register of deeds is an officer whose duty it is to receive and record deeds, mortgages, and other instruments, and to preserve such records. In Pennsylvania, a register is an officer charged with probate of wills. Purdon's Dig. 187, et seq.

REGISTER. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Lat. registrum; from O. Fr. gister, to lay, or put in a place.] A repository; a place where a thing is laid up, (locus quo quid reponitur.) Spelman.

A book in which things are entered or registered for their preservation.* Cowell.

REGISTER, or REGISTER OF WRITS. [L. Lat. Registrum Brevium.] A celebrated collection, in Latin, of writs, original and judicial, generally called, by way of eminence, "The Register," and one of the most ancient books of the common law. Co. Litt. 73 b, 159 a. Lord Coke, indeed, has pronounced it to be the oldest book in the law, and considers it as a component part of what he calls "the very body, and, as it were, the very text of the common law of England." 4 Inst. 140. 8 Co. pref. Sir William Blackstone speaks of it as

"that most ancient and highly venerable collection of legal forms, the registrum omnium brevium, or register of such writs as are suable out of the king's courts." 3 Bl. Com. 183. It is otherwise called Registrum Cancellariæ, (The Register of Chancery,) and is supposed to have been compiled by Ranulph de Hengham, chief justice of the King's Bench in the reign of Edward I. Crabb's Hist. 199. It contains upwards of a thousand writs, adapted to every variety of case or injury, generally expressed with great brevity of language, and so perfect in construction as to receive from Blackstone the eulogy that "every man who is injured will be sure to find a method of relief exactly adapted to his own case, described in the compass of a few lines, and yet without the omission of any material circumstance." 3 Bl. Com. ub. sup. In confirmation of this remark, it may be observed that the writs of trespass (de transgressione) alone comprise upwards of two hundred and fifty forms. It has, however, been said by Lord Holt, that "half the writs used in Westminster Hall are not in the Register." 12 Mod. 645. And Lord Ellenborough observed, that "there are a multitude of writs in daily use and of unqualified legal validity and effect, which are not inserted in that collection." 9 East, 473.

The authority of the Register has always been of the very highest kind, and under the old system of remedy by writ, it was constantly referred to and regarded as the standard of form, absolutely decisive where any question of form was raised. Plowd. 125, 228. See 1 Leon, 169. It is called in Plowden, "our Calapine, that is, the Register," probably with reference to the author (Calepine) of a standard dictionary of the time. Id. 125. It is now rarely referred to, but is still valuable as a principal foundation of the remedial law of England and the United States. The purity of its Latin is particularly commended by Lord Bacon. Bac. Read. Uses.

REGISTER. In commercial law. A name frequently given to the certificate of registry of a vessel. 3 Kent's Com. 146, and note. Id. 150. Jacobsen's Sea Laws, 55. Properly, however, the register is the original entry made at the custom house, stating the time and place where the vessel was built, and the other particulars required by law, and of which the certificate of registry is an abstract. Act of Congress, 31st Dec. 1792, sect. 3, 4, 9. 3 Kent's Com. 142, 143.

REGISTRAR. An officer whose business is to write and keep a register.

In English law. An officer whose business is to keep a register of births, marriages and deaths, under the civil system of registration lately established. 3 Steph. Com. 349, 350.

REGISTRY. In commercial law. The registration of a vessel at the custom house, for the purpose of entitling her to the full privileges of a British or American built vessel. 3 Kent's Com. 139. Abbott on Shipping, 58—96.

In conveyancing. The entering on record of deeds, mortgages and other conveyances and instruments, in public offices appointed for the purpose, in order to give them validity as against bona fide purchasers and mortgagees. 4 Kent's Com. 456—459. This practice may be traced as far back as the time of Fleta. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 13.

REGLAMENTO. Span. In Spanish colonial law. A written instruction given by a competent authority, without the observance of any peculiar form. Schmidt's Civ. Law, Introd. 93, note.

REGRATER, Regrator. [L. Lat. regratarius, from Fr. regrateur, a retailer or huckster.] In old English and Scotch law. A person who bought up corn [grain] or other dead victual [provisions] in any market, and sold it again in the same market, or within four miles of the place. 4 Bl. Com. 158. 4 Steph. Com. 291, note (m.) 2 Show. 52. Skene de Verb. Sign.

The more ancient sense of the word, according to Spelman, was that of retailer, (propola.)

REGRATING. In old English law. The offence of buying grain or provisions in any market, and selling it again in the same market, or within four miles of the place.* 4 Bl. Com. 158. See Bell's Dict.

REGRESS. [Lat. regressus, from regredi, to go back.] A going back. Dyer, 31 b. Ingress, egress and regress, comprise the rights of going or entering upon land, going off it, and going back upon it.

REGRESSUS. Lat. [from regredi, to go back.] A going back; recourse; a going back to a party for the purpose of obtaining indemnity. Sine regressu habendo versus suum feoffatorem; without having recourse against his feoffor. Bract. fol. 179 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 17.

REGULA. Lat. In the civil law. A rule. Regula est quæ rem quæ est, breviter enarrat; that is a rule which briefly sets forth the subject matter of it. Dig. 50. 17. 1. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 2. The seventeenth and last title of the fiftieth book of the Digests is entitled De Diversis Regulis Juris Antiqui, (Of divers rules of the ancient law.)

REGULA. Lat. In practice. A rule; a rule of court.

Regula generalis; a general rule. A standing rule or order of a court. Frequently abbreviated, Reg. Gen.

REGULA CATONIANA. Lat. In the Roman law. The rule of Cato. A rule respecting the validity of dispositions by will. See Dig. 34. 7.

REGULAR CLERGY. In old English law. Monks who lived secundum regulas (according to the rules) of their respective houses or societies were so denominated, in contradistinction to the parochial clergy who performed their ministry in the world, in seculo, and who from thence were called secular clergy. 1 Chitt. Bl. Com. 387, note.

REGULARITER. L. Lat. In old English law. Regularly; strictly; according to rule; as a general rule. Bract. fol. 87 b. Regulariter non valet pactum de re mea non alienanda; regularly an agreement not to alien my property is not valid. Co. Litt. 223.

REGULUS. Lat. In Saxon law. A title sometimes given to the earl or comes, in old charters. Spelman.

REHABERE FACIAS SEISINAM. L. Lat. (You cause to re-have seisin.) In old practice. A writ which lay where a sheriff had delivered seisin of a greater part than he ought, commanding him to re-deliver seisin of the excess.* Reg. Jud. 12, 51, 54.

REHABILITATE. [L. Lat. rehabilitare, from re, again, and habilitare, to enable, from habilis, able.] In Scotch and French criminal law. To restore to a former capacity or ability.* To re-instate a criminal in his personal rights which he has lost by a judicial sentence. Brande. In Scotland, a pardon from the king is said to re-habilitate a witness laboring under infamia juris. Id.

REHABILITATION. [L. Lat. rehabilitatio, from rehabilitare, to re-enable.] In French and Scotch criminal law. The reinstatement of a criminal in his personal rights which he has lost by a judicial sentence. Brande.

In old English law. A papal bull or brief for re-enabling a spiritual person to exercise his function, who was formerly disabled; or a restoring to a former ability. Cowell.

RE-HEARING. In equity practice. A second hearing of a cause, for which a party who is dissatisfied with the decree entered on the former hearing may apply by petition. 3 Bl. Com. 453. 4 Steph. Com. 31. 3 Daniell's Chanc. Pr. 1602.

REHERCER. L. Fr. To rehearse; to state or recite. Britt. c. 52.

REI. Lat. [plur. of reus, q. v.] In the civil law. In a special sense. Persons from whom a thing is demanded, (ii unde petitur.) Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 17, § 841. Defendants. See Reus, Favorabiliores rei, &c.

In a general sense. Parties to an action; litigating parties, (ii quorum de re disceptatur) including both the actor and the reus proper. Id. ibid.

Parties to a contract. Id. ibid.

REI. Lat. [gen. of res, q. v.] Of a thing. See Res.

Rei turpis nullum mandatum est. The mandate of an immoral thing is void. Dig. 17. 1. 6. 3. A contract of mandate requiring an illegal or immoral act to be done, has no legal obligation. Story on Bailm. § 158.

REI INTERVENTUS. Lat. In Scotch law. A part performance of a contract. 2 Bell's Appeal Cases, 115.

REIF. Sc. [from Sax. reaf.] In old Scotch law. Robbery. Skene ad Leg. Alexandri R. c. 2, par. 2. Cowell.

RE-INSURANCE. See Re-assurance.

REISA. L. Lat. [from Sax. ræse, a rush.] In old European law. A sudden military expedition; a sally, (procursus militaris.) Spelman.

REJOIN. [L. Lat. rejungere.] In pleading. To answer a plaintiff's replication in an action at law, by some matter of fact. See Rejoinder.

REJOINING GRATIS. In English practice. Rejoining voluntarily, or without being required to do so by a rule to rejoin. 10 Mees. & W. 12.

REJOINDER. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Lat. rejunctio.] In pleading. A defendant's answer of fact to a plaintiff's replication. Steph. Pl. 58, 59. Co. Litt. 303 b. 3 Bl. Com. 310. Corresponding to the du- plicatio of the civil law, and the triplicatio of Bracton. Inst. 4. 14. 1. Bract. fol. 400 b.

The term rejunctio, of which rejoinder is a mere translation, seems to have been invented by the modern civilians. Spiegelius, who is cited by Cowell, defines it to be "an allegation which is allowed a defendant, to invalidate the plaintiff's replication, and strengthen his own exception (or plea.") Rejoinders were formerly common in chancery pleading, but have long been disused. West's Symboleog. part 2, tit. Chancery, sect. 113, p. 232 b.

RELATIO. Lat. [from referre, to carry back.] In old English law. Relation; reference; a carrying back. See Relation. Relatio est fictio juris, et intenta ad unum. Relation is a fiction of law, and intended for, or directed to one thing. 3 Co. 28 b, Butler and Baker's case. That is, it will not be applied to a collateral matter. Id. ibid.

Relatio semper fiat ut valeat dispositio. Reference [of a disposition made by will] should always be made, so that the disposition may have effect. 6 Co. 76 b, Sir George Curson's case.

RELATION. [L. Lat. relatio, from referre, to carry back.] The carrying back of an act or proceeding to some past or previous time or date, and giving it operation or validity from such time.* Thus letters of administration in certain cases take effect by relation, from the death of the intestate. 1 Williams on Exec. 528. So, a deed delivered as an escrow, and subsequently delivered as a deed, will sometimes be allowed to relate back to the first delivery, so as to give it effect from that time. 4 Kent's Com. 454. So, at common law, a judgment had effect by relation, from the first day of the term of which it was entered. 3 Bl. Com. 420. 1 Arch. Pr. 227. So, in England, the transfer of a bankrupt's property to the assignees, operates, by a retrospective relation, from the period when the trader became bankrupt. 2 Steph. Com. 206, 207.

Relation, as Lord Coke observes, is a fiction of law; the act or proceeding related being supposed to have taken place at the previous time or date. "The doctrine of relation back to a former period is a fiction which is often indulged in advancement of justice, to sustain legal proceedings; but it is never resorted to when the result would be to deprive a party of a clear legal right, or when it would work manifest injustice." Chilton, J. 21 Alabama R. 169, 175.

"RELATIONS," in a will, means persons entitled according to the statute of distributions. 4 Kent's Com. 537, note. It has long been settled, that a bequest to relations applies to the person or persons who would, by virtue of those statutes, take the personal estate under an intestacy, either as next of kin, or by representation of next of kin. 2 Jarman on Wills, 45, (33, Perkins' ed. 1849.)

RELATIVE FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact having relation to another fact; a minor fact; a circumstance. Burr. Circ. Evid. 121, note (d.)

RELATIVE RIGHTS. Those rights of persons which are incident to them as members of society, and standing in various relations to each other. 1 Bl. Com. 123.—Those rights of persons in private life which arise from the civil and domestic relations. 2 Kent's Com. 1.

RELATOR. In practice. An informer; a person in whose behalf certain writs are issued, such as attachments for contempt, writs of mandamus and informations in the nature of a quo warranto, &c. 3 Bl. Com. 264. See Id. 427. These are said to be prosecuted on the relation (ex relatione) of the person at whose instance they are issued. See Ex relatione.

RELATRIX. L. Lat. and Eng. In practice. A female relator, or petitioner. 14 Peters' R. 500, 517.

RELAXARE. L. Lat. In old conveyancing. To release. Relaxavi, relaxasse; have released. Litt. sect. 445. In Lampet's case, (10 Co. 52 b) reference was made to a case in 4 Edw. VI. where it was said that laxare is properly to set prisoners in fetters at liberty, and relaxare is to do it quickly; and metaphoricè, relaxare is to set at liberty fettered estates and interests, and to make them free and absolute.

RELAXATIO. L. Lat. [from relaxare, q. v.] In old conveyancing. A release; an instrument by which a person relinquishes to another his right in any thing. Yearb. P. 18 Hen. VI. 9. Spelman. A deed of release. See Release.

RELAXATION. In old Scotch practice. Letters passing the signet (q. v.) by which a debtor was relaxed [released] from the horn, that is, from personal diligence. Bell's Dict. See Horning.

RELEASE. [L. Fr. reles, relesse, release, relais; L. Lat. relaxatio.] In conveyancing. A relinquishment or renunciation of some right or claim by one person, in favor of another.*—The giving or discharging of the right or action which a man hath, or may have or claim against another man, or that which is his. Shep. Touch. 320.

In a stricter sense—the conveyance of a man's interest or right which he hath unto a thing, to another that hath the possession thereof, or some estate therein. Id. ibid.—A discharge or a conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to another that hath some former estate in possession. 2 Bl. Com. 324.—The relinquishment of a right or interest in lands or tenements, to another who has an estate in possession in the same lands or tenements. Watkins on Conv. 213.—A conveyance of an ulterior interest in lands or tenements to a particular tenant, or of an undivided share to a co-tenant, (the relessee being in either case in privity of estate with the relessor,) or of the right, to a person wrongfully in possession. 1 Steph. Com. 479. The various kinds of release recognised in England are enumerated infra.

In the United States, the technical principles relating to a release seem to be wholly, or in great measure, inapplicable. The conveyance corresponding with a release at common law is with us a quit-claim deed, (q. v.) 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 302, [316.]

RELEASE BY WAY OF ENLARGING AN ESTATE, (or enlarger l'estate.) A conveyance of the ulterior interest in lands to the particular tenant. As if there be tenant for life or years, remainder to another in fee, and he in remainder releases all his right to the particular tenant and his heirs, this gives him the estate in fee. 1 Steph. Com. 480. 2 Bl. Com. 324.

RELEASE BY WAY OF PASSING AN ESTATE, (or mitter l'estate.) As where one of two co-parceners releases all her right to the other, this passes the fee simple of the whole. 2 Bl. Com. 324, 325.

RELEASE BY WAY OF PASSING A RIGHT, (or mittèr le droit.) As if a man be disseised and releaseth to his disseisor all his right, hereby the disseisor acquires a new right, which changes the quality of his estate, and renders that lawful which before was tortious or wrongful. 2 Bl. Com. 325.

RELEASE BY WAY OF EXTINGUISHMENT. As if my tenant for life makes a lease to A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs, and I release to A. this extinguishes my right to the reversion, and shall enure to the advantage of B.'s remainder, as well as of A.'s particular estate. 2 Bl. Com. 325.

RELEASE BY WAY OF ENTRY AND FEOFFMENT. As if there be two joint disseisors, and the disseisee releases to one of them, he shall be sole seised, and shall keep out his former companion; which is the same in effect as if the disseisee had entered and thereby put an end to the disseisin, and afterwards had enfeoffed one of the disseisors in fee. 2 Bl. Com. 325.

RELEASE. An instrument whereby a party, having a right of action as creditor or otherwise, formally remits the same, and thus estops himself from again setting up his claim. Pulling on Merc. Accounts, 18. Having this operation, a release should always be in the form of a deed under seal, and contain a plain and distinct remission of the claim to which it relates. Id. ibid.

A release under seal, although reciting only a nominal consideration, extinguishes the debt to which it relates. 5 Duer's (N. Y.) R. 294. There is a wide distinction between a release and a receipt. The first, by its own operation, extinguishes a pre-existing right, and therefore cannot be contradicted or explained by parol; the second has never the effect of destroying a subsisting right, but is merely evidence of a fact—the fact of payment, and, therefore, like all other facts given in evidence, may be refuted or explained. Oakley, C. J. Id. ibid. citing 16 Wendell's R. 474. See All, Demand.

RELEFE, Relef. L. Fr. [from relever, q. v.] Relief; an incident of feudal tenure. Britt. c. 69.

RELEGATIO. Lat. [from relegare, to send away, to banish.] In the civil law. Banishment without the loss of civil rights. Calv. Lex. Inst. 1. 12. 2. Dig. 48. 22. It was, by this circumstance, chiefly distinguished from deportatio, (q. v.) Some have supposed a further distinction to be, that deportatio was for life, and relegatio for years. But this was not always the case. Calv. Lex.

RELEGATION. [from Lat. relegatio, q. v.] In old English law. Banishment for a time only. Co. Litt. 133.

RELEVAMEN. L. Lat. [from relevare, to lift up.] In old English law. Relief; one of the incidents of the feudal tenure. Lib. Rames. sect. 310. Spelman. In Domesday, it is called relevamentum; in the laws of Edward the Confessor, relevatio; in Magna Charta, and generally in old English and Scotch law, relevium. Domesd. titt. Berocscire, Walingford. LL. Edw. Conf. c. 35. See Relevium.

RELEVANCY. In practice. The quality of being relevant or applicable. A term applied to evidence.

RELEVANT. In the law of evidence. Having relation; applicable. Relevant evidence is evidence applicable to the issue.

RELEVER. L. Fr. To relieve; to pay a relief, (relefe.) Britt. c. 69.

RELEVIUM. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. relever, to raise or lift again.] In old English and Scotch law. Relief; one of the incidents of the feudal tenure. Glanv. lib. 9, c. 4. Bract. fol. 84. Magna Charta, c. 3. Spelman, voc. Relevamen. LL. Malcolm. II. c. 1. Hæreditas quæ jacens fuerit per eorum decessum relevetur in manus hær', et propter talem relevationem facienda erit ab hær' quædam præstatio quæ dicitur relevium; the inheritance which was fallen in by their decease, shall be taken up into the hands of the heir, and for such taking up, a payment shall be made by the heir, which is called a relief. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 17, § 1.

RELICTA. Lat. (Being relinquished.) In practice. The confession of the plaintiff's action by a defendant, after plea pleaded. A species of cognovit, (q. v.) so called from the emphatic words of the old Latin form, the defendant relinquishing or withdrawing his plea, (relicta verificatione.) 1 Tidd's Pr. 559.

RELICTION. [Lat. relictio, from relinquere, to leave.] A leaving; a leaving dry. Recess of the sea, by which land formerly covered with water is left dry. Hale de Jur. Maris, pars 1, c. 4. Schultes on Aquatic Rights, 121, 127. Angell on Water-Courses, § 57. Angell on Tide-Waters, 264.

RELIEF. [from L. Fr. relefe, relef, from relever, to lift or raise again; L. Lat. relevium, relevatio, relevamen, relevamentum, introitus.] In old English and Scotch law. A sum of money paid by the heir of a deceased tenant, by way of fine or composition with the lord for taking up (or, in the ancient sense of the word, relieving, propter relevationem) the estate, which was lapsed or fallen in, (quæ jacens fuit,) by the death of the last tenant.* 2 Bl. Com. 65. Bract. fol. 84. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 17. Co. Litt. 76 a. Wright on Ten. 97. A principal and very oppressive incident of the feudal tenure. The idea of a fallen estate is clearly derived from the hæreditas jacens of the civil law; and a payment in the nature of a relief seems to have been known to that law, under the name of introitus. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 17, § 1. Calv. Lex.

Britton uses the verb relever. Volons nous mye que ascun tenaunt soit tenu à relever sa terre plus de une foits en sa vie; we will not that any tenant be bound to relieve his land more than once in his life. Britt. c. 69. But the corresponding English word relieve seems never to have been adopted.

RELIGIOUS MEN. [Lat. religiosi.] In old English law. Such as entered into a monastery or convent, there to live devoutly. Cowell. Clauses were frequently inserted in ancient deeds of sale of land, restraining the vendee from giving or alienating it to religious persons or Jews, to the end that the land might not fall into mortmain. Id.

RELIQUA. Lat. In the civil law. The balance or arrears of an account. Spelman. Money left unpaid.

RELIQUARE. L. Lat. [from reliqua, q. v.] In old exchequer practice. To owe a balance of account. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Scaccarium.

RELIQUI. Lat. In the civil law. The rest. Held to signify "all," (universos, omnes.) Dig. 50. 16. 95, 160.

RELIVERER. L. Fr. To re-deliver. Kelham.

RELOCATIO. Lat. [from re, again, and locatio, a letting.] In the civil law. A re-letting. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 25, § 926.

Relocatio tacita; a tacit or implied re-letting, as in case of holding over after expiration of the term. Id. Closely translated in Scotch law, tacit relocation. Bell's Dict.

REM domino vel non domino vendente duobus,
In jure est potior venditione prior.

Where one, whether owner or not owner, sells a thing to two persons, the party who is first sold to, has the better right. A Latin couplet quoted in Fleta. Lib. 3, c. 15, § 8.

REMAINDER. [L. Lat. remanentia, remanere.] A residue of an estate in land, depending upon a particular estate, and created together with it. Co. Litt. 49 a. Id. 143 a.—An estate limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined. As if a man seised in fee simple grant lands to A. for twenty years, and after the determination of the said term, then to B. and his heirs forever; here A. is tenant for years, remainder to B. in fee. 2 Bl. Com. 163, 164.—A remnant of an estate in land, depending upon a particular prior estate, created at the same time, and by the same instrument, and limited to arise immediately on the determination of that estate, and not in abridgment of it. 4 Kent's Com. 197.—An estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, on the determination by lapse of time or otherwise, of a precedent estate, created at the same time. 1 N. Y. Rev. St. [723,] 718, §§ 10, 11. See Estate in remainder.

REMAINDER-MAN. One who is entitled to a remainder.

REMALLARE. L. Lat. [from re, again, and mallare, to summon.] In old European law. To summon to court a second time; to re-summon. Formul. Solen. 124. Spelman.

REMAND. [L. Lat. remandare; L. Fr. remaunder.] To send back; to recommit. Where a party brought up on habeas corpus is sent back without obtaining the benefit of the writ, he is said to be remanded. 2 Kent's Com. 30.

A perpetuity, or perpetual estate, (pro perpetuo.) Glanv. lib. 7, c. 1. Bract. fol. 244. Reg. Maj. lib. 2, c. 23.

REMANERE. Lat. In old English practice. To remain; to stop or stay; to demur, in the old sense of the word. Primo queratur à tenente si aliquid velit vel sciat dicere quare assisa debeat remanere; it first should be inquired of the tenant if he will or know to say any thing why the assise should stay; [that is, why it should not proceed.] Bract. fol. 184 b. Non propter minorem ætatem petentium remanebit assisa; the assise shall not stay on account of the non-age of the demandants. Id. fol. 276. Hence the term remanet, in modern practice.

REMANERE. L. Lat. In old English law. A remainder. Co. Litt. 49 a. 2 Co. 51 a, Cholmley's case.

REMANET. L. Lat. (It remains.) In English practice. The postponement of a trial. When a cause is postponed, it is said to be made a remanet. 2 Tidd's Pr. 758.

REMAUNDER. L. Fr. To send back; to remand. Kelham.

REMEDIAL STATUTE. A statute providing a remedy for an injury, as distinguished from a penal statute. A statute giving a party a mode of remedy for a wrong, where he had none, or a different one, before. 1 Chitt. Bl. Com. 86, 87, notes.

Remedial statutes are those which are made to supply such defects, and abridge such superfluities, in the common law, as arise either from the general imperfection of all human laws, from change of time and circumstances, from the mistakes and unadvised determinations of unlearned (or even learned) judges, or from any other cause whatsoever. 1 Bl. Com. 86.

REMEMBRANCERS. In English law. Officers of the exchequer, whose principal duty is to put the judges of that court in remembrance of such things as are to be called on, and dealt in for the king's benefit. Cowell. Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 99.

REMENAUNT. L. Fr. Remaining; to come after; remainder. A remenaunt; for ever after. Kelham.

REMISE. To remit or give up. A formal word in deeds of release and quitclaim. Litt. sect. 445. Co. Litt. 264 b.

"REMISE, RELEASE AND QUITCLAIM," in a deed to one not in possession, when an intent to convey the estate of the grantors is recited, and a pecuniary consideration appears, are effectual as words of bargain and sale. 2 Selden's R. 422.

REMISE, Remys. L. Fr. Remised; released. Kelham.

REMISI, REMISISSE. L. Lat. In old conveyancing. Formal words in deeds of release. Remisisse, relaxasse et quietam clamasse; have remised, released and quitclaimed. Litt. sect. 445.

REMIT. [Lat. remittere, q. v.] Literally, to send back. To send or transmit; as to remit money.

To give up; to relinquish; as to remit a fine.

REMITTER. [from Lat. remittere, to send back.] The sending back of a person to a title he had before.* Remitter is where he who has the true property, or jus proprietatis in lands, but is out of possession thereof, and has no right to enter without recovering possession in an action, has afterwards the freehold cast upon him by some subsequent, and of course defective title; in this case he is remitted, or sent back by operation of law, to his ancient and more certain title. The right of entry which he has gained by a bad title, shall be ipso facto annexed to his own inherent good one; and his defeasible estate shall be utterly defeated and annulled by the instantaneous act of law, without his participation or consent. 3 Bl. Com. 19. See 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 152, [156.]

Littleton calls remitter "an ancient term in the law," and defines it to be "where a man hath two titles to lands or tenements, viz: one, a more ancient title, and another, a more latter title, (title pluis darrein;) and if he come to the land by a latter title, yet the law will adjudge him in by force of the elder title, because the elder title is the more sure and more worthy title." Litt. sect. 659.

REMITTERE. Lat. [from re, again, and mittere, to send.] In old English practice. To send back; to give up or relinquish; to remise or release. Postea jus suum remisit, et quietum clamavit; afterwards remised and quit-claimed his right. Bract. fol. 313 b. See Remise, Remisi.

To remand on habeas corpus. 3 How. St. Trials, 161.

REMITTITUR. Lat. (Is sent back, or remitted.) In practice. A sending back (of a record.) See infra.

A relinquishment (of damages.) See Remittitur damna.

REMITTITUR DAMNA. Lat. In practice. An entry made on record, in cases where a jury has given greater damages than a plaintiff has declared for, remitting the excess. 2 Tidd's Pr. 896.

REMITTITUR OF RECORD. In practice. The sending back of a record or transcript from a superior to an inferior court, for the purpose of issuing execution. 2 Tidd's Pr. 1185. 2 Burr. Pr. 150.

Remoto impedimento, emergit actio. The impediment being removed, the action rises. When a bar to an action is removed, the action rises up into its original efficacy. Shep. Touch. (by Preston,) 150.

REMOTUM. Lat. Removed; remote. Id quod est magis remotum non trahit ad se quod est magis junctum, sed e contrario in omni casu. That which is more remote does not draw to itself that which is more near, but the reverse, in every case. Co. Litt. 164 a.

REMOUNTER. L. Fr. To go up again. Et cel droit descent ascune foitz, ausi come chose pesaunte, et ascune foits remounte; and this right descends sometimes, like a thing falling, and sometimes goes up again. Britt. c. 118.

REMOVE. "One removes when he changes his domicil. The word does not mean simply going out of or leaving a country." Pearson, J. 3 Jones' Law R. 93.

REMUE. L. Fr. [from Lat. remotum.] Removed. Si le brefe soit remue. Britt. c. 46.

Remote, or distant. *Le procheyn forclost l'*remue, *et l'*remue, l'plus remue; the nearer forecloses the remote, and the remote the more remote. Id. c. 119. Ascuns remues, et ascuns plus remues. Id. c. 118.

REN, Rein, Rens. L. Fr. Any thing; nothing. Kelham.

RENABLE. L. Fr. Reasonable. De renable partie; of reasonable part. Britt. c. 73. Renables estovers. Yearb. M. 8 Edw. III. 2.

RENDER, Rendre. L. Fr. To give or yield; to pay or perform; to return. Used also as a substantive, as in the phrase "to lie in render;" to consist in being rendered, paid or yielded. See To lie in.

To RENDER. [L. Lat. reddere.] In practice. To give up; to surrender. 1 Arch. Pr. 311.

RENEEZ. In old records. A renegado; an apostate from Christianity to Mahometanism. Hoveden in Ric. I. sub. an. 1192. Spelman.

RENOUNCE. [from Lat. renunciare.] To give up a right.

To refuse to assume a duty. See Renouncing probate.

To disclaim or cast off an obligation, as to renounce one's allegiance.

RENOUNCING PROBATE. In English practice. Refusing to take upon one's self the office of executor or executrix. Refusing to take out probate under a will wherein one has been appointed executor or executrix. Holthouse. 1 Williams on Exec. 230, 231.

RENOVARE. Lat. In old English law. To renew. Annuatim renovare; to renew annually. A phrase applied to profits which are taken and the product renewed again. Ambl. 131.

RENT. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Fr. rente, from rendre, to render, yield, give or pay; L. Lat. redditus, reditus, qq. v.] A certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal; a species of incorporeal hereditament. 2 Bl. Com. 41.—A compensation or return yielded periodically, to a certain amount, out of the profits of some corporeal hereditaments, by the tenant thereof. 2 Steph. Com. 33.—A certain yearly profit in money, provisions, chattels or labor, issuing out of lands and tenements, in retribution for the use. 3 Kent's Com. 460. See 2 Penn. St. (Barr's) R. 292, Kennedy, J.

Rent, or rente, (as it was formerly sometimes written,) is a purely French word, framed from rendre, on the analogy of the Lat. redditus, from reddere, and radically importing a thing rendered. See Rente.

RENT CHARGE. A rent reserved on a conveyance of land in fee simple, or granted out of lands by deed; so called because by a covenant or clause in the deed of conveyance, the land is charged with a distress for the payment of it.* Co. Litt. 143 b. 2 Bl. Com. 42. A rent with liberty to distrain. Finch's Law, b. ch. 7. Otherwise called a fee-farm rent. 2 Bl. Com. 43. 3 Kent's Com. 461. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 238, [231.]

RENT SECK. [L. Lat. redditus siccus.] Barren rent; a rent reserved by deed, but without any clause of distress. 2 Bl. Com. 42. 3 Kent's Com. 461. A rent without liberty to distrain. Finch's Law, b. 2, c. 8.

RENT SERVICE. In English law. Rent reserved out of land held by fealty or other corporeal service; and so called from such service being incident to it.* 2 Bl. Com. 41, 42. 3 Kent's Com. 461. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 238, [231.]

RENTE. L. Fr. In old English law. Rent. Si la dette soit issuaunte de ascun tenement come annule rente due, &c.; if the debt be issuing out of any tenement, as an annual rent due, &c. Britt. c. 28. Si pleynte soit fait de rente. Id. c. 45. Que ad done rente en fee, ou à terme de vie; who hath given a rent in fee, or for term of life. Id. ibid. Rente de chambre; a rent from the coffer; an annuity, (redditus de camera.) Id. c. 68. Terre ou rente. Id. c. 79. See Id. c. 81.

RENTE. L. Fr. Fined. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 13. Et si ul le face, soit grevement rente; and if any do so, he shall be grievously fined. Id. c. 16.

RENTAL. (Said to be corrupted from rent-roll.) In English law. A roll on which the rents of a manor are registered or set down, and by which the lord's bailiff collects the same. It contains the lands and tenements let to each tenant, the names of the tenants, and other particulars. Cunningham. Holthouse. 10 East, 206.

"RENTS," in a devise, will pass land itself. Cro. Jac. 104.

"RENTS AND PROFITS" will pass the estate itself. 1 Meriv. 213, 232, 233. 2 Ves. & B. 65. 8 Howard's R. 25, arg.

"RENTS, ISSUES AND PROFITS" more commonly signify in the books a chattel real interest in land; a kind of estate growing out of the land, for life or years, producing an annual or other rent. Redfield, C. J. 26 Vermont R. 741, 746.

RE-OUSTER. L. Fr. To oust again, or in return. Yearb. T. 10 Edw. III. 27.

REPARATIONE FACIENDA, Breve De. L. Lat. (Writ for making repair.) In old English practice. The name of a writ which lay to compel the repairing of a house, mill, bridge, &c. F. N. B. 127 A. Reg. Orig. 153 b.

REPEAL. The abrogation or annulling of a statute by a subsequent one.

To REPEAL. [L. Fr. repealer, repeller, re-appeler; to call back.] To annul a law or statute by a subsequent one; literally, to revoke or recall it. See Repealer, Repeler.

REPEALER. L. Fr. To repeal or revoke. De repealer, et de ennoyter, et de amender; to revoke, and to annul, and to amend. Britt. fol. 1.

REPELLER. L. Fr. To demand back. Ne purra mie repeler, ne reaver; may not demand back nor have back. Britt. c. 93.

Repellitur a sacramento infamis. An infamous person is repelled from an oath; is thrust back from taking an oath, or not allowed to be sworn as a witness. Bract. fol. 185. Co. Litt. 158 a. A leading maxim in the law of evidence, very recently abrogated in England by the statute called Lord Denman's Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85. Best on Evid. 163, § 129.

In Fleta, the maxim is applied to jurors. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 8, § 2.

REPENTER. L. Fr. To change one's mind; to repent. Mes ne se purrount repenter ne retrere; but they may not repent nor draw back. Britt. c. 120.

REPETITION. [Lat. repetitio, from repetere, to demand back.] In the civil law. The recovery back of money paid under a mistake of law. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 111, note.

REPETITUM NAMIUM. L. Lat. In old English practice. A repeated, second or reciprocal distress; withernam. 3 Bl. Com. 148.

REPETUNDARUM CRIMEN. Lat. In the Roman law. The crime of bribery or extortion in a magistrate, or person in any public office. Calv. Lex. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 12, num. 73. Dig. 48. 11. Cod. 9. 27.

REPLEADER. In practice. To plead again; to plead over again. A pleading over again. This is sometimes allowed by the court, on motion, in cases where, by the misconduct or inadvertence of the pleaders, issue has been joined on a fact totally immaterial or insufficient to determine the right, so that the court, upon the finding of the jury, cannot know for whom judgment ought to be given. As if, in an action on the case in assumpsit against an executor, he pleads that he himself, instead of the testator, made no such promise; or if, in an action of debt on bond conditioned to pay ten pounds ten shillings on a certain day, the defendant pleads payment of ten pounds,—in such cases the court will, after a verdict, award a repleader, (quod partes replacitent;) the effect of which is, that the pleadings must begin de novo, at that stage of them, whether it be the plea, replication or rejoinder, &c. wherein there appears to have been the first defect or deviation from the regular course. 3 Steph. Com. 630. 3 Bl. Com. 395.

REPLEDER. L. Fr. In old practice. To replead. Repledes si vous voulez; replead, if you will. Yearb. P. 3 Hen. VI. 4.

REPLEGIARE. L. Lat. In old English and Scotch practice. To take back a pledge; to replevy. 3 Bl. Com. 13. Scottice, to replege. Skene de Verb. Sign.

To take back on pledge, or surety.* To redeem a thing detained or taken by another, by putting in legal sureties. Cowell.

To replevy a man. See De homine replegiando. A writ for this purpose. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 70, § 14. Otherwise written replegiari. Id. ibid.

An action or writ of replevin. Litt. sect. 219. En replegiare port per; in replevin brought by. Dyer, 1 b.

REPLEGIARE DE AVERIIS. L. Lat. In old English practice. Replevin of cattle. A writ brought by one whose cattle were distrained, or put in the pound, upon any cause by another, upon surety given to the sheriff to prosecute or answer the action in law. Cowell. F. N. B. 68 D. Reg. Orig. 81.

REPLEGIARI FACIAS. L. Lat. (You cause to be replevied.) In old English law. The original writ in the action of replevin; superseded by the statute of Marlbridge, c. 21. 3 Bl. Com. 146.

REPLEVER. L. Fr. In old English law. To replevy. Si le tenaunt face replever la distresse; if the tenant cause the distress to be replevied. Britt. c. 68.

REPLEVIABLE. That may be replevied, or taken back on pledge. See Replevisable.

REPLEVIN. [L. Lat. replevina, from L. Fr. repliver, q. v.] In practice. A personal action which lies to recover possession of goods wrongfully taken. It was originally the peculiar remedy in cases of wrongful distress, but may now be brought in all cases of unlawful taking. 3 Bl. Com. 13, 146. 1 Arch. N. Prius, 466. In New-York, it is allowed in cases of wrongful detention also. 2 R. St. [522,] 430, § 1. It is the proper form of action to recover the specific thing taken, and is the regular mode of contesting the validity of the taking; the plaintiff being bound by sureties to prosecute the suit with effect, and to return the goods if return thereof be adjudged. See United States Digest, Replevin.

Replevin is said to have originally meant a re-delivery of the pledge, or thing taken in distress, to the owner, upon his giving security to try the right of the distress. 3 Bl. Com. 13, 146. But its radical meaning, (as expressed by replevir, (q. v.) its probable root,) seems to have rather been, a re-delivery on pledge; and this supposition is confirmed by its ancient use in the sense of bail. See infra.

REPLEVIN. L. Fr. [from replevir,

q. v.] In old English law. Bail; delivery of a person on pledges or sureties. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 15.

REPLEVIR. L. Fr. In old English law. To take back on pledge; to replevy, Britt. c. 20. Applied to land. Fet Assaver, §§ 24, 25.

To let go, on bail. Et les plevissables jesques mesme le temps replevir; and those that are bailable to deliver on bail until the same time. Britt. c. 29.

REPLEVISABLE, Replevissable, Plevissable. L. Fr. Bailable. Britt. c. 29. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 15.

REPLEVISH. In old English law. To let one to mainprise upon surety. Cowell.

REPLEVY. In practice. To get back goods on a writ of replevin.

REPLICARE. Lat. [from re, again, and plicare, to fold.] In the civil law and old English pleading. To reply; to answer a defendant's plea, (exceptio.) Querens replicationem non habet, nec pertinet ad ipsum replicare, donec, &c.; the plaintiff has not the replication, nor does it belong to him to reply, until, &c. Bract. fol. 191 b. Id. 194 b. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 16, § 3.

Literally, to fold back, or unfold. See Replicatio.

REPLICATIO. Lat. [from replicare, to unfold.] In the civil law and old English pleading. The answer of a plaintiff (actor) to the exception or plea of a defendant, (reus;) corresponding with, and giving name to the replication in modern pleading. Inst. 4. 14, pr. See Dig. 44. 1. 2. 1. Called by Paulus, a contrary exception, (plea,) as it were, the exception of an exception, (contraria exceptio, quasi exceptionis exceptio.) Id. 44. 1. 22. 1. Contra exceptionem vero, licet ab initio competens videatur, subveniri poterit petenti ope replicationis; ut si quis petat, excipere poterit tenens de pacto postea interveniente ne petat, contra quam replicari poterit à petente de pacto posterius interposito quod petat. But against the exception, (plea) though at first it may seem sufficient, the demandant (plaintiff) may be aided by means of a replication; as if one should demand (sue,) the tenant (defendant) may except (plead) a subsequent agreement not to sue, against which the plaintiff may plead in reply a still subsequent agreement that he might sue. Bract. fol. 400. This is substantially the same example as that given by Justinian. Inst. ub. sup. Called in Fleta, exceptio quæ competit actori contra exceptionem rei. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 36, § 10. This is in conformity with the language of the Digests. Dig. ub. sup.

The nature of this pleading and the derivation of the word itself are thus explained in the Institutes: Sometimes it happens that an exception [the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's action] which primâ facie seems just, yet operates as a bar unjustly, (tamen iniquè noceat;) and when this takes place, there is need of another allegation to help the plaintiff; which is called a replication, because by it the force or law of the exception is unfolded and destroyed, (replicatio vocatur quia per eam replicatur atque resolvitur jus exceptionis.) Inst. 4. 14, pr. According to the modern civilians, it is so called because it unfolds and lays open (replicet ac patefaciat) the injustice of the exception that had been folded together, and, as it were, covered up; or rather because it unfolds and opens (explicet atque aperiat) the equity of the action that had been covered up, and, as it were, folded together, by the defendant's exception. Hotomannus. Prateus. Calv. Lex.

REPLICATION. [L. Fr. replicacion; Lat. replicatio, q. v.] In pleading. The plaintiff's answer of fact to the defendant's plea in an action at law.* Steph. Pl. 58, 59. 3 Bl. Com. 309, 310.

The plaintiff's or complainant's reply to the defendant's answer, in a suit in equity.*—The contestation of the answer. Gilb. For. Rom. 113.—The plaintiff's avoidance or denial of the answer or defence, and in the maintenance of the bill, to draw the matter to a direct issue, which may be proved or disproved by testimony. Cooper's Eq. Pl. 328, 329. Story's Eq. Pl. § 877.

This pleading, together with its name, is obviously taken from the Roman law, as will appear on comparing the Institutes with Bracton, under the appropriate heads. See Replicatio. And see Story's Eq. Pl. § 677.

REPONE. [from Lat. reponere, to put back.] In Scotch practice. To replace; to restore to a former state or right. 2 Alison's Crim. Pr. 351.

REPORT. [L. Lat. reportus, relatio, from reportare, to bring again, to relate.] A public account or relation of a case judicially argued and determined; including a statement of the facts of the case, the arguments of counsel, and the opinion of the court, expressing the reasons for the judgment or decision given.* Lord Coke defines report to be "a public relation, or a bringing again to memory cases judicially argued, debated, resolved or adjudged in any of the king's courts of justice, together with such causes and reasons as were delivered by the judges of the same." Co. Litt. 293. The reports of judicial decisions now constitute, both in Great Britain and the United States, a principal and most authoritative source of municipal law. 1 Bl. Com. 71. 1 Kent's Com. 470. The word itself seems essentially French. Litt. sect. 514.

REPORT. In practice. The formal statement in writing made to a court by a master in chancery, a clerk, or referee, as the result of his inquiries into some matter referred to him by the court.

REPORTARE. L. Lat. In old English practice. To report. Claus. 28 Edw. I. m. 3, d.

REPORTUS. L. Lat. A report. Spelman gives this barbarous word, but Lord Coke uses relatio. 8 Co. pref.

REPOSITION OF THE FOREST. [L. Lat. repositio forestæ.] In old English law. An act whereby certain forest grounds, being made purlieu (q. v.) upon view, were by a second view laid to the forest again, [put back into the forest.] Manwood. Cowell.

REPREHENSAILLES. L. Fr. Seizures; reprisals. Kelham.

REPRESENTATION. [Lat. repræsentatio, from repræsentare, to be like.] The occupying of another's place; the acting in the place of another. The principle by which an heir, executor or administrator, succeeds to the rights and liabilities of his ancestor, testator or intestate.* 2 Steph. Com. 243.

In the law of distribution and descent. The principle upon which the issue of a deceased person take or inherit the share of an estate which their immediate ancestor would have taken or inherited, if living; the taking or inheriting per stirpes. 2 Bl. Com. 217, 517. 2 Kent's Com. 425. 4 Id. 391. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 195, [202.]

REPRESENTATION. In the law of insurance. A collateral statement, either by writing not inserted in the policy, or by parol, of such facts or circumstances relative to the proposed adventure, as are necessary to be communicated to the underwriters, to enable them to form a just estimate of the risks. 1 Marshall on Ins. 450. Mr. Duer objects to this definition, and substitutes the following: A statement of facts, circumstances or information, tending to increase or diminish the risks as they would otherwise be considered, made prior to the execution of the policy by the assured or his agent to the insurer, in order to guide his judgment in forming a just estimate of the risks he is desired to assume. It is usually made by parol, or by a writing not inserted in the policy, but when the intention as to the construction is sufficiently declared, may be expressed in the policy. 2 Duer on Ins. 644, 656. See 1 Phillips on Ins. 214. 3 Kent's Com. 282. 5 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 188.

REPRESENTATIVE. One who represents another; one who occupies another's place, and succeeds to his rights and liabilities. Executors and administrators represent, in all matters in which the personal estate is concerned, the person of the testator, [or intestate] as the heir does that of his ancestor; so that the heirs and executors (or administrators) of a deceased party are sometimes compendiously described as his real and personal representatives. 2 Steph. Com. 243.

REPRESTARE. L. Lat. In old European law. To re-grant a thing to the grantor, for a certain term; to re-let a thing or estate to the lessor. Spelman.

REPRIEVE. [from L. Fr. reprendre, to take back.] In criminal law. The withdrawing of a sentence of death for an interval of time, whereby the execution is suspended. 4 Bl. Com. 394. Cowell writes the word reprive.

REPRISAL, Reprisel. [L. Lat. reprisalia, (q. v.) from L. Fr. reprise, a retaking.] A taking again; a taking back; retaking; recaption. The re-possessing one's self of a thing unjustly taken by another.* 3 Bl. Com. 4. See Recaption.

A taking of one thing in satisfaction for another, (captio rei unius in alterius satisfactionem.) Spelman. Frequently used in the plural, reprisals, (reprisaliæ, represaliæ.) Id. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 3, c. 5. 1 Kent's Com. 61. A taking in return; a taking by way of retaliation. See Letters of marque and reprisal.

REPRISALIA, Represalia, Repræsalia, Repressalia, Pressalia. L. Lat. In civil and old maritime law. Reprisal. Spelman. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 3, c. 5.

REPRISES. In English law. Deductions and duties which are yearly paid out of a manor and lands, as rent-charge, rent-seek, pensions, corrodies, annuities, &c. so that when the clear yearly value of a manor is spoken of, it is said to be so much per annum ultra reprisas, besides all reprises. Cowell.

Reprobata pecunia liberat solventem. Money refused [the refusal of money tendered] releases him who pays [or tenders it.] 9 Co. 79 a, Peytoe's case.

REPROBATOR, Action of. In Scotch law. An action or proceeding intended to convict a witness of perjury; to which the witness must be made a party. Bell's Dict.

REPROBUS, Reproba. Lat. [from reprobare, to reject.] In old English law. Bad or spurious; reprobate. A term applied to money which might be rejected or refused. De illis qui falsam fabricant monetam, et qui de non reproba faciunt reprobam, sicut sunt retonsores denariorum; of those who make false or counterfeit money, and who out of good money make bad, such as clippers of coin. Bract. fol. 119 b. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 22, § 4. "Reprobate silver" is used in the English translation of the old Testament. Jerem. vi. 30.

REPUBLICATION. A second publication of a will, either expressly or by construction. See 1 Jarman on Wills, 174, (199, Perkins' ed.) See Publication.

REPSILVER. In old records. Money paid by servile tenants for exemption from the customary duty of reaping for the lord. Cowell.

REPUDIUM. Lat. In the Roman law. A breaking off the contract of espousals, or a marriage intended to be solemnized. Sometimes translated divorce. But this was not the proper sense. Dig. 50. 16. 191. Id. 50. 16. 101. 1. Id. 24. 2. 2. See Taylor's Civ. Law, 349.

REPUGNANT. [Lat. repugnans, from repugnare, to fight against.] Contrary to; in conflict with. A condition repugnant to the nature of the estate to which it is annexed, is void. 1 Steph. Com. 281.

REPUTATION. [Lat. reputatio, from reputare, to consider.] In the law of evidence. The estimation in which a person is held in the community where he has resided. Marcy, J. 2 Wendell's R. 352, 354. Character. Duncan, J. 3 Serg. & Rawle's R. 337. "Reputation is not what this or what that man thinketh, but that which many men have said or thought, who have more reason to know it; et quænam est inter illos reputatio." 1 Leon. 15.

REPUTED. [Lat. reputatus, from reputare, to consider.] Considered; generally supposed.

This word has a much weaker sense than its derivation would appear to warrant; importing merely a supposition or opinion derived or made up from outward appearances, and often unsupported by fact. The term "reputed owner" is frequently employed in this sense. 2 Steph. Com. 206.

"REQUEST," in a will, held to raise a trust or bequest by implication. 1 Bro. C. C. 489. 2 Id. 226. Ambl. 520, note (2.)

REQUESTS. See Court of Requests.

REQUISITION. [Lat. requisitio, from requirere, to demand.] In international law. The formal demand by one government upon another, of the surrender of a fugitive criminal. 1 Kent's Com. 36—38, and notes.

RERE. L. Fr. [from Lat. radere.] To rase; to erase. Kelham.

RERE-FIEFS. In Scotch law. Inferior fiefs; portions of a fief or feud granted out to inferior tenants. 2 Bl. Com. 57.

Rerum ordo confunditur, si unicuique jurisdictio non servatur. The order of things is confounded, if its proper jurisdiction is not preserved to each. 4 Inst. Proœm.

Rerum suarum quilibet est moderator et arbiter. Every one is the regulator and disposer of his own property. Co. Litt. 223 a.

RES. Lat. In the civil and old English law. A thing; things. A term of the most extensive import in the law, including both objects of property, and things not the objects of property, (quæ vel in nostro patrimonio, vel extra patrimonium nostrum habentur.) Inst. 2. 1, pr. Dig. 50. 16. 5, pr. Bract. fol. 7 b. According to Lord Coke, it has a general signification, including both corporeal and incorporeal things of whatever kind, nature or species. 3 Inst. 182.

By "res," according to the modern civilians, is meant every thing that may form an object of rights, in opposition to persona, which is regarded as a subject of rights. Res, therefore, in its general meaning, comprises actions of all kinds; while in its restricted sense, it comprehends every object of right except actions. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 151, § 146. This has reference to the fundamental division of the Institutes, that all law relates either to persons, to things, or to actions. Inst. 1. 2. 12.

Under the name of res, (a thing,) is included, also, according to the Digests, any part of a thing; (appellatione rei pars etiam continetur.) Dig. 50. 16. 72. It also included both the fruits (causæ) of a thing, and the rights (jura) incident to it. Id. 50. 16. 23. The following are among the various significations of this word in the civil law:

A business, (negotium ;) matter, (materia ;) question, (quæstio.) Dig. 48. 19. 38. 5.

Equity, (æquum et bonum ;) reason, (causa.) Dig. 48. 8. 1. 3.

An inheritance, (hæreditas.) Calv. Lex.

A suit, (lis.) Id. The subject matter of a suit; a thing sued for. Story's Confl. of Laws, § 592 a. 20 Howard's R. 599. See In rem.

Substance, (substantia.) Calv. Lex.

Property, (proprietas.) Id.

Ownership, (dominium.) Id. Dig. 41. 1. 52.

A contract, (contractus.) Dig. 50. 16. 6. Calv. Lex.

Punishment, (pœna.) Dig. 48. 19. 2, pr.

Truth, (veritas.) Dig. 48. 10. 1. 4.

Profit and emolument, (utilitas et emolumentum.) See Actio de in rem verso.

Empire. Tayl. Civ. Law, 62.

Res denominatur a principaliori parte. A thing is named from its more principal part. 5 Co. 47 b, Gilbert Littleton's case. Thus, a suit in equity is frequently termed a bill in equity, the bill being the commencement and foundation of the suit, (origo rei et caput sectæ.) Id. ibid.

Res perit [suo] domino. The thing perishes or is lost to its owner; the loss of the thing falls upon its owner. A maxim in the law of bailment, expressive of the principle that where an article bailed is damaged or lost without fault of the bailee, the loss must fall upon the owner. Story on Bailm. § 426, 427 a. 2 Kent's Com. 591. Story, J. 3 Story's R. 359. Broom's Max. 112, [176.] Applied also to cases where a loss is to be shared among several having an interest. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. 102. Story, J. 3 Sumner's R. 58.

Res transit cum suo onere. The thing passes with its burden. Where a thing has been encumbered by mortgage, the incumbrance follows it, wherever it goes. Bract. fol. 47 b, 48. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 10, § 3. See Transit terra cum onere.

RES ACCESSORIA. Lat. In the civil law. An accessory thing; that which belongs to a principal thing, or is in connection with it. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 155, § 152. Otherwise termed accessio. Id. § 153. Res accessoria sequitur rem principalem. An accessory thing follows the principal thing. Broom's Max. [368.]

RES CADUCA. Lat. In the civil law. A fallen or escheated thing; an escheat. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 9, n. 60.

RES COMMUNES. Lat. In the civil law. Common things. Things common to all, by the law of nature; as air, running water, the sea, and sea-shore. Inst. 2. 1. 1. Dig. 1. 8. 2. 1. Bracton and Fleta make a distinction between common and public things, but Justinian uses the terms indifferently. Bract. fol. 8. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, § 4. Inst. 2. 1. 2. Later civilians have distinguished them thus: Res communes are those things which, considered with reference to the property in them, are res nullius, belonging to no one, but considered with reference to their use, belong to all men. Res publicæ are those the property of which is in the people, the use being common to every one of the people. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 325. See Tayl. Civ. Law, 471, 472.

RES CONTROVERSA. Lat. In the civil law. A matter controverted; a matter in controversy; a point in question; a question for determination; (Gr. τὸ κρινόμενον.) Calv. Lex.

RES CORONÆ. L. Lat. In old English law. Things of the crown; such as ancient manors, homages of the king, liberties, &c. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 6, § 3.

RES CORPORALES. Lat. In the civil law. Corporeal things; things which can be touched, (quæ tangi possunt,) or are perceptible to the senses. Dig. 1. 8. 1. 1. Inst. 2. 2. Bract. fol. 7 b, 10 b, 13 b. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, § 4. Called by Cicero, res quæ sunt, (things which are,) as distinguished from incorporeal things, which are termed res quæ intelliguntur, (things which are understood, or mentally perceived.) Cic. Topic. 5.

RES FUNGIBILES. Lat. In the civil law. Fungible things, (q. v.)

RES FURTIVÆ. L. Lat. In Scotch law. Goods which have been stolen. Bell's Dict.

RES GESTA. Lat. A thing done; a transaction. RES GESTÆ. Things done; the essential circumstances of a transaction. Story, J. 3 Story's R. 504. See 36 Maine R. 295. 5 Maryland R. 450. United States Digest, Evidence.

RES IMMOBILES. Lat. In the civil law. Immovable things. Such things as, by their nature, are physically incapable of a change of place; such as lands; or which cannot be removed to another place without injury to their substance; such as buildings. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 152, § 147. Tayl. Civ. Law, 475.

RES INCORPORALES. Lat. In the civil law. Incorporeal things; things which cannot be touched, (quæ tangi non possunt;) such as those things which consist in right. Inst. 2. 2. Dig. 1. 8. 1. 1. Bract. fol. 7 b, 10 b. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, § 4.—Such things as the mind alone can perceive, (res quæ intelliguntur.) See Res corporales.

RES INTEGRA. Lat. In the civil law. A thing not acted upon; a thing as it was; a thing entire or untouched; a thing not made the subject of action or decision; a new thing or matter, (res nova.)* A thing was said to be integra, until something was begun to be done about it, (donec quid geri cœptum est.) Calv. Lex. In the contract of sale, the matter was said to be integra, until closed by the payment of the price, or delivery of the thing. Calv. Lex. Inst. 3. 30. 4. A question while under debate in the Roman Senate, was called res integra; when determined, res peracta. Adam's Rom. Ant. 21. Plin. Epist. vi. 13.

This has become a common phrase in English and American law, to denote a new case, or a perfectly new point, unaffected by any former adjudications. 1 Wooddes. Lect. 120. "If this was res integra, and I was at liberty to follow my own opinion, I should be very unwilling to admit such evidence." Lord Talbot, C. Cas. temp. Talb. 79, 80. "If the question was res integra, untouched by dictum or decision," &c. Lord Eldon, C. Jacob's R. 126. "If this case were perfectly res integra, there might have been great doubt." Lord Ellenborough, 9 East, 206. See Id. 10 East, 123.

Res integra is well contrasted with res judicata by Blackstone, arg. 1 W. Bl. 238.

RES INTER ALIOS ACTA. Lat. A thing done between others, or between third parties or strangers.

Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet. A thing done between others ought not to injure another. A transaction between other or strange parties, ought not to injure a person. A transaction between two parties ought not to operate to the disadvantage of a third. Co. Litt. 155 b. Wingate's Max. 327, max. 86. Broom's Max. 432, [735.] Persons are not to be affected by the acts or words of others to which they were neither party nor privy, and which consequently they had no power to prevent or control. Best on Evidence, 120, § 102. The use of alios and alteri, both having the sense of other, perhaps adds force to this maxim, the parties to the transaction being "others" as to the third person, and he in turn being "another," as to them; but it renders a close translation scarcely intelligible. The substitution of nemini for alteri, in one of the following forms, avoids this verbal difficulty.

Res inter alios actæ alteri nocere non debent, is a plural form of this maxim, quoted by Mr. Best in his Treatise on Evidence. A third party is not to be injured or affected by the acts of others with whom he is unconnected, either personally, or by his agents, or by those whom he represents. Best on Evid. 378, § 339. The same maxim is otherwise expressed, Res inter alios actæ nemini nocere debent, sed prodesse possunt. Things done between others ought to injure no one, but may benefit. 6 Co. 1 b, Bruerton's case. Wingate's Max. 327, max. 86. And see 4 Inst. 279. These additions, however, are, according to Mr. Best, unnecessary, for the rule is only of general, not universal application, there being several exceptions both ways. Neither does the expression inter alios mean that the act done must be the act of more than one person, it being also a maxim of law that Factum unius alteri nocere non debet. Co. Litt. 152 b.

This important maxim seems to be immediately derived from the canon law, in which it was expressed, Res inter alios acta aliis præjudicium regulariter non adfert. A thing done between others regularly works no prejudice to third parties. Lan- cell. Inst. Jur. Can. lib. 3, tit. 15, § 9. Or it may have been taken from the caption of title 60, book 7, of the Code of Justinian: Inter alios acta vel judicata, aliis non nocere. That its ultimate source is in the civil law, appears from the following rules which embody its principle: Inter alios res gestas aliis non posse præjudicium facere sæpe constitutum est. Cod. 7. 60. 1. Inter alios factum transactionem absenti non posse facere præjudicium notissimi juris est. Id. 7. 60. 2. It is found appealed to, as a recognized maxim of law, as early as the reign of Edw. II. Yearb. M. 3 Edw. II. 53. See Broom's Max. 432—443. In the Digests, the maxim appears to be confined to res judicata, (q. v.)

RES JUDICATA, (or ADJUDICATA.) Lat. A matter adjudged; a thing judicially acted upon or decided; a judgment. That which puts an end to controversy by the decision of a judge, (quæ finem controversiarum pronuntiatione judicis accipit.) Dig. 42. 1. 1. A phrase of the civil law, constantly quoted in the books. 3 Kent's Com. 120. Best on Evid. 464. 3 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 399.

Res judicata pro veritate accipitur. A matter adjudged is taken for truth. Dig. 50. 17. 207. A matter decided or passed upon by a court of competent jurisdiction, is received as evidence of truth. 2 Kent's Com. 120. A maxim adopted in the common law, to express the authority and finality of judicial decisions. Co. Litt. 103 a. Broom's Max. 428, [242, 729.] Best on Evid. 41, § 44. See Id. 464—470, §§ 422—429. Another form of this maxim is Judicium pro veritate accipitur. Co. Litt. 39 a, 168 a, 236 b. The doctrine of res judicata is held not to apply to motions in the course of practice. 5 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 493.

Sæpe constitutum est, res inter alios judicatas aliis non præjudicare. It has often been determined that matters adjudged between other parties do not prejudice. Dig. 42. 1. 63. Res inter alios judicata aliis non obest. Id. 44. 1. 10. Res inter alios judicatæ nullum aliis præjudicium faciant. Id. 44. 2. 1.

RES MOBILES. Lat. In the civil law. Moveable things; things which may be transported from one place to another, without injury to their substance and form. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 152, § 147. Things corresponding with the chattels personal of the common law. 2 Kent's Com. 347.

RES NOVA. Lat. A new matter; a new point or question. "If it were res nova, I should be apt to think so too." Holt, C. J. 6 Mod. 161.

RES NULLIUS. Lat. In the civil law. Things of no one; the property of nobody; such as things sacred, (sacræ,) religious, (religiosæ,) and holy, (sanctæ.) Inst. 2. 1. 7. Dig. 1. 8. 2. Tayl. Civ. Law, 470. Bracton ranks also under this head, wild animals, derelict property, wrecks, waifs, and strays. Bract. fol. 8. And see Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, §§ 6, 9. Grotius, de Jur. Bel. lib. 3, c. 6, § 9.

RES PRIVATÆ. Lat. In the civil law. Private things; things belonging to individuals, (quæ singulorum sunt.) Dig. 1. 8. 1. pr.

RES PUBLICÆ. Lat. In the civil law. Public things; such as rivers, harbors, the banks of rivers, &c. Inst. 2. 1. 2, 4. Dig. 1. 8. 1, pr. Bract. fol. 8. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, § 4. Tayl. Civ. Law, 472. Sometimes called res publici juris. 2 Wooddes. Lect. 3.

RES QUOTIDIANÆ. Lat. Every day matters; familiar points or questions. The title of a work of Gaius, from which the Institutes of Justinian were in part compiled. Inst. proœm. § 6.

RES RELIGIOSÆ. Lat. In the civil law. Religious things. Places in which a dead body was laid. Inst. 2. 1. 9. Dig. 1. 8. 6. 4.

Res sacra non recipit æstimationem. A sacred thing does not admit of valuation. Dig. 1. 8. 9. 5.

RES SACRÆ. Lat. In the civil law. Sacred things. Things consecrated by the pontiffs to the service of God, such as sacred edifices, and gifts or offerings, (donaria.) Inst. 2. 1. 8. Dig. 1. 8. 6. 3. Chalices, crosses, censers. Bract. fol. 8. The place where a sacred edifice stood, continued to be sacred, though the edifice was destroyed. Inst. ub. sup. Dig. ub. sup. See Tayl. Civ. Law, 470.

RES SANCTÆ. Lat. In the civil law. Holy things; things protected against injury by man; such as the walls and gates of a city. Inst. 2. 1. 10. Dig. 1. 8. 8, pr. and 2. Walls were said to be holy, because any offence against them was punished capitally. Inst. 2. 1. 10. Bract. fol. 8. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, § 7. Fleta calls them quasi sacra.

RES UNIVERSITATIS. Lat. In the civil law. Things of a community; such as theatres and race-grounds, (stadia,) and other like things which were the common property of a city. Inst. 2. 1. 6. Dig. 1. 8. 6. 1. Bract. fol. 8. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, § 6. See Tayl. Civ. Law, 473.

RESCEIT. [Lat. receptio.] In old English practice. An admission or receiving a third person to plead his right in a cause formerly commenced between two others. As, in an action by tenant for life or years, he in the reversion might come in and pray to be received to defend the land, and to plead with the demandant. Cowell. Bro. Abr. Resceit. Called by the civilians, admissio tertii pro suo interesse, (the admission of a third person, on account of his interest.)

RESCEU, Rescue. L. Fr. Received. Novæ Narr. 5 b. Kitchin. Resceux, (plur.) Britt. c. 2.

RESCISSIO. Lat. [from rescindere, to annul or avoid.] In the civil law. An annulling, avoiding, or making void; abrogation; rescission. Cod. 4. 44. Pothier, Contr. of Sale, num. 331.

RESCISSORY ACTION. [Lat. actio rescissoria.] In the civil law. An action to rescind or avoid a title by prescription. Inst. 4. 6. 5. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 6, § 1132.

An action to rescind a contract of sale, on the ground of injustice in the price, or what is termed lesion. Cod. 4. 44. Pothier, Contr. of Sale, num. 331, et seq.

In Scotch law. An action to rescind a contract or deed. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 4, p. 158. See Bell's Dict.

RESCOUS. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Fr. rescourrer, to force from, or recover back; L. Lat. rescussus.] A forcible taking back of goods distrained, or in the custody of the law.* 3 Bl. Com. 146.

The forcible delivery of a defendant, or other party arrested, from the officer who is carrying him to prison.* Id. ibid.

A writ which lay in cases of rescous, (breve de rescussu.) F. N. B. 101 C. D. Reg. Orig. 116 b, 117.

RESCRIPTA. Lat. In the civil law. Rescripts. Cod. 1. 23. See Rescriptum. A term sometimes applied to the original writs of the common law. Co. Litt. 11 a.

RESCRIPTUM. Lat. [from rescribere, to write back.] In the civil law. A species of imperial constitution, in the form of an answer to some application or petition; a rescript. Calv. Lex. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 2, § 53. Otherwise called a letter or epistle, (epistola.) Inst. 1. 2. 6. See a form of rescript, Dig. 37. 14. 17.

RESCUE. [L. Fr. rescouse; L. Lat. rescussus.] The modern form of rescous, (q. v.) A forcible taking back of persons or property out of the custody of the law.* 3 Bl. Com. 12. 4 Id. 125.

RESEANTISA. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. reseance.] In old English and Scotch law. Residence. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 3, § 2. Spelman.

A severe or long continued illness, confining a person to his house, (morbus validus, seu veteranus quo quis exire de suis ædibus prohibetur.) Id. Glanv. lib. 1, c. 11. Described by Skene, as "a long and old sickness, or a resident heavy infirmity and sore sickness." Skene ad Reg. Maj. lib. 1, c. 8. See Id. De Verb. Signif. The essoin de malo lecti was more anciently termed de infirmitate reseantisæ, or de reseantisa. 1 Reeves' Hist. 115. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 10, § 1.

RESEAUNT, Reseant. L. Fr. Abiding; dwelling; residing. Britt. c. 98.

RESEISER. [L. Lat. reseisire.] In old English law. A taking back of seisin.* A taking again of lands into the hands of the king, whereof a general livery or ouster-le-main was formerly mis-sued, contrary to the form and order of law. Staundf. Prær. Reg. 26. Cowell.

RESERVANDO. L. Lat. (Reserving.) In old conveyancing. An apt word of reserving a rent. Co. Litt. 47 a.

RESERVATION. [Lat. reservatio, from reservare, to keep back or save out.] In conveyancing. A clause in a deed whereby the grantor reserves some new thing to himself, out of the thing granted, and not in esse before. 4 Kent's Com. 468. Co. Litt. 47 a. Distinguished from an exception, which is always of part of the thing granted, and of a thing in esse. Id. ibid. See 2 Selden's R. 458.

RESET. In Scotch law. The receiving or harboring of a proscribed or outlawed person. Skene de Verb. Signif. Cowell. Reset of theft, is the receiving goods knowing them to be stolen, or the harbouring and concealing the thief from justice. Bell's Dict. Resetter; a receiver. Cowell. See Resset, Recettour.

RESIANCE, Resiancy. [L. Lat. resiantia, from L. Fr. reseant, resident.] In old English law. Residence; a man's abode or continuance in a place. O. N. B. 85. Cowell. 2 Inst. 99. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 498, § 641. "Resiance and mansion of the council." Bacon's Works, iv. 261.

RESIANT, Resient, Resyaunt. [from L. Fr. reseant, resident.] In old English law. Continually dwelling or abiding in a place; resident; a resident. Kitchin, 33. Cowell. 2 Inst. 99. "Resiants and inhabitants within a manor." 3 Leon. 8, case 21. See Resyaunt.

RESIANTIA, Reseantia. L. Lat. In old English law. Resiance; residence. Spelman. See Resiance.

RESIDENCE, [O. Eng. resiance; L. Fr. reseaunce; L. Lat. resiantia, reseantia, reseantisa; from Lat. residere, to sit down.] The act or state of being seated or settled in a place; the act, state or habit of dwelling or abiding in a place; the act or state of being resident, or inhabitant; inhabitancy or habitancy.* The act of abiding or dwelling in a place for some continuance of time. Webster.

The place where one resides, (locus quo quis residet;) habitation; domicil. Spelman. The place which one has made his seat, (sedes,) abode or dwelling.* A man's home. 15 Mees. & W. 433.

Residence imports not only personal presence in a place, but an attachment to it by those acts or habits which express the closest connection between a person and a place, as by usually sitting or lying there. The radical idea of the word is well illustrated by its use in English ecclesiastical law, to denote the actual and settled presence and abode of a parochial minister in and upon his parsonage house; otherwise expressed by the word incumbency, from incumbere, to lie upon. 1 Bl. Com. 390, 392. See 5 Burr. 2722. The same idea of lying was inherent in the old word reseantisa, (from the same root,) which imported a settled infirmity, ("a resident infirmity," as Skene translates it,) by which one was confined to his house or bed. See Reseantisa. And see 8 Mod. 308. Burr. Sett. Cas. passim. The radical idea of the pure Latin residere is a sitting. Hence justices while holding a court were said to be resident (residentes) or sitting there. See Residens.

Residence has been declared to mean the same thing with inhabitancy. Burr. Sett. Cas. 708. Walworth, C. 8 Wendell's R. 140. Spelman makes it synonymous with habitation, (habitatio.) It is made also synonymous with domicil, (domicilium,) by the same writer and other high authorities; but domicil in some of its applications imports something more than residence. 2 Kent's Com. 430, 431, note, 1 Id. 76, 77. It might be said that residence imported, ex vi termini, fixedness or permanence of location, were it not for the distinction between permanent and temporary residence, which seems to have become established. See 2 Kent's Com. ub. sup.

RESIDENS. [from residere, to sit.] In old English law. Sitting. Justitiarii residentes in banco; the justices sitting in the bench. Bract. fol. 353 b. These are distinguished from the justitiarii itinerantes in comitatu; justices itinerating or going about in the county. Id. ibid.

RESIDENT. L. Lat. [from residere, to sit or be fixed.] In old English practice. [They] remain. Quarum recorda et processus coram nobis resident; the records and process whereof remain before us. Reg. Orig. 308 b.

RESIDENT. [Lat. residens, from residere, to sit; O. Eng. resiant.] One who has a seat or settlement in a place; one who dwells, abides or lies in a place.* An inhabitant. 20 Johns. R. 208. Walworth, C. 8 Wendell's R. 134, 140. One who resides or dwells in a place for some time. Webster. See 12 Grattan's R. 440.

RESIDER. L. Fr. [from Lat. residere, q. v.] To continue; to abide. L. Fr. Dict.

RESIDERE. Lat. In old English law. To sit down; to sit still; to rest; to remain or continue. See Resident.

RESIDENT MINISTER. In international law. A public minister who resides at a foreign court. Resident ministers are ranked in the third class of public ministers. Wheaton's Intern. Law, part 3, ch. 1, § 6. See 1 Kent's Com. 39, note.

RESIDUARY. Giving the residue, as a residuary clause.

Taking the residue, as a residuary devisee.

Constituting the residue, as a residuary estate. See Residue.

RESIDUARY CLAUSE. That clause in a will by which a testator disposes of such part of his estate as remains undisposed of by previous devises or bequests.* 4 Kent's Com. 541, 542.

RESIDUARY DEVISEE. The person named in a will, who is to take all the real property remaining over and above the other devises.

RESIDUARY ESTATE. That part of a testator's estate and effects which remains after payment of debts and legacies.

RESIDUARY LEGATEE. The person to whom a testator bequeaths the residue of his personal estate, after the payment of such other legacies as are specifically mentioned in the will.

RESIDUE, (or RESIDUUM.) The surplus of a testator's estate remaining after all the debts and particular legacies have been discharged. 2 Bl. Com. 514.

RESIGNATION. In ecclesiastical law. The yielding up a benefice or spiritual living to the bishop. Wharton's Lex.

In Scotch law. The return of a fee into the hands of the superior. Bell's Dict.

RESIGNATION BOND. In English law. A bond given by the incumbent of a living, conditioned to resign on a certain contingency. Smith on Contracts, 176—181.

RESILIRE. Lat. In old English law. To draw back from a contract before it is made binding. Literally, to leap back, or start back. Adhunc possunt partes resilire; the parties may yet draw back. Bract. fol. 38. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 58, § 3. The Scotch law, with its accustomed closeness, renders this word resile.

RESOLUCION. Span. In Spanish colonial law. An opinion formed by some superior authority on matters referred to its decision, and forwarded to inferior authorities for their instruction and government. Schmidt's Civ. Law, 93, note 1.

RESOLUTION. In practice. The judgment of a court. 5 Mod. 438. 10 Id. 209.

RESOLUTIVE. In Scotch conveyancing. Having the quality or effect of resolving or extinguishing a right. Bell's Dict. voc. Clauses irritant and resolutive.

Resoluto jure concedentis, resolvitur jus concessum. Where the right of the grantor is extinguished, the right granted is extinguished. Broom's Max. [352.]

RESOMOUNSE. L. Fr. Re-summons. Britt. c. 121.

De reson; in reason. Id. Funde sa reson; grounds his title. Id. Feare noz reson; make us satisfaction. Id. Deux resons; two circumstances. Id. Ses resons; his evidences. Id.

RESORT. [from Fr. resorter, q. v.] To go back. "It resorted to the line of the mother." Hale's Hist. Com. Law, c. 11.

RESORTER. L. Fr. In old English law. To go back. A force resortera le tenement au seigniour del fee; the tenement must necessarily go back to the lord of the fee. Britt. c. 119.

To resort to; to adopt on failure of other proceedings. Ne purra resorter à breve semblable; he may not resort to a similar writ. Id. c. 46.

To go. Dyer, 135 b. (Fr. ed.)

RESPECTARE, Respectuare. L. Lat. In old English law. To respite. Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 53, note. Reg. Orig. 319. Respectuabitur; shall be put off. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 23, § 21.

RESPECTIVE. L. Lat. Respectively; with reference to the subject. "It must be taken respective." Holt, C. J. 1 Show. 190.

RESPECTUS. L. Lat. In old English and Scotch law. Respite; delay; continuance of time; postponement. Ponere in respectum; to put in respite; to respite or continue. Glanv. lib. 12, c. 9. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 5, § 11. Habebit respectum, si velit, certæ diei; shall have respite, if he will, to a certain day. Reg. Maj. lib. 4, c. 20. Spelman.

Time for payment. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 19.

RESPI. L. Fr. Delay; putting off. Kelham. L. Fr. Dict.

RESPITE. [L. Lat. respectus, respectuatio.] Delay; a putting off. The putting off the execution of a capital sentence; a reprieve. 4 Bl. Com. 394.

Continuance. In English practice, a jury is said, on the record, to be respited till the next term. 3 Bl. Com. 354.

RESPOIGNER, Respoyner. L. Fr. To answer. Respoignable; answerable. L. Fr. Dict.

RESPONDE BOOK. In Scotch practice. A book kept by the directors of chancery, in which are entered all non-entry and relief duties payable by heirs who take precepts from chancery. Bell's Dict.

RESPONDEAT OUSTER, (or QUOD RESPONDEAT OUSTER.) Lat. and L. Fr. In practice. The judgment for the plaintiff on a plea in abatement, that the defendant answer over; that is, answer in a better manner, or put in a more substantial plea. 3 Bl. Com. 303, 397.

Respondeat superior. The superior or master must answer. Let the principal answer. The principal or master must answer, or is responsible for the acts of his agent or servant. 2 Kent's Com. 600. Broom's Max. 374, 387, [668.] Fleta, lib. 2, c. 70, § 14. Story on Agency, § 308, 452. Expressed in law French, Respondera son soveraigne. Artic. sup. Chart. c. 18.

The rule of respondeat superior, or that the master shall be civilly liable for the tortious acts of his servant, is of universal application, whether the act be one of omission or commission; whether negligent, fraudulent or deceitful. If it be done in the course of his employment, the master is liable; and it makes no difference that the master did not authorize or even know of the servant's act or neglect; or even if he disapproved or forbade it, he is equally liable, if the act be done in the course of his servant's employment. Grier, J. 14 Howard's R. 486. The rule applies to municipal corporations, when in the exercise of ministerial or executive powers. 3 Comstock's R. 463. 1 Selden's R. 369. 4 Ohio St. R. 80. As to its applicability in general, see 1 Selden's R. 49. 4 Ohio St. R. 399. 5 Id. 38, 41. Held not to apply so as to make a public officer responsible for the misconduct or malfeasance of such persons as he is obliged to employ. 3 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 531. And see United States Digest, Master and Servant.

RESPONDENT. [Lat. respondens, from respondere, to answer.] In practice. A party answering. A respondent in admiralty answers to a defendant at common law and in equity. A party against whom an appeal is taken.

RESPONDENTIA. Lat. [from respondere, to answer.] In mercantile law. A loan of money upon the pledge of the cargo of a vessel, to be repaid with maritime interest, if the subject arrives safe, or if it shall not have been injured except by its own defect, or the fault of the master or mariners.* 3 Kent's Com. 354, 355. Called respondentia, because it is generally only a personal obligation on the borrower, who is bound to answer the contract. Id. ibid. 2 Bl. Com. 458. The contract is executed in the form of a bond, called a respondentia bond. 3 Kent's Com. 354. See Abbott on Ship. 150.

RESPONDES. L. Fr. Answer. Respondes oustre; answer over. Words of the court used in giving judgment. Of frequent occurrence in the Year Books. P. 3 Hen. VI. 13. T. 4 Hen. VI. 5, 11, et passim. M. 8 Hen. VI. 22. M. 20 Hen. VI. 23. R'nd's, R'n's, were contractions of the word. Respondez à v' peril. T. 1 Edw. II. 14.

RESPONSA PRUDENTUM. Lat. In the Roman law. Answers or opinions of lawyers, jurists or jurisconsults. One of the principal sources of Roman jurisprudence. 1 Kent's Com. 530, 532. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 23, § 34. Id. 31, § 43. Supposed to have partaken of the character of what are now called precedents or reports. Butler's Co. Litt. Note 253, lib. 3. Tayl. Civ. Law, 217, 218. See an example of a question and response, Dig. 28. 1. 27.

RESPONSALIS. L. Lat. In old English law. One who answered or gave answer for another, (qui responsum defert.) The term seems to be used by Glanville in the sense of attorney. Glanv. lib. 12, c. 1. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (5.) But Bracton makes a clear distinction between the two offices, and is followed by Fleta. Bract. fol. 212 b. But see Id. fol. 361 b. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 6. Lord Coke defines responsalis to be "he that was appointed by the tenant or defendant, in case of extremity and necessity, to allege the cause of the party's absence, and to certify the court upon what trial he will put himself, viz. the combat or the country." Co. Litt. 128 a.

In the canon law. A proctor; one who excuses an absent party. Cowell.

RESPONSIBLE. Able to respond; Able to pay a sum for which a person may become liable. 6 Foster's (N. H.) R. 527.

RESPONSIO. Lat. An answer. Responsio unius non omnino audiatur. The answer of one witness shall not be heard at all. A maxim of the Roman law of evidence. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 260.

RESPONSURUS. Lat. In old practice. To answer. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 11. The same with ad respondendum, (q. v.)

RESSEANT. L. Fr. Continually abiding; resident. Kelham.

RESSET. In Scotch law. Receipt or harboring of a felon; concealment of felony. Resset of thift; concealment of theft. Scott's Minstrelsy of Scottish Border, Introd. App. viii. See Reset.

"REST and RESIDUE," in a will, may in certain connections carry a fee; but the words attain their force from their juxtaposition with other words which fix the sense in which the testator has used them. Story, J. 10 Wheaton's R. 204, 235. See 1 Jarman on Wills, 658, 661, (567, 569, Perkins' ed.)

RESTITUERE. Lat. In the civil law. To restore. Distinguished from exhibere. Dig. 50. 16. 22. As to the construction of this word, see Id. 50. 16. 35, 75, 81, 246. Id. 50. 17. 173. 1.

RESTITUTIO IN INTEGRUM. Lat. In the civil law. Restitution to a former condition. Dig. 4. 1. The rescinding of a contract or transaction, on grounds of equity, and restoring the parties to the situation in which they were before the contract was made, or the transaction took place. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 6, § 1150.

The restoration of a cause to its first state, on petition of the party who was cast, in order to have a second hearing. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 9, num. 49.

RESTITUTION. [Lat. restitutio, from restituere, to restore.] The yielding up again or restoring of any thing unlawfully taken from another. Cowell. The putting one in possession of lands or tenements who has been unlawfully disseised of them. Id. If after money has been levied under a writ of execution, the judgment be reversed by writ of error, or set aside, the party against whom the execution was sued out shall have restitution. 2 Tidd's Pr. 1033. 1 Burr. Pr. 292. So, on conviction of a felon, immediate restitution of such of the goods stolen as are brought into court, will be ordered to be made to the several prosecutors. 4 Steph. Com. 434.

RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS. In English ecclesiastical law. A species of matrimonial cause or suit which is brought whenever either a husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lives separate from the other without any sufficient reason; in which case the ecclesiastical jurisdiction will compel them to come together again, if either party be weak enough to desire it, contrary to the inclination of the other. 3 Bl. Com. 94.

RESTITUTION, Writ of. In practice. A writ which lies, after the reversal of a judgment, to restore a party to all that he has lost by occasion of the judgment. 2 Tidd's Pr. 1186.

RESTRAINING STATUTE. A statute which restrains the common law, where it is too lax and luxuriant. 1 Bl. Com. 87. Statutes restraining the powers of corporations in regard to leases have been so called in England. 2 Id. 319, 320.

In some of the United States, statutes have been enacted, restraining the powers of banking corporations. See the New-York Restraining Act, 1 Rev. St. [711—713,] 707—711. Cleaveland on the Banking System, 39—49.

RESULTING TRUST. A trust raised by implication, for the benefit of a party granting an estate.* Thus, if the legal estate in land be conveyed to A. upon such trusts as the grantor shall thereafter appoint; as such trusts are, prior to appointment, incapable of taking effect, and as it is clear that A. is not intended to hold the land for his own benefit, there arises by necessary implication, until the appointment be made, a trust for the grantor. 1 Steph. Com. 346. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 558, § 1777 a. Cruise's Dig. tit. xii. ch. 1, sec. 61.

Various kinds of trust are ranked under this head in the books, such as trusts raised by implication for the benefit of a person who advances the purchase money of an estate, &c. 1 White's Equity Cases, 138, and notes. 4 Kent's Com. 305, 306. Cruise's Dig. tit. xii. c. 1, sec. 40, et seq. But these are rather implied than resulting trusts, properly so called; the term resulting, in strictness, importing a going back or reverting of an estate to the party from whom it proceeded. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 571, § 1796.

RESULTING USE. A use which returns back to a party conveying an estate.* Thus, if A. conveys by feoffment or lease and release to B. in fee, without consideration, and without declaring any use, there will be a resulting use, by implication of law, to himself, the grantor, which use the statute will execute accordingly. 1 Steph. Com. 498. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 470, § 1641, et seq. In fact, no estate passes in such case from the grantor, but he remains seised as before. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 294, [297.]

RE-SUMMONITIO. L. Lat. [from re-summonere, to re-summon.] In old practice. A re-summons; a second summons, where the party did not appear on the first. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 3, § 2.

RE-SUMMONS. [L. Lat. re-summonitio.] In practice. A second summons. The calling a person a second time to answer an action, where the first summons is defeated upon any occasion, as the death of a party, or the like. Cowell.

RESUMPTION. [L. Lat. resumptio.] In old English law. The taking again into the king's hands such lands or tenements as before, upon false suggestion, or other error, he had delivered to the heir, or granted by letters patent to any man. Stat. 31 Hen. VI. c. 7. Cowell.

RESYAUNT. L. Fr. and O. Eng. Resident. "By people dwelling and resyaunt in the same counties." Stat. 8 Hen. VI. c. 7.

RETAINER. The retaining or keeping by an executor or administrator, out of the personal estate in his hands, of so much as will pay a debt due himself by the testator or intestate; a species of redress by operation of law.* 3 Bl. Com. 18. If a person indebted to another makes his creditor or debtee his executor, or if such a creditor obtains letters of administration to his debtor; in these cases, the law gives him a remedy for his debt, by allowing him to retain so much as will pay himself, before any other creditors whose debts are of equal degree. Id. ibid. 2 Id. 511. 2 Steph. Com. 247. 3 Id. 378. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 534, 668. 2 Williams on Exec. 894.

In New-York, executors or administrators cannot retain in preference to other debts of equal degree. 2 Rev. St. [88,] 29, § 33.

RETAINER. In practice. The engagement by a client, of an attorney, solicitor or counsel to act in his behalf; as to institute, or to defend a suit, to try a cause or the like. The special authority given by a client to an attorney or solicitor, to act in his behalf.* This authority is rarely given in writing, though the propriety of written retainers has been contended for by high authority on such subjects. 2 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 18, 19. 3 Id. 115.

In English practice, a retainer, as applied to counsel, is commonly used to signify a notice given to a counsel by an attorney on behalf of the plaintiff or defendant in an action, in order to secure his services as advocate when the cause comes on for trial. Holthouse. See 2 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 71.

RETAINING FEE. [Lat. merces retinens.] In practice. A fee given to a counsel to secure his services, or rather, as it has been said, to prevent the opposite side from engaging them. Brande. The first fee given to any serjeant or counsellor at law, whereby to make him sure that he shall not be on the contrary part, (honorarium seu premium causidici præcedaneum, quo clienti suo obligatur ne adversarii causam agat.) Cowell.

RETALLIA. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. retailler, to cut again.] In old English law. Retail; the cutting up again, or division of a commodity into smaller parts. Nec in grosso, nec ad retalliam; neither in gross [by wholesale] nor at retail. Reg. Orig. 184.

RETARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To suspect; to accuse. Retatus de murdro; accused of murder. Assis. de Clarendon, temp. Hen. II. § 1. Spelman. De furto retatus; charged with theft. Cowell. See Rettatus.

RETEINER, Retener. L. Fr. To retain, or keep back; to detain. Kelham.

RETENEMENTUM. In old English law. Restraint; detainment; withholding. A full and absolute conveyance was anciently made in this phrase,—sine ullo retenemento, (without any withholding.) Cowell.

RETENTION. The right of retaining property, until a debt due from the owner of such property to him who retains it, is paid. Holthouse. See Lien.

RETONDERE. L. Lat. In old English law. To clip. Retonsus; clipped. De moneta retonsa; respecting clipped money. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 128.

RETONSOR. L. Lat. [from retondere, q. v.] In old English law. A clipper of money. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 122.

RETORNA BREVIUM. L. Lat. In old practice. The returns of writs. The retorna brevium day was the third day of the term, so called, because the sheriff on that day returned his writs into court. Crabb's Hist. 218.

RETORNARE, Returnare. L. Lat. In old English practice. To return (a writ;) to return in execution of a writ. Ad brevia falsum retornant responsum; make a false return to the writs. Stat. Westm. c. 39. Retornaverit; shall have returned. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 20. Retornâsti; you returned. Id. § 21. Retornabile; returnable. Reg. Orig. 276.

To return, or restore. Retornari facias; you cause to be returned. Reg. Jud. 4.

RETORNUM. L. Lat. In old practice. Return; a return. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 45, §§ 4, 7.

RETOUNDER. L. Fr. To clip (money.) Ceux que averount nostre monoye retoundu; those who have clipped our money. Britt. c. 4.

RETOUR. In Scotch law. To return a writ or brieve to the office in chancery from which it issued.* Hubback's Evid. of Succession, 597. See Retour of service.

RETOUR OF SERVICE. In Scotch law. An authenticated copy of the verdict of a jury (called a service) taken under a brieve of succession, by which the legal character of a party as heir is judicially established.* Hubback's Evid. of Succession, 597. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 3, p. 80. See Bell's Dict.

RETRACTO O TANTEO. Span. In Spanish law. The right of revoking a contract of sale; the right of redemption of a thing sold. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 13, c. 2, § 4.

RETRACTUS AQUÆ. L. Lat. In old English law. Retreat of the water.* Ebb, or low water; the retreat of tide. Placit. Cor. Rege, Pasch. 30 Edw. I. apud Cantuar. Rot. 58. Cowell.

RETRACTUS FEUDALIS. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. The power which a superior possessed of paying off a debt due to an adjudging creditor, and taking a conveyance to the adjudication. Bell's Dict.

RETRAHERE. Lat. [from re, back, and trahere, to draw.] In old English practice. To draw back; to withdraw. Si simpliciter se retrahat à brevi, non tamen se retrahit ab actione,—nisi expresse dicat quod se retrahat ab utroque; if he merely withdraw himself from the writ, he does not thereby withdraw himself from the action, unless he expressly says that he withdraws himself from both. Bract. fol. 182 b. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7, § 1.

RETRAHO. Lat. In old practice. I withdraw. Sed quicunque et qualitercunque se retraxerit, simpliciter sive dicat retraho me de brevi isto, vel recedo, vel nolo amplius sequi, vel alio modo, impune non recedit; but whoever he may be, and in whatever way he may have withdrawn himself, whether he simply say, "I withdraw myself from that writ," or "I retire," or "I will not further prosecute," or in any other way, he shall not withdraw with impunity. Bract. fol. 182 b. This passage exhibits the original form of the proceedings by retraxit and nolle prosequi. And see Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7, § 1.

RETRAICTER, Retrair, Retreir, Retrere. L. Fr. [from Lat. retrahere, q. v.] To draw back; to withdraw. Kelham. L. Fr. Dict.

RETRAIT. Fr. [from retraire, to draw back.] In old French and Canadian law. The taking back of a fief by the seignior, in case of alienation by the vassal. Dunkin's Address, 93.

A right of preëmption by the seignior, in case of sale of the land by the grantee. Id. 40.

RETRAXIT. L. Lat. [from retrahere, q. v.] In practice. (He withdrew, or has withdrawn.) An open and voluntary renunciation by a plaintiff, of his suit, in court, made when the trial is called on, by which he forever loses his action, or is barred from commencing another action for the same cause. 3 Bl. Com. 296. 2 Arch. Pr. 250. So called from the emphatic word of entry on the record, that the plaintiff withdrew, or has withdrawn. The words actually used by the plaintiff appear to have been "retraho me," (I withdraw myself,) or "retraho me de brevi isto," (I withdraw myself from this writ.) See Retraho. The proceeding by retraxit has, for the most part, become obsolete. See 17 Georgia R. 249.

RETRERE, Retreir, Retreher. L. Fr. To draw back. Britt. c. 120. Yearb. M. 3 Edw. III. 40.

RETRET. L. Fr. [from retrere, q. v.] Retreat; the drawing back or ebbing of water. De un flot, et d' un retret d' la meer; of one flow or flood, and one ebb of the sea. Britt. c. 123. See Retractus aquæ, Recessus maris.

RETTE. L. Fr. In old English law. An accusation or charge. Quant clerk est prise par rette de felony; when a clerk is taken on a charge of felony. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 2.

RETTER. L. Fr. In old English law. To accuse; to charge; to lay to the charge; to account; in old English, to arret, or arrect. Ceo purra il retter à sa negligence; he must charge this to his own negligence. Britt. c. 59. Ceo poies retter à vostre folly demesne; you may lay this to your own folly. Yearb. H. 10 Edw. III. 8. Il serra rette la folly; it shall be accounted the folly. Litt. sect. 261.

RETTUM. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. rette, q. v.] In old English law. An accusation; a charge. Si clericus aliquis pro crimine aliquo vel retto—arrestatus fuerit; if any clerk shall have been arrested for any crime or charge. Stat. Marlbr. c. 28, [27.] See Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 27, note. Nisi capti sunt per speciale preceptum nostrum, vel capitalis justitiarii nostri, vel pro morte hominis, vel pro foresta nostra, vel pro aliquo alio retto quare secundum consuetudinem Angliæ non sunt replegiabiles; unless they have been taken by our special command, or that of our chief justice, or for the death of man, or for our forest, or for any other charge wherefor, according to the custom of England, they are not repleviable. Reg. Orig. 77 b. Dyer, 61. The excepting clause in the old writ de homine replegiando. In Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium, the word retto in this passage is translated right. F. N. B. 66 F. And so in the English translation of Dyer.

RETURN. [L. Lat. retornum, returnum, retornatio; from L. Fr. returner, (q. v.) or retour, a turning back.] In practice. Strictly, the carrying or sending back of a writ to the court from which it issued, by the officer to whom it was directed, in compliance with its mandate to that effect; the sheriff being reqired to have the writ itself in court on a certain day.* 3 Bl. Com. 273, 275. Steph. Pl. 21. The return, however, as actually made, is not to the court itself, but to the office of its clerk, which is considered as representing the court for this purpose.

The answer made in writing by a sheriff, or other officer, to the court out of which a writ directed to him has been issued, stating what he has done in execution of it, or how he has executed it; called by the civilians, certificatorium. This answer is endorsed on the writ in a certain prescribed form, and is thus remitted or sent back with it to the court.* Id. ibid.

The day in term on which sheriffs are required to bring in their writs, and report how far they have obeyed them. 3 Bl. Com. 275, 277. Spelman, voc. Retorna. Otherwise called the return day, (q. v.)

To RETURN. [L. Fr. returner; L. Lat. retornare, returnare, mittere.] In practice. To remit or send back a writ to the court out of which it issued, with a memorandum or certificate endorsed, of the manner in which it has been executed.* "Whatever the sheriff does in pursuance of the writ, he must return or certify to the court, together with the writ itself." 3 Bl. Com. 273.

RETURN DAY. In practice. The day on which a writ is appointed or required to be returned. Return days are certain stated or fixed days in term on which writs are returnable.* 3 Bl. Com. 277. In modern practice, the use of fixed return days has been, to a considerable extent, dispensed with. See Stat. 2 Will. IV. c. 39.

RETURNABLE. In practice. To be returned; appointed or required to be returned.* 3 Bl. Com. 277.

RETURNARE. L. Lat. In old English practice. To return; to re-deliver. Returnabit domino averia capta; he shall return to the lord the beasts taken. Bract. fol. 156. Returnari facias; you cause to be returned. Reg. Jud. 61 b.

RETURNER. L. Fr. To return. Si le visconte returne que el defendaunt soit clerke; if the sheriff return that the defendant is a clerk. Britt. c. 26.

RETURNUM, Retornum. L. Lat. In old practice. Return; a return. Returnum brevium; return of writs. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 19, § 4.

Returnum (or retornum) irreplegiable; return irreplevisable. A final return of goods or chattels, admitting of no replevin.* The name of a writ which issued for a defendant in replevin, where he had judgment on verdict or demurrer, or where the plaintiff, after obtaining a writ of second deliverance, was non-suited a second time. 3 Bl. Com. 150. Reg. Jud. 27.

REUS. [from res, a thing, matter, suit.] In the civil and canon law. A person from whom some thing is demanded by suit; a person complained of by suit; a person judicially called upon to make satisfaction for an injury; a person sued; a defendant. Calv. Lex. Bract. fol. 106, 106 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 2. 3 Bl. Com. 25. 4 Reeves' Hist. 11. Favorabiliores rei potius quam actores habentur. Defendants are regarded more favorably than plaintiffs. Dig. 50. 17. 125. Reus excipiendo fit actor. The defendant, by excepting or pleading, becomes a plaintiff; that is, where, instead of simply denying the plaintiff's action, he sets up some new matter in defence, he is bound to establish it by proof, just as a plaintiff is bound to prove his cause of action. Bounier Tr. des Preuves, §§ 152, 320. Best on Evid. 294, § 252.

A person judicially accused of a crime; a person criminally proceeded against. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 13, num. 7.

A party to a suit, whether plaintiff or defendant; a litigant. This was the ancient sense of the word. Calv. Lex. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 16, § 841.

A party to a contract. Reus stipulandi; a party stipulating, (qui stipulatur;) the party who asked the question in the form prescribed for stipulations. Reus promittendi; a party promising, (qui promittit;) the party who answered the question. Inst. 3. 16. Dig. 45. 2. 1. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 16, num. 3. Reus credendi; the party crediting; a creditor. Reus debendi; the party owing; a debtor. Id. ibid. Calv. Lex. Prateus.

REVE, or GREVE. [Lat. gerefa, or refa, from ræfan, to seize.] In English law. A chief officer or superintendent, (præpositus, præfectus.) Properly, according to Spelman, a collector or exactor of public monies or fines.

Shire-reve; the reve or chief officer of the shire, (pagi præpositus.) Hence sheriff.

Tun-greve; the reve or chief officer of a town, (villæ præpositus.) Afterwards simply called reve, and bailiff. Spelman. See Reeve.

REVE LAND. In Saxon law. Land over which the shire-reve, or sheriff, had jurisdiction. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 5. This word occurs in Domesday Book, and is explained by Lord Coke to be "land held by socage." Co. Litt. 86 a. It is otherwise explained to be, land left in charge of the reve or bailiff of a manor. Cowell.

REVE MOTE. In Saxon law. The court of the reve, reeve, or shire-reve. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 6.

REVENDICATION. In the civil law. The right of a vendor to reclaim goods sold, out of the possession of the purchaser, where the price was not paid. Story's Confl. Laws, § 401. Wharton's Lex.

REVENIR, Revener. L. Fr. To come back; to return. Kelham. L. Fr. Dict.

REVENUE. L. Fr. and Eng. [from revenir, q. v.] That which returns, or is returned; a rent, (reditus.) Income; annual profit received from lands or other property.* Cowell.

REVERA. Lat. In truth; in fact. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 21.

To REVERSE. To turn back; to act in an opposite direction; to undo or annul, on the ground of error.

REVERSER. In Scotch law. The proprietor of an estate who grants a wadset (or mortgage) of his lands, and who has a right, on repayment of the money advanced to him, to be replaced in his right. Bell's Dict.

REVERSIO. L. Lat. [from reverti, to return.] In old English law. The returning of land to the donor. Fleta, lib. 3, cc. 10, 12.

REVERSION. [Lat. reversio, from reverti, to return.] Literally, a returning; or that which returns.* The returning of land into the possession of the donor, or his heirs, after the gift is ended. Co. Litt. 142 b.—The residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. 2 Bl. Com. 175. Thus, where a lease for life or years is made by a person seised in fee, the reversion or residue of the fee continues in the lessor, and on the expiration of the lease, the possession returns to him.*

Mr. Stephen, in his New Commentaries, substitutes in place of Blackstone's definition, the following: "An estate in reversion is where any estate is derived, by grant or otherwise, out of a larger one, leaving in the original owner an ulterior estate immediately expectant on that which is so derived; the latter interest is called the particular estate, (as being only a small part or particula of the original one,) and the ulterior interest, the reversion." 1 Steph. Com. 290.—The Revised Statutes of New-York have defined a reversion to be "the residue of an estate left in the grantor, or his heirs, or in the heirs of a testator, commencing in possession on the determination of a particular estate granted or devised." 1 Rev. St. [723,] 718, § 12. Perhaps the briefest definition, consistent with retaining the radical idea of the word, is,—"a return of an estate to the original or general owner, or his heirs, after a limited or less estate carved out of it, and conveyed by him, has determined." See 4 Kent's Com. 354.

REVERSIONARY INTEREST. The interest which a person has in the reversion of lands or other property. A right to the future enjoyment of property, at present in the possession or occupation of another. Holthouse. See Reversion.

REVERSIONER. A person having the reversion of an estate; a person entitled to a reversion. See 2 Bl. Com. 176.

REVERTER. L. Fr. and Eng. The reverting or going back of lands to a donor, his heirs or assigns.* 3 Bl. Com. 192. See Formedon in the reverter.

REVERTI. Lat. In old English law. To return. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 10, § 1.

REVEST. To vest again. A seisin is said to re-vest, where it is acquired a second time by the party out of whom it has been devested. 1 Roper's Husb. & Wife, 353.

REVESTIRE. L. Lat. In old European law. To return or resign an investiture, seisin or possession that has been received; to re-invest; to re-enfeoff. Spelman.

REVIEW, Bill of. In equity practice. A bill, in the nature of a writ of error, filed to procure an examination and alteration or reversal of a decree made upon a former bill, which decree has been signed and enrolled. Story's Eq. Pl. § 403.

REVIEW, Commission of. In English ecclesiastical law. A commission formerly sometimes granted, in extraordinary cases, to revise the sentence of the court of delegates, when it was apprehended they had been led into a material error. 3 Bl. Com. 67.

REVISING BARRISTERS. In English law. Barristers appointed to revise the lists of voters for county and borough members of parliament, and who hold courts for that purpose in the autumn throughout the country. Wharton's Lex.

REVIVOR, Bill of. In equity practice. A bill filed to revive and continue the proceedings, whenever there is an abatement of a suit, before its final consummation, by the death or marriage of one of the original parties.* Story's Eq. Pl. 354.

REVOCATION. [Lat. revocatio, from revocare, to call back.] The calling back of a thing granted or act done, thereby annulling it, or putting an end to its legal effect. The most important applications of this word are to testamentary dispositions, to agencies and powers; but it is also sometimes applied in practice, as to judges' orders, &c. See Revoke. As to the revocation of a will, see 1 Jarman on Wills, 106—173, (150—205, Perkins' ed. 1859.) 4 Kent's Com. 520—534.

REVOKE. [from Lat. revocare, from re, again, and vocare, to call.] To call back; to recall; to annul an act by calling or taking it back. The word is properly expressive of the voluntary act of a party in matters within his discretion.

REWARD. [Lat. præmium, merces.] Compensation or remuneration for services. Frequently used in law, in connection with the word fee.

A sum of money paid or taken for doing or forbearing to do some act.

REWME. O. Eng. [from L. Fr. reaume.] In old records. Realm; kingdom. "In the name of Fader, Son and Holy Ghost, I, Henry of Lancaster, chalenge this rewme of Ynglonde and the croun, with all the members and the appurtenances, als I that am descendit be right line of the blode comyng fro the gude Lord King Henry therde, and thorgho that right that God, of his grace, hath sent mee, with helpe of my kyn and of my frendes to recover it; the which rewme was in poynt to be ondone for defaut of governance and undoyng of the gude laws." Claim of Henry, Duke of Lancaster, (afterwards Henry IV.) to the crown of England. 1 State Trials, 152.

REX. Lat. In old English law. King; a king; the king. Rex debet esse sub lege, quia lex facit regem; the king ought to be under the law, because the law makes the king. 1 Bl. Com. 239.

Rex non potest peccare. The king cannot do wrong; the king can do no wrong. 2 Roll. R. 304. An ancient and fundamental principle of the English Constitution. Jenk. Cent. 9, case 16. Id. 308, case 84. 1 Bl. Com. 246. This maxim is explained by Blackstone to mean, first, that whatever is exceptionable in the conduct of public affairs, is not to be imputed to the king, nor is he answerable personally for it to his people; and secondly, that the prerogative of the crown extends not to do any injury; it is created for the benefit of the people, and therefore cannot be exerted to their prejudice. Id. ibid. And see a more detailed explanation in Broom's Maxims, 23—26, [40—45.]

Rex nunquam moritur. The king never dies. Broom's Max. 22. The law of England ascribes to the king, in his political capacity, an absolute immortality; and immediately upon the decease of the reigning prince, in his natural capacity, the kingly dignity and the prerogatives and political capacities of the supreme magistrate, by act of law, without any interregnum or interval, vest at once in his successor, who is, eo instante, king, to all intents and purposes. 1 Bl. Com. 249.

RHODIAN LAW. [Lat. Lex Rhodia.] A code of maritime law, established and promulgated by the Rhodians, or inhabitants of the Island of Rhodes, and the oldest collection of the kind now known. Only some fragments of it, however, have been preserved, which are contained in a single title of the Pandects. Dig. 14, 2; De lege Rhodia de Jactu. 3 Kent's Com. 3, 4.

A collection of laws, published in 1561 and 1596, under the title of Rhodian laws, has been recognised by some eminent jurists as the ancient Rhodian laws, but pronounced by others to be spurious. 3 Kent's Com. 4, and note. The correct opinion, probably, on this point, is that of M. Pardessus,—that it is a genuine compilation, but of comparatively modern date, being a collection of the laws and usages which prevailed in the Mediterranean during the middle ages. Lois Mar. tom. i. 336. 3 Kent's Com. ub. sup.

RIBALDUS. L. Lat. [from Fr. ribauld, ribaud.] In old European law. A worthless person; a vagabond; a rogue or ruffian. Spelman. It was not always, however, used in a bad sense, but sometimes denoted an inferior attendant or servant. Id.

RIBAUD, Rybaud. L. Fr. A vile or worthless person; a vagabond; a ruffian. Britt. c. 25.

RICOHOME. Span. In Spanish law. A nobleman; a count or baron. White's New Recop. b. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 4.

RIDER. A separate piece of parchment tacked to a bill in parliament, containing a new clause added after the bill has been read a third time.* 1 Bl. Com. 183. It seems to have been also spelled ridder.

RIDER (or RIDDER) ROLL. In old English practice. A schedule or small piece of parchment added to some part of a roll or record. Cowell. Blount. A supplementary roll. 2 Tidd's Pr. 730.

RIDING. A division of the county of York in England, of which there are three; the East Riding, North Riding and West Riding. Considered to be a corruption of trithing, (q. v.) 3 Bl. Com. 116.

RIEN CULP. L. Fr. In old pleading. Not guilty. Yearb. H. 9 Hen. VI. 16. M. 10 Hen. VI. 53.

RIEN DIT. L. Fr. In old pleading. Says nothing, (nil dicit.) Yearb. M. 8 Hen. VI. 16.

RIEN LUY DOIT. L. Fr. In old pleading. Owes him nothing. The plea of nil debet. Yearb. M. 3 Hen. VI. 16.

RIENS, Rien, Ryen. L. Fr. Nothing. Litt. sect. 53.

RIENS EN ARRERE. L. Fr. Nothing in arrear. A plea in an action of debt for arrearages of account. Cowell.

A plea in an action of debt for rent. 1 Tidd's Pr. 650. Roscoe's Real Act. 475.

A plea to an avowry in replevin. Id. 638. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 566. A quasi general issue. 2 Selden's R. 141.

RIENS LOUR DEUST. L. Fr. Not their debt. An old form of the plea of nil debet. 2 Reeves' Hist. 332.

RIENS PASSA PER LE FAIT. L. Fr. Nothing passed by the deed. A plea by which a party might avoid the operation of a deed, which had been enrolled or acknowledged in court; the plea of non est factum not being allowed in such case. Yearb. 9 Hen. VI. 60. 1 Gilb. Evid. 145. See 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 399, [422.]

RIENS PER DISCENT. L. Fr. Nothing by discent. The plea of an heir, where he is sued for his ancestor's debt, and has no land from him by descent, or assets in his hands. Cro. Car. 151. 1 Tidd's Pr. 645. 2 Id. 937.

RIER COUNTY. [L. Lat. retrocomitatus, q. v.] In old English law. After-county; i. e. after the end of the county court. A time and place appointed by the sheriff for the receipt of the king's money after the end of his county, or county court. Cowell. Fleta (lib. 2, c. 67,) calls it the day after the county, (dies crastinus post comitatum.) It is opposed to open county, (that is, open county court,) in the statute 2 Edw. III. c. 5.

RIFLETUM. L. Lat. In old records. A coppice or thicket. Cowell.

RIFFLURA, Rufflura, Ruflura. L. Lat. [from O. Eng. rufflyn, to disorder.] In old English criminal law. A slight removal of the skin; a scratch, (scarificatio, decortatio.) Bract. fol. 144, 145. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, § 3. Spelman.

RIGA. L. Lat. In old European law. A species of service and tribute rendered to their lords by agricultural tenants. Supposed by Spelman to be derived from the name of a certain portion of land, called in England a rig or ridge, an elevated piece of ground, formed out of several furrows.

RIGHT. [Sax. riht, Germ. recht, L. Fr. droit, droict, dreit, dreyt; from Lat. rectus, rectum, straight, upright; Lat. jus.] Justice; equity. This seems to have been the sense of the word in the old writ of right; the person to whom it was directed being commanded to "do full right (plenum rectum teneatis) to the demandant," "that we may hear no more clamor thereupon for want of right," (pro defectu recti.) Reg. Orig. 1. The word jus, it will be seen, is not used. See Writ of right.

That which one person ought to have or receive from another, it being withheld from him, or not in his possession. In this sense, right has the force of claim, and is properly expressed by the Latin jus. Lord Coke considers this to be the proper signification of the word, especially in writs and pleadings, where an estate is turned to a right, as by discontinuance, disseisin, &c. Co. Litt. 345 a.

That interest which a person actually has in any subject of property, entitling him to hold or convey it at pleasure.* An estate in esse in conveyances. Co. Litt. 345 a. In this sense, right (jus) has the force of ownership or property. Lord Coke, comparing the terms right and title, observes that "title is the more general word, for every right is a title, but every title is not such a right for which an action lies." Co. Litt. 345 b. Sir Matthew Hale distinguishes between the right of an estate and the title of an estate. Hale's Anal. sect. xxxii.

That which a person, having it, is entitled to keep and enjoy, and to be protected by law in its enjoyment; as the right of personal liberty, and other rights of persons. See 1 Bl. Com. 129.

An interest in a thing; a claim to hold or use it; or to have some benefit in or from it.

RIGHT. [L. Lat. rettum, q. v.] In old English law. An accusation or charge of crime. F. N. B. 66 F.

RIGHT AND TITLE. A devise by a testator of "all my right" will carry an estate of inheritance, if there be nothing in the other parts of the will to limit or control the operation of the words. 4 Kent's Com. 535. A devise of freehold lands, with "all right and title" to the same, carries the fee. 4 Moore & P. 445. 2 Jarman on Wills, 192, (141, Perkins' ed.)

RIGHT OF POSSESSION, [L. Lat. jus possessionis,] considered separately from the actual possession of lands, is the right of a person disseised or kept out of possession by another, to recover the possession by action. United with possession, it is considered by Blackstone the second step to a good and perfect title. 2 Bl. Com. 196.

RIGHT OF PROPERTY. [Lat. jus proprietatis.] The mere right of property in land; the abstract right which remains to the owner after he has lost the right of possession, and to recover which the writ of right was given. See 2 Bl. Com. 197—199. United with possession, and the right of possession, this right constitutes a complete title to lands, tenements and hereditaments. Id. ibid.

RIGHT OF WAY. See Way.

RIGHT TO BEGIN. [Lat. ordo incipiendi.] In English practice. The right to open a case, or the evidence in a case, at the trial. So far as the pleadings are concerned, the right to begin is always the plaintiff's, as the pleadings are always opened by him or his counsel, and never by the defendant. And in regard to the proofs, the plaintiff also has, in most cases, the right to begin, even where the affirmative of the issue is, in point of form, with the defendant. See Best on Evid. 474—478, §§ 433—435. See 5 Ad. & Ell. (N. S.) 447. 9 Grattan's R. 16. United States Digest, Trial.

Lawful; proper; true; as right heirs, (Fr. droits heirs et vrayes.) Britt. c. 119.

Legal, as distinguished from equitable. See Dominium directum.

RIGHTS OF PERSONS. [Lat. jura personarum.] Rights which concern and are annexed to the persons of men. 1 Bl. Com. 122.

RIGHTS OF THINGS. [Lat. jura rerum.] Rights which may be acquired over external objects or things unconnected with the person.* 1 Bl. Com. 122.

RIGOR JURIS. L. Lat. Strictness of law. Latch, 150. Distinguished from gratia curiæ; favor of the court. Id.

RINGA. L. Lat. In old English law. A belt, or girdle; a sword-belt. Bract. fol. 5 b. Spelman.

RINGS, GIVING. In English practice. A custom observed by serjeants at law, on being called to that degree or order. The rings are given to the judges, and bear certain mottoes according to the fancy of the giver. See the English reports, passim. This is a relic of the very imposing ceremonies once connected with the assumption of the degree, which are detailed with great minuteness in some of the old reports. See Serjeant at law. The giving of rings was formerly a very considerable item in the expenses incurred on such occasions, every newly created serjeant being required to make presents of gold rings to the value, in the whole, of forty pounds at the least, English money, or nearly 200*l.* in modern currency. Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 50, and note. "I very well remember," observes Sir John Fortescue, "when I took upon me the state and degree of a serjeant at law, that my bill for gold rings came to fifty pounds." Id. ibid.

RIOT. [L. Lat. riota, riottum, from Fr. riotte, a brawl, or a band by which things are tied in bundles.] In criminal law. The forcible or violent doing of an act against the peace, by three or more persons assembled together for that purpose.* Cowell. —The assembling of three or more persons against the public peace, and their unlawful action thereupon. Spelman. A riot, being usually the act of large numbers of persons, is otherwise described as "a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons, or more, assembling together of their own authority, with an intent mutually to assist one another against any who shall oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful." 4 Steph. Com. 278. 1 Russell on Crimes, 266, (Am. ed. 1850,) and notes. Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, § 2474, et seq. Id. §§ 2456—2472.

RIOTOSE. L. Lat. Riotously. A formal and essential word in old indictments for riots. 2 Stra. 834. Riotosè et routosè; riotously and routously. 2 Salk. 593.

RIOTOUS ASSEMBLY. In English criminal law. The unlawful assembling of twelve persons or more, to the disturbance of the peace, and not dispersing upon proclamation. 4 Bl. Com. 142. 4 Steph. Com. 273.

RIOTOUSLY. In criminal pleading. A technical word properly used in an indictment for a riot, and ex vi termini implying violence. 2 Chitt. Crim. Law, 488, 490, note (f.) 2 Sess. Cas. 13, cited ibid. In the English forms, "riotously and routously" is the expression invariably used. 2 Chitt. C. L. ub. sup. 3 Burr. 1262. And this has been adopted in American practice. Wharton's Prec. of Indict. 849, et seq. (ed. 1857.)

RIPA. Lat. In the civil law. The bank of a river; that which contains or encloses a river at its fullest height, (ea quæ plenissimum flumen continet.) Dig. 43. 12. 3. 1. That which contains the river, holding the natural force of its current, (id quod flumen continet, naturalem rigorem cursus sui tenens.) Id. 43. 12. 1. 5. Riparum usus publicus est jure gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis; by the law of nations, the use of a river's banks is as public as that of the river itself. Inst. 2. 1. 4. Dig. 1. 8. 5, pr. Bract. fol. 8. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, § 5. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 6, § 12.

The bank, side or border of a port; a wharf. Hale de Jur. Mar. pars 2, (de port. mar.) c. 6.

RIPARIA, Rivaria. L. Lat. In old English law. A river. Nec villa nec homo distringatur facere pontes ad riparias nisi qui ex antiquo et de jure facere debet. Nulla riparia de cetero defendatur, &c.; nor shall a vill nor a man be distrained to make bridges at rivers, unless one who ought to do it according to custom and law. No river shall henceforth be defended, &c. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. cc. 15, 16. Pontes ad riparias. *Id. R'N'S. A contraction of Respondes, (answer.) Yearb. II. 3 Hen. VI. 32.

ROAD. [Fr. rade.] In maritime law. An open passage of the sea, that receives its denomination commonly from some part adjacent; which, though it lie out at sea, yet, in respect of the situation of the land adjacent, and the depth and wideness of the place, is a safe place for the common riding or anchoring of ships, as Dover Road, Kirkley Road, &c. Hale de Jur. Mar. pars 2, (de port. mar.) c. 2.

ROADSTED. In maritime law. A known general station for ships, (statio tutissima nautis,) notoriously used as such, and distinguished by the name; and not any spot where an anchor will find bottom and fix itself. Sir Wm. Scott, (The Rebekah,) 1 Rob. Adm. R. 232.

ROBA, Rauba. Ital. and Lat. In old English law. A garment; a robe. Spelman. Unam robam de viridi; one robe of green. Bract. fol. 146.

ROBARIA. L. Lat. [from roba, a robe or garment.] In old English law. Robbery. In its original sense, the violent taking of one's robe, (roba) or garment. Spelman. Bracton writes the word roberia, (q. v.) Fleta, robberia, (q. v.)

ROBATOR. L. Lat. [from roba, a robe.] In old English law. A robber. Robatores; robbers. Hoveden, part. post. in Ric. I. A. D. 1198. Sturdy thieves, who falling upon the persons of men, plunder them of their goods (latrones validi, qui in personas hominum insilientes, bona sua diripiunt.) Spelman. So called originally, because they spoiled travellers of their robes, or garments. Id. Bracton writes the word robbator, (q. v.)

ROBBARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To rob; to take away violently. Docere oportet quod de custodia sua robbata fuerit; he ought to show that it was robbed out of his custody. Bract. fol. 146. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 39, § 3.

ROBBATOR. L. Lat. [from robbare, q. v.] In old English law. A robber. Robbatores et burglatores; robbers and burglars. Bract. fol. 115 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 9.

ROBBER. L. Fr. To rob. Robbe; robbed. Emble ou robbe; stolen or robbed. Britt. c. 4. Robbans; robbing. Id. c. 15.

ROBBERIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Robbery. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 39.

ROBBERY. [L. Fr. robberie; L. Lat. robaria, roberia, robberia, (qq. v.;) Lat. rapina.] In criminal law. A felonious taking away of a man's goods from his person. Co. Litt. 288 a.—The felonious and forcible taking from the person of another, of goods or money, to any value, by violence or putting him in fear. 4 Bl. Com. 242.—A felonious taking of money or goods of any value from the person of another, or in his presence, against his will, by violence, or putting him in fear. 1 Russell on Crimes, 867. Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, § 1695—1704.

This word is a slight variation from the Fr. robberie, (probably its immediate origin,) and is derived by Spelman (through its L. Lat. form, robaria, or roberia,) from roba, or rauba, a robe or garment. Robatores, (robbers,) he observes, were originally so called because they spoiled travellers of their robes, or garments, (primo sic dicti quod viatores robis seu raubis, i. vestibus spoliarent,) from which circumstance, robbery of this kind is at this day called by the Germans raub, and to rob, rauben. Spelman, voc. Robaria. Lord Coke substantially adopts the same derivation, although he applies it differently; robbery is so called, "because the goods are taken, as it were, de la robe, from the robe, that is, from the person." Co. Litt. 288 a. This derivation is not noticed by Webster, but it is strikingly confirmed by the following passage from Bracton, being the commencement of the old appeal of robbery: A. appellat B. quod sicut fuit in pace domini regis, tali loco, tali die, &c. venit idem B. cum vi sua, et nequiter, et in felonia, et contra pacem domini regis, et in roberia abstulit ei C. s. iii. d. et unum equum talis pretii, et unam robam de viridi talis precii; A. appeals (accuses) B. that as he was in the peace of the lord the king, in such a place, on such a day, &c. the said B. came with his force, and wickedly and feloniously, and against the peace of the lord the king, and in robbery [that is, as a robber] took away from him a hundred shillings and three pence, and one horse of such a price, and one robe of vert [of green] of such a price. Bract. fol. 146.

ROBBOUR, Robour. L. Fr. [from robber, to rob.] A robber. De robbours et de larouns; of robbers and of thieves. Britt. c. 15. Yearb. M. 3 Edw. II. 55.

ROBE. Fr. A term used by the people of the sea, for a vessel's cargo. Spanish and Italian navigators use the same word in the same way. It is, says Cleirac, nome generalisimo che comprende boni mobili, immobili et merci. Further on he says, it is the same with χρῆμα in Greek, res in Latin, and bien or richesse in French, and comes from the French desrober or the Spanish robar, (Anglicè, to rob.) Meredith's Emerigon on Ins. 359, 360, note.

ROBERIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Robbery. In robberia; in robbery; in the manner of a robber; as a robber. Bract. fol. 146.

ROBERDSMEN, Robersmen. In old English law. Persons who, in the reign of Richard I. committed great outrages on the borders of England and Scotland. Said to have been the followers of Robert Hood, or Robin Hood. 4 Bl. Com. 245. 3 Inst. 197.

ROBUR BELLI. Lat. Strength of war. Words used by Bracton in explaining the meaning of the word barones, (barons.) Bract. fol. 5 b. Quoted in 2 State Trials, 1358.

RODA. L. Lat. In old English law. A rod, or perch. A measure of land. Spelman.

RODKNIGHTS, Rodknyghts. [from Sax. rad, road, and cnyt, an attendant.] In old English law. Mounted retainers; vassals or tenants whose service was to ride with their lord or lady, from manor to manor. Bract. fol. 79 b. Spelman. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 7.

ROGARE. Lat. In the Roman law. To ask. Rogare legem; to ask for a law, to propose it for adoption. Derivatively, to vote for a law thus proposed, to pass a law. Laws were passed in the assemblies of the people, in the form of asking and answering a question. The consuls asked, "Velitis, jubeatis, Quirites?" (Do you so will, or order, Romans?) Those who were in favor of the law, in giving their vote, answered, "Uti rogas, volo, vel jubeo;" (As you ask, I will or order;) or, when the vote was by tablet or ballot, they threw in a ballot, marked with the letters U. R. (uti rogas.) Calv. Lex. Adam's Rom. Ant. 97—100. A. Gell. Noct. Att. x. 20. Tayl. Civ. Law, 9, 155.

In modern legislative assemblies, also, laws are passed by the same formula of interrogation. The question "Shall the bill pass?" may be compared to the "Velitis, jubeatis?" of the Romans.

ROGATIO. Lat. [from rogare, q. v.] In the Roman law. An asking; a question or interrogation. An asking for a law; a proposal of a law for adoption or passage. Derivatively, a law passed by such a form. Gellius calls it the very head, origin and fountain of all popular legislation. Noct. Att. x. 20. 7. Laws are passed at the present day by the same form of taking a question.

ROGATOR. Lat. [from rogare, q. v.] In the Roman law. The proposer of a law. Tayl. Civ. Law, 195.

ROGO. Lat. In the Roman law. I ask. A common word in wills. Dig. 30. 108. 13, 14. Id. 31. 77. 25.

ROGUE. In English criminal law. A sturdy beggar; a vagrant of either sex. The word is commonly associated with vagabond in English statutes, though neither seems to be anywhere explicitly defined. The statute 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, (amended by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 38,) enumerates fourteen different descriptions of persons as coming under the general head of "rogues and vagabonds." 4 Steph. Com. 309.

ROIAUME. L. Fr. Realm; kingdom. Conf. Cartar. 25 Edw. I.

ROIGN. L. Fr. Queen. 1 And. 44.

ROL, Roule, Roly. L. Fr. A roll. Kelham. See Roule.

ROLL. [L. Fr. roule; L. Lat. rotulus; Lat. volumen.] In practice. A sheet, or connected series of sheets, of parchment, upon which the records of courts and other proceedings are written; and which, when completed, is rolled up, and permanently kept in that form. See Rotulus.

In English practice, there were formerly a great variety of these rolls, appropriated to the different proceedings; such as the warrant of attorney roll; the process roll; the recognizance roll; the imparlance roll; the plea roll; the issue roll; the judgment roll; the scire facias roll; and the roll of proceedings on writs of error. 2 Tidd's Pr. 729, 730.

The ancient public records of Great Britain consist of a great variety of Rolls; as the Rolls of Parliament, the most important branch; the Charter Rolls, the Patent Rolls, the Close Rolls; the Gascon, Norman, French, Roman, Scotch and Welch Rolls; the Coronation Rolls; the Pipe Rolls; the Memoranda Rolls, and others; the Rolls of the Curia Regis, &c. See all these particularly described in Hubback's Evidence of Succession, 607—636.

Rolls, (rotuli) and counter-rolls, (contra rotuli) were anciently kept by coroners and sheriffs. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 18. But none of these appear to have been preserved. Rolls were also kept by ordinary persons, such as bailiffs and receivers of moneys; and with these rolls and tallies accounts were kept. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 70, § 11.

ROLL. In modern practice. A term applied to judicial and other records, whether kept on parchment or paper, and although rarely or never rolled up, or kept in roll form. In this respect, the word has entirely departed from its original and appropriate signification.

ROLLS OFFICE OF THE CHANCERY. An office in Chancery lane, London, where are deposited the rolls and records of the High Court of Chancery, of which the Master of the Rolls (q. v.) is, by virtue of his office, the keeper. Anciently called Domus Conversorum, (q. v.)

ROLLS OF PARLIAMENT. A series of rolls commencing in the reign of Edward I. and forming, according to Mr. Hubback, by far the most important branch of the public records of the kingdom, from their antiquity, and the multiplicity of subjects which, in the earlier periods of English history, came before the parliament. Some of these Rolls are kept in the Chapter-House at Westminster, others in the Tower, and the rest in the Chapel of the Rolls. Hubb. Evid. of Succession, 600—613.

ROMAN LAW, in a general sense, comprehends all the laws which prevailed among the Romans, without regard to the time of their origin, including the collections of Justinian, (now generally denominated the civil law.) 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 9, § 18.

In a more restricted sense, the Germans understand by this term, merely the law of Justinian, as adopted by them. Id. note. In England and the United States, however, there seems a propriety in limiting its application to all the laws of the times anterior to Justinian, distinguishing the collections of that emperor by the term civil law. Butl. Hor. Jur. 30. It is clear that a large portion of the Roman law was excluded from the Corpus Juris Civilis.

ROMESCOT. [from Rome, and Sax. sceat, tribute.] In old English law. An annual tribute of one penny from every family, paid to Rome at the feast of St. Peter. Otherwise called Romepenny, Peterpence, and Rome fee, (Rome-feah.) Spelman. Cowell.

"ROOM," held not to import a place of public resort. 4 Ohio St. R. 467.

ROSETUM. L. Lat. In old records. A low watery place of reeds and marshes. Cowell.

ROTA. L. Lat. Succession; rotation. "Rota of presentations," "rota of the terms." 2 W. Bl. 772, 773.

ROTA. The name of a court held at Genoa, in or previous to the sixteenth century, the decisions of which, in maritime and commercial cases, are contained in the work of Straccha De Mercatura. These decisions are much admired for their equity and wisdom, and are frequently referred to by Roccus, in his treatise De Navibus et Naulo. See Ingersoll's Roccus, Note iii.

ROTA. Span. In Spanish law. Obliterated. White's New Recop. b. 3, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2.

ROTULUS. L. Lat. In old English law. A roll, composed of one or more skins (membranæ) of parchment; a record on a parchment roll. See Bract. fol. 352 b.

ROTULUS WINTONIÆ. L. Lat. The Roll of Winton, or Winchester. A term sometimes applied to Domesday Book. But, according to Spelman, it was properly the name of a similar record made by King Alfred.

ROTURE. Fr. In old French and Canadian law. A free tenure without the privilege of nobility; the tenure of a free commoner. See Dunkin's Address, 6.

ROTURIER. Fr. In old French and Canadian law. A free tenant of land on services exigible either in money or in kind. Steph. Lect. 229. A free commoner; one who held of a superior, but could have no inferior below him. Dunkin's Address, 5, 6.

ROULE, Roulle. L. Fr. A roll. Britt. c. 1, 26. Conf. Cart. 25 Edw. I. Fet Assaver, § 30.

ROUP. Sc. In Scotch law. A sale by auction. Bell's Dict. voc. Auction.

ROUT. [L. Lat. routa.] In English criminal law. A disturbance of the peace by persons assembling together with an intention to do a thing, which, if it be executed, will make them rioters, and actually making a motion towards the execution thereof. 4 Steph. Com. 278.—The unlawful assembling of a number of persons with intent to commit by violence some unlawful act. Spelman.

ROUTA, Ruta, Rutta, Rotta. L. Lat. [from Germ. rott, a ball, band, or company; Græco-barb. ῥοῦτα, from Lat. rota, a wheel.] In old European law. A company; a band; a troop. Spelman. Hence the English rout, (q. v.) which the Saxons called loth.

ROUTE. Fr. In French insurance law. The way that is taken to make the voyage insured, (iter viagii.) The direction of the voyage assured. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 13, sect. 5, § 1.

ROUTOUSLY. [L. Lat. routose.] In pleading. A technical word in indictments, generally coupled with the word riotously, (q. v.) 2 Chitt. Crim. Law, 488.

Roy n'est lie per aseun statute, si il ne soit expressement nosme. The king is not bound by any statute, if he be not expressly named to be so bound. Jenk. Cent. 307. Broom's Max. 31, [50.]

ROYAL FISH. [Lat. piscis regalis.] Whale and sturgeon; so called in English law, as belonging to the king by prerogative, when thrown ashore, or caught near the coast. A branch of the king's ordinary revenue. 1 Bl. Com. 290. 2 Steph. Com. 554. Hale's Anal. sect. viii. According to Sir Matthew Hale, there are but three royal fish, viz., sturgeon, porpoise, and balæna, which is usually rendered a whale. Hale de Jur. Mar. pars 1, c. 7. In the Black Book of the Admiralty, they are mentioned as "whales, balens, sturgeon, porpoise ou grampise." Cited ibid. The latter word Hale translates "great fish."

ROYAL MINES. In English law. Mines of silver and gold. 1 Bl. Com. 294.

ROYNE, Roygn, Roygne, Roign. L. Fr. Queen; a queen; the queen. Kelham. Yearb. P. 11 Hen. VI. 20. 1 And. 44. Dyer, 94.

ROYNES. In old English law. Streams; currents, or other usual passages of rivers and running waters. Cowell.

R'S. A contraction of Regis. 1 Instr. Cler. 12.

RUBRIC. [from Lat. ruber, red.] In Scotch law. The title of a statute. So termed because anciently it was written in red letters. Bell's Dict.

RUCHE. L. Fr. A bee-hive, made of rushes. Kelham.

RUINA. Lat. In the civil law. Ruin; the falling of a house. Dig. 47. 9.

RULE. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Lat. regula.] In practice. An order made by a court for the regulation of its practice; otherwise called a general rule, (regula generalis.)

An order made a court between the parties to an action or suit, either upon the actual motion of counsel, or without motion. A rule of court is distinguished from a judge's order. See Order.

RULE NISI. In practice. A rule to show cause why a party should not do a certain act required, or why the object of the rule should not be enforced; a rule which is made absolute after service, unless (nisi) good cause is shown to the contrary.

To RULE. In practice. To require by rule; to enter a rule against. To rule a sheriff to return a writ, is to enter a rule requiring him to return it.

To determine or decide. A court is said to rule a point; to rule in favor of one or the other party.

RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE. A celebrated rule in English law, propounded in Lord Coke's reports in the following form,—that whenever a man, by any gift or conveyance, takes an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, the word heirs is a word of limitation and not of purchase. 1 Co. 104 a, Shelley's case. In other words, it is to be understood as expressing the quantity of estate which the party is to take, and not as conferring any distinct estate on the persons who may become his representatives. 1 Steph. Com. 308. Or, as it may be more concisely expressed, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate. 1 Preston on Estates, 263. 4 Kent's Com. 215. See 3 Maryland R. 505.

RULE OF 1756. In international law. A rule relating to the trade of neutral nations in time of war, first practically established in the year 1756; the substance of which is,—that neutrals are not to carry on with a belligerent power a trade not open to them in time of peace. 1 Kent's Com. 82—85.

RULES. In American practice. This term is sometimes used to denote proceedings in an action out of court, or in vacation, and the times of such proceedings. Thus, in Virginia, "an irregularity committed at rules may be corrected at the next term of the court." 12 Grattan's R. 312. "At the August rules, 1852, the declaration was filed and a common order taken." Id. ibid.

RULES OF THE KING'S BENCH PRISON. In English practice. Certain limits beyond the walls of the prison, within which all prisoners in custody in civil actions were allowed to live, upon giving security by bond, with two sufficient sureties, to the marshal, not to escape, and paying him a certain per centage on the amount of the debts for which they were detained. Bagley's Pr. Holthouse.

The term "rules" has sometimes been used in this sense in American practice. 3 Bibb's R. 202.

RUMPERE. Lat. In the civil law. To break; to revoke. Rumpitur testamentum cum, in eodem statu manente testatore, ipsius testamenti jus vitiatur; a testament is broken when, the testator remaining in the same state, the legal force of the testament itself is destroyed. Inst. 2. 17. 1. A testament was thus broken (ruptum,) by the subsequent adoption of a child, or by the making of a subsequent testament. Id. 2. 17. 1, 2, 3. See Dig. 28. 3.

To RUN. [Lat. currere; L. Fr. courir.] To operate; to have or take effect. A statute of limitations is said to run against a claim, to commence running, to continue to run, &c. See Currere.

To pass; to follow; to go with, or accompany. A covenant is said to run with land, where it is inseparably annexed to the estate, and passes with it. See Covenant running with land.

RUN. In American law. A watercourse of smaller size. 2 Bibb's R. 354.

RUNCARIA, Roncaria. L. Lat. [L. Fr. roncier.] In old English law. Land full of brambles and briers. Co. Litt. 5 a.

RUNCINUS. L. Lat. In old English law. A load-horse; a sumpter horse or cart-horse; a rowncy, as Chaucer calls it. Domesd. titt. Norfolk. Rex H. de Galgow. Spelman.

RUNNING ACCOUNT. An open unsettled account, as distinguished from a stated and liquidated account. "Running accounts mean mutual accounts and reciprocal demands between the parties, which accounts and demands remain open and unsettled." Blackford, J. 1 Indiana R. (Carter,) 335.

RUNNING DAYS. In maritime law. Days allowed in a charter-party, for loading and unloading a vessel, and for other purposes. Abbott on Ship. 254, 255, 259.

RUN-RIG. Sc. In Scotch law. A species of land tenure. Explained to mean, "furrow by furrow, that is, a certain narrow space." 7 Wils. & Shaw's R. 378.

RUPTA. L. Lat. In old records. A band or troop. Cowell. Spelman.

Ruptarii; soldiers; troopers. Id.

RUPTUM. Lat. [from rumpere, q. v.] In the civil law. Broken. A term applied to a will; (ruptum testamentum.) Inst. 2. 17. 3. Dig. 28. 3.

RUPTURA. L. Lat. [from rumpere, to break.] In old records. Grounds broken up, (by the plough;) arable land. Orderic. Vital. lib. 5, p. 596. Cowell.

RURAL DEAN. [L. Lat. decanus ruralis.] In English ecclesiastical law. An ancient officer of the church, now grown out of use, otherwise called bishop's dean, (decanus episcopi.) A kind of bishop's deputy, appointed to inspect the conduct of the parochial clergy, and clothed with an inferior degree of judicial and coercive authority.* 1 Bl. Com. 383. Spelman, voc. Decanus.

RUSCARIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Soil where rusci, or kneeholm grows. Co. Litt. 5 a.

RUSSATI, Russetti. L. Lat. In old English law. Russets; a kind of cloth mentioned in Magna Charta, (c. 25.)

RUSTICI. Lat. [from rus, country.] In feudal law. Natives of a conquered country. Feud. Lib. 2, tit. 27, §§ 9—11. 2 Bl. Com. 413.

In old English law. Inferior country tenants, churls, or chorls, [Sax. ceorles,] who held cottages and lands by the services of ploughing, and other labors of agriculture, for the lord. Paroch. Antiq. 136. Cowell.

RUSTICUM JUDICIUM. L. Lat. In maritime law. A rough or rude judgment or decision. 3 Kent's Com. 231. Story on Bailm. § 608 a.

RUTA ET CÆSA. Lat. In the civil law. Things dug, (as sand and lime,) and things cut, (as wood, coal, &c.) Dig. 19. 1. 17. 6. Words used in conveyancing.

RUTARII, Ruttarii. L. Lat. In old records. Stipendiary forces; mercenary soldiers. Cowell. This word occurs in the Articles of King John's Magna Charta, (c. 4,) but is omitted in the charter itself. See Ruptarii.

RYBAUD. L. Fr. In old English law. A ruffian; a vagabond. Brownl. (part 2,) 340.

RYCHE. L. Fr. Rich. Poure ou ryche. Britt. c. 68.

RYVAILLE. L. Fr. Shore. Ryvaille de la meer; sea-shore. Britt. c. 23.

RYVIRE. L. Fr. A river. Kelham.

S.

S. The common abbreviation of Salutem, in the epistolary correspondence of the Romans. See Salutem.

S. A common abbreviation of scilicet, (to wit,) in the old books. Dyer, 2, 31 b. Bract. passim.

S. F. S. An abbreviation, in the civil law, of sine fraude sua, (without fraud on his part.) Calv. Lex.

S. P. An abbreviation of sine prole, (q. v.)

SA ET LA. L. Fr. Here and there. Kelham.

SAAL, Sagel. L. Fr. A seal. Kelham.

SABBATUM. Lat. In old records. Peace; rest. Postquam Willielmus Rex advenit et sedebat in sabbato, &c.; after King William came and settled in peace, &c. Domesday, cited in Spelman.

SABULO. Lat. In old English law. Gravel. Hale de Jur. Mar. pars 1, c. 6.

SABULONARIUM. L. Lat. [from sabulo, q. v.] In old records. A gravel-pit, or the free use of it. Cowell.

SABURRA. L. Lat. In old maritime law. Ballast. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 1, § 7.

SAC, SAK. [L. Lat. saca, sacha; from Sax. sac, a cause, sake.] In old English and Scotch law. The cognizance which a lord had in his court, of causes and suits arising among his vassals or tenants. The privilege which a lord had within his manor, of holding pleas of trespasses and other controversies arising there, and of imposing, levying and collecting of his tenants, fines and amercements in regard of the same. Spelman. Bract. fol. 154 b. —A privilege touching plea, or correction of trespasses of men within a manor. Minshew, cited in Cowell. Rastal, Expos.

A forfeiture. Id. ibid.

SACA, Sacca, Sacha. L. Lat. In old English and Scotch law. Sak or sac, (q. v.) LL. Edw. Conf. c. 21. Reg. Maj. lib. 1, c. 4, § 2.

SACABURTH, Sakaburth, Saccabor, Sacaber, Sacborgh. Sax. [Sc. sacreborgh, sickerborgh; L. Fr. sakaber.] In old English law. The person from whom a thing had been stolen, and by whom the thief, having it on his person, was freshly pursued. Ubi latro deprehensus est seysitus de aliquo latrocinio,—et insecutus fuerit per aliquem cujus res illa fuerit, qui dicitur sakaburth. Bract. fol. 150 b. Insecutus per saccabor. Id. fol. 154 b. Insecutus per aliquem cujus res illa fuerit, quæ dicitur sacborgh. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 1. See Id. c. 47, § 2.

Spelman supposes this word to import the same thing with the Scotch sickerborgh, that is, a sure pledge; from sicker, sure, and borgh, a pledge; the finding of the thing stolen on the person of the thief when caught, being considered the surest pledge or token of his guilt. Or it might be so called from sac, a cause or prosecution, and burh, a pledge; the thing stolen being, as it were, the pledge or proof of cause of action. Or, in the form saccabor, or sacaber, it might mean one who bears, brings, or prosecutes a cause, (saca.) Lord Coke interprets sakebere, sacbere or sacburgh, (as he writes the word,) to mean one who "did bear the bag," from "sak, an ancient French word, signifying a bag, purse or pouch," being, in legal understanding, he that was robbed of his money in his bag. 3 Inst. 69.

SACCABOR. Sax. In old English law. The person from whom a thing had been stolen, and by whom the thief was freshly pursued. Bract. fol. 154 b. See Sacaburth.

SACCULARII. Lat. [from saccus, a bag or purse.] In the civil law. Persons who cheated in wares or money, by means of sacks or bags which they carried with them; (vetitas in sacculo artes exercentes.) Dig. 47. 11. 7, and gloss. in marg. Blackstone, referring to this passage, translates the word cutpurses. 4 Bl. Com. 242. But this is hardly warranted by the text.

SACCUS. L. Lat. In old English law. A sack. A quantity of wool weighing thirty or twenty-eight stone. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 79, § 10. According to Cowell, twenty-six stone. Two ways made a sack, and twelve sacks a last. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 2.

A sack or pack; a pack-saddle. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 21.

In a MS. compotus or household book of Bolton Priory, in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire, (A. D. 1851,) the ductor saccorum is mentioned among the liberi servientes (free servants) of the priory, and is translated sackman.

SACCUS CUM BROCHIA. L. Lat. In old English law. A sack with a broche, broach, or pointed iron. Si quis teneat per servitium inveniendi domino regi, certis locis et certis temporibus, unum hominem, et unum equum, et saccum cum brochia pro aliqua necessitate vel utilitate exercitum suum contingente; if any one holds by the service of finding for the king, at certain places and certain times, one man and one horse, and a sack with a broach, for any necessity or advantage happening to his army. Bract. fol. 36. It was a species of petty serjeanty, which Bracton otherwise describes,—ut si quis teneatur invenire domino regi equum et saccum cum brochia, eunti in Walliam cum exercitu; as if one should be bound to find for the king a horse, and a sack with a broach, on his going to Wales with his army. Id. fol. 87 b. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 11, § 1.

 Spelman supposes the words saccus and brochia to be expressive of two measures of capacity; saccus, a sack or bag for carrying dry articles, and brochia, (from Fr. broc,) a large bottle or jar for carrying liquids. Gloss. voc. Brochia. Brochia, however, seems to be merely the Latin form of the Fr. broche, the meaning of which appears from what may be considered the parallel passage of Britton, in which he observes that "petit serjeanty is a service issuing out of tenements, to do to us (the king) some small service, when we have occasion to ride with our army, (quant nous devons chevaucher en hoste,) amounting to a demi-mark, or a lance, (ou un broche,) or a buckler, (ou un boson,) or a bow without a string, or a pair of spurs, or any like service." Britt. c. 66. Brochia seems to have been the same thing with what is called pryk in a passage (closely resembling those above quoted from Bracton,) cited by Spelman from the Roll of Fines in 1 Ric. II. where it is said that the tenant holds per servicium inveniendi unum equum, unum saccum, et unum pryk, in guerra Walliæ, quandocumque contingerit regem ibi guerrare. Spelman gives no definition of the word pryk, but merely refers to the word brochia in his own glossary. Cowell also passes it over without any explicit definition, but Blount observes that "it seems to signify an old fashioned spur, with one point, not a rowel." But why one spur, (unum pryk,) should be so emphatically reserved, contrary to the deus esporouns (two spurs) of Britton, and the "pair of spurs" in all the old reservations of service, does not appear. And see Fleta, lib. 1, c. 11, § 1. The use of a pointed iron instrument (stimulus ferreus, or cuspis,) as part of a horseman's military equipment, is further illustrated by the quotation which follows.

Saccus seems to have been a sack, or pack of cloth, used either ordinarily with a saddle, (sella,) or occasionally, as a substitute for it. A passage from an old record quoted by Cowell, throws some light upon its meaning: Edmundus Busche tenet terras in Morton, Com. Essex, per servitium inveniendi unum stimulum ferreum pro uno Warroks, super quoddam clothsak, quandocunque D. rex equitaverit in exercitu versus partes Walliæ, tempore guerræ; Edmund Busche holds lands in Morton, county of Essex, by the service of finding one iron point [spur?] for one Warroks, upon a certain cloth-sack, whenever the king shall ride in his army towards the parts of Wales, in time of war. 22 Ric. II. Blount, of Tenures, 32. Cowell, voc. Warroks. The meaning of the important word warroks, in this passage is, however, unexplained, either by Spelman or Cowell. In some of the old copies of Bracton, it may be further observed, the passages above quoted from that author have sellam, (a saddle,) instead of saccum.

The word cum, (with,) in the phrase under consideration, denotes that the saccus and the brochia were ordinarily used or kept together. Brochia has sometimes been translated needle, as though carried for the purpose of repairs to horse equipments. That it was a pointed instrument of iron, and not a jar or pitcher, as Spelman has supposed, seems clear from the authorities above referred to.

SACHAUMENT. L. Fr. [from sacher, to know.] Knowingly; willingly. Kelham.

SACHENT. L. Fr. [from sacher, to know.] Know; know ye, (sciant, noverint.) A word used in the commencement of deeds or charters. Sachent à toutz ceux que icy sount, et à toutz ceux que avouer sount, que jeo Johan ay done, &c. Know all those who are here, and all those who are to come, that I, John, have given, &c. Britt. c. 39. See Sciant præsentes et futuri.

SACHER. L. Fr. [from Lat. scire, q. v.] To know. Saches, sachez, sachiez; know; know ye. Stat. Confirm. Chartar. c. 1. Kelham. Et chescun sache son several; and each one knows his several, [separate portion.] Britt. c. 55. Saches touts gens; know all people. Yearb. M. 3 Hen. VI. 34.

SACIRE. L. Lat. In old European law. To seise; to take into possession. Supposed by Spelman to be the original form of saisire and seisire, (qq. v.) and to be ultimately derived from the Lat. sociare, to join, to add another's property to one's own, (rem alterius nostris sociare;) to appropriate. The phrase ad proprium sacire occurs in the Formulæ Solennes, num. 19, 150. In the Laws of the Bavarians, sociare is actually used in a similar connection. Sibi sociare in patrimonium. LL. Boior. tit. 17, l. 2.

SACQUIER. Fr. In old French maritime law. An officer in the ports of Guyenne, mentioned by Cleirac in his Observations on the Laws of Oleron, whose business was to load and unload vessels laden with salt, corn or fish, to prevent the ship's crew defrauding the merchant by false tale, or cheating him of his merchandize otherwise. Laws of Oleron, Art. xi. The term seems to be derived from the saccarius of the Roman law. Cod. Theodos. lib. 14.

SACRA. Lat. In the Roman law. The right to participate in the sacred rites of the city. Butler's Hor. Jur. 27.

SACRAMENTALES. L. Lat. [from sacramentum, an oath.] In feudal law. Compurgators; persons who came to purge a defendant by their oath that they believed him innocent. Feud. Lib. 1, tit. 4, sect. 3. Id. titt. 10, 26.

SACRAMENTUM. Lat. [from sacrare, to consecrate, sacrum facere, to make sacred.] In the Roman law. A sum of money deposited by both the parties to an action, which fell to the gaining party, after the cause was determined. Festus. Varro de Ling. Lat. iv. 36. Adam's Rom. Ant. 249.

A suit or cause. Id. ibid.

A military oath; an oath taken by soldiers on their enlistment. Calv. Lex. Its form is given by Aulus Gellius. Noct. Att. xvi. 4, citing Cincius de Re Militari, lib. 5.

SACRAMENTUM. Lat. [L. Fr. serement.] In the old common law. An oath; the oath of a juror, witness or party to a suit. Repellitur a sacramento infamis. An infamous person is thrust back [kept from, prevented by disqualification,] from taking an oath. Bract. fol. 185. Dicunt super sacramentum suum; say upon their oath. Cowell.

Sacramentum habet in se tres comites, veritatem, justitiam et judicium; veritas habenda est in jurato, justitia et judicium in judice; an oath implies or requires three attendant circumstances; truth, justice and judgment; truth is to be observed in the party sworn, justice and judgment in the judge [before whom the oath is taken.] 3 Inst. 160.

Lord Coke's derivation or composition of this word from sacra, sacred, and mens, mind, "because it ought to be performed with a sacred and religious mind," will hardly be acquiesced in. 3 Inst. 165. See Agreamentum, Testamentum.

SACRAMENTUM DECISIONIS. Lat.

In the civil law. The oath of decision; the decisive oath; the voluntary oath of a party to a suit, by which it was allowed to be decided.* Where one of the parties to a suit was not able to prove his charge, he might offer to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary. Cod. 4. 1. 12. 3 Bl. Com. 342.

SACRAMENTUM FIDELITATIS. L. Lat. In old English law. The oath of fealty. See the form of this oath in law French. Reg. Orig. 303.

SACREBORGH. Sc. More properly sickerborgh, (q. v.)

SACREMENT, Sagrament. L. Fr. An oath. Kelham.

SACRILEGE. [from Lat. sacrilegium, from sacra, sacred things, or sacrum, sacred, and legere, to steal.] In English criminal law. Larceny from a church. 4 Steph. Com. 164. The crime of breaking a church or chapel, and stealing therein. 1 Russell on Crimes, 843. See Sacrilegium. This does not seem to be recognized as a distinct crime, in American jurisprudence.

In old English law. Profanation of holy things;* the alienation to lay-men or to profane or common purposes, of what was given to religious persons, and to pious uses. Cowell.

SACRILEGIUM. Lat. [from sacrum, sacred, and legere, to steal.] In the civil law. The stealing of sacred things, or things dedicated to sacred uses; the taking of things out of a holy place. Calv. Lex. Brissonius.

The violation of an imperial rescript or constitution. Sacrilegii instar est rescripto principis obviari; it amounts to sacrilege, to oppose or hinder the execution of the prince's rescript. Cod. 1. 23. 5. 1 Bl. Com. 74. The text of the Code, here referred to, reads, Sacrilegii instar est—divinis obviare beneficiis.

SACRILEGUS. Lat. In the civil and common law. A sacrilegious person; one guilty of sacrilege.* He who takes away any thing that is given for the divine and true service of God. Sacrilegus omnium prædonum cupiditatem et scelera superat; a sacrilegious person exceeds all robbers in cupidity and wickedness, [surpasses the cupidity and wickedness of all robbers.] 4 Co. 106 a, Adam's and Lambert's case.

The word sacrilegus in this passage is erroneously translated sacrilege, in Branch's Principia and Wharton's Lexicon.

SACR'M. A contraction of sacramentum. 1 Instr. Cler. 12.

SACROBARRA. L. Lat. A word given by Spelman from an old manuscript entitled De officio coronatoris, which he suggests might mean the same with sacrilegia.

Sæpenumero ubi proprietas verborum attenditur, sensus veritatis amittitur. Oftentimes where the propriety of words is attended to, [where the attention is occupied with the proper meaning of words,] the true sense is lost. Branch's Pr. 7 Co. 27.

SÆPIUS. Lat. In old practice. Often. See Pluries.

SÆVITIA. Lat. [from sævus, cruel.] In the law of divorce. Cruelty; any thing which tends to bodily harm, and in that manner renders cohabitation unsafe. 1 Hagg. Cons. R. 458. One of the grounds of divorce à mensa et thoro. To constitute cruelty, proof must be given of a reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt. Id. 37—40. See Shelford, Marr. & Div. 425—438. 2 Kent's Com. 125, 126.

SAFE-CONDUCT. [Fr. sauf-conduit; L. Lat. salvus conductus.] In old English law. A license or permission in the form of a writ, granted by the king under the great seal, to a stranger or foreigner, to come into, remain in, go through and depart from the kingdom without molestation, during a certain specified time. Spelman. Reg. Orig. 25 b. All merchants were allowed by Magna Charta, (unless publicly prohibited beforehand,) to have safe-conduct of this kind, except in time of war. Mag. Chart. c. 30. 1 Bl. Com. 260.

In international law. A passport or privilege granted in war, exempting the party to whom it is granted from the legal effects of war, during the time and to the extent described in the permission.* 1 Kent's Com. 162.—A passport or privilege granted, in time of war, by the sovereign or government of a country, or other persons duly authorized, to the subjects of a hostile power, permitting them to depart in safety, and to take with them certain effects specified; or it may be granted for the removal of effects only.* See Id. 162, 163.

A document granted to the master of a merchant vessel, for the protection of the vessel in time of war. See Passport.

SAFE-GUARD. [L. Fr. sauf-guard; L. Lat. salva gardia.] In old English law.

A special privilege or license, in the form of a writ, under the great seal, granted to strangers seeking their right by course of law within the king's dominions, and apprehending violence or injury to their persons or property from others. Reg. Orig. 26.

SAFE PLEDGE. [L. Lat. salvus plegius.] In old English law. A sufficient surety. Bract. fol. 160 b. See Salvus plegius.

SAGE. L. Fr. Learned; wise. Jeo oye un foits un sage home dire que, &c.; I once heard a learned man say that, &c. Yearb. H. 6 Edw. III. 16.

SAGEMENT. L. Fr. Cautiously; prudently. Fet Assaver, § 44.

SAGES DE LA LEY. L. Fr. Sages of the law; persons learned in the law. Art. sup. Chart. c. 5. A term applied to the chancellor and justices of the King's Bench. Id. ibid.

SAGIBARO. L. Lat. [from sac, or sag, a cause, and baro, a man.] In old European law. A judge or justice; literally, a man of causes, (vir causarum,) or having charge or supervision of causes, (causis et litibus præpositus.) Spelman. One who administered justice and decided causes in the mallum, or public assembly. Id. L. Salic. tit. 56, §§ 2, 3, 4. LL. Inæ, c. 6.

SAID. [Lat. dictus; L. Fr. dit.] A very common word of reference in modern as well as ancient law. In Scotch law, the plural saids (O. Sc. saidis) is used. 3 How. St. Trials, 597, 602. "Saidis personis;" said persons. 1 Id. 926.

SAIEL. L. Fr. Seal. Kelham.

SAIGA. L. Lat. In old European law. A German coin of the value of a penny, or of three pence. L. Alaman. tit. 6, § 2. L. Boior. tit. 8, c. 2, § 3. Spelman.

To SAIL. In insurance law. To move, on the prosecution of a voyage; to make a movement for the purpose of proceeding to sea.* Cowen, J. 3 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 126. Lord Denman, C. J. 1 Crompt. M. & R. 809, 818. The least locomotion, with readiness of equipment and clearance, satisfies a warranty to sail. 3 B. & Ad. 514.

SAIN, Saine. L. Fr. Sound; strong. Kelham.

SAINC. L. Fr. Blood. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 9.

SAINTS. [L. Fr. saintz, seintz, seyntz.] In old English practice. Holy things, (Lat. sancta;) gospels on which oaths were taken.

From the L. Fr. seintz, or seyntz, used in old statutes and treatises, it has been supposed that it was formerly common in England to swear by the saints, or by God and the saints. See Barringt. Obs. Stat. 177, and notes. This was doubtless the practice on some occasions; but judicial oaths seem to have been uniformly made by, or rather on the gospels. The expressions in Britton,—si luy eyde Dieu et les saintz, (so help him God and the saints,) si lour eyde Dieu et ses seyntz, (so help them God and his saints,) and other passages, (see Britt. cc. 2, 22, 52, 68,) may be explained by the use of the corresponding Latin word sancta, in the parallel passages in Bracton and Fleta. Sicut me Deus adjuvet et hæc sancta. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 18, § 4. Sic ipsum Deus adjuvet et hæc sancta. Id. lib. 2, c. 63, § 12. And see Id. lib. 4, c. 9, § 1. That sancta, in these passages, cannot be translated saints, is obvious, not only from the neuter form of the word, but from the invariable use of the pronoun hæc, (these,) in connection with it, indicating that the things sworn by were actually present before the party who made the oath. That evangelia (gospels) was the word to be understood and supplied, appears from passages in which it is actually expressed. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 17. The following passage from Bracton is conclusive on this point: After giving the words of the oath taken by the first juror sworn, Hoc auditis justitiarii, quod ego veritatem dicam, &c. sic me Deus adjuvet et hæc sancta Dei evangelia, (Hear this ye justices, that I will speak the truth, &c. so help me God, and these holy gospels of God,) he adds, Et post eum jurabit quilibet aliorum separatim, et per se; Tale sacramentum quale A. primus jurator, s. hic, juravit, ego tenebo ex parte mea, sic me Deus adjuvet et hæc sancta; (and after him shall each of the others separately and by himself swear, such an oath as A. this first juror has sworn, will I keep on my part, so help me God and these holy [gospels.] Bract. fol. 116.

SAIO. L. Lat. In Gothic law. The ministerial officer of a court or magistrate, who brought parties into court, (qui reos protraxit in judicium,) and executed the orders of his superior. Spelman thinks the word may be derived from the Sax.

sagol, or saiol, a staff, giving it the sense or the modern tipstaff.

SAIREMENT. L. Fr. An oath. Kelham.

SAISINA. L. Lat. An old form of seisina, (q. v.)

SAISIRE. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. saisir, to seise.] An old form of seisire, (q. v.)

SAKE, Sak. In old English law. A lord's right of amercing his tenants in his court. Keilw. 145.

Acquittance of suit at county courts and hundred courts. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 7.

SAKEBER. The French form of saccabor or sacaburth, (qq. v.) Britt. c. 15, 29.

SALA. L. Lat. [L. Fr. sale.] In old European law. A hall. L. Alam. tit. 81, § 1. Spelman.

SALARIUM. Lat. [from sal, salt.] In the civil law. An allowance of provisions. Calv. Lex.

A stipend, wages or compensation for service. Id. Dig. 7. 1. 7. 2. Id. 44. 7. 61. 1.

An annual allowance or compensation. Id. ibid.

SALARIUM. L. Lat. In old European law. The rents or profits of a sala, hall or house. Cowell.

Wages; stipend; annual allowance; salary. Id. But quære if this word be not the same with the salarium of the civil law. See supra.

SALARY. [from Lat. salarium, q. v.] An annual compensation for services rendered; a fixed sum to be paid by the year for services.

SALE. [Lat. venditio; Fr. vente.] A transmutation of property from one man to another, in consideration of some price or recompense in value. 3 Bl. Com. 446.—A transfer of goods for money. Id. ibid.—A contract for the transfer of property from one person to another, for a valuable consideration. 2 Kent's Com. 468.—"Sale is a word of precise legal import, both at law and in equity. It means, at all times, a contract between parties to give and to pass rights of property for money, which the buyer pays or promises to pay to the seller for the thing bought and sold." Wayne, J. 8 Howard's R. 496, 544. See United States Digest, Sale. And see Bell's Contract of Sale, chap. 1.

"SALEABLE UNDERWOODS" construed. 10 East, 219, 446.

SALE NOTE. A note or memorandum of the sale of goods, given by the broker to the buyer. Called, also, a sold note, (q. v.)

SALET. In old English law. A headpiece; a steel cap or morion. Cowell.

SALIC (or SALIQUE) LAW. [Lat. Lex Salica.] A body of law framed by the Salians, or Salian Franks, after their settlement in Gaul under their king Pharamond, about the beginning of the fifth century. Esprit des Lois, liv. 28, c. 1. It is the most ancient of the barbarian codes, (as they are sometimes called,) and is considered one of the most important compilations of law in use among the feudal nations of Europe. Butler's Co. Litt. Note 77, lib. 3. See Butler's Hor. Jur. 83. Dr. Robertson calls it "the most venerable monument of French jurisprudence." 1 Rob. Charles V. Appendix, Note xxxviii. It received considerable additions from Clovis, Childebert, Clotaire, Charlemagne, and Louis le Debonnaire, and was re-published by Charlemagne in 798. See Lex Salica.

SALIC LAW. In French jurisprudence. A term frequently applied to that fundamental law of France which excluded females from succession to the crown. Supposed to have been derived from the sixty-second title of the Salic Law, De alode. Brande.

SALICETUM. L. Lat. [from salix, willow.] In old English law. A wood of willows. Co. Litt. 4 b. Shep. Touch. 95.—An osier bed, or low moist place on the banks or eyts of a river, for the growth of osiers, willows or withies. Cowell. Salictum is used in the civil law. Dig. 7. 1. 9. 7.

SALINA. L. Lat. [from sal, salt.] In old English law. A salt-pit; a house or place where salt is made. Cowell. In Coke on Littleton, this word is printed saliva. Co. Litt. 4 b.

SALLIRE. L. Lat. In old European law. To assault. The same with assalire, (q. v.) Spelman.

SALTATORIUM. L. Lat. In old records. A deer-leap. Cowell, citing Pl. apud Cestriam, 31 Edw. III. An engine for taking wild animals. Spelman.

SAL'T'M. A contraction of salutem, (q. v.)

SALTUS. Lat. In old English law. A high thick wood, or forest. Cowell, voc. Boscus. A lawn in a park or forest. Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 29, note.

SALUS. Lat. Health; prosperity, good or welfare. Salus populi suprema lex. The good or welfare of the people is the supreme law. Bacon's Max. 55, in reg. 12. Broom's Max. 1.

Safety; salvation. Salus ubi multi consiliarii. There is safety where there are many counsellors. 4 Inst. 1. Prov. xi. 14.

SALUTE. [Lat. salus.] A gold coin stamped by Henry V. in France, after his conquests there, whereon the arms of England and France were stamped quarterly. Stow's Chron. 589. Cowell.

SALUTEM. Lat. [Gr. χαιρειν, εὖ πράττειν.] Health; greeting; prosperity; salvation. An expression of salutation used by the Romans in the commencement of their letters or epistles, generally abbreviated, S. "C. Plinius Cornelio Tacito suo, S." Plin. Ep. i. 6, et passim. In legal instruments, it was written at length, Titius Seio salutem. Dig. 17. 1. 60. Ille illi salutem. Id. 59.

A formal word in the commencement of Roman deeds and charters, which, during the later periods of the empire, were written in an epistolary form. See Epistola. The corresponding Greek word, used in wills and other instruments, was χαίρειν. Dig. 31. 34. 1. In a conveyance in Greek, preserved in the Digests, the corresponding words are πλεῖστα χαίρειν; most health, or all health. Dig. 8. 3. 37. After Christianity had become established, salutem seems to have been used in its religious sense of salvation.

A formal word in the commencement of old English deeds, probably derived from the Roman practice above noticed. Omnibus Christi fidelibus ad quos præsentes literæ indentatæ pervenerint, A. de B. salutem in Domino sempiternam; Sciatis me dedisse, &c. To all Christian people to whom these present [present letters] indented shall come, A. of B. sends greeting [or salvation,] in our Lord everlasting. Litt. sect. 372.

A formal word invariably used in the address of old English writs, which commenced in the epistolary form. Rex vicecomiti, &c. salutem; the king to the sheriff, &c. Greeting. Reg. Orig. & Jud. per tot. Translated "greeting," and retained in modern English and American writs. See Breve. Called by Finch the "salutation" of the writ. Law, b. 4, c. 1.

SALVA GARDIA. L. Lat. Safeguard. Reg. Orig. 26. See Safe-guard.

SALVAGE. In maritime law. A compensation allowed to persons by whose assistance a ship or its cargo has been saved, in whole or in part, from impending danger, or recovered from actual loss, in cases of shipwreck, derelict or recapture. 3 Kent's Com. 245. "The relief of property from an impending peril of the sea, by the voluntary exertions of those who are under no legal obligation to render assistance, and the consequent ultimate safety of the property, constitute a case of salvage." Curtis, J. 1 Curtis' R. 376, 378. See Id. 353. See Abbott on Ship. 554. 1 Peters' Adm. Dec. 31, 48, 70, 87. 2 Id. 278, 284, 361. United States Digest, Salvage. Marvin on Wreck and Salvage, ch. 15.

Sapiens incipit a fine, et quod primum est in intentione, ultimum est in executione. A wise man begins at the end, and that which is first in intention is last in execution. 10 Co. 25 b. The case of Sutton's Hos- pital. Finis, (end,) here has the sense of object. Id. See Co. Litt. 70 b.

Sapientis judicis est cogitare tantum sibi esse permissum, quantum commissum et creditum. It is the part of a wise judge to think that a thing is permitted to him, only so far as it is committed and entrusted to him. 4 Inst. 163. That is, he should keep his jurisdiction within the limits of his commission. Id. The word permissum is, in Branch's Principia, misprinted premissum, leading to the following wholly inaccurate and unintelligible translation: "A wise man should consider as much what he premises as what he commits and believes"!

SARCINA. L. Lat. In old English law. A pack. Comb. 295.

SARCLO. L. Lat. A weeding-hook. Spelman.

SASSE. In old English law. A kind of wear with flood-gates, most commonly in cut rivers, [canals?] for the shutting up and letting out the water, as occasion required, for the more ready passing of boats and barges to and fro; a lock; a turnpike; a sluce. Cowell.

SATIO. Lat. [from serere, to sow.] In the civil law. A sowing of seed. One of the modes of gaining property by accession. Frumenta quæ sata sunt solo cedere intelliguntur; grains which are sown, are understood to go with the soil, or become a part of it. Inst. 2. 1. 32.

SATISDATIO. Lat. [from satisdare, from satis, sufficient, or equivalent, and dare, to give.] In the civil law. Security given by a party to an action, as by a defendant, to pay what might be adjudged against him, (judicatum solvi.) Inst. 4. 11. 3 Bl. Com. 291. Properly, security given by sureties or fidejussors. See Dig. 2. 8. 1. Gloss. Cujac. in Dig. 50. 16. 61.

SATISFACTION. [Lat. satisfactio, from satisfacere, from satis, enough, and facere, to make.] In practice. The making amends for an injury done; the giving an equivalent required by law; payment of a legal debt or demand, usually such as is due by matter of record, as a judgment, mortgage, &c.

The discharging or cancelling a judgment or mortgage, by paying the amount of it, or an amount accepted as sufficient by the party holding it, or by having property taken and sold to an equal amount.

SATISFACTION PIECE. In practice. A memorandum in writing, entitled in a cause, stating that satisfaction is acknowledged between the parties, plaintiff and defendant. Upon this being duly acknowledged and filed in the office where the record of the judgment is, the judgment becomes satisfied, and the defendant discharged from it.

Satius est petere fontes quam sectari rivulos. It is better to seek the fountains than to follow the streams. 10 Co. 113. In the common translations of this maxim or adage, the word sectari has been strangely mistaken for secare, to cut.

SAUCES DER MER. L. Fr. Creeks of the sea. Kelham.

SAULX, Saulices, Sawces. L. Fr. Sallows; willows. Kelham.

SAUMA, Soma. L. Lat. [Fr. saume; Ital. soma; Germ. some, sommt.] In old records. A load, pack or burden. Spelman.

Appendix, Note xl.—Assistants or associates of the count; officers under the count. Spelman. Esprit des Lois, liv. 28, c. 28.—The permanent selected judges of the Franks. 1 Spence's Chancery, 61, note (l.)—Judges among the Germans, Franks and Lombards, who were held in peculiar esteem. Spelman.

This word is found in an English charter granted by the wardens of Lynn in Norfolk, in the reign of Henry VIII. in which they are described as Scabini. Spelman. Cowell.

SCACCARIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Exchequer. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 25. Spelman. See Exchequer.

SCALA. L. Lat. In old English law. Scale; the scale. To pay ad scalam, (according to the scale,) was the old way of paying into the exchequer twenty shillings and sixpence for a pound sterling, the sixpence being superadded to make up the full weight. Lowndes' Essay on Coin, 4. Hale on Sheriff's Acc. 21. Cowell.

SCALE. In early American law. To adjust, graduate or value according to a scale. "The court scaled the debt." Marshall, arg. 2 Wash. (Va.) R. 5, 6. A term used after the establishment of American independence, to signify a process of adjusting the difference in value between paper money and specie, rendered necessary by the great depreciation of the former. The act of assembly of Virginia of February 10, 1781, establishing a scale of depreciation, and declaring that outstanding current money contracts should be regulated by such scale, as at the date of such contracts, is called an "An act for scaling paper money contracts." 2 Wash. (Va.) R. [41,] 52. Id. [98, 99,] 127. Id. [103, 104,] 132, 134.

SCEDULA. L. Lat. In old English law. An escrow. Dyer, 34 b.

SCEPP. L. Fr. Stock; a stock. Kelham.

SCHEDULA. L. Lat. In old English law. A scroll; an escrow. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 9, § 13.

A paper containing a list of items. Schedula expensarum; a bill of costs. Clerke's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 9.

SCHEDULE. [Lat. schedula, dimin. of scheda, a sheet of parchment or paper.] In practice. A small sheet or scroll; a sheet of parchment or paper appended to any written instrument, containing a detailed statement of matters generally mentioned and referred to in such instrument.

An inventory, or paper containing an inventory.

SCHETES. In old English law. Usury, so called. Rot. Parl. 14 Ric. II. Cowell.

SCHIRA, Schyra, Shira, Shyra. L. Lat. [from Sax. scyran, to shear, cut or divide.] In old English law. A shire or county. Spelman.

SCHIREFF. The old Scotch form of sheriff. Skene de Verb. Signif.

SCHIREMAN. [Sax. scyremon.] In Saxon law. An officer having the civil government of a shire, or county; an earl. 1 Bl. Com. 398.

"SCHOOL-KEEPING," held to be a "business." 1 M. & S. 95. Lord Ellenborough, Id. 99. A public business. 36 Eng. Law & Eq. R. 83.

"SCHOOL-MASTER," held not to be an addition within the statute of additions. 5 Taunt. 759.

SCHOUT. Belg. [from schuld, debt.] In Dutch law. An officer of a court who convenes the judges and demands from them justice for litigating parties. Usually translated sheriff. O'Callaghan's New Netherlands, i. 101.

The schout fiscaal was an important officer in New Netherlands. His duties were equivalent to those performed among us by a sheriff and an attorney-general. Id. ibid. 102.

SCIANT PRÆSENTES ET FUTURI. L. Lat. Know [all men] present and to come. Litt. sect. 372. Bract. fol. 34 b. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 5. A form of commencing deeds, of very great antiquity in the common law. Expressed in the French of Britton, Sachent à toutz ceux que icy sount, et à toutz ceux que avener sount; Know all those who are here, and all those who are to come. Britt. c. 39.

SCIENDUM EST. Lat. It is to be known, or understood. A phrase frequently used in the civil law, in the commencement of paragraphs or other divisions of a subject, as preliminary to some explanation, or as calling attention to some particular rule. Sciendum itaque est, omnia fidei-commissa primis temporibus infirma fuisse; it is to be known, then, that all trusts were, in their origin, weak. Inst. 2. 23. 1. In primis igitur sciendum est, opus esse, &c.; in the first place, it is to be understood, that it is necessary, &c. Id. 2. 23. 2. See Dig. 10. 4. 3. 9, 15. Id. 21. 1. 19, pr. It corresponded with notandum est, (it is to be marked or noted.) Id. 10. 4. 3. 2. The civilians who wrote in Greek used the corresponding expressions, εἰδέναι δεῖ, (it should be known,) and εἰδέναι χρή. Dig. 26. 3. 1. 3. Id. 26. 5. 21, pr. Id. 27. 1. 13. The expression sciendum or sciendum est occurs frequently in Bracton and Fleta, and corresponds with the L. Fr. est ascavoir, or c'est ascavoir, constantly used in Littleton and other writers. See Ascavoir.

SCIENTER. L. Lat. Knowingly; with knowledge. Bract. fol. 48 b. 2 East, 446. A term used in pleading, to express knowledge on the part of a defendant or prosecuted party, of certain facts essential to constitute a valid ground of complaint against him; and also used as the name of that part of a declaration or indictment in which such knowledge is charged. Thus, in an action for keeping a mischievous animal by which some injury has been done, it must be alleged that the defendant kept it with knowledge of its habits or mischievous nature. 2 Chitt. Pl. 597. And in an indictment for passing counterfeit coin, it must be alleged, that the accused did so, knowing it to be counterfeit. Wharton's Prec. of Indict. 174, 175. This is called, laying the action or indictment with a scienter.

This term is merely the emphatic word used in the old Latin forms of declarations and indictments, retained in use from its peculiar expressiveness.

Scienti et volenti non fit injuria. An injury is not done to one who knows and wills it. An act done to a person with his knowledge and consent, is not an injury. Bract. fol. 20.

SCIENTIA. Lat. [from scire, to know.] Knowledge; information. Scientia sciolorum est mixta ignorantia. The knowledge of sciolists is a mixed ignorance. 8 Co. 159.

Scientia utrimque par pares contrahentes facit. Equal knowledge on both sides makes contracting parties equal. Lord Mansfield, C. J. 3 Burr. 1905, 1910. An insured need not mention what the underwriter knows, or what he ought to know. Id. ibid. Broom's Max. 363, [609.]

SCILICET. Lat. [from scire, to know, and licet, it is permitted.] To wit; that is to say. A word used in pleadings and other instruments, as introductory to a more particular statement of matters previously mentioned in general terms. Hob. 171, 172. Commonly abbreviated sc. or ss. In the old books, s. The word videlicet, (of similar import,) is now more common. See Videlicet.

Scilicet radically means, according to its derivation, "You may know," and is closely allied in its form and application to the civil law phrase sciendum est, (q. v.) So, in colloquial English, formal explanations of any matter are often introduced by the phrase, "you must know." So, the French phrase c'est ascavoir (or est ascavoir,) had the double meaning of "it is to be known," and "that is to say," the latter a derivative from the former. And the English "to wit," itself, literally signifies "to know." See To wit, Wit.

SCINTILLA. Lat. A spark; a remaining particle; the least particle. "A scintilla of equity." Henley, Lord Keeper, 1 W. Bl. 180. "There is not a scintilla of intention upon the face of the will, to show the contrary." Lord Ellenborough, 11 East, 322. "Not a scintilla of benefit." Id. 1 M. & S. 509. See 6 M. & S. 180.

SCINTILLA JURIS. L. Lat. A spark of right; a remaining particle of right; a latent particle of right or interest. A very small but sufficient portion of the fee simple of an estate, supposed to remain in feoffees to uses, to serve and support contingent uses when they came in esse.* 4 Kent's Com. 238—246. 1 Co. 120, Chudleigh's case.—A possibility of future seisin, to serve future uses. 1 Steph. Com. 340, note.—A capacity to receive a future seisin. Burton's Real Prop. 57.

Mr. Sugden has observed that the doctrine of scintilla juris was first started in Brent's case. Dyer, 340 a. Sugden on Powers, 13, 14. The words used by Dyer, in the case last referred to, are, "adhuc remanet quædam scintilla juris et tituli, quasi medium quid inter utrosque status, scilicet illa possibilitas futuri usus emergentis, et sic interesse et titulus et non tantum nuda auctoritas seu potestas remanet; there still remains some scintilla (or spark) of right and title, as a kind of middle or intermediate thing between both estates, to wit, that possibility of a future emerging (or arising) use; and so, an interest and title, and not only a naked authority or power remains.

In 1 Siderfin's Reports, 99, where the above passage is quoted, the word tantum is erroneously printed tam, an error occasioned by a misapprehension of the abbreviation tm, used in the edition of Dyer, quoted by Mr. Sugden. In an old folio edition of Dyer, in French, (London, 1601,) the word is abbreviated tatu, which removes all doubt as to the true reading. This edition seems not to have been consulted at the time the note to 1 Sugden on Powers, 15, was written.

The phrase scintilla juris itself, seems to have been taken from Bracton. Sed quid dicetur de eo qui nullam omnino seysinam habuit, nec aliquam juris scintillam; but what shall be said of him who had no seisin at all, nor any spark of right. Bract. fol. 310. Nuda [possessio,] ubi quis nihil juris habet in re, nec aliquam juris scintillam, sed tantum nudam pedum positionem; naked possession, where one has no right in a thing, nor any spark of right, but only a mere foothold. Id. fol. 39. And see Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7, § 2. Id. lib. 4, c. 30, § 2.

Scintilla juris is used by Lord Coke in the sense of a spark of law. 3 Inst. 79. 4 Bl. Com. 360. Lord Bacon calls it "a conceit." Read. Uses; Works, iv. 193.

Scire debes cum quo contrahis. You ought to know with whom you contract or bargain.

SCIRE FACIAS. L. Lat. (You cause to know.) In practice. A judicial writ, founded upon some record, and requiring the person against whom it is brought to show cause why the party bringing it should not have advantage of such record, or (in case of a scire facias to repeal letters patent,) why the record should not be annulled and vacated. 2 Arch. Pr. 86. So called from the words of the writ (when in Latin,) to the sheriff,—Quod SCIRE FACIAS præfato T. quod sit coram, &c. ostensurus, si quid pro se habeat, aut dicere sciat quare, &c.; that you cause the said T. to know, [or that you give notice to the said T.] that he be before, &c. to show, if he have or know any thing to say for himself, why, &c. Co. Litt. 290 b. See Reg. Jud. 11, 12, 21, 41.

The most common application of this writ is as a process to revive a judgment after the lapse of a certain time, or on a change of parties, or otherwise to have execution of the judgment, in which cases it is merely a continuation of the original action. 2 Arch. Pr. 86. It is used more rarely as a mode of proceeding against special bail on their recognizance, and as a means of repealing letters patent; in which cases it is an original proceeding. Id. ibid. It is said by Lord Coke to be "accounted in law in nature of an action," because the defendant may plead to it, and is sometimes expressly called an action. Co. Litt. 290 b. 1 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 339. Cowen, J. Id. 342. See 2 Burr. Pr. 164. United States Digest, Scire facias.

SCIRE FECI. L. Lat. (I have caused to know.) In practice. The name given to the sheriff's retnrn to a writ of scire facias, that he has caused notice to be given to the party or parties against whom the writ was issued. 2 Arch. Pr. 98, 99. Arch. Forms, 439. Derived from the emphatic words of the old Latin return.

SCIREGEMOTE, (or SCYREGEMOTE.) Sax. [from scyre, shire, and gemote, court.] In Saxon law. The shire mote or county court; the principal court of the Saxons, held twice a year before the bishop and alderman. Crabb's Hist. 28. Spelman, voc. Gemotum.

Scire leges, non hoc est verba earum tenere, sed vim ac potestatem. To know the laws, is not to observe their mere words, but their force and power; [that is, the essential meaning in which their efficacy resides.] Dig. 1. 3. 17. 1 Kent's Com. 462.

Scire proprie est rem ratione et per causam cognoscere. To know properly is to know a thing in its reason, and by its cause. We are truly said to know any thing, where we know the true cause thereof. Co. Litt. 183 b.

SCIREWYTE. In old English law. A tax or prestation paid to the sheriff for holding the assises or county courts. Paroch. Ant. 573. Cowell.

SCISSIO. Lat. [from scindere, to cut.] In old English law. A cutting. Scissio auricularum; cropping of the ears. An old punishment. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 10.

Scissor; a cutter. Scissores bursarum; cut-purses. Id. ibid. § 11.

Scissura; a cutting. Scissura bursæ; purse-cutting. Id. ibid.

SCITO quod ut modus est, si conditio, quia causa.

Know that ut expresses or denotes manner, si, condition, quia, cause. A rule in the form of a hexameter line, by which the peculiar force and function of the particles ut, si and quia, in old conveyancing, were expressed. Bract. fol. 18 b. Dyer, 138 b. See Ut, Si, Quia.

SCLANDRE. L. Fr. In old English law. Slander. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 34.

SCLUSA, Slusa, Clusa, Exclusa, Clausa. L. Lat. In old European law. A place so narrowed by nature or art, as easily to prevent or permit the passage of any thing. Spelman.

SCOT. [L. Lat. scottum, scottus, scotta; from Sax. sceat, a part or portion.] In old English law. A tax, or tribute; one's share of a contribution. Or rather, a contribution of several.

Camden, following Matthew of Westminster, defines this word to mean, "that which is gathered together into one heap, from several things," (illud quod ex diversis rebus in unum acervum aggregatur.) Cowell. Spelman observes that it properly signifies what the authors of the middle ages called conjectus, (a throwing together,) because it was thrown together by several into one, from Sax. sceote, to throw or cast, whence sceotan, to shoot. It is found associated with the word lot, in the laws of William the Conqueror, and other early records; scot and lot, (or, in the Saxon form, an hlot & an scote,) signifying a customary contribution laid upon all subjects, according to their ability. Cowell. Spelman, vocc. Scot, Lot.

SCOTALE, Scotall. [L. Lat. scotalla, scotallum; from Sax. scot, money or tribute, and ale.] In old English law. A compotation or entertainment with ale, given for the purpose of extorting money. Called, in old English, ale shot, and in Welch, camortha. Spelman. Britt. c. 21. Cowell. The word scotalla occurs in the Charter of the Forest, (c. 8, or 7,) and is defined by Manwood to be, where any officer of the forest keeps an alehouse within the forest, by color of his office, causing men to come to his house, and there to spend their money, for fear of having displeasure. Id. But Spelman gives a different reading of the word, with quite a different interpretion, which he prefers.

SCOTALLA, Scotala, Scotallum. L. Lat. In old English law. Scotall or scotale, (q. v.) Nullus forestarius vel bedellus de cetero faciat scotallas, vel colligat garbas vel avenam, vel bladum aliquod, vel agnos vel porcellos, vel aliquam collectam faciat; no forester or beadle shall from henceforth make scotales, or collect sheaves or oats or any corn, or lambs or pigs, or make any collection. Cart. de Forest. c. 7. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 25. Spelman, voc. Scotala.

SCOTTARE. L. Lat. In old records. To pay scot, tax or customary dues. Cowell.

SCRAMA. L. Lat. In old European law. A kind of cutting weapon. L. Wisigoth. lib. 9, tit. 2, l. 9. Spelman.

SCRAWL. A word used in some of the United States for scrowl or scroll, (q. v.) "The word 'seal,' written in a scrawl attached to the name of an obligor, makes the instrument a specialty." 2 Florida R. 418.

SCRIBA. Lat. [from scribere, to write.] A scribe; a secretary. Scriba regis; a king's secretary; a chancellor. Spelman.

Scribere est agere. To write is to act. Treasonable words set down in writing amount to overt acts of treason. 2 Roll. R. 89. 4 Bl. Com. 80. Broom's Max. 146, [229.]

SCRIP, held not to be goods, wares or merchandize. 16 Mees. & W. 66.

SCRIPT. [from Lat. scriptum, q. v.] In practice. A writing. A paper offered for probate as a will, called a script. 3 Jones' Law R. 154.

SCRIPTORIUM. L. Lat. [from scribere, to write.] In old records. A place in monasteries, where writing was done. Spelman.

SCRIPTUM. Lat. [from scribere, to write.] In old conveyancing. A writing; a thing written. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25. This word, alone, does not import or signify a deed, (that is, an instrument under seal.) 2 Stra. 814.

Scriptum indentatum; a writing indented; an indenture or deed. Reynolds, J. Id. 815.

Scriptum obligatorium; a writing obligatory. The technical name of a bond in old pleadings. T. Raym. 393. Any writing under seal. Id. ibid.

SCRIPTURA. Lat. [from scribere, to write.] In old English law. The act or fact of writing. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25.

SCRIVECT'. In old English practice. Scruet. Scrivect' finium; scruet of fines. A species of roll used in cases of habeas corpus. 3 How. St. Trials, 117.

SCRIVENER. In practice. One who writes, or copies writings for others. Called an office of confidence. 2 Rep. in Ch. 29. As to the office of money scrivener, see 3 Campb. R. 538.

SCRIVER. L. Fr. To write. Kelham.

SCROLL, Scrowl. [L. Fr. escrowe, escrovet.] In practice. A paper or parchment containing some writing, and rolled up so as to conceal it; an escrow. Littleton speaks of petits escrovets, (little scrolls,) used for drawing lots between co-parceners. Litt. sect. 246. See Escrow. The papers on which jurors' names are written, and so drawn out of the box, are still sometimes called scrolls. 8 Iredell's (N. C.) R. 35.

A flourish with a pen, at the end of a signature, or a circle of ink, or other mark witn a pen, representing a seal, is allowed in some of the United States as a valid substitute for a seal. 4 Kent's Com. 453, and notes. 4 Greenl. Cruise's Dig. [27,] 36, 38, note. This is sometimes called a scrawl. Swan's Statutes of Ohio, 1854, chap. 102. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 280, [296.]

SCRUET-ROLL, (or SCRUET FINIUM.) In old practice. A species of roll or record, on which the bail on habeas corpus was entered. 3 St. Trials, 134, arg.

SCRUTATOR. Lat. In old English law. A searcher or bailiff of a river; a water-bailiff, whose business was to look to the king's rights, as his wrecks, his floatsan, jetsan, water-strays, royal fishes. Hale de Jur. Mar. pars 1, c. 5.

SCTUM. A common abbreviation, or contraction, in the civil law, of senatus consultum, (q. v.)

SCULDASIUS, Sculdais. L. Lat. In old European law. A kind of judicial officer; a judge's assistant, combining ministerial with judicial duties. Spelman. LL. Longobard. lib. 1, tit. 2, l. 2. Id. tit. 14, l. 7.

SCURIA. L. Lat. In old European law. A barn or stable. LL. Alaman. tit. 82, § 2. Spelman.

S'C'US. A contraction of sanctus. 1 Instr. Cler. 12.

SCUSSUS. L. Lat. In old European law. Shaken or beaten out, (excussus;) threshed, as grain. Spelman.

SCUTAGE. [L. Lat. scutagium, from scutum, a shield; L. Fr. escuage, from escu, a shield; Sax. scild-penig, shield-money.] In old English law. A sum of money assessed upon those tenants by knight-service who had made default in doing their service, (that is, had not followed their lord in person to the wars, nor found a substitute) being so much for each shield, (scutum.) Reg. Orig. 88.

A pecuniary aid or tribute originally reserved by particular lords, instead or in lieu of personal service, varying in amount according to the expenditure which the lord had to incur in his personal attendance upon the king in his wars. See Wright on Tenures, 121—134.

A pecuniary composition or commutation made by a tenant by knight service, in lieu of actual service. 2 Bl. Com. 74. See Bract. fol. 36, 37, 77 b.

SCUTAGIUM. L. Lat. [from scutum, a shield.] In old English law. Scutage, (q. v.) Scutagium [nominatur] quia talis præstatio pertinet ad scutum quod assumitur ad servitium militare; it is called scutage because such payment belongs to the shield which is borne for military service. Bract. fol. 36. Id. fol. 77 b.

SCUTE, Skute. [Lat. scutum.] A French coin of gold, coined A. D. 1427, of the value of 3s. 4d. Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 29, note.

SCUTELRIA. L. Lat. In old English law. A scullery. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 18.

SCUTIFER. L. Lat. In old records. Esquire; the same as armiger. Spelman.

SCUTUM. L. Lat. In old English law. A pent-house or awning; literally, a shield, or shelter. By the Assise of Measures, 9 Ric. I. it was forbidden to all merchants throughout England, to spread over their shop windows red or black cloths or awnings (scuta,) or any other things by which the sight of purchasers is often deceived in selecting a good cloth. Spelman.

SCUTUM ARMORUM. L. Lat. In old records. A shield or coat of arms. Cowell.

SCYRA. L. Lat. In old English law. Shire; county; the inhabitants of a county. Writ cited, Hale's Hist. Com. Law, 119.

SE, Si. L. Fr. If; whether; his; but; except. Kelham.

SE DEFENDENDO. L. Lat. [L. Fr. soy defendaunt.] In defending himself; in self defence. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 23, § 15. See Homicide se defendendo.

SEA-FISH, held not to be shell-fish. 2 M. & S. 568.

SEA-GREENS. In Scotch law. Those grounds which are over-flowed in spring tides. Bell's Dict. Held to be private property. Id. Land washed by the sea only at high spring tides. 1 Bell's Ap. Cas. 512, arg.

SEA-LETTER. In international law. A document which neutral merchant vessels are bound to carry in time of war, as an evidence of nationality, and for the purpose of protection against belligerent powers.* 4 Kent's Com. 157. In form, it is a permission from the neutral state to the master of the vessel, to proceed on the intended voyage, and usually contains his name and residence, the name, description and destination of the vessel, with such other matter as the local law and practice require. Wheaton on Cap. 65. 5 East, 398. Jacobsen's Sea Laws, (Am. ed. 1818,) 69, note. In American law, the term sea-letter has generally been used as synonymous with passport, (q. v.) Id. 67, note. 1 Kent's Com. 157. Wheaton on Cap. 65. According to Mr. Marshall, however, the sea-letter (or sea-brief, as it is otherwise termed,) is a different document from the passport, relating to the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes, and its destination. 1 Marshall on Ins. 317. But see the edition of 1810, p. 406 b. And, in New-York, it has formerly been held to be the same thing with the certificate of property or ownership. 2 Johns. R. 531. But see 1 Id. 192. Jacobsen's Sea Laws, 66—69, note, (Am. ed.)

SEA-SERVICES. See 3 How. State Trials, 869.

SEA-SHORE. [Lat. littus maris.] The ground between the ordinary high and low water mark. Hale de Jur. Maris, pars 1, c. 4, 5. 3 Kent's Com. 431. See Littus maris. According to the Roman law, the shore included the land as high up as the largest wave extended in winter. See Litus. And this definition has been substantially adopted in the Civil Code of Louisiana. Art. 442.

SEA-WORTHY. In insurance law. In a condition to perform a voyage. 2 Steph. Com. 177. A warranty of sea-worthiness means that the vessel is competent to resist the ordinary attacks of wind and weather, and is competently equipped and manned for the voyage, with a sufficient crew, and with sufficient means to sustain them, and with a captain of general good character and nautical skill. 3 Kent's Com. 287, and note. See 1 Arnould on Ins. 652. "To constitute sea-worthiness of the hull of a vessel in respect to cargo, the hull must be so tight, staunch and strong, as to be competent to resist all ordinary action of the sea, and to prosecute and complete the voyage without damage to the cargo under deck." Curtis, J. 19 Howard's R. 167.

SEAL. L. Fr. and Eng. [Lat. sigillum, signum.] In conveyancing. An impression upon wax or wafer, or some other tenacious substance, capable of being impressed. 4 Kent's Com. 452. 5 Johns. R. 239. Bronson, J. 1 Denio's R. 376. 2 Hill's R. 227. 3 Id. 493. Lord Coke defines a seal to be wax impressed, (cera impressa,) or wax with an impression, adding that wax without an impression is not a seal, (cera sine impressione non est sigillum.) 3 Inst. 169. This is the well-settled definition of the common law, and it has been adopted in several of the United States. In New-York, it has been decided that an impression upon paper alone is not a seal, except where it has been made so by statute. Bronson, J. 1 Denio's R. 376. 2 Hill's R. 227. 3 Id. 493. But see 13 Howard's R. 472. The same rule prevails generally in the Eastern States. 4 Greenl. Cruise's Dig. [27,] 36, 38, note. See 8 Howard's R. 451, 464; Woodbury, J. But in the Southern and Western States, from New-Jersey inclusive, the impression upon wax has been disused, and a scroll, scrawl or flourish with a pen, substituted for many purposes, in its place. See Id. ibid. 4 Kent's Com. 452, 453, and note. 4 Texas R. 231. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 280, [295, 296.] See Scroll.

SEAL. [Lat. sigillum, signum.] A plate or disk of metal, usually of circular form, having some device engraved upon it, with which an impression may be made on wax or other substance, on paper or parchment, for the purpose of authentication. See Merlin Repert. mot Sceau. Of this description are the seals of a government, the seals of courts, of public notaries, and other public officers.

Private seals are also engraved on other materials, such as precious stones; but the use of these in the execution of instruments is comparatively infrequent, and of far less importance than formerly. When sealing was the principal formality in the execution of instruments, the seal used by a donor or grantor was emphatically and literally his, that is, it was his private seal, bearing some peculiar device by which it was known, so that the deed or charter upon which it was impressed was by that circumstance known to have been executed by him. Hence the importance attached to the possession of these private seals, which appears in various ancient records. In one of the Clause Rolls of 8 Edw. I. (m. 3, in dorso,) it is recorded that one Henry de Pergount came into the Chancery, and publicly declared that he had lost his seal, and that if any instrument should be found sealed with that seal after that date, it was of no value or moment. Blount. In another instrument, dated at Drakelew, in the 18th year of Richard II. one John de Gresley makes known to all Christian people, that he has not had possession of his seal for a whole year last past, and being in good memory and sound mind, gives notice that he disclaims and totally denies any writings sealed with his seal from the time aforesaid until the day when his said seal should be restored. Blount, voc. Sigillum. And according to Britton, it was customary in such cases, to have public notice of the loss given in churches and market places. Britt. c. 28. And see Bract. fol. 15, 38.

SEAL. In English practice. The sitting of a court. See 1 P. Wms. 523. 3 Id. 240.

SEALED AND DELIVERED. In conveyancing. The common formula of attestation of deeds and other instruments, written immediately over the witnesses' names. This has been retained without change from the old practice, when sealing alone, without signing, constituted a sufficient execution or authentication. 2 Bl. Com. 306. See 15 Ohio R. 107.

In England, it has been held that the words "sealed and delivered," in an attestation, does not import signing. 5 M. & S. 581. 3 Id. 512. 4 Taunt. 213. But the contrary has recently been held in the Supreme Court of the United States. 8 Howard's R. 10, citing 6 M. & Gr. 386.

SEALX, Seaux. L. Fr. Seals. Britt. c. 4. De fauseours de sealx, et de monoye. Id.

SEAMAN. [Lat. nauta.] A mariner; one whose business is navigation; a person who works, or aids in navigating a vessel, a sailor.* See 3 Kent's Com. 176. See Nauta.

In a large sense, this term includes all persons who do duty on board of a ship, and are instrumental to her navigation. Roccus de Nav. & Naulo, Note ix. See Crew.

SEARCH, RIGHT OF. In international law. The right of belligerent powers to examine and search private merchant vessels at sea, for enemy's property, and articles contraband of war.* 1 Kent's Com. 153. It is generally limited to an inspection of the ship's papers, or the documentary proofs of the property on board. This is wholly distinct from what is termed the right of visit, which is conceded for the sole purpose of ascertaining the real character of a vessel sailing under suspicious circumstances. Id. ibid. note. The latter right has been termed by the Supreme Court of the United States, the right of approach. 11 Wheaton's R. 1, 43. In the recent diplomatic correspondence between the governments of Great Britain and the United States, the distinction between the right of visit and that of search has been denied on the part of the latter.

SEARCH WARRANT. In criminal law. A warrant granted by a justice or magistrate, upon the oath or affirmation of a party, authorizing the search of premises, usually for goods stolen, but sometimes for other purposes. 2 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 179, 180. 1 N. Y. Rev. St. [93,] 84, § 11. 2 Id. [746,] 625, §§ 25—28. Id. [149,] 83, § 5. 1 Id. [125, § 54,] 115, § 59.

SEAWANT, Seewan, Zeawan. In old American law. The Dutch name for wampum, or Indian money, which consisted of perforated beads, (white, and black or purple,) manufactured from the inside of shells, and strung together. See O'Callaghan's N. Netherlands, i. 60, 61. Id. ii. 543.

SEAUPWERPE, Seawerpe. Sax. [from sæ, sea, and upwerpen, to throw up.] In old records. Wreck; that which is cast up by the sea. (Lat. jactura maris; Fr. varech.) Spelman.

SECOND DELIVERANCE, Writ of. [L. Lat. breve de secunda deliberatione.] In practice. A writ allowed a plaintiff in replevin, where the defendant has obtained judgment for return of the goods, by default or nonsuit, in order to have the same distress again delivered to him, on giving the same security as before. 3 Bl. Com. 150. 3 Steph. Com. 668. This writ has been formally abolished in New-York. 2 Rev. St. [533,] 439, § 63.

SECOND SURCHARGE. In English law. The surcharge of a common a second time, by the same defendant against whom the common was before admeasured; and for which the writ of second surcharge was given by the statute of Westminster, 2. 3 Bl. Com. 239.

SECONDARY. In English practice. An officer of the courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas; so called, because he was second or next to the chief officer. In the King's Bench he was called Master of the King's Bench office, and was a deputy of the prothonotary or chief clerk. 1 Arch. Pr. 11, 12. By statutes 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 30, the office of secondary was abolished.

SECONDARY CONVEYANCES. The name given to that class of conveyances which pre-suppose some other conveyance precedent, and only serve to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. 2 Bl. Com. 324. Otherwise termed derivative conveyances, (q. v.)

SECONDARY EVIDENCE. In practice. The next best evidence that can be given of the contents of an instrument or writing, where the best possible evidence the nature of the case will admit (that is, the instrument or writing itself,) cannot be produced, as where it has been lost or destroyed, or withheld by the opposite party.* Arch. Pl. & Evid. 373. Parol evidence is frequently made use of for this purpose. See 9 Wheaton's R. 483. Id. 581. United States Digest, Evidence.

SECTA. L. Lat. In old English practice. Suit. A number of persons which a plaintiff produced in court, immediately after making his count or declaration, for the purpose of confirming his allegations by their testimony, before the defendant pleaded. Et inde statim producat sectam sufficientem, duos ad minus, vel tres, vel plures, si possit; and thereupon he should immediately produce a sufficient suit, two persons, at the least, or three or more, if he can. Bract. fol. 410. See Id. 214 b, 400 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, §§ 25, 28, 38. Id. c. 55, § 2. Id. c. 63, §§ 10, 12. Called secta, (from sequi, to follow,) because they were usually the plaintiff's followers or retainers, (domestici et familiares.) 3 Bl. Com. 295. Bract. fol. 214 b, 400 b. This production of suit became a mere form as early as the reign of Edward II. but the formula by which it was expressed,—"Et inde producit sectam," continued to be retained on the record, and in this way came to be used as the concluding clause of the plaintiff's declaration; though, in the modern forms, it is translated, (with reference to another meaning of secta,) "And thereupon he brings suit," or, "And therefore he brings his suit," &c. Steph. Pl. 429, 430. 3 Bl. Com. 295. Spelman seems to have overlooked this meaning of the word.

Pursuit of a felon. Et sic quod fiat secta de terra in terram, cum omni diligentia, donec malefactores comprehendantur; and so that suit (or pursuit) be made from land to land, (from one lord's land to another's) with all diligence, until the malefactors be taken. Bract. 116. Recens secta; fresh pursuit. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 24, § 3.

A suit or action; the prosecution, or following up of one's right at law. Spelman. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 40. Secta est pugna civilis; sicut actores armantur actionibus, et quasi accinguntur gladiis, ita rei [è contra,] muniuntur exceptionibus, et defenduntur quasi clypeis. A suit is a civil battle; as plaintiffs are armed with actions, and girded [with them] as it were, with swords, so defendants, on the other hand, are guarded with exceptions, [pleas or defences,] and defended [with them] as it were, with shields. Hob. 20. This, with the exception of the words secta est pugna civilis, is a quotation from Bracton. Bract. fol. 399 b.

A feudal service, by which a tenant was bound to attend his lord's court. See Secta curiæ.

A customary service on the part of a tenant, to grind his grain at his lord's mill. See Secta ad molendinum.

In old records. A suit of clothes. Cowell. Spelman.

SECTA AD MOLENDINUM. L. Lat. [L. Fr. sute à molyn.] In old English law. Suit at mill; suit to mill; the customary service of doing suit to another's mill. Hale's Anal. sect. xlii. A service which was due by usage time out of mind, from the persons resident in a particular place, of carrying their corn to a certain mill to be ground. 3 Bl. Com. 235. The writ de secta ad molendinum was given as a remedy for the withdrawal of this service. Id. ibid.

SECTA AD FURNUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Suit due to a man's public oven or bake-house. 3 Bl. Com. 235.

SECTA AD TORRALE. L. Lat. In old English law. Suit due to a man's kiln or malt-house. 3 Bl. Com. 235.

SECTA CURIÆ. L. Lat. In feudal and old English law. Suit of court; suit to court; the service of following the lord in his court, or of attending his court. A service which all feudal tenants were bound to perform; the object of such attendance being to answer such complaints as might be alleged against themselves, as well as to form a jury or homage for the trial of their fellow tenants.* 2 Bl. Com. 54. Hale's Anal. sect. xlii.

SECTATOR. L. Lat. [from secta, suit.] In old English law. A suitor; one who was bound to do suit, especially suit at court. The sectatores, or suitors of the courts, were the judges who transacted the business. Worthington on Juries, 19. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 13; c. 53, § 1.

SECTORES. Lat. In the Roman law. Purchasers at auction, or public sales. Babington on Auctions, 2. Properly, the purchasers of confiscated property. Adam's Rom. Ant. 49.

For; in favor of; (pro.) Calv. Lex.

Near; (prope.) Secundum ripam; near the bank. Id. Secundum parietem; near the wall. Id.

SECUNDUM ALLEGATA ET PROBATA. Lat. According to the things alleged and proved; according to the allegations and proofs. 1 Sumner's R. 375. "Courts and juries cannot do otherwise than decide secundum allegata et probata in each particular case." Lord Ellenborough, 15 East, 81. See 3 Taunt. 30.

SECUNDUM FORMAM STATUTI. Lat. According to the form of the statute. This phrase is adduced by Sir W. Blackstone to show the inferiority of the English language to the Latin, in point of conciseness; seven English words being necessary to express the meaning of three Latin. 3 Bl. Com. 323, and note. The phrase secundum statutum is found in the civil law. Calv. Lex.

SECUNDUM LEGEM COMMUNEM. L. Lat. According to the common law. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 13. Non secundum legem communem, sed secundum suas consuetudines diu obtentas; not according to the common law, but according to their own long established customs. Id. ibid.

SECUNDUM NATURAM. Lat. According to nature; natural. Secundum naturam est commoda cujusque rei eum sequi, quem sequentur incommoda. It is according to nature that the advantages of any thing should attach to him to whom the disadvantages attach. Dig. 50. 17. 10.

SECUNDUM NORMAM LEGIS. Lat. According to the rule of law; by the intendment and rule of law. Bacon's Arg. Low's case; Works, iv. 234.

SECUNDUM SUBJECTAM MATERIAM. L. Lat. According to the subject matter. 1 Bl. Com. 229. All agreements must be construed secundum subjectam materiam, if the matter will bear it. 2 Mod. 80, arg. Delivery must be secundum subjectam materiam. 2 Kent's Com. 439.

SECURUS. Lat. Secure; safe or sure. See Si te fecerit securum.

SECURITAS. Lat. [from securus, q. v.] In old English law. Security; surety. Capta securitate à creditore de prosequendo; having taken security from the creditor to prosecute. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 33. See infra.

SECURITATE PACIS, Breve De. L. Lat. In old English practice. Writ of security of the peace. A writ which lay for one who was in fear of some bodily harm from another; as where another had threatened to kill, beat or assault him. F. N. B. 79 G. Called, in the Register, breve de minis, a writ of threats, or in case of threats. Reg. Oriy. 88 b.

SECURITY. [Lat. securitas, q. v.] That which makes secure. An instrument given to secure the performance of an act or contract.

A surety; a person bound by such an instrument. But surety is the more proper term in this application.

SECURITY FOR COSTS. In practice. A security which a defendant in an action may require of a plaintiff who does not reside within the jurisdiction of the court, for the payment of such costs as may be awarded to the defendant. 1 Tidd's Pr. 534. 2 Arch. Pr. 213. 1 Burr. Pr. 116.

Securius expediuntur negotia commissa pluribus, et plus vident oculi quam oculus. Matters entrusted to several are more securely dispatched, and [several] eyes see more than [one] eye. 4 Co. 46 a.

SECUS. Lat. Otherwise, (aliter.) 12 Mod. 229. 1 P. Wms. 447. See Aliter.

Amiss; contrary. Calv. Lex.

SED NON ALLOCATUR. L. Lat. But it is not allowed. A phrase used in the old reports, after giving the argument of counsel, where the court is contra. Latch, 106. "It was argued," &c. "It was insisted," &c. "Sed non allocatur." Com. 329. Id. 576, 577. "Sed non allocatur, because it has been otherwise adjudged." Latch, 171. See Allocatur.

SEDERE. Lat. To sit, as a court, or the judges of a court. See Sedente curia. Bracton uses residere.

In the civil law. To be satisfactory to a judge, (placere.) Si hoc judici sederit; if this be approved by the judge. Dig. 2. 8. 7. 2.

SEDERUNT. L. Lat. (They sat.) In Scotch law. The session or sitting of a court. See Acts of sederunt.

SEDES. Lat. A see; the dignity of a bishop. 3 Steph. Com. 65.

SEDITIO. Lat. [from seorsum, apart and ire, to go.] In the civil law. Disturbance of the public tranquillity, (quietis publicæ perturbatio.) See Cod. 9. 30. 1.

In old English law. Sedition; treason. Glanv. lib. 1, c. 2. 1 Hale's P. C. 77, note.

SEDITION. [from seditio, q. v.] In criminal law. An offence against the government of a country, not capital, and not amounting to treason, consisting of attempts made by meetings, or by speeches or publications, to disturb the tranquillity of the state, or to excite discontent against the government.* It is of the like tendency with treason, but without the overt acts which are essential to constitute the latter crime. Brande.

Sedition, (seditio,) is used by the oldest writers on English law, (Glanville, Bracton and Hengham,) in the sense of treason, and seditio continued to be the technical word in legal proceedings until the term proditio prevailed in its room. In the time of Sir Matthew Hale, sedition had lost this ancient sense, which accounts for the comparative disuse of the term in modern English law, and its entire omission in some of the dictionaries and standard treatises. 1 Hale's P. C. 77, and note. For a minute discussion of its meaning, with a copious reference to authorities, see 3 Howell's State Trials, 242, 243, 244, 248, 249, 254, 261, 267, 279, 283, 284.

SEDUCTION. [from Lat. seductio, from seducere, to draw aside.] The debauching of a woman; the offence of inducing a woman to consent to unlawful intercourse. See 3 Bl. Com. 140. 3 Steph. Com. 540.

SEE. L. Fr. Seat. Kelham.

SEEL. L. Fr. In old English law. Seal; a seal. Le seel est consut' et glué al fait; the seal is sewed to and glued to the deed. Yearb. M. 7 Hen. VI. 27.

SEHOMSOKNE. A word in Fleta, which, in the errata to the edition of 1647, is corrected sahomsokne. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 34, § 8. From the context, it seems to be a misprint for homsokne, or hamsokne, (q. v.)

SEI. L. Fr. Him; his; them. Kelham.

SEIGNEUR. Fr. and L. Fr. In old English law. Lord; a lord. Used, also, in the sense of owner or master, (dominus.) See Barringt. Obs. Stat. 286, 287.

SEIGNIORESS. In old English law. A female superior; a lady. Perk. c. 6, s. 462.

SEIGNIORY. [L. Fr. seignioury; Fr. seigneurie; L. Lat. dominicum, dominium.] In feudal and English law. Lordship; the estate which a lord had in the land held by his tenant; the ultimate property retained by the lord. See Dominicum.

A lordship or manor. Cowell.

SEIGNIOUR. L. Fr. [Lat. dominus.] Lord; a lord. Britt. c. 68.

SEISED. This word excludes chattels. Bac. Read. Uses; Works, iv. 189. Anciently, however, it was applied to personal property. See Seisi.

"Seised," in the New-York statutes of escheats, construed. 3 Comstock's R. 294.

SEISER. L. Fr. To take; to take hold of. Seiser et tener; to take and hold. Britt. c. 40.

SEISI. L. Fr. In old English law. Seised; possessed. Seisi de deux juments; seised of two beasts. Yearb. M. 4 Edw. III. 11.

SEISIARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To seize. Nos vero, vel ballivi nostri non seisiemus terram aliquam nec redditum pro debito aliquo; but we or our bailiffs will not seize any land nor rent for any debt. Mag. Cart. c. 8.

SEISIE. L. Fr. [from seiser, q. v.] In old English law. Seised. Called by Lord Coke, "a word of art, and in pleading only applied to a freehold at least, as possesse, (possessed,) is, for distinction sake, to a chattel real or personal." Co. Litt. 200 b, 17 a. Litt. sect. 324. See Seisi, Seised.

SEISIN. [L. Fr. seisine, from seiser, saisir, to seize; L. Lat. seisina, seysina, q. v.] Possession; possession of land; possession of an estate of freehold in lands. Co. Litt. 153 a. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 1000, § 2374.

In its feudal sense, actual corporal possession of land;* investiture. Spelman. The ownership of a feudal tenant. 1 Spence's Chancery, 135, note. "Seisin is a technical term to denote the completion of that investiture by which a tenant was admitted into the tenure, and without which, no freehold could be constituted or pass." Lord Mansfield, 1 Burr. 60, 107. See Seisina, Seysina.

Seisin is properly applied to freehold, possession to goods and chattels, although sometimes the one is used instead of the other. Co. Litt. 17 a. Seisin in deed is actual possession of the freehold; seisin in law is a legal right to such possession. 4 Kent's Com. 386, note. In some of the United States, seisin means merely ownership, and the distinction between seisin in deed and in law is not known in practice. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 82, 83, [41, 42.]

SEISINA, Seysina, Saisina. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. seisine, q. v.] In old English law. Seisin; possession of a freehold estate. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7, §§ 2, 3.

Seisina facit stipitem. Seisin makes the stock. 2 Bl. Com. 209. Actual seisin of a person makes him the root or stock from which all future inheritance by right of blood must be derived. Id. ibid. This maxim has been, in effect, discarded in England, by the Inheritance Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106, which establishes in every case the rule that descent shall be traced from the purchaser. 1 Steph. Com. 367. Broom's Max. 226—229, [401, 404.] It is abrogated, also, in most of the United States. 4 Kent's Com. 388, 389. 13 Georgia R. 238.

SEISIRE. L. Lat. In old English law. To take; to be seised. Seisitus; seised. Cro. Jac. 634. See Seysire.

SEIZURE. Capture. "Every capture is a seizure." Lord Ellenborough, 15 East, 13.

A shop, shed or stall. Cowell.

A wood of sallows, willows, or withies. Co. Litt. 4 b.

SELECTI JUDICES. Lat. In the Roman law. Selected judges; persons chosen by lot, out of a larger number, to act as judices in criminal cases. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 13, num. 4, 20. Adam's Rom. Ant. 276, 280. The points of resemblance between these judices and the jurors of the common law, have been particularly noticed by Blackstone, but, as remarked by Dr. Hallifax, his observations on this head would have been better placed, if inserted in that part of the commentaries which treats of criminal proceedings. 3 Bl. Com. 366. The selecti judices were exclusively used in what were termed publica judicia, or criminal trials, and not at all in the trial of civil causes. Hall. Anal. b. 3, c. 13, num. 31, note.

SELEZ. L. Fr. Saddled. Selez e enfrenez; saddled and bridled. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 22.

SELF DEFENCE. In criminal law. The protection of one's person or property against some injury attempted by another. The right of such protection. An excuse for the use of force in resisting an attack on the person, and especially for killing an assailant. See Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, §§ 1019—1026.

SELI. L. Fr. Of this; this. Kelham. A corruption of celui.

SELIO. Lat. [L. Fr. selion, from Fr. seillon, ground raised between two furrows, from Sax. sul, or syl, a plough.] In old English law. A selion or ridge of land, containing no certain quantity, but sometimes more and sometimes less. Spelman. Co. Litt. 5 b. Cowell.

SEMB. An abbreviation of semble, (q. v.)

SEMBLABLE. L. Fr. Similar; like. Britt. c. 66.

SEMBLE. L. Fr. Seems; it seems. A term used in the books, expressive of an opinion on some point not definitely settled; or expressive of an opinion as to the application or bearing of some decision upon a particular point. Used by the reporters of cases, where they are not confident as to the ruling of the court on a particular point.

In the older books, it is constantly used by counsel and judges, on argument, expressive of an opinion. Il semble à moy; it seems to me; I think. Dyer, 10. See Id. 13, 14. Shelley semble le feffement bone; Shelley thought the feoffment good. Id. 33. It is used also to express an unsettled opinion of the court. Semble per curiam que n'est bone; sed advisari volunt; it seems, by the court, that it is not good; but they will be advised. Freem. 247.

SEPTUM. Lat. [from sepere, to enclose.] In the Roman law. An enclosure; an enclosed place where the people voted; otherwise called ovile. Adam's Rom. Ant. 99.

In old English law. An enclosure or close. Cowell.

SEPTUNX. Lat. In the Roman law. A division of the as, containing seven unciæ, or duodecimal parts; the proportion of seven-twelfths. Tayl. Civ. Law, 492. 2 Bl. Com. 462, note. See As.

SEQUATUR SUB SUO PERICULO. L. Lat. (Let him follow at his peril.) In old English practice. A writ which issued where a sheriff had returned nihil, upon a summoneas ad warrantizandum, and after an alias and pluries had been issued. So called, because the tenant lost his lands without any recovery in value, unless upon that writ he brought the vouchee into court. Roscoe's Real Act. 268. Cowell.

SEQUELA. L. Lat. [from sequi, to follow or sue.] In old English law. Suit; process or prosecution. Sequela causæ; the process of a cause; the process and depending issue of a cause or trial. Cowell. Sequela curiæ; suit of court. 2 Mon. Angl. 253.

Suit; following or followers; retinue. Et totam sequelam eorundem; and all the suit of the same. Mag. Cart. Johan. c. 50.

The suit of a villein; his issue or offspring; the retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of servile tenants. Cum sequela, et catallis suis quæ corpus sequuntur; with his suit and all his chattels which follow his body. Bract. fol. 197 b. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 13, § 3. Ovesque ses chateux, et tout sa suyte. Britt. c. 38. See Barringt. Obs. Stat. 306.

SEQUESTER. Lat. [from sequi, to follow.] In the civil law. A person with whom two or more contending parties deposited the subject matter of the controversy, (apud quem plures eandem rem de qua controversia est deposuerunt.) Dig. 50. 16. 110. So called, say the Digests, from the circumstance that it is entrusted to one who meets, or, as it were, follows the contending parties, (ab eo quod occurrenti aut quasi sequenti eos qui contendunt, committitur.) Id. ibid. Or, according to Gellius, because both parties followed or relied upon the good faith of the person so chosen, (quod ejus, qui electus sit, utraque pars fidem sequatur.) Noct. Att. xx. 11.

A mediator or umpire between two parties, (interventor;) a middle-man, (Gr. μεσέγγυος.) Calv. Lex.

To SEQUESTER (or SEQUESTRATE.) [Lat. sequestrare.] In the civil law. To deposit a thing which is the subject of a controversy, in the hands of a third person, to hold for the contending parties. See Sequester. To take a thing which is the subject of a controversy, out of the possession of the contending parties, and deposit it in the hands of a third person. Calv. Lex.

In equity practice. To take possession of the property of a defendant, and keep the same until he shall have cleared himself of a contempt. See Sequestration.

In English ecclesiastical practice. To gather the fruits of a void benefice, and keep them for the use of the next incumbent. Stat. 28 Hen. VIII. c. 11. Cowell, voc. Sequestration. To take possession of the ecclesiastical property of a defendant, and hold it until, out of the rents, tithes and profits, the plaintiff's debt be satisfied. See Sequestrari facias. To dispose of the goods and chattels of one deceased, whose estate no man would intermeddle with. Cowell, voc. Sequestration.

In international law. To seize the property of an individual, and appropriate it to public use; to confiscate. Particularly applied to the confiscation, by a belligerent power, of debts due from its subjects to the enemy. 1 Kent's Com. 62, et seq.

SEQUESTRARE. Lat. [from sequester, q. v.] In the civil law. To sequester or sequestrate. Calv. Lex. Sequestravit, et sub sequestro arcto tenuit; (he) sequestered, and held under close sequestration. Mem. in Scacc. T. 19 Edw. I. Bona sunt sequestranda, et neutri litigantium tradenda; the goods are to be sequestered and to be delivered to neither of the litigants. Clerke's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 40.

SEQUESTRARI FACIAS. L. Lat. (You cause to be sequestered.) In English ecclesiastical practice. A process in the nature of a levari facias, commanding the bishop to enter into the rectory and parish church, and to take and sequester the same, and hold them until, of the rents, tithes and profits thereof, and of the other ecclesiastical goods of a defendant, he have levied the plaintiff's debt. 3 Bl. Com. 418.

SEQUESTRATION. [Lat. sequestratio, from sequestrare, q. v.] In the civil law. The depositing of a thing in controversy, by the contending parties themselves, in the hands of a third person, called sequester, (q. v.) to be held indifferently between them, and to be delivered to the party who should be found to be entitled to it.

The taking a thing in controversy out of the possession of the contending parties, by order of a court, and entrusting it to a third person, to be held indifferently between them, and delivered to the successful party. Calv. Lex. Cowell.

In English practice. The taking possession of a defendant's property, by virtue of a judicial process, and holding it until some act be done, or claim satisfied; as until a defendant in equity clears himself of a contempt, or, in ecclesiastical practice, until, out of the rents and profits, the plaintiff's debt be levied.* 3 Bl. Com. 444, 418. See Sequestrari facias.

The act of the ordinary in disposing of the goods and chattels of one deceased, whose estate no one will meddle with. Cowell. Or, in other words, the taking possession of the property of a deceased person, where there is no one to claim it.

In international law. The seizure of the property of an individual, and the appropriation of it to the use of the government. See To sequester.

SEQUI. Lat. To follow. Sequi debet potentia justitiam, non præcedere. Power ought to follow justice, not go before it. 2 Inst. 454.

In old English practice. To sue; to prefer an action; to prosecute or follow up a suit or cause. In electione illius qui sequitur; at the election of him who sues. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 18.

To sue out; to obtain or issue process from a court. Pro hujusmodi debito aut damnis, sequi breve; for such debt or damages, to sue out a writ. Id. ibid.

SERIANT. L. Fr. [L. Lat. seriandus.] In old Scotch law. Serjeant. Skene de Verb. Sign.

SERIANTIA. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. seriaunt, q. v.] In old English law. Serjeanty. Bract. fol. 35 b. See Serjeanty.

SERIATIM. L. Lat. [from series, order.] In order; one after another. A term used in the reports to denote the delivery of separate opinions by the judges, one after another, beginning with the junior puisne judge, and ending with the chief justice; which is done in some cases, instead of having the opinion of the court delivered by a single judge. "The court delivered their opinions seriatim." 1 Show. 172, 266. Seriatim et separatim. 2 Id. 491.

SERIAUNT. L. Fr. In old English law. Serjeant. Britt. fol. 25, 34 b, 37, 39 b, 40, 40 b, 50, 52, 70, 103 b, 104 b, 123 b, 204, 275 b.

SERJANT. L. Fr. Servant. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 49.

SERJANTERIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Serjeanty. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 27. Written, in King John's Charter, (c. 37,) sergenteria. In the Articles of the charter, (c. 27,) sergantisa.

SERJANTIA, Seriantia. L. Lat. In old English law. Serjeanty. Spelman. Bract. fol. 35 b. Fleta, lib. 1, cc. 10, 11. See Serjeanty.

SERJEANT, Serjant, Serjent. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Fr. seriaunt; L. Lat. serjans, serjantus, serjandus, seriandus, sargantus, serziantus, serzientus; from Lat. serviens, serving, one who serves.] The title of several officers in the common law, generally of the ministerial class. Spelman, voc. Serjans. See infra. Written by Cowell, sergeant, which is also the form preferred in some modern dictionaries. But that serjeant is the proper form, is clearly shown by the use of the Fr. seriaunt in Britton, and the Lat. seriantia, in Bracton, the modern j being constantly written i, in the old books.

SERJEANT. L. Fr. Servant. Vous aves cy E. P. ove son serjeant J. le fits W. You have here E. P. with his servant J. the son of W. Yearb. M. 4 Edw. III. 12.

SERJEANT AT LAW. [L. Fr. serjeant al ley; Lat. serviens ad legem.] The highest degree of counsel in the common law, corresponding with doctor in the civil law. Called, also, anciently, serjeant of the coif, and serjeant countor, (serviens narrator.) Cowell. Spelman, voc. Serjans. Fortescue, de L. L. Angliæ, c. 50. The title literally imports, one who attends the service of the king and his people, in the study, profession and practice of the law. Id. ibid. note.

 This has always been a degree of the highest dignity in the English law, being what an old writer describes as "the seminary of justice, out of which the judges are called;" and, down to the present day, none but a serjeant at law can be a judge of either of the superior courts at Westminster. 3 Bl. Com. 27. Until within a very late period, also, the serjeants (or countors, as they were termed,) had the exclusive privilege of pleading and practising in the Court of Common Pleas, or Bench, that being the court in which the common law of England was supposed to be most strictly observed. Cowell. 3 Mann. Gr. & S. 537. See Countor, To count.

Serjeants are made by the king's or queen's writ, addressed to such as are called, commanding them to take upon them that degree by a certain day. See Dyer, 72. The assumption of the degree was formerly marked by peculiar ceremonies. The candidates for the degree assembled at Serjeant's Inn, before the two chief justices and the justices of both benches, and after counting, and having their coifs and scarlet hoods put on, were attired in their party-colored robes, and walked in procession to Westminster, where they counted at the bar of the Common Pleas, had their writs read, and gave rings to the judges, with inscriptions. See Cro. Car. Introd. Fortescue, de L. L. Angliæ, c. 50. Of all these ceremonies, the last alone is retained at the present day. See Rings giving.

SERJEANT AT ARMS. [L. Lat. serviens ad arma.] In English law. The title of an officer whose duty is described by Cowell to be, "to attend the person of the king, to arrest traitors, or persons of quality offending, and to attend the Lord High Steward of England sitting in judgment upon any traitor, and such like." Two of these, by the royal permission, attend on the two houses of parliament, and another in the Court of Chancery. Cowell. In the House of Lords, the serjeant at arms attends upon the chancellor with the mace, and executes the orders of the house for the apprehension of delinquents; in the Commons, he attends upon the speaker with the mace, carries messages from the bar to the table, and executes the orders of the house with respect to delinquents to be taken into his custody for breaches of its privileges. Holthouse.

In the United States, serjeants at arms are officers who attend upon the sessions of Congress, and of the state legislatures, with duties similar, in many respects, to those of the same officers in England. The ministerial officers attending courts of chancery are also generally styled serjeants at arms.

SERJEANT OF THE MACE, or SERJEANT AT MACE. [L. Lat. serviens ad clavam.] In English law. An officer who attends the Lord Mayor of London, and the chief magistrates of other corporate towns. Holthouse. 5 East, 304. 2 Mod. 58.

SERJEANTY. [L. Fr. serjaunty; L. Lat. seriantia, serjantia, serjanteria, sergenteria, sergantisa.] In English law. Service; an honorary kind of feudal service due to the crown for lands held of it, and which is still retained. See Grand serjeanty, Petit serjeanty.

SERMENT. L. Fr. [from Lat. sacramentum, q. v.] In old English law. Oath; an oath. Le loy est lie par son serment à faire ses liges droit; the king is bound by his oath to do his lieges justice. Yearb. H. 8 Hen. VI. 6.

SERMO. Lat. Speech; language; discourse; conversation. Sermo index animi. Speech is the index of thought or intent. 5 Co. 118.

Sermo relatus ad personam intelligi debet de conditione personæ. Language, which is referred to a person, ought to be understood of the condition of the person. 4 Co. 16 a.

SERRATED. [Lat. serratus, from serra, a saw.] In old practice. Marked or cut in notches, resembling the teeth of a saw. Some of the Roman coins were thus serrated, indented, (or milled, in modern phrase,) as a security against forgery. Tac. de Mor. Germ. v. The serrated or indented line was used in old English deeds for a similar purpose of precaution. See To indent, Indenture.

SERURA. L. Lat. In old English law. A lock. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 5, § 12.

SERVANT. [Lat. serviens.] One who serves; one who serves another, (termed his master,) under a contract of hire; one who serves or undertakes to serve another for a stipulated consideration or wages. See 2 Kent's Com. 258—261.

SERVE. In practice. To deliver with judicial effect; to deliver so as to charge a party, in law, with such delivery; to execute. To serve a paper is to deliver or otherwise communicate it to the opposite party, or his attorney, so as to charge him with the receipt of it. To serve process is to apply it to the party named, so as to subject him to its operation, as by showing and reading it, or showing it and delivering a copy, &c. See Service.

SERVE. In Scotch practice. To render a verdict or decision in favor of a person claiming to be an heir; to declare the fact of his heirship judicially. A jury are said to serve a claimant heir, when they find him to be heir, upon the evidence submitted to them. Bell's Dict.

SERVI. Lat. [plur. of servus, q. v.] In old European law. Slaves; persons over whom their master had absolute dominion. 1 Rob. Charles V. Appendix, Note ix.

In old English law. Bondmen; servile tenants. Cowell.

SERVICE. L. Fr. and Eng. [Lat. servitium.] In feudal and old English law. The duty which a tenant, by reason of his fee, owed to his lord. See Servitium. That which he was bound to render in recompense for the land he held. 2 Bl. Com. 54. Pour service que arrere luy est. Britt. c. 27. Pur arrerages de ascun service issuant de ascun tenement; for arrearages of any service issuing out of any tenement. Id. ibid.

SERVICE. In Scotch law. The inquisition or verdict of a jury, by which the character of an heir is judicially established. Hubback's Evid. of Success. 597. The term includes the whole proceeding before the jury. Bell's Dict.

SERVICE. In practice. Judicial delivery or communication of papers; execution of process. The delivery or communication of a pleading, notice or other paper in a suit, to the opposite party, so as to charge him with the receipt of it, and subject him to its legal effect. The communication or application of process to a party or witness, so as to subject him to its operation. As applied to writs, it properly means execution without arrest. See 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 259.

SERVIDUMBRE. Span. In Spanish law. A service or servitude; the right and use which one man has in the buildings and estate of another, to use them for the benefit of his own. Las Partidas, part. 3, tit. 31, l. 1. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 6.

SERVIENS. L. Lat. [L. Fr. seriant, seriaunt.] In old English law. A serjeant; a counter or pleader. Spelman.

Fleta, lib. 2, c. 37. Britt. fol. 39 b, 40, 40 b. See Serviens ad legem.

A bailiff. The servientes hundredorum (serjeants of hundreds,) are mentioned by Bracton in immediate connection with bailiffs, (ballivi.) Bract. fol. 116. A bailiff, chamberlain or receiver. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 11. Seriaunt is used by Britton to denote the bailiff, steward or attorney of a private person. Britt. fol. 50, 70, 123 b, 204.

A sheriff's officer, (serviens vicecomitis.) Bract. fol. 157. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 9. Britton enumerates hundredors, serjeants, and bedels, as officers under the sheriff. Britt. fol. 2.

Any ministerial officer. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 71.

A vassal, or feudal tenant. Spelman.

A servant. Reg. Orig. 189, 190.

SERVIENS AD CLAVAM. L. Lat. Serjeant at mace. 2 Mod. 58.

SERVIENS DOMINI REGIS. L. Lat. In old English law. King's serjeant; a public officer, who acted sometimes as the sheriff's deputy, and had also judicial powers. Bract. fol. 145 b, 150 b, 330, 358. Spelman supposes that he acted as public prosecutor in behalf of the crown.

SERVIENT. [from Lat. serviens.] Serving; subject to a service or servitude. A servient estate is one which is burdened with a servitude. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 392, § 306.

SERVITIUM. Lat. [from servire, to serve.] In feudal and old English law. The duty of obedience and performance which a tenant was bound to render to his lord, by reason of his fee. Spelman. See Co. Litt. 65 a. Servitium semper sequitur homagium; service always follows homage. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 11, § 1.

Servitium forinsecum; forinsic, foreign, or extra service; a kind of service that was due to the king, over and above (foris) the service due to the lord. Ideo forinsecum dici potest quia fit et capitur foris, sive extra servitium quod fit domino capitali. Bract. fol. 36.

Servitium intrinsecum; intrinsic or ordinary service; the ordinary service due the chief lord, from tenants within the fee. Bract. fol. 36, 36 b.

Servitium liberum; free service. Id. fol. 24 b. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 13, § 1. See Free services.

SERVITIUM MILITARE. L. Lat. [L. Fr. service de chivaler.] In old English law. Knight-service; the service of a miles or military tenant; military service.* 2 Bl. Com. 62. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 27. Id. Johan. c. 37. Called, also, servitium hauberticum, brigandinum or loricatum, from the armor in which the tenant performed it. Co. Litt. 108 a.

SERVITIUM REGALE. L. Lat. In old English law. Royal service; a royal prerogative or privilege, granted to the lord of a manor, to be exercised within it. Paroch. Ant. 60. Cowell.

SERVITORS OF BILLS. In old English practice. Servants, or messengers of the marshal of the King's Bench, sent out with bills or writs to summon persons to that court. Now more commonly called tipstaves. Cowell.

SERVITUDE. [Lat. servitus, q. v.] A charge upon one estate for the benefit of another. 3 Kent's Com. 434. A species of incorporeal right derived from the civil law, resembling and answering to the easement of the common law. Id. ibid. For the various descriptions of this right, see Servitus.

Service is used by Dr. Cooper, in his translation of the Institutes, as the translation of servitus; and in this, he observes, he follows Wood, Taylor and Harris. Cooper's Justin. 88, and note. Servitude, however, seems to have the support of higher authority, being the form adopted by Lord Mansfield and Chancellor Kent, as well as the modern German civilians, and in the Civil Code of Louisiana. 1 Burr. 443. 3 Kent's Com. ub. sup. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 319, § 294. Civ. Code of Louis. Art. 642.

SERVITUS. Lat. [from servire, to serve.] In the civil law. Slavery; bondage; the state of service. Defined in the Institutes of Justinian, (after Florentinus in the Digests,) to be "an institution of the conventional law of nations, by which one person is subjected to the dominion of another, contrary to natural right," (est constitutio juris gentium, qua quis dominio alieno contra naturam subjicitur.) Inst. 3. 2. Dig. 8. 5. 4. 1. This passage is quoted verbatim by Bracton, and from Bracton by Lord Coke. Bract. fol. 4 b. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 3. Co. Litt. 116. In Branch's Principia, the word dominio is mis-printed domino, which has occasioned error in the translation.

SERVUS. Lat. [L. Fr. serf.] In the civil and old English law. A slave; a bond-man. Inst. 1. 3, pr. Bract. fol. 4 b. Omnis homo aut est liber, aut est servus; every man is either free or a slave. Id. ibid. Derived, in the Digests and Institutes, from servare, (to preserve,) from the ancient practice of selling prisoners of war, and so preserving their lives, instead of putting them to death. Inst. 1. 3. 3. Dig. 50. 16. 239. 1. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 3, § 1. Quod attinet ad jus civile, servi pro nullis habentur, non tamen et jure naturali, quia, quod ad jus naturale attinet, omnes homines æquales sunt; as far as regards the civil law, slaves are held as no persons; not so, however, by the law of nature, for as regards the law of nature, all men are equal. Dig. 50. 17. 32.

A servant. Servus facit ut herus det; the servant does [the work] in consideration of his master's giving [him wages.] 2 Bl. Com. 445. Herus dat ut servus faciat; the master gives [the wages] in consideration of the servant's performing [the work.] Id. ibid.

SERVY. L. Fr. Served. Returne servy; returned served. Dyer, 135 b, (Fr. edition.)

SESS. In English law. A tax, rate or assessment. Callis on Sewers, [122,] 148. Called assess and sessment. Id. ibid. Id. [125,] 151.

SESSIO. Lat. [from sedere, to sit.] In old English law. A sitting; a session. Sessio parliamenti; the sitting of parliament. Cowell.

SESSION. [from Lat. sessio, q. v.] The sitting of a court; the sitting of justices or judges in court; the time during which a court is held. Frequently used in the plural, sessions, like the word sittings, (q. v.)

SESSION, COURT OF. The supreme civil court of Scotland, instituted A. D. 1532, consisting of thirteen (formerly fifteen) judges, viz. the Lord President, the Lord Justice-Clerk, and eleven ordinary lords. Wharton's Lex. Brande.

SESSIONS. [L. Lat. sessiones.] A sitting of justices in court, upon their commission, or by virtue of their appointment, and most commonly for the trial of criminal cases. The title of several courts in England and the United States, chiefly those of criminal jurisdiction.

SESSIONS OF THE PEACE. In English law. A sitting of justices of the peace for the execution of those duties which are confided to them by their commission, and by charter or statute. They are of the four following descriptions:

A petty or petit session is a sitting of two or more justices, or in some cases even a single magistrate, for the purpose of trying in a summary way, and without jury, certain minor offences particularized by statute, and for other purposes. 3 Steph. Com. 44.

A special session is a sitting of two or more justices for the transaction of some special description of business, such as licensing ale-houses, or appointing overseers of the poor, or surveyors of highways. Id. ibid. Stat. 7 and 8 Vict. c. 33.

A general sessions of the peace is a court of record holden before two or more justices, whereof one is of the quorum, for execution of the general authority given to justices by the commission of the peace and certain acts of parliament. Wharton's Lex. 4 Steph. Com. 335, notes (k), (l).

The general quarter sessions of the peace is a court of record held in every county once in every quarter of a year, before two or more justices of the peace, one of whom must be of the quorum. Its jurisdiction by statute 34 Edw. III. c. 1, extends to the trying and determining all felonies and trespasses whatsoever, but it has never been usual to try there any greater offences than small felonies. 4 Steph. Com. 335, 336.

SET. A form of sed, used in old pleadings. Towns. Pl. 19. Spelman.

SET. L. Fr. Seven, (sept.) Kelham.

Knows; known. Id. A corruption of scet or scait.

That; this. Id. A corruption of cet.

To SET. A word used in old conveyancing, synonymous with let or demise. 2 Term R. 425. 15 Johns. R. 280. It seems to be a translation of the old Latin ponere. Ad firmam ponere; to put or set to farm. Chart. R. Hen. I. De libert. Angliæ. Spelman, voc. Firma.

To lay or impose. "If a fine be set in court." 6 Mod. 273.

SETTER. In Scotch law. The granter of a tack or lease. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 153.

SET-OFF. [Lat. compensatio.] In practice. A counter-claim or demand; a cross demand; a demand set up against another demand, for the purpose of reducing its amount, or of extinguishing it altogether.

A mode of defence to a civil action, being a species of plea in bar, by which a defendant alleges a reciprocal debt due to him from the plaintiff, and claims to have it allowed by way of discharge from the action, either wholly or in part, as the case may be.* 3 Steph. Com. 577. 1 Chitt. Pl. 568. United States Digest, Set-off.

SET OF EXCHANGE. In mercantile law. A bill of exchange drawn in several parts, (called the "first of exchange," "second of exchange," &c.) any one part of which being paid, the others are to be void.* Story on Bills, §§ 66, 67.

SETTLE. To make a final disposition of a claim between parties, by payment or otherwise; to adjust a difference between parties; to pay a debt, claim or balance.

See 11 Alabama R. 419. But "settle" and "pay" have been held to be not equivalent terms. Authority to an agent "to settle" does not authorize him to submit to arbitration the matters in dispute. 21 Alabama R. 488.

SETTLEMENT. [Lat. sedes.] A settled place of abode; residence. See Burrow's Settlement Cases, passim.

A right growing out of residence; a right to be considered a resident of a particular place, chiefly for the purpose of parochial relief.* 1 Bl. Com. 361—363. 1 Steph. Com. 200—203. Id. 207—210. The law of settlement and the law of relief are the two main branches of which the poor-law of England consists. Id. 201. The place where an apprentice lies, or is lodged at night, is the place of his legal settlement. Burr. Sett. Cas. 570.

SETTLEMENT. In conveyancing. A disposition of property by deed, usually through the medium of a trustee, and for the benefit of a wife, children or other relations. See Marriage settlement.

SEURE, Seuyr. L. Fr. To sue; to prosecute. Kelham.

To SEVER. In practice. To separate or divide. Defendants are said to sever in their pleas, where each pleads separately, instead of all joining in the same plea.* Steph. Pl. 257.

SEVERAL. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Lat. separale.] In old English law. A separate share or portion. Et chescun sache son several; and each one knows his several. Britt. c. 55. Sicome son several; as his several. Id. c. 59, fol. 60 b, 145, 151 b.

SEVERAL. [L. Lat. separalis.] Separate; distinct; independent; the opposite of joint. See Several covenant.

Separate; exclusive; the opposite of common. See Several fishery.

SEVERAL COVENANT. A covenant by two or more, separately; a covenant made so as to bind the parties to it severally, or individually.

SEVERAL FISHERY. [L. Lat. separalis piscaria.] A right to fish in a private water, either exclusively, or in conjunction with the owner of the soil. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 114, § 108. See 3 Kent's Com. 410, and note. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 224. 8 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 1000.

SEVERAL. Consisting of a number; more than one.

Several counts are frequently allowed to be used by a plaintiff in the same declaration. Steph. Pl. 267.

Several pleas are also allowed to a defendant. Steph. Pl. 269—275.

SEVERALTY. A state of separation. An estate in severalty is one that is held by a person in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him, in point of interest, during his estate therein. 2 Bl. Com. 179.

SEVERANCE. In pleading. Separation; division. The separation by defendants in their pleas; the adoption, by several defendants, of separate pleas, instead of joining in the same plea. Steph. Pl. 257.

SEWER. [L. Lat. sewera, severa.] A fresh-water trench compassed in on both sides with a bank. Callis on Sewers, [80,] 99. Callis calls it "a small current or little river;" "a diminutive of a river," "a common public stream." Id. 100.—A passage to carry water into the sea or a river. Cowell.—A ditch or trench carried through marshy places, to carry off the water. Spelman.

SEXTANS. Lat. In the Roman law. A subdivision of the as, containing two unciæ; the proportion of two-twelfths, or one-sixth. Tayl. Civ. Law, 492. 2 Bl. Com. 462, note.

SEXTARY. [Lat. sextarius.] In old records. An ancient measure of liquids, and of dry commodities; a quarter or seam. Spelman.

A quart. Id. But according to Cowell, it was about a pint and a half. And in Fleta, it is said the sexterium should contain four gallons. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 11.

SEXTUS DECRETALIUM. Lat. The sixth of the decretals. One of the subdivisions of the Corpus Juris Canonici, or canon law; consisting of a collection of supplements to the Decretales Gregorii IX. which consisted of five books. It was published A. D. 1298, and is sometimes called in English, the Sext and Sixth Decretal. See 1 Bl. Com. 82. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 83, Kaufmann's note. Butler's Hor. Jur. 115, 116.

SEYSINA. L. Lat. In old English law. Seisin; possession of lands; or of a freehold estate in lands. Bract. fol. 38 b, 39, et passim. This is the form invariably used by Bracton.

SEYSIRE. L. Lat. In old English law. To take; to take possession; to seise. Seysire in manum suum; to seise or take into his hand. Bract. fol. 71 b.

Seysitus; seised; possessed of. Id. et passim.

SHACK. In English law. The straying and escaping of cattle out of the lands of their owners into other unenclosed land; an intercommoning of cattle. 2 H. Bl. 416. See Common of shack.

"SHALL BE." See Erit.

SHAM PLEA. A false plea; a plea of false or fictitious matter, subtly drawn so as to entrap an opponent, or create delay. 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 729, 730.

SHAMELLÆ, Scamellæ. L. Lat. In old records. Shambles; stalls to sell meat. Placit. Parl. 18 Edw. I. Cowell.

"SHARE" denotes interest. "Share of an estate" will pass a fee. 5 M. & S. 408. The word share may carry a moiety of a leasehold estate. 5 East, 501.

SHARE AND SHARE ALIKE. In equal shares or proportions. See Ambl. 656, note (1.) 5 East, 505. Create a tenancy in common. 2 Florida R. 387. 5 Johns. Ch. 334.

SHAW. In old English law. A wood. Co. Litt. 4 b.

"SHAWLS," decided by the Supreme Court of the United States to be "wearing apparel," within schedule C. of the tariff act of 1846. 16 Howard's R. 251. In this case, the meaning of the word shawl underwent an elaborate discussion, and the doctrine was laid down that the popular or received import of words furnishes the general rule for the interpretation of public laws, as well as of private and social transactions. Id. ibid. See opinion of Daniel, J. Id. 256.

"SHEET," held to be "a book," within the meaning of the English copyright act. 8 Ann. c. 19. 11 East, 244.

SHERIFF. [from Sax. scyre-gerefa, shire-reeve; L. Lat. vicecomes; L. Fr. viscount.] The chief civil officer of a county, specially entrusted with the execution of the laws and the preservation of the peace. In England, he transacts all the sovereign's business in the county; the crown, by letters patent, committing the custody of the county to the sheriff alone. 1 Bl. Com. 339. He has judicial as well as ministerial powers, being authorized to hold courts for the trial of small causes. As keeper of the Queen's peace, both by common law and special commission, he is the first man in the county, and superior in rank to any nobleman therein, during his office. In his ministerial capacity, he is bound to execute all process issuing out of the superior courts, and in this respect is considered as an officer of these courts. And as the Queen's bailiff, it is his business to preserve her rights within his bailiwick. See Id. 343—344. Hale's Anal. sect. xii. Sewell's Law of Sheriff, 7—12.

In the United States, the powers and duties of the sheriff, in addition to those of conservator of the peace, are chiefly ministerial, he being the officer to whom the process of the superior courts in the several states is always directed for execution. In the commencement of civil causes, he serves the writ, and in cases requiring it, arrests and takes bail; when the cause comes to trial, he summons and returns the jury; and when it is determined he sees the judgment of the court carried into execution. In criminal matters, he also arrests and imprisons, he returns the jury, he has the custody of the delinquent, and he executes the sentence of the court, though it extend to death itself. See 1 Bl. Com. 344. His judicial powers are much more limited than in England, being chiefly confined to the taking of inquisitions on writs of inquiry of damages, before a jury summoned for the purpose. See Writ of inquiry.

The derivation of the word sheriff, from the Sax. scyre-gerefa, or scyre-refa, sufficiently attests the high antiquity of the office. The sheriff was, in the Saxon times, the reeve or bailiff of the shire, and during the Anglo-Norman period, acted as the deputy of the count or earl, (comes,) who had the government of the county. Hence his title, in law Latin, of vice-comes, (q. v.) and in law French, viscount, (q. v.) that is, count's or earl's deputy. The Saxon scyre-gerefa, or scyre-refa, gradually became the English shyre-greve, shire-greeve, shire-reeve and schireve, still further contracted to shireve and shrieve, and finally softened to shyrefe, which was the form of the word in Camden's time. Camd. Brit. 104. Shiriff is a form used in old records, which by the change of a single letter has become the modern sheriff. Blount treats of the word under the forms shirif, or shiref; Cowell, under shireve. Skene, the Scotch expositor, uses schireff.

SHERIFF CLERK. In Scotch law. The clerk of the sheriff's court. Bell's Dict.

SHERIFF DEPUTE. In Scotch law. The principal sheriff of a county, who is also a judge. Brande. 1 Chitt. Bl. Com.

339, note. He is not properly a high sheriff. Bell's Dict.

SHERIFFALTY. The time of a man's being sheriff. Cowell. The term of a sheriff's office.

SHERIFFWICK. The jurisdiction of a sheriff. Doct. & Stud. dial. 2, ch. 42, p. 232. Called in modern law, bailiwick.

The office of a sheriff. Finch's Law, b. 4, ch. 25.

SHERIFF'S JURY. In practice. A jury summoned for the taking of inquisitions before the sheriff or under sheriff, on a writ of inquiry. 1 Burr. Pr. 375, 377.

SHETAR, שטר. Heb. (Pronounced shtar and shtor.) A contract. Shtor chozi chelec zachar; a contract for half of a male's share. 1 Eden, 317, 325. See Star.

SHIFTING USE. A use which is made to shift or change from one person to another, by matter ex post facto, (of after occurrence.) As if an estate be limited to the use of A. and his heirs, with proviso that when B. returns from Rome, the land shall be to the use of C. and his heirs; here, on the return of B. the use changes or shifts from A. to C. and is hence called a shifting use. See 1 Steph. Com. 503. These shifting uses are common in all settlements; and in marriage settlements, the first use is always to the owner in fee till the marriage, and then to other uses. The fee remains with the owner until the marriage, and then it shifts as uses arise. 4 Kent's Com. 297.

SHIP, [Sax. scip; Lat. navis; L. Fr. nef,] in its general sense, as used in maritime law, is synonymous with vessel, and is a generic term, including all vessels. 1 Peters' Adm. Dec. 128, note. By the English statute of 5 & 6 Will. IV. the term ship is declared to comprehend every description of vessel navigating on the sea.

In a stricter sense,—a vessel with three complete masts, viz. lower, top, and topgallant masts. Brande.

To SHIP. In maritime law. To put on board a ship; to send by ship. Goods, in this sense, are said to be shipped, and the merchant or person putting them on board is called the shipper, (q. v.)

To engage to serve on board a vessel as a seaman, for a certain voyage or for a specified term; to engage to go on board a vessel as a seaman for a certain voyage or time. See Shipping articles.

SHIP-BREAKING. In Scotch law. The offence of breaking into a ship. Arkley's R. 461.

SHIPPER. The charterer or freighter of a vessel. 3 Kent's Com. 218. The merchant or person who ships goods on board a vessel. See To ship.

SHIPPING ARTICLES. In maritime law. An agreement in writing made between the master of a vessel and the seamen engaged to serve on board, specifying the voyage or term for which they are shipped, and the rate of wages, and when they are to render themselves on board. 3 Kent's Com. 177. Abbott on Ship. 606, 611—614. Id. 718—725, (Perkins' ed. 1850,) and notes. This contract, though made with the master, is deemed a contract also with the owner, and on the credit of the ship; and it constitutes, also, a several contract with each seaman to all intents and purposes. Id. 721, note, and cases cited ibid. And see Id. (ed. 1854,) 750—770, and notes.

SHIP'S HUSBAND. In maritime law. A person appointed by the several part-owners of a ship, and usually one of their number, to manage the concerns of the ship for the common benefit. 3 Kent's Com. 151. Abbott on Ship. 105, (131, Perkins' ed. 1850.) Generally understood to be the general agent of the owners in regard to all the affairs of the ship in the home port. Story on Agency, § 35.

SHIP'S PAPERS. In maritime and international law. Papers with which a vessel is required by law to be provided, either as evidences of title, or in compliance with custom-house regulations, or the provisions of treaties, or for the manifestation and protection of the ship and cargo in time of war.* The documents expected to be found on board a neutral ship are the register, the passport or sea-letter, the muster roll, the charter party, the bills of lading, the invoice, the log-book, and the bill of health. 1 Kent's Com. 157. Abbott on Ship. 347, note. See Id. 430, Perkins' ed. 1850, note.

SHIP-WRECK. [Lat. naufragium; L. Fr. naufrage.] The breaking or shattering of a ship or vessel, either by driving ashore, or on rocks and shoals in the mid-seas, or by the mere force of the winds and waves in tempests.* 2 Arnould on Ins. § 296. Chancellor Kent observes that there has been some difficulty as to the true definition of shipwreck. 3 Kent's Com. 323.

Shipwreck, it appears, may either be total, as where a vessel is dashed to pieces, and reduced to a mere congeries of planks or timbers, or sinks in consequence of her injuries; or partial, where the vessel continues to preserve her form and construction with more or less of injury. See 2 Arnould on Ins. ub. sup. In the French law, various degrees of shipwreck are recognized; such as naufrage, bris absolu, bris partial, echouement avec bris, echouement sans bris, &c. Id. note. See Naufragium.

SHIRA, Schira. L. Lat. In old English law. Shire; a shire; the shire. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 23.

SHIRE. [L. Lat. shira, scyra; from Sax. scyran, to divide.] A county. So called, because every county or shire is divided and parted by certain metes and bounds from another. Co. Litt. 50 a. 1 Bl. Com. 116.

SHIRE-MOTE. In Saxon law. The county court. See Scire gemote.

SHIRE-REEVE, Shireve. In Saxon law. The reeve or bailiff of the shire. The viscount of the Anglo-Normans, and the sheriff of later times. Co. Litt. 168 a. See Sheriff.

SHOPA. L. Lat. In old records. A shop. Cowell.

SHORE. [Lat. litus, littus.] Land on the margin of the sea, or a lake, or river.* That space of land which is alternately covered and left dry by the rising and falling of the tide; the space between high and low-water marks. Hale de Jur. Mar. pars 1, c. 6. Angell on Tide-Waters, 67, c. 3. See Sea-shore. The shore of a fresh water river is where the land and water ordinarily meet. 6 Cowen's R. 547. But this is more properly called the bank, (ripa.) A river in which the tide does not ebb and flow, has no shores in the legal sense of the term. Walworth, C. 4 Hill's R. 375. And a lake without tides cannot properly be said to have a shore. Ang. on Tide-Waters, ub. sup. And see 3 Grattan's R. 655. 13 Howard's R. 391. See Litus, Ripa.

SHORT NOTICE. In practice. Notice of less than the ordinary time; generally, of half that time. 2 Tidd's Pr. 757. 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 709. 1 Burr. Pr. 213.

SHORTFORD. An old custom of the city of Exeter. A mode of foreclosing the right of a tenant by the chief lord of the fee, in cases of non-payment of rent. Cowell.

SI, Cy. L. Fr. In old English law. So. Si luy eyde Dieu et les saintz; so help him God and the saints. Britt. c. 22. Si lour eyde Dieu et ses seyntz; so help them God and his saints. Id. ibid. Si Dieu moy eyde et les seintz; so help me God and the saints. Id. c. 22. Id. c. 52. Id. c. 68. See Saints.

If. S'il ne osast; if he dares not. Litt. sect. 419. Si, in this sense, is frequently repeated in the same sentence, the latter word answering to the former, thus: Si les jurours dient que le tenement nest mie en la ville nosme en le brefe, si chet le brefe; if the jurors say that the tenement is not in the town named in the writ, the writ shall abate. Britt. c. 48.

SI. Lat. If. The proper word expressive of a condition in old conveyances. Bract. fol. 18 b. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 4. Bacon's Arg. Case of Revocation of Uses; Works, iv. 250. See Scito quod ut, &c. Co. Litt. 204 a.

An emphatic word in the entry of the old assises on record. Assisa venit recognitura SI Priorissa de K. injustè, &c. disseisivit Martinum le Hayward; the assise came to recognize [i. e. to try,] if the prioress of K. unjustly, &c. disseised Martin the hayward. Yearb. M. 1 Edw. II. 2. Constantly used by Bracton in his references to adjudged cases.

Si aliquid ex solemnibus deficiat, cum æquitas poscit, subveniendum est. If any one of certain required forms be wanting, when equity requires, it will be aided. 1 Kent's Com. 157. The want of some of a neutral vessel's papers is strong presumptive evidence against the ship's neutrality, yet the want of any one of them is not absolutely conclusive. Id. ibid.

Si a jure discedas, vagus eris, et erunt omnia omnibus incerta. If you depart from the law, you will go astray, and all things will be uncertain to every body. Co. Litt. 227 b.

Si assuetis mederi possis, nova non sunt tentanda. If you can be relieved by accustomed remedies, new ones should not be tried. 10 Co. 142 b. If an old wall can be repaired, a new one should not be made. Id. ibid.

SI antiquitatem spectes, est vetustissima; si dignitatem, est honoratissima; si jurisdictionem, est capacissima; if you look at its antiquity, it is the oldest; if at its dignity, it is the most honorable; if at its jurisdiction, it is the most comprehensive.

The high court of parliament is thus described by Lord Coke. 4 Inst. 36; quoted, 1 Bl. Com. 160.

SI CONTINGAT. Lat. If it happen. Words of condition in old conveyances. 10 Co. 42 a, Mary Partington's case.

SI ITA EST. Lat. If it be so. Emphatic words in the old writ of mandamus to a judge, commanding him, if the fact alleged be truly stated, (si ita est,) to affix his seal to a bill of exceptions, (quod apponat sigillum.) Marshall, C. J. 5 Peters' R. 192, referring to the Register for the form. The writ in the Register is not strictly a mandamus, præcipimus being the word used. It is called breve de ponendo sigillum ad exceptionem; a writ for putting a seal to an exception. Reg. Orig. 182.

SI FECERIT TE SECURUM. L. Lat. If [he] make you secure. In practice. The initial and emphatic words of that description of original writ which directs the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court, without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gives the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. 3 Bl. Com. 274. See Reg. Orig. 30, 72, et passim.

SI NON OMNES. Lat. (If all cannot.) In English practice. A writ of association of justices whereby, if all in commission cannot meet at the day assigned, it is allowed that two or more may proceed with the business. Cowell. F. N. B. 111 C. Id. 186 A. Reg. Orig. 202, 206.

SI PRIUS. L. Lat. In old practice. If before. Formal words in the old writs for summoning juries. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 12. See Nisi prius writ.

SI QUIS. Lat. In the civil law. If any one. Formal words in the prætorian edicts. The word quis, though masculine in form, was held to include women. Dig. 50. 16. 1.

SI RECOGNOSCAT. Lat. (If he acknowledge.) In old practice. A writ which lay for a creditor against his debtor for money numbered (pecunia numerata,) or counted, that is, a specific sum of money, which the debtor had acknowledged in the county court, to owe him, as received in pecuniis numeratis. Cowell.

SIC. Lat. So. Sic interpretandum est ut verba accipiantur cum effectu. [A statute] is to be so interpreted that the words may be taken with effect, [that its words may have effect.] 3 Inst. 80.

Sic enim debere quem meliorem agrum suum facere, ne vicini deteriorem faciat. Every one ought so to improve his land, as not to injure his neighbor's. 3 Kent's Com. 441. A rule of the Roman law.

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. So use your own [right or property] as not to injure another's. 9 Co. 59 a, William Aldred's case. 1 Bl. Com. 306. 3 Id. 217. Broom's Max. 160, [274.] One of the fundamental maxims of the law. Thompson, C. J. 15 Johns. R. 218. Woodworth, J. 17 Id. 99. "A principle of universal obligation." Woodward, J. 26 Penn. St. R. 118. But see 4 Comstock's R. 198. "A principle as old as civilization itself, and no less of morals than law." Ranney, J. 4 Ohio St. R. 415. And see 12 Grattan's R. 325.

SIC HIC. Lat. So here. Words used in argument, in the old books. Yearb. M. 2 Hen. VI. 1.

SIC SUBSCRIBITUR. Lat. In Scotch practice. So it is subscribed. Formal words at the end of depositions, immediately preceding the signature. 1 How. St. Trials, 1379.

SIGILLARE. Lat. [from sigillum, a seal.] In the civil and old English law. To seal; to affix a seal. Calv. Lex. Sigillatum; sealed. 1 Salk. 141. Per literas vestras sigillatas sigillo tuo, et sigillis prædictorum juratorum; by your letters sealed with your seal, and the seals of the aforesaid jurors. Bract. fol. 310.

SIGILLUM. Lat. [dimin. of signum, a seal.] In old English law. A seal. Sigillum est cera impressa; a seal is wax impressed. 3 Inst. 169. See Seal. In cujus rei testimonium, huic scripto sigillum meum apposui; In witness whereof, I have to this writing set my seal. Bract. fol. 38. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 13. Id. lib. 2, c. 60, § 25.

SIGLA. Lat. In the Roman law. Marks or signs of abbreviation used in writing. Cod. 1. 17. 1. 13.

To SIGN. To affix the name to an instrument or writing; to subscribe. Obviously derived from the Lat. signare, which, however, signified to seal, as distinguished from subscribere, to subscribe, or write under.

 In the construction of that provision of the Statute of Frauds in relation to promises and agreements of certain kinds, which requires a "memorandum or note in writing, signed by the party to be charged, or his agent," &c. it has been held that the word "signed" did not necessarily import the writing of the party's name underneath the memorandum or instrument, that is, at the bottom or end of it; but that, if the name appeared in any part of the writing, and was put there by him or his authority, it was sufficient. This has become the settled construction of the word, both in England and in the United States. 3 Meriv. 53. 2 Bos. & Pull. 238. 2 M. & S. 286. 14 Johns. R. 484, 486. 13 Mass. R. 87. 2 Kent's Com. 511, and note. In the state of New-York, however, the courts found themselves so much at large as to what should be considered a signing under this statute, as thus construed, that, on the revision of the statutes in 1829, the word "signed" was, on the recommendation of the revisers, stricken out of the provision, and the word "subscribed" inserted in its place. 2 Rev. Stat. [135,] 70, § 2. See Reviser's Notes, 3 Rev. St. 655. And although the substituted word was at first construed as loosely as the word signed had been, its meaning has at length been judicially settled in conformity with its literal and popular signification, viz. as importing an actual underwriting of the name. 26 Wendell's R. 341. 2 Selden's R. 9. This was going back to what had been, in the earlier English cases, (and not without reason,) contended for, as the true meaning of the provision as it had been originally enacted.

SIGNARE. Lat. [from signum, seal, or mark.] In the civil law. To seal; to affix a seal; to confirm by a seal, (sigillo confirmare.) Si ab ipso testatore annulum accepero, et signavero, testamentum valet, quasi alieno signaverim; if I should take a ring from the testator himself, and seal [with it,] the testament is valid, as though I had sealed with another's. Dig. 28. 2. 22. 2. Literally, to put one's own mark, (signum,) upon a thing. Calv. Lex.

In old English law. To seal a measure. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 1.

SIGNATORIUS ANNULUS. Lat. In the civil law. A signet-ring; a seal-ring. Dig. 50. 16. 74.

SIGNATURE. [Lat. signatura, from signum, a seal or mark.] The writing or subscribing of one's name at the end of an instrument, by which it is made the act of the party so subscribing; an essential part of every valid instrument. Literally, the impression of a stamp, sign or mark, (signum,) upon a thing.

The name of a party subscribed to an instrument.

A signature may be written either by the party himself, or by his authorized agent, and it may be expressed either by the party's actually writing his name, or making his mark, (the original meaning of signum, q. v.;) and it may be written in some cases in pencil, as well as with ink, and even expressed by the party's initials. See Mark, Initial. As to the signature of a deed, see 4 Kent's Com. 450, et seq. As to the signature of a will, see 2 Greenl. Evid. § 674. 1 Williams on Exec. 63—71. As to the signature of bills of exchange, see Story on Bills, § 53. As to signatures under the Statute of Frauds, see Blackburn on the Contract of Sale, 69.

SIGNET. [L. Lat. signettum.] In English law. One of the queen's seals in England, used in sealing private letters and grants under the sign manual. It is in the custody of the Secretary of State for the home department. Brande. The signet in Scotland is the seal by which the queen's letters and writs for the purpose of justice are now authenticated. Id.

SIGNIFICAVIT. L. Lat. [He] hath signified. In English practice. That clause in the writ de contumace capiendo, which states that a certain judge, or other competent person, has signified to the king that the person against whom the writ is issued is manifestly contumacious. Holthouse.

The writ itself, containing this clause. Id. The old writ de excommunicato capiendo began with the word significavit. Reg. Orig. 65.

SIGNING may be by printing as well as writing. 2 M. & S. 286. Signing may be by stamping. Le Blanc, J. Id. 289.

SIGNING JUDGMENT. In English practice. The signature or allowance of the proper officer of a court, obtained by the party entitled to judgment in an action, expressing generally that judgment is given in his favor; and which stands in the place of its actual delivery by the judges themselves. Steph. Pl. 110, 111. The signing of an incipitur of the declaration, and of the postea, in taxing costs, is called signing judgment. Id. ibid. note.

In American practice, signing judgment means a signing of the judgment record itself, which is done by any officer authorized to tax costs and sign judgments, on the margin of the record, opposite the entry of the judgment. 1 Burr. Pr. 268.

SIGN MANUAL. In English law. The royal signature to grants and letters, written at the top of the instrument. 2 Bl. Com. 347. 9 Mod. 54.

SIGNUM. Lat. In the Roman and civil law. A sign; a mark; a seal. The seal of an instrument. Dig. 28. 1. 22. 3, 5. Calv. Lex.

A species of proof. By signa were meant those species of indicia which come more immediately under the cognizance of the senses, such as stains of blood on the person of the accused. Best on Presumptions, 13, note (f.) See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 25, § 14.

In Saxon law. A cross prefixed to the name of a subscribing witness, as a sign of assent and approbation to a charter or other deed; commonly used among the Saxons and some of the first Normans, before the common use of either affixed or appending seals, when subscriptions were in this form: + Signum Roberti Episcopi Linc. + Signum Nigelli de Oyley, &c. Cowell.

In old English law. A seal. Ideo in testimonium et rei gestæ probationem, apponat donator signum, adjiciendo clausulam istam vel consimilem; therefore, in testimony and in proof of the thing done, the donor should set to his seal, adding this clause or the like. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 13.

A mark put on sheep. Id. lib. 2, c. 79, § 5.

Silent leges inter arma. The power of law is suspended during war. Bacon's Arg. Case of the Postnati of Scotland; Works, iv. 347.

SILVA. Lat. In the civil law. Wood; a wood. See Sylva.

SILVA CÆDUA. Lat. In the civil law. That kind of wood which was kept for the purpose of being cut, (qui in hoc habetur, ut cæderetur.) Dig. 50. 16. 30. According to Servius, it was that kind, which, when cut down, grew up again from the trunks or roots, (quæ succisa rursus ex stirpibus aut radicibus renascitur.) Id. See Id. 7. 1. 9. 7. Id. 7. 1. 10.

In English ecclesiastical law. Underwood; coppice-wood. 2 Inst. 642. Cowell, voc. Sylva cædua. All small wood and under-timber, and likewise timber when cut down, under twenty years' growth; titheable wood. 3 Salk. 347. Trees intended to be cut, or "that be able to be cut," as distinguished from fruit-bearing trees. Doct. & Stud. dial. 2, ch. 55, p. 291.

SIMILITER. Lat. [L. Fr. semblement.] In pleading. Likewise; the like. The name of the short formula used either at the end of pleadings, or by itself, expressive of the acceptance of an issue of fact tendered by the opposite party; otherwise termed a joinder in issue. Steph. Pl. 57, 237. The common form of it is,—"And the said plaintiff doth the like." Id. This is a literal translation of the old Latin form,—"Et prædictus A. similiter," the last word of which has been retained as the name of the English formula. The elements of the similiter are contained in the following sentence of Bracton: simpliciter dicat quod liber sit, et inde ponat se super juratam, et alius affirmet quod non, et inde se ponat similiter super juratam; he may simply say that he is a freeman, and thereof may put himself upon the country, and the other party may affirm that he is not, and thereof may put himself likewise upon the country. Bract. fol. 192 b.

SIMILITUDO. Lat. In old English law. Similitude; likeness; similarity. Similitudo legalis est, casuum diversorum inter se collatorum similis ratio; quod in uno similium valet, valebit in altero; legal similarity is [consists in] the like reason of different cases when compared together; that which has force in one of the like cases shall have force in the other. Co. Litt. 191.

SMOKE-FARTHINGS. In old English law. An annual rent paid to cathedral churches; another name for the pentecos-tals or customary oblations offered by the dispersed inhabitants within a diocese, when they made their processions to the mother cathedral church. Cowell.

SMOKE-SILVER. In English law. A sum paid to the ministers of divers parishes as a modus in lieu of tithe-wood. Blount.

SO HELP ME GOD. [L. Fr. ci Dieu moy eyde; L. Lat. sic me Deus adjuvet.] The formula with which an oath concludes when the words of it are repeated by the party swearing. See So help you God, Oath.

SO HELP YOU GOD. [L. Fr. ci Dieu vous ayde; L. Lat. ita te Deus adjuvet.] The formula with which the administration of an oath always concludes. Where the words of the oath are repeated by the party swearing, the expression is "So help me God," which seems to have been the more ancient form. The energy of this sentence, according to Dr. Paley, resides in the particle so; so, that is, hac lege, upon condition of my speaking the truth, or performing this promise, may God help me, and not otherwise. Paley's Mor. Phil. b. 3, c. 16. See Oath, Saints.

SOC, Sock, Sok, Soke. Sax. [L. Lat. soca, socha, soka; from Sax. socan, to follow, or socn, a privilege.] In Saxon and old English law. A lord's privilege of having suit of court from his tenants; or the right of compelling the attendance of his tenants at his court. Crabb's Hist. 26, 27. Spelman. Skene de Verb. Signif.— A lord's power or jurisdiction to have a free court, to hold plea of contracts, covenants, and trespasses of his men and tenants. 2 Inst. 230. Soc and sac, (sock and sack, or sok and sak, or soke and sake,) are usually mentioned together in the old charters of liberties, and, thus united, express the full power of administering justice which was granted to the lord within his manor or lordship; soc, giving the right to constitute a court, and sac, authority to try causes in it. Spelman. The words occur in Bracton in all the various forms above given. Bract. fol. 56, 122 b, 124 b.

SOC, Soke. L. Fr. [L. Lat. soca, soccus.] In old English law. A plough. Litt. sect. 119.

SOCA, Socha. L. Lat. Soc, or sock. See Soc. A seigniory enfranchised by the king with liberty of holding a court of his sockmen or soccagers, i. e. his tenants. Cowell.

A liberty or privilege; a privileged place. Spelman.

A manor or lordship. Id. A part of a manor. Id.

SOCAGE, Soccage. [L. Lat. socagium, sockagium; from Sax. soc, or socn, a liberty or privilege; or Fr. soke; L. Lat. soca, soccus, a plough.] In English law. A tenure by any certain and determinate service. 2 Bl. Com. 79. Free socage, the most honorable species of this kind of tenure, is the tenure by which the great bulk of real property in England is now holden. Id. 89. See Free socage. For the history of this tenure in the United States, see 3 Kent's Com. 509—514. 4 Id. 2, 3.

As to the etymology of this word, there have been two opinions, each maintained by high authority; Littleton and Coke, who are followed by Sir Martin Wright, deriving it from the French soc or soke, a plough or plough-share, and Somner and Blackstone considering it as derived from Sax. soc, a franchise or privilege. Litt. sect. 119. Co. Litt. 86 b. Wright on Tenures, 143. Somner's Gavelk. 138. 2 Bl. Com. 80. Mr. Christian, in his note on the passage of Blackstone here referred to, expresses his preference of the derivation of Littleton and Coke, and quotes, in further support of their opinion, a passage from Bracton in which it is said,—dici poterit sockagium à socko, et inde tenentes qui tenent in sockagio, sokemanni dici poterunt, eò quòd deputati sunt ut videtur tantummodo ad culturam; (it may be called socage from soccus, and those that hold thereby, who hold in socage, may be called sokemen, because, as it seems, they are assigned only to the cultivation of the ground.) Bract. fol. 77 b. Mr. Stephen very properly observes of this passage, that it leans, though somewhat doubtfully, towards the derivation from the plough, and refers to another passage of Bracton, where he applies socagium in a way which tends strongly to mark its identity with privileged tenure, and privileged as being certain in its services. 1 Steph. Com. 193, note (h.) See Bract. fol. 208 b, 209. Sir Henry Spelman, whose opinion might be decisive on this point, gives no formal definition of the word socagium, but, under the words socmannus and socman, quotes various passages from which it may be inferred that his opinion was in favor of the derivation from soc, a privilege. It may be added that the explanation of Skene, the Scotch expositor, tends to confirm the view of Somner and Blackstone.

SOLVENCY. [from Lat. solvere, to pay; Fr. solvabilité.] Ability to pay; present ability to pay; ability to pay all that one owes; ability to pay one's debts out of one's own present means. See 4 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 652. See Solvent, Insolvency.

SOLVENDO. Lat. Paying. An apt word of reserving a rent in old conveyances. Co. Litt. 47 a.

SOLVENDO. Lat. In the civil law. Solvent; able to pay; able to pay in full. Solvendo esse nemo intelligitur nisi qui solidum potest solvere. No one is understood [or considered] to be solvent, but him who can pay the whole. Dig. 50. 16. 114.

SOLVENDUS. Lat. In old English law. To be paid. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 3.

SOLVENT. [Lat. solvens, paying, from solvere, to pay.] Able to pay; able to pay in full; able to pay all just debts; able to pay out of present means; able to pay out of one's own means; able to pay one's debts in full out of one's own present means.* 4 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 452, Cowen, J.

That solvent implies a present ability to pay, appears from the formation of the word itself, from the present participle (solvens) of the Latin solvere. It appears still more strikingly in the form of the corresponding civil law term solvendo, which literally signifies "in paying," or, as we might say, "in paying condition," clearly implying present capacity or power. Ability to pay in full, has also always been considered an essential element of solvency. This is shown in the civil law definition of the term solvendo, (q. v.) which has been formally adopted in the Civil Code of Louisiana. Art. 3522, n. 28.

SOLVERE. Lat. In the civil law. To pay. Nec interest quis solvat; nor does it matter who pays. Inst. 3. 30, pr.

To comply with one's engagement; to do what one has undertaken to do. Solvere dicimus eum qui fecit quod facere promisit. Dig. 50. 16. 176.

To loosen or disengage; to release one's self from obligation, as by payment of a debt. Calv. Lex.

SOLVIT. Lat. [from solvere, q. v.] He paid; paid. 10 East, 206.

SOLVIT AD DIEM. L. Lat. He paid at the day. The technical name of the plea, in an action of debt on bond, that the defendant paid the money on the day mentioned in the condition. 1 Arch. N. Prius, 220, 221.

SOLVIT POST DIEM. L. Lat. He paid after the day. The technical name of the plea in an action of debt on bond, that the defendant paid the money after the day named for the payment, and before the commencement of the suit. 1 Arch. N. Pr. 222.

SOMOUNS. L. Fr. Summons; a summons. Britt. c. 74.

SON. Fr. His. Declared, by the Civil Code of Louisiana, to be applicable to females as well as males. Art. 3522, num. 1.

SON ASSAULT DEMESNE. L. Fr. His own assault. The name of the plea to an action of trespass and assault, that it was the plaintiff's own assault that occasioned the injury, or that it was done by the defendant in his own defence against the plaintiff's first assault. 3 Bl. Com. 120, 121. Steph. Pl. 163.

SONIUM, Sonius, Sunium, Sonnium, Sunnium, Sunius, Somnus, Somnis. L. Lat. In old European law. An excuse for not appearing in court; an impediment; an essoin. Spelman.

SONTICUS. Lat. [from O. Lat. sontire, to hurt or hinder.] In the civil law. That which hurts, or hinders; that which tends to delay or put off; that which authorizes or excuses delay. A term applied in the Twelve Tables, to a serious illness, (morbus sonticus,) by which a defendant was prevented from appearing in court, and was for that reason excused. Calv. Lex. A. Gell. Noct. Att. xx. 1. 27. Hence causa sontica; a valid excuse for not appearing in court. Adam's Rom. Ant. 245, 272.

There are reasons for supposing this word to be the origin of essoin, (q. v.) though the latter word is usually very differently derived.

SORNER. In Scotch law. A person who takes meat and drink from others by force or menaces, without paying for it. Bell's Dict.

SOROR. Lat. In the civil law. Sister; a sister. Inst. 3. 6. 1. Derived by the jurist Antistius Labeo, from seorsum, apart, because she is born as it were apart, and is separated from the house in which she was born, and passes into another family, (soror appellata est, quod quasi seorsum nascitur, separaturque ab ea domo in qua nata est, et in aliam familiam transgreditur.) This is pronounced by Gellius an ingenious and subtile etymon. Noct. Att. xiii. 10.

SORS. Lat. In the civil law. A lot; chance; hazard; fortune. Calv. Lex.

The capital stock of a partnership, (prima pecunia quæ confertur in societatem, ut inde lucrum fiat.) Id. Grotius de Jur. Bell. lib. 2, c. 12, § 24, num. 2.

A principal sum of money, as distinguished from interest. Id. Used in this sense in old English records. Super trecentas marcas de sorte, et centum marcas de interesse; for three hundred marks of principal, and a hundred marks of interest. Cowell. See Interesse. Et si debitum Judæi in manum regis devenerit, non capiet rex nisi sortem, hoc est, catallum in charta contentum; and if the debt of a Jew falls into the hands of the king, the king shall claim nothing but the principal, that is, the chattel contained in the deed. Fleta, lib. 2 c. 57, § 8.

A thing recovered in an action, as distinguished from the costs of the action. Clerke's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 11.

SORTITIO. Lat. [from sortiri, to cast or draw lots.] In the civil law. A casting or drawing of lots; a determination or choice by lot. Sortitio judicum; a drawing of judges, (judices,) on criminal trials, resembling the modern practice of drawing a jury.* Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 13, num. 20. 3 Bl. Com. 366.

SOT. L. Fr. A fool. Britt. c. 36. Probably a corruption of fol, which, in print, resembles it.

SOUB, Soubs. L. Fr. Under. Kelham.

SOUL-SCOT. [Sax. saulsceat, from saul, soul, and sceat, a payment.] In Saxon law. A mortuary; a bequest of a thing to the church, as a kind of spiritual expiation and amends for the delinquencies of the giver. See Mortuary. 2 Bl. Com. 425.

SOULZE, Souz, Souce. L. Fr. A shilling. Kelham.

SOUN. L. Fr. His. Yearb. P. 1 Edw. II. 6.

To SOUND. To have an essential quality. An action is technically said to sound in damages, where it is brought not for the specific recovery of a thing, but for damages only. See Steph. Pl. 105.

SOURD. L. Fr. [from Lat. surdus.] Deaf. Britt. c. 34.

SOURNOUN. L. Fr. A surname. Fet Assaver, § 33.

SOUTH. L. Fr. Under. Litt. sect. 139. South boys; underwood. Kelham. South viscount; under sheriff. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 15. Southscripts; underwritten. Id. South dean; sub dean. Yearb. M. 9 Edw. III. 33.

SOVENT. L. Fr. Often. Trop sovent; too often. Artic. sup. Chart. c. 13.

SOWMING AND ROWMING. In Scotch law. Terms used to express the form by which the number of cattle brought upon a common by those having a servitude of pasturage may be justly proportioned to the rights of the different persons possessed of the servitude. Bell's Dict.

To SOWNE. In old English law. To be leviable. An old Exchequer term applied to sheriff's returns. "Estreats that sowne not," were such as the sheriff could not collect. 4 Inst. 107. Cowell. Spelman. Cowell supposes it to be a corruption of the Fr. souvenu, remembered.

SOY, Soi. L. Fr. His; himself. Soy defendaunt; defending himself; in self defence. Britt. c. 23.

SOYT, Soyte. Sc. In old Scotch law. Suit; suit to court. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Sok.

Soytor; suitor. Id. ibid.

SPARSIM. Lat. [from spargere, to scatter.] Scattered about; here and there. 2 Bl. Com. 283.

SPEAK TO. In practice. To argue. "The case was ordered to be spoke to again." 10 Mod. 107. 2 Wash. (Va.) R. [266,] 339.

SPECIAL AGENT. An agent who is appointed or constituted for a special purpose. 2 Kent's Com. 620. Such an agent has no discretion, but his authority must be strictly pursued. Id. ibid. and note.

SPECIAL BAIL. In practice. Bail to the action, given by a defendant as a security to abide the event of it. See Bail to the action.

SPECIAL BASTARD. In English law. One born before marriage of parents who intermarry afterwards. Blackst. Mag. Cart. Intr. lxxxi. Special bastardy Id. lxxxv.

SPECIAL CASE. See Case.

SPECIAL DAMAGES. In practice. Damages not necessarily resulting from an injury complained of; damages which require to be specially stated, and will not be implied by law.* Where the damages, though the natural consequence of the act complained of, are not the necessary result of it, they are termed special damages, which the law does not imply; and therefore, in order to prevent a surprise upon the defendant, they must be particularly specified in the declaration, or the plaintiff will not be permitted to give evidence of them at the trial. 2 Greenl. Evid. § 254.

SPECIAL DEMURRER. In pleading. A demurrer to a pleading on the ground of some defect of form, which is specially set forth. See Steph. Pl. 140, 141. Mansel on Demurrer, 2, 97.

SPECIAL INJUNCTION. In practice. An injunction by which parties are restrained from committing waste, damage or injury to property. 4 Steph. Com. 12, note (z.)

SPECIAL ISSUE. In pleading. An issue produced upon a special plea. Steph. Pl. 162. So called, as being usually more specific and particular than the general issues. Id. ibid.

SPECIAL JURY. In practice. A jury ordered by the court, on the motion of either party, in cases of unusual importance or intricacy. Called, from the manner in which it is constituted, a struck jury. 3 Bl. Com. 357. 3 Steph. Com. 591. 1 Tidd's Pr. 787—793. See Struck jury.

SPECIAL OCCUPANT. A person having a special right to enter upon and occupy lands granted pur auter vie, on the death of the tenant, and during the life of cestui que vie. Where the grant is to a man and his heirs during the life of cestui que vie, the heir succeeds as special occupant, having a special exclusive right by the terms of the original grant. 2 Bl. Com. 259. 1 Steph. Com. 416. This doctrine of special occupancy has been adopted in some of the United States, but is not recognized in others. See 4 Kent's Com. 27. Where a wife is tenant pur auter vie, and dies during the life of cestuy que vie, the husband becomes the special occupant. 2 Id. 134.

SPECIAL PLEA. A special kind of plea in bar, distinguished by this name from the general issue, and consisting usually of some new affirmative matter, though it may also be in the form of a traverse or denial. See Steph. Pl. 52, 162.

SPECIAL PLEADER. In English practice. A person whose professional occupation is to give verbal or written opinions upon statements made verbally or in writing, and to draw pleadings, civil or criminal, and such practical proceedings as may be out of the usual course. 2 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 42.

SPECIAL PLEADING. The popular denomination of the science of pleading, so called, as Mr. Stephen seems to suppose, from the special pleas which occupy a prominent place in it. See Steph. Pl. 162, note. Perhaps the term special may have been used to distinguish it from pleading, which, in the popular sense, imports oral argument at the bar.

SPECIAL PARTNER. A partner with a limited or restricted responsibility; a limited partner.* 3 Kent's Com. 34. A member of a limited partnership, who furnishes certain funds to the common stock, and whose liability extends no farther than the fund furnished. Id. 35.

SPECIAL PARTNERSHIP. A partnership limited to a particular branch of business, or to one particular subject.* 3 Kent's Com. 30. Story on Partn. § 75.

SPECIAL PROPERTY. A property of a special, qualified or temporary kind, arising from the peculiar circumstances under which it is acquired; such as the property of the finder of a thing lost, until the right owner is discovered, and the property of a sheriff in goods taken in execution, between the time of seizure and actual sale. 2 Steph. Com. 73, 74.

SPECIAL RULE. In practice. A rule granted upon the actual motion of counsel in court; as distinguished from a common rule, or rule of course. 1 Tidd's Pr. 485.

SPECIAL SERVICE. In Scotch law. That form of service by which the heir is served to the ancestor who was feudally vested in the lands. Bell's Dict. See Service.

SPECIAL TRAVERSE. In pleading. A peculiar form of traverse or denial, the design of which, as distinguished from a common traverse, is to explain or qualify the denial, instead of putting it in the direct and absolute form. It consists of an affirmative and a negative part; the first setting forth the new affirmative matter tending to explain or qualify the denial, and technically called the inducement; and the latter constituting the direct denial itself, and technically called the absque hoc. Steph. Pl. 169—180.

SPECIAL VERDICT. In practice. A special finding of the facts of a case by a jury, leaving to the court the application of the law to the facts thus found. 1 Arch. Pr. 213. 3 Bl. Com. 377. 2 Tidd's Pr. 897. It must state the facts as proved, and not the evidence given to prove the facts. 5 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 634. 4 Id. 171.

SPECIALIS. L. Lat. In old practice. Special. Exceptio specialis; a special exception or plea. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 36.

SPECIALTY. A contract or obligation under seal. Chitty on Contr. 3. A contract by deed; an instrument in writing, sealed and delivered. See Deed.

SPECIALTY DEBT. A debt due, or acknowledged to be due by deed, or instrument under seal. 2 Bl. Com. 465.

SPECIES. Lat. In the civil law. Form; figure; fashion or shape. A form or shape given to materials. Cum ex aliena materia species aliqua facta sit ab aliquo, quæri solet quis eorum naturali ratione dominus sit; where any form has been made by any one out of another's material, it is often asked which of them ought, in natural reason, to be deemed the owner. Inst. 2.

1. 25. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 277, § 265. See Specificatio.

A thing made, formed or shaped out of any substance or material, (materia.) Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 14.

SPECIES. Lat. A particular thing; as distinguished from genus, (q. v.)

SPECIES FACTI. Lat. In Scotch law. The particular criminal act charged against a person. "The species facti amounted to robbery." 2 Brown's R. 446.

SPECIFIC. Having a certain form or designation; observing a certain form; particular; precise.

SPECIFIC LEGACY. A legacy or gift, by will, of a particular specified thing, as of a horse, a piece of furniture, a term of years and the like. Ward on Legacies, 16.

In a strict sense, a legacy of a particular chattel, which is specified and distinguished from all other chattels of the testator of the same kind; as of a horse of a certain color. See Id. 17.

A legacy of a quantity of chattels described collectively, as a gift of all the testator's pictures. Id. 18.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. Performance of a contract in the precise form, or according to the precise terms agreed upon; strict performance. This is frequently compelled by a bill in equity filed for the purpose. See 2 Story's Eq. Pl. § 712, et seq.

SPECIFICATIO. Lat. [from species, form, and facere, to make.] In the civil law. Literally, a making of form; a giving of form to materials. That mode of acquiring property through which a person, by transforming a thing belonging to another, especially by working up his materials into a new species, becomes proprietor of the same. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 277, § 265. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 368. The making of wine, oil or flour, out of the grapes, olives or wheat of another, were common instances of specificatio. Inst. 2. 1. 25. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 14.

SPECIFICATION. In patent law. A particular description. A written description of an invention or discovery, and of the manner and process of making, constructing, using and compounding it; expressed in full, clear and exact terms, so as to enable any person skilled in the art or science to which it appertains, to make, construct, compound and use it.* See 2 Kent's Com. 366.

SPECIOSUS. Lat. In the civil law. Distinguished. Dig. 50. 16. 100.

SPECULUM. Lat. [Germ. spiegel.] Mirror or looking-glass. The title of several of the most ancient law books or compilations. One of the ancient Icelandic books is styled Speculum Regale. In the preface to this work, four others, bearing the same title of Speculum, are referred to. There is also a collection of the ancient laws of Pomerania and Prussia, under the same title. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 1, 2, note [b.] See Mirror.

SPECUS. Lat. In the civil law. A subterranean passage for water. A word not very satisfactorily defined in the Digests as locus ex quo despicitur. Dig. 43. 21. 1. 3.

SPERVARIUS, Sparvarius, Sparverius. L. Lat. In old English law. A sparrow-hawk, or spar-hawk. Mem. in Scacc. 22 Edw. I. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 7. Spelman, voc. Sparverius.

SPES ACCRESCENDI. Lat. Hope of surviving. 3 Atk. 762. 2 Kent's Com. 424.

SPES RECUPERANDI. Lat. Hope of recovering (a prize or captured vessel.) 1 Kent's Com. 101.

SP'IALIS. A contraction of specialis. 1 Inst. Cler. 13.

SPINSTER. The addition given to unmarried women, in legal proceedings, and in conveyancing. The term "single woman" is now generally used in its place. Spinster is said in Dyer to be an indifferent addition to a man as well as a woman. Dyer, 47.

SPIRITUAL COURTS. In English law. The ecclesiastical courts, or courts christian. See 3 Bl. Com. 61.

SPITTAL. An old form of hospital. 1 P. Wms. 426.

SPOLIATIO. Lat. [from spoliare, to despoil.] In old English law. Forcible deprivation of possession; disseisin. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 2.

SPOLIATION. [Lat. spoliatio, from spoliare, to despoil or rob.] In English ecclesiastical law. An injury done by one clerk or incumbent to another, in taking the fruits of his benefice without any right to them, but under a pretended title. 3 Bl. Com. 90, 91.

A violent deprivation of possession. 4 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 18.

In the law of evidence. Destruction of a thing by the act of a stranger; the erasure, alteration, mutilation or defacement of a writing by the act of a stranger. See 1 Greenl. Evid. § 566.

SPOLIATOR. Lat. [from spoliare, to despoil.] In old English law. A despoiler; a disseisor. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 2, §§ 19, 20, 22.

A destroyer (of a deed.) See In odium spoliatoris.

Spoliatus debet ante omnia restitui. A party despoiled [forcibly deprived of possession] ought first of all to be restored. 2 Inst. 714. 4 Reeves' Hist. 18.

SPOLIUM. Lat. In the civil and common law. A thing violently or unlawfully taken from another. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, (by Kaufmann,) 261, note.

SPONDEO. Lat. In the civil law. I undertake; I engage. Inst. 3. 16. 1. Id. 3. 17, pr.

SPONDERE. Lat. In the civil law. To engage; to undertake; to stipulate, or stipulate for.

Spondet peritiam artis. He promises the skill of his art; he engages to do the work in a skilful or workmanlike manner. 2 Kent's Com. 588. Applied to the engagements of workmen for hire. Id. ibid. Story on Bailm. § 428.

SPONDES? SPONDEO. Lat. Do you undertake? I do undertake. The most common form of verbal stipulation in the Roman law. Inst. 3. 16. 1.

SPONSALIA. Lat. [from spondere, to engage.] In the civil and canon law. Spousals, or espousals; betrothment; affiance. A mutual contract of future marriage. Calv. Lex. Dig. 23. 1. Shelf. Marr. & Div. 28. Sponsalia sunt mutua repromissio futurarum nuptiarum, rite inter eos quibus jure licet, facta; spousals are a mutual promise of future marriage; duly made between those persons to whom it is allowed by law. Swinburne on Spousals, 8. The passage in the Digests from which this seems to be taken, reads—sponsalia sunt mentio et repromissio nuptiarum futurarum; spousals are the mention and promise of future nuptials. Dig. 23. 1. 1.

Sponsalia de futuro; a mutual promise of marriage to be had afterwards. As when a man said to a woman, "I will take thee to my wife," and she answered, "I will take thee to my husband." Swinb. on Spousals, 8.

Sponsalia de præsenti; a mutual promise of present matrimony. As when the man said to the woman, "I do take thee to my wife," who then answered, "I do take thee to my husband." Id. ibid. Shelf. Marr. & Div. 26, 27. See Hubback's Evid. of Succession, 298.

SPONSALIA. Lat. In the common law. Spousals; actual marriage. Co. Litt. 34 a. Hargrave's note, 210. See Fleta, lib. 3, c. 11. Id. lib. 6, c. 39.

SPONSIO. Lat. [from spondere, to engage.] In the civil law. An engagement or undertaking; particularly such as was made in the form of an answer to a formal interrogatory by the other party. Calv. Lex. Dig. 50. 16. 7. See Spondes.

An engagement to pay a certain sum of money to the successful party in a cause. Calv. Lex.

SPONSIO LUDICRA. Lat. In Scotch law. A trifling or ludicrous engagement, such as a court will not sustain an action for. 1 Kame's Equity, Introd. 34.

In the civil law, this term seems to have signified an informal undertaking, or one made without the usual formula of interrogation. Calv. Lex. citing Budæus.

SPONSIONS. [Lat. sponsiones, from spondere, to engage.] In international law. Engagements made on behalf of states by agents not specially authorized, or exceeding the limits of the authority under which they purport to be made; and which, to be valid, must be confirmed by express or tacit ratification. Such as the official acts of admirals and generals suspending or limiting hostilities, capitulations of surrender, cartels of exchange, &c. See Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 15, § 16. Id. lib. 3, c. 22, §§ 1—3. Wheaton's Internat. Law, part 3, ch. 2, §§ 3, 4.

SPONTE virum mulier fugiens et adultera facta Dote sua careat, nisi sponsi sponte retracta.

A woman voluntarily leaving her husband and becoming an adulteress shall forfeit her dower, unless taken back by the free act of the husband. Co. Litt. 32 b. An old rhyming Latin couplet, framed to express the principle that a wife's dower is forfeited by her adulterous elopement. See 2 Kent's Com. 52, et seq.

SPORTULA. Lat. In the Roman law. A largess, dole, or present; a pecuniary donation; an official perquisite; something over and above the ordinary fee allowed by law. Inst. 4. 6. 24. See Brissonius.

Costs of suits. Nov. 82, c. 7.

SPOUSALS. [Lat. sponsalia.] In old English law. Mutual promises to marry. See Sponsalia.

SPOUSE-BREACH. In old English law. Adultery. Cowell.

SPREN. O. Eng. In old records. Broken wood or wind-fall. Cowell.

SPRING-BRANCH. In American land law. A branch of a stream, flowing from a spring. 12 Grattan's R. 196.

SPRINGING USE. A use limited to arise on a future event, where no preceding estate is limited, and which does not take effect in derogation of any preceding interest. If a grant be to A. in fee, to the use of B. in fee, after the first day of January next, this is an instance of a springing use, and no use arises until the limited period. The use, in the mean time, results to the grantor, who has a determinable fee. 4 Kent's Com. 297, 298. See 1 Steph. Com. 502. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 498, § 1689.

SPUILZIE, Spulzie. In Scotch law. The taking away of one's movables, without order of law, or consent of the owner. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 200. Bell's Dict.

SPURIUS. Lat. In the civil law. A bastard; the offspring of promiscuous cohabitation, otherwise called vulgo quæsitus, or conceptus; (Gr. ἀπάτωρ.) Inst. 1. 10. 12.

One born of an unlawful intercourse, (ex nuptiis injustis, or ex damnato coitu.) Id. Bract. fol. 63.

"SQUARE," construed. Anstr. 44.

SQUATTER. In American law. One who settles on another's land, usually on new or wild land, without a title.

One who settles on public land without title or authority. See 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 89, [53.]

SS. An abbreviation used in that part of a record, pleading, or affidavit, called the statement of the venue, or county in which it is made: as "City and county of New-York, ss." or more briefly in the English forms, "London, ss." Commonly translated or read, "to wit," and supposed to be a contraction of "scilicet," (q. v.) It has been otherwise explained to be a mark used to denote a separate section or paragraph in the record. 1 Chitt. Pl. 305, note (t.) 6th Am. ed. And this opinion is countenanced by the more ancient form of the contraction ff, or ff, the latter closely approximating the modern section mark §. Bracton, indeed, expressly uses ff, to denote the sections of the civil law. Bract. fol. 114.

Stabit præsumptio donec probetur in contrarium. A presumption shall stand, until proof be made to the contrary. Wingate's Max. 712. Hob. 297. Broom's Max. 429, [731.]

Another form of this maxim is, Stabitur præsumptioni donec probetur in contrarium. A presumption will be stood by, or upheld until proof be made to the contrary. This is the form in which it is quoted by Bracton, Coke and Blackstone. Bract. fol. 6. Co. Litt. 373 b. 3 Bl. Com. 371. Still another form is Standum erit præsumptioni, donec, &c. Bract. fol. 19 b. See Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 18.

STABLE-STAND. [L. Lat. in stabili statione.] In forest law. One of the four evidences or presumptions whereby a man was convicted of an intent to steal the king's deer in the forest. This was when a man was found at his standing in the forest with a cross-bow or long-bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer, or else standing close by a tree with grey-hounds in a leash, ready to slip. Cowell. Manwood.

STABULARII. Lat. [plur. of stabularius, q. v.] In the civil law. Stable-keepers; hostlers; (qui stabulum exercent.) Dig. 4. 9. 1. 5. Story on Bailm. § 464.

STABULARIUS. Lat. [from stabulum, a stable.] In the civil law. A stable-keeper. Dig. 4. 9. 4. 1. Id. 4. 9. 5.

STACHIA. L. Lat. In old records. A dam or head made to stop a water-course. Cowell.

STAFF'. An abbreviation of Staffordshire. 1 Instr. Cler. 28.

STAGNUM. Lat. In the civil law. A pool. Defined by Ulpian, in the Digests, as that which contains water resting in it for a time, which water is collected for the most part in winter; (quod temporalem contineat aquam ibidem stagnantem, quæ quidem aqua plerumque hieme cogitur.) Dig. 43. 14. 1. 4.

STAGNUM. Lat. In old English law. A pool, or pond. Co. Litt. 5 a. This word included both the soil and the water. Vaugh. 108.

STALLAGE. [from Sax. stal, a station; L. Lat. stallagium.] In English law. The liberty or right of pitching or erecting stalls in fairs or markets. Cowell. Spelman.

A duty paid for the liberty of having stalls in a fair or market, or of removing them from one place to another. Id. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 533, § 686. 6 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 31.

STALLANGIATORES. L. Lat. [from stallum, a stall.] In old Scotch law. Foreign merchants, (Sc. "creamers or forraine merchandes,") who, in the time of fair or market, pay certain duty for their stall or stand, in which they sell their merchandize. Skene de Verb. Signif.

STALLARIUS. L. Lat. [from Sax. stal, a stall.] In Saxon law. A heretoch, or chief military leader. Supposed by Spelman to be of similar origin and import with the continental term constabularius. See Constable of England.

STAMP. In English law. An impression made upon paper or parchment, upon which many legal proceedings and private instruments are written, and for which a certain duty is required to be paid to the crown. See Smith on Contracts, 191, note (b.)

STAMP ACTS. In English law. Acts regulating the stamps upon deeds, contracts, agreements, papers in law proceedings, bills and notes, letters, receipts and other papers. The General Stamp Act now in force is the 55 Geo. III. c. 184. See Smith on Contracts, 191, note (b,) for a view of the present stamp law.

STAMP DUTIES. In English law. Duties imposed upon and raised from stamps upon parchment and paper; and forming a branch of the perpetual revenue of the kingdom. 1 Bl. Com. 323.

STANCE. In Scotch law. A resting place; a field or place adjoining a drove-road, for resting and refreshing sheep and cattle on their journey. 7 Bell's Appeal Cases, 53, 57, 58.

To STAND. [Lat. stare; L. Fr. estre.] To abide; to submit to; to meet a thing, instead of escaping from it. "To stand a trial," "to stand to the order of a court," are phrases still in use. In Scotch law, the same idea is expressed by the opposite figure of "underlie." To "underlie the law" in a certain court, is to abide by its sentence. 2 Alis. Cr. Pr. 337.

To have force or strength; to have strength in itself. An act is said "to stand good" against a party. To be good or effectual in law. "That all the words may stand is the first and true course." Bacon's Arg. Case of Revocation of Uses; Works, iv. 255.

To remain as a thing is; to remain in force. Pleadings demurred to and held good, are allowed to stand. "The prohibition must stand." 11 Mod. 286.

To appear in court. A party is said to have a capacity of standing in judgment, (standi in judicio,) that is, of appearing in court and litigating there. 1 Peters' R. 578.

The radical ideas of this figurative term are those corresponding with its literal meaning, viz.: fixedness of position, inherent firmness or strength, capacity of maintaining an upright position. But these appear more clearly in the application of the Latin equivalent stare, (q. v.) See Rectus in curia.

STANDARD OF WEIGHT or MEASURE. A weight or measure fixed and prescribed by law, to which all other weights and measures are required to correspond. See 1 Bl. Com. 274—276.

STANNARY COURTS. In English law. Courts held for the stannaries, or tin mines (from Lat. stannum, tin,) in Devonshire and Cornwall, for the administration of justice among the tinners therein. 3 Bl. Com. 80. 3 Steph. Com. 448.

STAPLE. [L. Lat. stapula, q. v.] In English law. A mart or market. A place where the buying and selling of wool, lead, leather and other articles, were put under certain terms. 2 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 393.

STAPULA. L. Lat. [from Germ. stapel or staffel, a step or heap.] In European law. Staple; market. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 10.

STAR, Starr. [L. Lat. starrum.] In old English law. A contraction of the Hebrew shetar, (שטר,) signifying a deed or contract; or rather, a misapprehension of the Jewish pronunciation (shtar or shtor) of the word. All the deeds, obligations and releases of the Jews in England, were anciently called stars, (starra,) and were written for the most part in Hebrew alone, or in Hebrew and Latin, the Hebrew being on the one side or top of the parchment, and the Latin on the other side, or bottom, after the Hebrew. Blount. Cowell. Molloy de Jur. Mar. 466. In the second edition of Blount, A. D. 1691, it is said that one of these stars yet remains in the treasury of the exchequer, written without points in King John's reign, the substance of which is thus expressed in Latin just under it, like an English condition under a Latin obligation. Istud star fecit Hagius filius Magri de London, Domino Adæ de Stratona, de acquietancia de Stanmore, de omnibus debitis in quibus Dominus S. de Cheyndut ei tenebatur. Ita quod idem Judæus nec hæredes sui nihil exigere possint de prædicto Ade, nec de hæredibus suis, ratione terræ de Stanmore de prædictis debitis. Which may be translated thus: "This star made [was made by] Hagius the son of Mager, of London, to the Lord Adam de Stratton for an acquittance of Stanmore, of all the debts in which the Lord S. de Cheyndut was bound to him. So that neither the said Jew nor his heirs can demand any thing of the said Adam or his heirs, on account of the land of Stanmore for the aforesaid debts." Reference is made both by Cowell and Blount, to the Plea Rolls, Pasch. 9 Edw. I. Rot. 4, 5, 6, where many stars, as well of grant and release, as obligatory and by way of mortgage, are pleaded and recited at large. In Selden's Titles of Honour, (p. 798, et seq.) there is a copy of a Hebrew shetar, taken from the records of the exchequer. By an ordinance of Richard I. preserved by Hoveden, these Jewish starrs were commanded to be enrolled and deposited in chests under three keys, in certain places; one, and the most considerable of which, was in the king's exchequer at Westminster. 4 Bl. Com. 266, note. See Arca chirographica Judæorum.

STAR-CHAMBER. [L. Lat. camera stellata; L. Fr. chaumbre des esteilles.] The name of a celebrated court in England, abolished in the reign of Charles I. See Court of Star-Chamber.

 This court is said to have been so called either from the Sax. steoran, to steer or govern;—or from its punishing the crimen stellionatus, or cosenage;—or because the room wherein it sat, the old council chamber of the palace of Westminster, was full of windows;—or because haply the roof or ceiling was at the first garnished with gilded stars; the latter being the opinion of Lord Coke. 4 Inst. 66. All these are very reasonably pronounced by Sir W. Blackstone to be merely conjectures, no stars being visible in the roof of the apartment in his day, nor are any said to have remained there so late as the reign of Queen Elizabeth. 4 Bl. Com. 266, note. The learned commentator's own opinion, as very clearly explained by him, is that the star-chamber was so called from being held in that room at the exchequer where the chests containing those Jewish contracts and obligations called starrs, (from the Hebrew shetar, pronounced shtar,) were kept. That the principal repository of these starrs was in the king's Exchequer at Westminster, is clearly shown by an ordinance of Richard I. preserved by Hoveden; and the first time the star-chamber is mentioned in any record, it is expressly said to have been situated near the receipt of the exchequer at Westminster. Rot. Claus. 41 Edw. III. m. 13. It may be added, in confirmation of this opinion, that the old technical title of the Rolls Office of the Chancery, (Domus Conversorum,) originated in a very similar way, it being held in a house built by King Henry III. for Jews converted to the Christian faith, but which, on the expulsion of the Jews by Edward III. was assigned as a place for the custody of the rolls and records of the chancery. Cowell, voc. Rolls. The law Latin and law French titles of this court are of no value in an etymological point of view, as they seem to have become established at a comparatively modern date, when the true meaning of starr or star was forgotten.

STARE. Lat. In old English law. To stand; to be good or valid in law; the opposite of cadere, to fall or fail. Aut stabit appellum aut cadet; the appeal will either stand or fall. Bract. fol. 140 b. See Cadere. Contractus stare non poterit; the contract cannot stand. Id. fol. 62.

To meet; to abide. Ad standum recto; to stand to an accusation; to appear and answer it. Bract. fol. 125, 154. Sometimes translated to stand to the right; and otherwise expressed stare juri. Reg. Orig. 250 b. Right, however, in this instance, seems to be merely an Anglicized form of the L. Lat. rectum, an accusation. See Rectum, Rettum.

To appear in court; to be a party to an action or other judicial proceeding. See Persona standi in judicio.

To stop or stay. See Stet processus.

To stand; to accept an office to which one has been appointed. Stare recusare; to refuse to stand. 3 M. & S. 184.

STARE DECISIS. Lat. To stand by decided cases; to uphold precedents; to maintain former adjudications. 1 Kent's Com. 477. "It is better stare decisis. The very case has already been determined." Grose, J. 13 East, 320. A part of an old verse, expressed at length, Stare decisis, et non quieta movere.

To stand by precedents, and not to disturb settled points.

In a recent case in the New-York Court of Appeals, it was held that the judicial rule, stare decisis, should have great force with this court in reference to adjudications on questions of law made by it, after full discussion and examination. Accordingly, where, on a second appeal, the question presented was identical with that on which the cause was previously decided by the court, it was held that the court would not reconsider and depart from its former adjudication, although its members were not unanimous in making that decision, and the reasoning of those who concurred was not in harmony. 3 Kernan's R. 500. But see 6 Ohio St. R. 78.

STATE. [Lat. status.] Condition. See Status.

STATE. [Lat. respublica.] In public law. A complete or self-sufficient body of persons, united together in one community for the defence of their rights, and to do right to foreigners. 1 Kent's Com. 189, note.—A political body, or body politic; the whole body of people united under one government. Webster. A government.

STATE. O. Eng. Estate; an estate. A word frequently used by Lord Bacon. Works, vol. iv. passim.

To STATE. To express the particulars of a thing in writing or in words; to set down or set forth in detail; to relate at length, or in full. As, to state an account, to state a case.

To set down in gross; to mention in general terms, or by way of reference; to refer. This was held to be the sense of the word, in a case in the Supreme Court of New-York. 6 Hill's R. 300.

STATED. Settled; closed. An account stated means an account settled, and at an end. Pulling on Merc. Accounts, 33. "In order to constitute an account stated, there must be a statement of some certain amount of money being due, which must be made either to the party himself, or to some agent of his." Parke, B. 5 Mees. & W. 667.

STATIM. Lat. [Fr. maintenant.] In old English law. Immediately. This word was not always literally understood, or rather, it was understood not so much of actual time, as of effectual and lawful time; that is, of a time which permitted all the legal adjuncts and accompaniments of an act to be completed. See Bacon's Argument in the Case of Revocation of Uses; Works, iv. 253, 254.

STATULIBER. Lat. In the Roman law. One who is made free by will under a condition; one who has his liberty fixed and appointed at a certain time or on a certain condition, (qui statutam et destinatam in tempus vel conditionem libertatem habet.) Dig. 40. 7.

STATUS. Lat. [from stare, to stand.] In the civil law. Standing; state; condition. Dig. 1. 5. The condition of a person as being either freeman or slave. Dig. 1. 5. 3. A certain civil qualification, otherwise called caput, (q. v.;) a civil capacity for rights. 1 Mack. Civ. Law, 129, § 119. A quality by reason of which men enjoy a different right. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 3, § 76. See 2 Kent's Com. 457, note. The term is of frequent occurrence in Bracton and Fleta. Bract. fol. 190 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 51, § 1. Id. lib. 4, c. 11. And it is still currently used in modern law. See the Ohio case of Anderson v. Poindexter, 6 Ohio St. R. 622—727.

STATUS. Lat. In old English law. Estate. 1 Mod. 101. By a grant or release of "totum statum suum," the fee simple will pass. Hale, C. J. and Wylde, J. Id. ibid.

STATUTE. [L. Fr. estatut; L. Lat. statutum, from statuere, to establish.] An act of the legislature of a state, [declaring] commanding or prohibiting something. Webster.—An express act of the legislature of a country. 2 Kent's Com. 456. Literally, a thing established. Sometimes called, in the old books, an establishment, (q. v.) See 1 Bl. Com. 85. 1 Steph. Com. 66. A law made with all the formalities of legislation.* Statute law is the express written will of the legislature, rendered authentic by certain prescribed forms and solemnities. 1 Kent's Com. 447.

STATUTE. In old English law. A bill or law which, after receiving the royal assent on the parliament roll, was entered on the statute roll, by which it became complete. A statute was thus distinguished from an ordinance, (q. v.) which became complete by the royal assent on the parliament roll, without further entry. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, 13, 14, note (C,) Runnington's ed. 1820. But this distinction was not always made, acts of parliament, or statutes, being frequently called ordinances, and ordinances as frequently styled acts of parliament or statutes. Id. ibid.

STATUTE. [Lat. statutum.] In foreign and civil law. Any particular municipal law or usage, though resting for its authority on judicial decisions, or the practice of nations. 2 Kent's Com. 456.—The whole municipal law of a particular state, from whatever source arising. Story's Confl. Laws, § 12.

STATUTE. In English law. An abbreviation of statute staple. Freem. 44.

To STATUTE. In old Scotch law. To establish. "Decerns, statutes and ordains." 1 How. St. Trials, 1381.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. See Frauds, Statute of.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. A statute by which rights of action are limited to certain prescribed periods of time. A statute fixing and limiting certain periods of time, beyond which rights of action cannot be enforced.* 3 Bl. Com. 306—308.

STATUTE-MERCHANT. In English law. A security for a debt acknowledged to be due, entered into before the chief magistrate of some trading town, pursuant to the statute 13 Edw. I. De Mercatoribus, by which not only the body of the debtor might be imprisoned, and his goods seized in satisfaction of the debt, but also his lands might be delivered to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them the debt be satisfied. 2 Bl. Com. 160. Now fallen into disuse. 1 Steph. Com. 287.

STATUTE ROLL. In English law. A roll upon which an act, after receiving the royal assent, was formally entered. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, 13, (Runnington's ed. 1820.) See 1 Bl. Com. 182. "The first Statute Roll we have," says Lord Hale, "is in the Tower; it begins with Magna Charta, and ends with Edward III. and is called Magnus Rotulus Statutor." Hist. Com. Law, 16, 17.

STATUTE-STAPLE. In English law. A security for a debt acknowledged to be due, so called from its being entered into before the mayor of the staple, that is to say, the grand mart for the principal commodities or manufactures of the kingdom, formerly held by act of parliament in certain trading towns. In other respects it resembled the statute-merchant, (q. v.) but like that has now fallen into disuse. 2 Bl. Com. 160. 1 Steph. Com. 287.

STATUTUM. Lat. [from statuere, to determine.] In the civil law. Established; determined. A term applied to judicial action. Dig. 50. 16. 46, pr.

STATUTUM. Lat. [from statuere, to establish.] In old English law. A statute; an act of parliament. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 10. Ex statuto Magnæ Cartæ; according to the statute of Magna Charta. Id. lib. 5, c. 11, § 1. Statutum affirmativum non derogat communi legi. An affirmative statute does not derogate from the common law. Jenk. Cent. 24.

Statutum generaliter est intelligendum quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason of it general, the statute is to be understood generally. 10 Co. 101.

STATUTUM WALLIÆ. Lat. The Statute of Wales. The title of a statute passed in the 12th year of Edw. I. being a sort of constitution for the principality of Wales, which was thereby, in a great measure, put on the foot of England, with respect to its laws and the administration of justice. 2 Reeves' Hist. 93, 94. For a view of its provisions, see Id. 95—99.

STAURUM, Staurus. L. Lat. In old records. A store, or stock of cattle. Dyer, 110. A term of common occurrence in the accounts of monastic establishments. Spelman. Cowell.

STAY. In practice. A stopping; the act of stopping or arresting a judicial proceeding, by the order of a court or judge. Orders for a stay of proceedings are frequent in practice.

To STAY. In practice. To stop; to arrest by a judicial order. "Let it stay; and judgment was stayed." 12 Mod. 269.

STEALTH. Theft is so called by Finch. "Stealth is the wrongful taking of goods without pretence of title." Law, b. 3, ch. 17.

STEELBOW GOODS. In Scotch law. Corns, cattle, straw and implements of husbandry delivered by a landlord to his tenant, by which the tenant is enabled to stock and labour the farm; in consideration of which he becomes bound to return articles equal in quantity and quality, at the expiry of the lease. Bell's Dict.

STEEL-YARD, Stillyard, Stilyard. [L. Lat. Guildhalda Teutonicorum.] In old English law. A place or house in London, where the fraternity of the Easterling merchants, otherwise called The merchants of the Hanse and Almaine, had their abode. It was at first so denominated from a broad place or court where steel was sold, upon which that house was founded. Cowell. The Stilyard Company was a body of merchants created in the year 1215 under Henry IV. in favor of the free cities of Germany which had been assistant to him in his wars against France. It took its name from the place where they lived, which was a yard near London Bridge where steel was sold. Dyer, 92 b, note. In the modern books, the merchants of the Steel-Yard are said to be a company to whom the steel-yard (meaning the balance for weighing goods) was assigned by Henry III. Brande.

STELLIONATE. [from Lat. stellionatus, q. v.] In Scotch law. The crime of aliening the same subject to different persons. 2 Kames' Equity, 40. Bell's Dict.

STELLIONATUS. Lat. [from stellio, a lizard.] In the civil law. A general term used to denote all kinds of fraud and imposition which were not designated by any more special appellation. Dig. 47. 20. The mortgaging or selling another's property as one's own, or the mortgaging one's property a second time without notice of the first mortgage, were acts of stellionatus, or stellionate, as it is rendered in Scotch law.

ΣΤΕΜΜΑΤΑ, Στέμματα. Gr. In the civil law. Tables of genealogy. Dig. 38. 10. 9.

STERBRECH, Strebrech. Sax. [from stre, a way, and brech, a breaking.] In old English law. The offence of breaking up, obstructing, or narrowing a way or road. LL. Hen. I. c. 81. Spelman.

"STERILITY," ex vi termini, imports an ungrateful soil; a sort of natural and constitutional infecundity, resisting the ordinary means properly applied to render it otherwise. Lord Ellenborough, 2 M. & S. 359.

STERLING. [L. Lat. sterlingus, sterlingum.] In English law. Current or standard coin, especially silver coin; a standard of coinage. Anciently written esterling, (q. v.)

In old English law. A penny. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 11. See Esterling.

STET PROCESSUS. L. Lat. (Let the process stay or stand; let the proceedings be stayed.) In practice. An entry on the record, of a nature similar to a nolle prosequi, by which a plaintiff agrees that all further proceedings in the action shall be stayed. In English practice, this entry is usually made, where the defendant becomes insolvent pending the action, and the object of it is to prevent him from obtaining judgment as in case of a nonsuit. 1 Tidd's Pr. 682, 683.

STETH, Stede. In old English law. The bank of a river. Co. Litt. 4 b.

STEURA. L. Lat. In old European law. A tribute; an exaction or tax. Spelman.

STICH. (plur. Stiches.) In English law. A furrow or ridge of land. 2 Taunt. 38, 39. See Id. note (a.)

To STICK. In the old books. To stop; to hesitate; to decline to accede; to accede with reluctance. "The court stuck a little at this exception." 2 Show. 491. "The law has always stuck at new niceties that have been started." North, C. J. 1 Mod. 251. "This was what stuck with the court." 6 Mod. 26.

STILLICIDIUM. Lat. [from stilla, a drop, and cadere, to fall.] In the civil law. Drip; the dripping of water from the caves of a house. Inst. 2. 3. 1. 4. Dig. 8. 2. 2. Id. 8. 2. 20, 21. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 3, § 404. A species of predial servitude. See Servitus.

STINGISDINT. O. Sc. [Lat. fustigatio.] In old Scotch law. A dint or stroke with a sting or baton. Leg. Burg. c. sciendum est, 9. Skene de Verb. Sign.

STINT. In English law. Limit; a limited number. Used as descriptive of a species of common. See Common sans nombre.

STIPENDIUM. Lat. In the civil law. The pay of a soldier; wages; stipend. Calv. Lex.

Tribute. Said in the Digests to be derived from stipis, a small coin of brass, because collected in small sums, (quod per stipes, id est, modica æra colligatur.) Dig. 50. 16. 27. It has been, however, otherwise derived from stipis, and pendere, to weigh, soldiers anciently receiving their pay by weight, and not by tale.

STIPES. Lat. In old English law. Stock; a stock; a source of descent or title. Literally, the trunk of a tree. Communis stipes; the common stock. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2. "The stipes from whom the heir is to deduce his pedigree." Blackst. Law Tr. 27. Seisina facit stipitem, (q. v.) Seisin makes stock.

STIPULA. Lat. In old English records. Straw; stubble left standing on the ground after the grain is reaped and carried away. Cowell.

STIPULARI. Lat. In the civil law. In a strict sense, to ask or demand something to be done or given to one, in a certain form of words, which, when responded to by another party in a similar form, constituted a contract between them. Thus, one party said or asked, "Spondes?" (Do you engage?) The other said or answered, "Spondeo." (I do engage.) The party who asked was said to stipulate (stipulari;) the party who answered was said to promise, (promittere.) See Inst. 3. 16. 1. Id. 3. 17, pr. See Stipulatio.

In a more general sense,—to promise or engage. In this sense, it was used to denote the act of the party who answered the interrogation, as well as that of him who asked it. Stipulari est promittere. Isid. lib. 5, Etymol. c. 24. Calv. Lex.

STIPULATIO. Lat. In the civil law. A contract in a solemn form of words, consisting of an interrogation and a reply; as "Spondes? Spondeo." (Do you undertake? I do undertake.) "Quinque aureos dare spondes? Spondeo." (Do you engage to give me five aurei? I do.) Inst. 3. 6. 1. See Dig. 45. 1. By this kind of form the party answering the question was bound to give or do the thing that was asked. Calv. Lex. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 16, num. 2. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, § 9.

This word is said in the Institutes to be so called, because what was firm or strong was called by the ancient Romans stipulum, derived, perhaps, from stipes, the trunk of a tree. Inst. 3. 16, pr.

STIPULATION. [from Lat. stipulatio, q. v.] In practice. An engagement or undertaking in writing, to do a certain act; as to try a cause at a certain time. 1 Burr. Pr. 389.

In admiralty practice. An undertaking in the nature of bail, entered into on the arrest of a defendant, or the seizure of property. 3 Bl. Com. 108, 291. Benedict's Adm. Pr. 270—277.

STIPULATOR. Lat. In the civil law. The party who asked the question in the contract of stipulation; the party to whom the promise was made; the other party, or he who answered, being called the promissor. Calv. Lex. See Stipulatio.

In a more general sense, the term was applied to both parties. Calv. Lex.

STIRPS. Lat. In the civil law. A stock; a source of descent. Literally, the root, stem or stock of a tree or plant. A parent or ancestor was said to be the stirps, root or stock of his children, or descendants. See Nov. 118, c. 1. The term has been transferred to the common law. 2 Bl. Com. 204.

Stirpes, (plur. of stirps;) stocks; roots; sources of descent. Nov. 118, c. 1. See In stirpes, Per stirpes.

STOCK. [Lat. stirps, stirpes.] A source or root of succession, or descent.* 1 Steph. Com. 379.

STOCK. In mercantile law. The goods and wares of a merchant or tradesman, kept for sale and traffic.

In a larger sense, the capital of a merchant or other person, including his merchandise, money and credits, or, in other words, the entire property employed in business. See Keep v. Sanderson, 2 Wisconsin R. 42, 56, 57.

"STOCK," (government stock,) held not to come within the denomination of "money out at interest." 6 East, 182.

STOCKS. [L. Lat. cippi; L. Fr. ceps.] A machine constructed of wood, with holes through which the feet of offenders were passed, and their persons thus confined. Now almost disused, even in England. Brande.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU. Lat. and Eng. Stoppage on the transit or passage; the stoppage of goods sold on their transitus, passage or way, to the buyer.* The right which a vendor, when he sells goods on credit to another, has of resuming the possession of the goods, while they are in the hands of a carrier or middle man, in their transit to the consignee or vendee, and before they arrive into his actual possession, or to the destination which he has appointed for them, on his becoming bankrupt or insolvent. 2 Kent's Com. 540. See 2 Steph. Com. 122. 2 Smith's Lead. Cas. 431. Russell on Factors, 218. Smith on Contracts, 339. Blackburn on Contr. of Sale, 201.

ΣΤΟΡΓΗ, Στοργή. Gr. The natural affection of a parent. 1 Bl. Com. 447.

STOURNY. [Ital. storno.] In European law. A contraction of the word ristourne, (dissolution of a contract of insurance.) A Provencal Italian word. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 16, pr.

STOUTHRIEF. Sc. In Scotch law. Robbery. Bell's Dict. A violent taking. 2 Brown's R. 146.

STOWE. In old English law. A valley. Co. Litt. 4 b.

STRAND. [Sax. strond.] A shore or bank of the sea or a river. Cowell.

STRANDING. [Fr. echouement.] In insurance and maritime law. An accidental striking and remaining of a vessel on the ground or strand, by which she is injured; a grounding and filling with water; the running or drifting of a vessel on shore.* See 3 Kent's Com. 323, note.

Stranding is when a ship, by accident, is on the ground or strand, and is injured thereby. 7 B. & C. 219. A stranding, in the sense of a policy, is when a ship takes ground, not in the ordinary course of navigation, but by accident, or the force of wind or the sea, and remains stationary for some time. The vessel must ground from an accident happening out of the ordinary and usual course of navigation. She must be on the strand under extraordinary circumstances, or from extraneous causes. 3 B. & Ad. 20. Where a vessel in a tide harbor, takes the ground in the ordinary way, upon the ebbing of the tide, it is not a stranding within the policy, although, in common language the vessel is on the strand. But to constitute "stranding," she must be on the strand under extraordinary circumstances, or from extraneous causes. Story, J. 2 Sumner's R. 203. And see 13 Ohio R. 48. In the last case it was decided that where a loss is occasioned by the vessel striking upon a rock and bilging, without remaining stationary, it was not a loss by stranding.

STRANGER. One who is not a party or privy to an act or contract. Cowell.

STRATA. L. Lat. In old English law. A street, or road. Strata regalis; the king's highway. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 49, § 11. Stratæ publicæ; public streets. Bract. fol. 170 b.

Properly, a paved way; but not used in that sense. 10 Mod. 382.

STRAY. See Estray.

STREAM. A current of water; a body of flowing water. The word, in its ordinary sense, includes rivers. But Callis defines a stream "a current of waters running over the level at random, and not kept in with banks or walls." Callis on Sewers, [83,] 133. See Angell on Water-Courses, §§ 2, 4, 8, and note.

STREIGHTEN. In the old books. To narrow or restrict. "The habendum should not streighten the devise." 1 Leon. 58.

STREPITUS. Lat. Noise; confusion. The noise and confusion of a judicial tribunal, (strepitus judicialis;) the noise of a court. Sine strepitu; without noise, in a quiet way. Lord Mansfield, C. J. 1 W. Bl. 82.

STREPITUS. L. Lat. In old records. Estrepement or strip; a species of waste or destruction of property. Spelman.

STRICT SETTLEMENT. In English law. A settlement of an estate upon a parent for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail, including the appointment of trustees to preserve contingent remainders. See Atherley on Marr. Settlements, 93.

STRICTI JURIS. Lat. Of strict right or law; according to strict law; without equitable interpretation, or enlargement of application. "A license is a thing stricti juris; a privilege which a man does not possess by his own right, but it is conceded to him as an indulgence, and therefore it is to be strictly observed." Sir William Scott, (The Juno,) 2 Rob. Adm. R. 117. A formal precise action said to be stricti juris. 1 W. Bl. 388. See Actio stricti juris. An objection said to be stricti juris. 1 East, 17. Anstr. 152. Priority among creditors is stricti juris. Id. 166. Maritime liens are stricti juris, and cannot be extended by construction. 19 Howard's R. 82.

STRICTISSIMI JURIS. Lat. Of the strictest right or law; to be interpreted and applied in the strictest manner.* "Licenses being matter of special indulgence, the application of them was formerly strictissimi juris." Sir William Scott, The Goede Hoop, 1 Edw. Adm. R. 328. "A ground that is not entitled to any favor, and stands upon the very limits strictissimi juris." Story, J. 3 Story's R. 159. "This is a case strictissimi juris, therefore we will not assist it." 1 W. Bl. 642. See 6 East, 144. 2 H. Bl. 413.

STRICTO JURE. Lat. In strict law. 1 Kent's Com. 65.

STRICTUM JUS. Lat. Strict right or law; the rigor of the law, as distinguished from equity. See Stricti juris, Strictissimi juris.

STRIKING A DOCKET. In English practice. The first step in the proceedings in bankruptcy, which consists in making affidavit of the debt, and giving a bond to follow up the proceedings with effect. 2 Steph. Com. 199. When the affidavit and bond are delivered at the bankrupt office, an entry is made in what is called the docket-book; upon which the petitioning creditor is said to have struck a docket. Eden's Bankrupt Law, 51, 52.

STRIKING A JURY. In practice. The peculiar mode of constituting a special jury which has been ordered by the court for the trial of some particular cause, viz. by each party striking out a certain number of names from a list of jurors prepared by the clerk or master of the court, so as to reduce it to the number of persons prescribed by law, who are to be summoned and returned as jurors by the sheriff.

The striking of the jury is done before the clerk out of court. The original practice in England was for the master to name forty-eight freeholders, and then each party struck out twelve, by one at a time, (the plaintiff, or his attorney, beginning first;) the twenty-four names remaining constituted the jury who were to be returned for the trial of the cause. 2 Tidd's Pr. 787, 788. The practice has been of late years somewhat modified, but it has been essentially adopted in the state of New-York. 2 Rev. St. [418,] 338, §§ 48, 49.

STROND. Sax. In old records. A shore or bank of a sea or river; a strand. Over strond & streme, on wode & felde ; on shore and stream, in wood and field. Cart. Ric. I. cited in Cowell.

STRUCK JURY. In practice. A special jury. So called because constituted by striking out a certain number of names from a prepared list. See Striking a jury.

STRUES. Lat. In old pleading. A rick (of hay.) 1 Mod. 289.

STUBULA. Lat. In old English law. Stubble; straw. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 9.

To STULTIFY. [from Lat. stultus, foolish, and fieri, to be made.] To make out one to be of unsound mind. It is a maxim in the law of England, in regard to transactions merely voidable, that No man shall be allowed to stultify himself, that is, to plead his own unsoundness of mind in a court of justice. 1 Steph. Com. 441. Mr. Stephen thus qualifies this maxim, which is stated by Blackstone in broader terms, without reference to the distinction between void and voidable transactions. Id. ibid. note. 2 Bl. Com. 291, 292. The maxim itself has been pronounced absurd, unjust and mischievous, by the highest American authority. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 225, and notes. 2 Kent's Com. 451. Mr. Justice Story observes that, in America, it has not been of universal adoption in the state courts, if, indeed, it has ever been recognised as binding in any of the courts of common law. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. ub. sup. Chancellor Kent and Professor Greenleaf pronounce it to be "exploded." 2 Kent's Com. ub. sup. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 369.

STULTILOQUIUM. L. Lat. [from stultus, foolish, and loqui, to speak.] In old English law. Vicious or disorderly pleading, for which a fine was imposed by King John, supposed to be the origin of the fines for beau-pleader, (q. v.) Crabb's Hist. 135.

STUPPARE. Lat. In old European law. To stop; to close a wound. L. Alaman. tit. 59. Spelman.

STUPRUM. Lat. In the civil law. Unlawful intercourse with a woman. Distinguished from adultery (adulterium) as being committed with a virgin or widow. Dig. 48. 5. 6. 1. But the terms were often used indifferently. Id. ibid. See Id. 50. 16. 101, pr.

SUAPTE NATURA. Lat. In its own nature. Suâpte naturâ sterilis ; barren in its own nature and quality; intrinsically barren. Lord Ellenborough, 5 M. & S. 170.

SUB. Lat. [L. Fr. soub, south.] Under; upon. See infra.

SUB CONDITIONE. L. Lat. In old conveyancing. Upon condition; literally, under condition. • One of the words which, by virtue of themselves, make estates upon condition. Litt. sect. 328. The most express and proper [words of] condition in deeds. Co. Litt. 203 a. 10 Co. 42 a.

SUB DISJUNCTIONE. Lat. In the alternative. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 21.

SUB JUDICE. Lat. Under or before a judge or court; under judicial consideration; undetermined. 12 East, 409.

SUB MODO. L. Lat. Under, or subject to a qualification; in a qualified manner, or sense. Fieri autem poterit donatio sub conditione, seu sub modo; a gift may be made subject to a condition, or subject to a qualification. Bract. fol. 19. "Not absolutely, but sub modo." 2 Mod. 280.

SUB PEDE SIGILLI. Lat. Under the foot of the seal; under seal. 1 Stra. 521.

SUB POTESTATE. Lat. Under power; subject to the power of another; as a slave or a child. Bract. fol. 24.

SUB SALVO ET SECURO CONDUCTU. L. Lat. Under safe and secure conduct. 1 Stra. 430. Words in the old writ of habeas corpus. Id. ibid.

SUB SIGILLO. Lat. Under seal. 1 Stra. 674.

SUB SILENTIO. Lat. Under silence; in silence; without notice taken. 1 Bl.

Com. 183. Precedents sub silentio. 1 P. Wms. 223. Hardr. 98, arg.

SUB SPE RECONCILIATIONIS. L. Lat. Under the hope of reconcilement. 2 Kent's Com. 127.

SUB SUO PERICULO. L. Lat. At his own risk. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 5, § 5.

SUB-AGENT. An under agent; a substituted agent; an agent appointed by one who is himself an agent. 2 Kent's Com. 633.

SUB-BALLIVUS. L. Lat. In old English law. An under-bailiff; a sheriff's deputy. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 68, § 2.

SUB-BOSCUS. L. Lat. [L. Fr. sub-bois.] In old English law. Underwood, or coppice. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 24, § 8. Shep. Touch. 10. 3 Leon. 9, case 73.

SUB-CONTRACT. A contract subordinate to another contract, made or intended to be made between the contracting parties, on one part, or some of them, and a stranger. Heath, J. 1 H. Bl. 37, 45.

SUB-DELEGARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To sub-delegate; to appoint a delegate of a delegate; to delegate power already delegated. Applied to the act of a judge, (himself acting by delegation,) in delegating or assigning another to act in his place. Nullus justitiarius à domino rege sic delegatus, poterit aliquem sibi subdelegare; no justice so delegated by the king can sub-delegate any to himself. Bract. fol. 108 b. See Id. fol. 405 b. Nullus sub-delegatus alium potest sibi sub-delegare, ut recordum possit præsentare; no sub-delegated [justice] can sub-delegate another to himself, so as to be able to present a record. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 17, § 31.

SUBDITUS. Lat. In old English law. A vassal; a dependent; any one under the power of another. Spelman. Homo vel subditus. Bract. fol. 412.

A subject. Hale's Anal. sect. xiii.

SUBHASTARE. Lat. [from sub, under, and hasta, a spear.] In the civil law. To sell at public auction, which was done sub hasta, under a spear; to put or sell under the spear. Calv. Lex. See Subhastatio.

SUBHASTATIO. Lat. [from subhastare, q. v.] In the civil law. A sale by public auction, which was done under a spear, fixed up at the place of sale as a public sign of it. Calv. Lex. Festus.

The Roman custom of setting up a spear at an auction, seems to have been derived from the circumstance that at first only those things which were taken in war were sold in that manner. Adam's Rom. Ant. 59. The use of a spear continued to be retained in the middle ages, the Roman terms subhastatio, and subhastator, being also retained. Babington on Auctions, 2, 3. In modern auctions, a staff with a flag has taken its place.

SUBINFEUDATION. [from Lat. sub, under, and in, in, and feudum, a fief.] In feudal law. The granting of a feud or fief out of another, to be held by an under tenant.* A term applied to the practice or system introduced by the inferior lords who held of the king's greater barons in England, of carving out portions of their own fees or estates, (called in feudal law arriere fiefs,) and granting them to others, to be held as of themselves. 2 Bl. Com. 91. 1 Spence's Chancery, 138. 3 Kent's Com. 497. See Bell's Dict.

SUBJACERE. L. Lat. In old English law. To be subject to. Literally, to lie under. Subjacere debet juri ubi deliquerit; he ought to be subject to the law [of the place] where he has offended. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 37, § 2. See Underlie.

SUBJECT. [from Lat. subjectus, from subjicere, to put under; Lat. subditus.] In public law. One who is under the protection and power of a government and laws; one who owes allegiance to a government.* "A person domiciled in a country, and enjoying the protection of its sovereign, is deemed a subject of that country." Story, J. 2 Wheaton's R. 227, 245, 246.

In a stricter sense, this term is usually applied to those who live under, or owe allegiance to a monarchy, as distinguished from a republic, the members of which are termed citizens. But it has been observed by high American authority, that "though the term citizen seems to be appropriate to republican freemen, yet we are, equally with the inhabitants of all other countries, subjects, for we are equally bound by allegiance and subjection to the government and law of the land." 2 Kent's Com. 258, note. The term subjects, indeed, has been held by the same authority to be the proper appellation of blacks born within and under the allegiance of the United States. Id. ibid.

Sublata veneratione magistratuum, respublica ruit. When respect for magistrates is taken away, the commonwealth falls. Jenk. Cent. 43, case 81. Applied to the offence of striking in court. Id. ibid.

Sublato fundamento, cadit opus. When the foundation is removed, the work falls. Jenk. Cent. 106, case 2.

Sublato principali, tollitur adjunctum. When the principal is taken away, the incident is taken also. Co. Litt. 389 a.

SUBMISSION. An agreement by which parties consent to submit their differences to the decision of an arbitrator. Usually formally made in writing, and by bond, but neither of these forms is indispensably necessary to constitute it. See Russell's Arbitrator, 2, 49. Billings on Awards, 9.

SUBORN. [Lat. subornare, from sub, under, and ornare, to prepare.] In criminal law. To procure another to commit perjury. Steph. Crim. Law, 74. Literally, to instruct one privily, or in an underhanded manner, what to say; to prepare secretly, or underhand. To procure unlawfully. Say. 292. Subornare est quasi subtus in aure ipsum male ornare; to suborn is to instruct one privily, as by whispering in his ear, with a bad design. 3 Inst. 167.

SUBORNATION. [Lat. subornatio, from subornare, q. v.] In criminal law. The offence of procuring another to commit perjury. Steph. Crim. Law, 74. Subornation of perjury is the offence of procuring another to take such a false oath as constitutes perjury in the principal. 4 Bl. Com. 137. To render the offence of subornation of perjury complete either at common law, or under the statute, the false oath must be actually taken. 3 Mod. 122. 1 Leach, 455, notes. 2 Russell on Crimes, 596, (Am. ed. 1850.)

SUBPŒNA, (or SUB PŒNA.) Lat. Under a penalty. In practice. A writ commanding the attendance or appearance of a witness or party in court, or before a judicial officer, under a penalty (sub pœna) in case of disobedience. So termed from the emphatic words of the Latin forms. See infra.

SUBPŒNA. In equity practice. The process by which a defendant is commanded to appear and answer the plaintiff's bill. 3 Bl. Com. 443. 1 Daniell's Ch. Pr. 495.

SUBPŒNA AD TESTIFICANDUM. L. Lat. Subpœna to testify. The common subpœna requiring the attendance of a witness, on a trial, inquisition or examination. 3 Bl. Com. 369. 1 Arch. Pr. 170. 2 Id. 37.

SUBPŒNA DUCES TECUM. L. Lat. In practice. That kind of subpœna by which a witness is commanded to bring with him certain documents or writings specified. 1 Arch. Pr. 170. 3 Bl. Com. 382. Said not to be in the Register. 9 East, 473.

SUBREPTIO, Surreptio. Lat. [from subripere, from sub, under, and rapere, to take or seize.] In the civil law. The obtaining a grant from the sovereign by false representations. Calv. Lex. The French subreption is used in the same sense. Bouvier. Hence the word surreptitious.

SUBROGARE, Surrogare. Lat. In the civil law. To substitute; to put in the place of. Calv. Lex.

To add to (a law.) Taylor's Civ. Law, 155. Dig. 50. 16. 102, in gloss.

SUBROGATION. Fr. and Eng. [from Lat. subrogatio, from subrogare, q. v.] In the civil law. The substitution of one person or thing in the place of another.

Strictly, the substitution of one person in the place of another as a creditor, with a succession to the rights of the latter. The mode by which a third person, who pays a creditor, succeeds to his rights against the debtor.* Subrogatio est transfusio unius creditoris in alium, eadem vel mitiori conditione; subrogation is the transfusion of one creditor to another, with the same or with modified rights. Merlin Q. de Droit, verb. Subrogation.

This term has been extensively adopted in American law, especially of late. See 6 Penn. St. (Barr's) R. 504.

It is a settled rule, that in all cases where a party, only secondarily liable on an obligation, is compelled to discharge it, he has a right, in a court of equity, to stand in the place of the creditor, and be subrogated to all his rights against the party primarily liable. 24 Mississippi R. 665. The right of subrogation is an inherent and natural equity growing out of the circumstances of the case. Id. Subrogation gives to the substitute all the rights of the party for whom he is substituted. 4 Maryland Ch. Dec. 253.

SUBROGUER, Surroguer. L. Fr. To make a deputy or surrogate; to substitute. Kelham.

SUBSCRIBE. [from Lat. subscribere, q. v.] In the law of contracts. To write under; to write at the bottom or end of a writing or instrument; to write the name under. See 26 Wendell's R. 341. 2 Selden's R. 9.

SUBSCRIBERE. Lat. [from sub, under, and scribere, to write.] To write under, or at the bottom of a writing or instrument; to write the name under; to underwrite; to subscribe.

In the civil law. To consent or assent to a thing. Calv. Lex. Subscribere in crimen. Id.

To take part in a proceeding; to join with another in an action, (querelam una experiri.) Id.

To pronounce a judgment; to grant a decree. Id.

SUBSCRIPTIO. Lat. [from subscribere, q. v.] In the civil law. A writing under, or under-writing; a writing of the name under or at the bottom of an instrument by way of attestation or ratification; subscription. The subscriptio testium, (subscription of witnesses,) was one of the formalities in the execution of wills, being required by the imperial constitutions in addition to the seals of the witnesses. Inst. 2. 10. 3.

That kind of imperial constitution which was granted in answer to the prayer of a petitioner who was present. Calv. Lex.

SUBSCRIPTION. [from Lat. subscriptio, q. v.] The writing of the name or signature under, or at the foot of an instrument, by way of execution or attestation. See Subscribere.

SUBSELLIA. Lat. [from sub, under, and sella, a seat.] In the Roman law. Lower seats or benches, occupied by the judices, (judges or jurors,) and by inferior magistrates when they sat in judgment, as distinguished from the tribunal of the prætor. Calv. Lex. Budæus.

SUBSIDY. [Lat. subsidium, support.] In English law. An extraordinary grant of money by the parliament to the crown. Now more commonly termed a supply, or in the plural, supplies. 1 Bl. Com. 307.

SUBSIGNARE. Lat. [from sub, under, and signare, to seal or sign.] In the civil law. To undersign; to subscribe. According to the strict etymology, to seal under, or seal. But the word is said, in the Digests, to have been used among the ancient Romans in the sense of writing. Subsignatum dicitur quod ab aliquo subscriptum est, nam veteres subsignationis verbo pro adscriptione uti solebant; that is said to be undersigned which is underwritten by any one, for the ancients were accustomed to use the word subsignatio for adscriptio. Dig. 50. 16. 39. Some copies of the Digests have subscriptione in place of adscriptione.

SUBSTANCE. [Lat. substantia.] Essence; the material or essential part of a thing, as distinguished from form or circumstance. The law favoureth matters of substance more than matters of circumstance. Finch's Law, b. 1, ch. 3, num. 39.

SUBSTITUTIO. Lat. [from substituere, to substitute.] A putting of one person in the place of another.

In the civil law. The appointment of one person as heir, in place of another, in the event of the first not taking the inheritance. As, si ille hæres non erit, ille hæres esto; if such a one will not be heir, let such a one be heir. Inst. 2. 15, pr. And a testator might appoint one heir after another in this way, to what extent he pleased, (in quantum velit, testator substituere potest,) which was called making several grades of heirs, (plures gradus hæredum,) the person last named, without further alternative, being termed necessary heir, (necessarius hæres,) or heir at all events. Id. ibid.

SUBSTITUTION. In modern civil law. The designation of a person in a will, to take a devise or legacy, either on failure of a former devisee or legatee, or after him.* Brande. Bouvier.

In Scotch law. An enumeration of a series of heirs, described in proper technical language. Bell's Dict. Taken from the Roman substitutio, (q. v.)

SUBTRACTION. [from Lat. subtractio, from subtrahere, to draw away.] In English law. The offence of withholding or keeping from another, that which by law he is entitled to; as suit and service from a lord, tithes from a parson; the keeping back of legacies by an executor; the withholding of conjugal rights from a husband or wife; the refusing to pay church rates, &c. 2 Bl. Com. 88, 94, 98, 230. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 1074, § 2471. Holthouse.

SUBVASSORES, Subvalvassores. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. Base holders; inferior holders; they who held their lands of knights. Skene de Verb. Signif.

SUB-VICECOMES. L. Lat. [L. Fr. south-viscount.] In old English law. Under-sheriff. Spelman. 9 Co. 49 b.

SUCCESSIO. Lat. [from succedere, to succeed, to come in place of, to come under, from sub, under, and cedere, to come.] In the civil law. A coming in place of another, on his decease; a coming into the estate which a deceased person had at the time of his death. This was either by virtue of an express appointment of the deceased person by his will, (ex testamento,) or by the general appointment of law in case of intestacy, (ab intestato.) Inst. 2. 9. 7. Id. 3. 1. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 10. Id. lib. 3, tit. 13.

The term successio is used by Bracton in the same general sense, but particularly in the latter, or, in other words, as descriptive of that transmission of property by act of law, in case of death, which is termed in modern law descent. But his application of it shows that the Roman ideas of succession were not by any means implicitly adopted. His analysis of the word itself places it in contrast with antecessio, and antecessor, (ancestor,) terms wholly unknown, in this sense, to the Roman law. Antecessores—qui mortui sunt, et hæredes antecedunt, i. cedunt ante, et hæredes cedunt eis sub, quasi succedunt. Est enim cedere, quasi recedere, et est cedere alio sensu venire. (Ancestors who are dead, and precede their heirs, i. e. go before, (cedunt ante,) and the heirs succeed, or, as it were, come under (cedunt sub,) them. For cedere is, as it were, recedere, to go from, but, in another sense, it signifies to come.) Bract. fol. 67. Again, the terms successio and hæreditas were clearly distinguished in the Roman civil law, the latter word signifying the estate itself; the former, the means by which it was attained. See Inst. 2. 9. 7. But Bracton uses them as synonymous. Hæreditas est successio in universum jus quod defunctus antecessor habuit, &c.; inheritance is the succession to the whole right which the deceased ancestor had, &c. Bract. fol. 62 b.

Britton uses the Fr. succession in a similar way, to denote the attainment of property as heir. Britt. c. 119. And succession is still employed in the law of France and Scotland, in the general sense of the civil law. See Succession. But in the common law, it has been for the most part superseded by the term descent, (q. v.)

SUCCESSION. Fr. and Eng. [from Lat. successio, q. v.] In Scotch and modern civil law. A right to enter upon that estate, real or personal, which one deceased had at the time of his death. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 3, p. 74. See Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 5, num. 20.—Succession is where one comes to enjoy property in place of another. Bell's Dict.

In the Civil Code of Louisiana, it is variously defined; as,

The transmission of the rights and obligations of one deceased to his heir. Art. 867.

The whole estate, rights and charges, which a person leaves after his death. Art. 868.

That right by which the heir can take possession of the estate of the deceased, such as it may be. Art. 870. In both the latter senses, it is made synonymous with inheritance, (hérédité.)

SUCCESSION. In the common law. The right by which one set of men may, by succeeding another set, acquire a property in all the goods, moveables and other chattels of a corporation. 2 Bl. Com. 430. The power of perpetual succession is one of the peculiar properties of a corporation. 2 Kent's Com. 267.

SUCCESSOR. Lat. and Eng. [from succedere, to succeed, to come in place of.] One who follows another; one who comes into the place of another; one who comes into, and occupies the place which another has left; the correlative of predecessor. A term applied to corporations, in the same sense as heir to individuals. The successors of a corporation correspond to the heirs of a natural person. See 2 Bl. Com. 430, 431. 2 Kent's Com. 273.

SUCCISION. L. Fr. Cutting. Dyer, 35 b, (Fr. ed.)

SUCCURRITUR. Lat. In old English law. Relief (or succor) is given. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 62, § 1; c. 63, § 4.

Succurritur minori; facilis est lapsus juventutis. A minor is [to be] aided; a mistake of youth is easy, [youth is liable to err.] Jenk. Cent. 47, case 89.

"SUCH," in a will, construed. 11 East, 594.

SUCKEN. Sc. In Scotch law. Lands bound or astricted to a particular mill, or the tenants or proprietors of which are bound to use a particular mill. Bell's Dict.

To SUE. [from L. Fr. suer, seure, suyre, from Lat. sequi, to follow.] In practice. To follow at law; to prosecute judicially; to commence a suit; to bring an action.

To prosecute an action already commenced; to follow up an action to its proper termination. This seems to have been the original meaning of the word. See Suer.

To SUE OUT. In practice. To obtain judicially; to issue. Applied only to process; particularly such as is granted specially. To sue out a writ is to obtain and issue it; to issue it on leave obtained for the purpose.

SUER, Seuer, Suyre. L. Fr. To follow; to sue; to prosecute or follow up. Que trova seuerte de suer sa pleynte; who shall find surety to prosecute his plaint. Britt. c. 27. Si nul voet suer, eit le roy là suit; if no one will sue, the king shall have the suit. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 1.

SUERTE, Seurte. L. Fr. Surety. Britt. c. 26, 27.

SUERTE. Span. In Spanish law. A small lot of ground. 5 Texas R. 83.

SUFFRAGAN. [L. Lat. suffraganeus.] In English ecclesiastical law. A title given to bishops, who are styled suffragan in respect of their relation to the archbishop of their province. But formerly each archbishop and bishop had also his suffragan to assist him in conferring orders, and in other spiritual parts of his office within his diocese. These are called suffragan bishops, and resemble the chorepiscopi, or bishops of the country, in the early times of the Christian church. 1 Gibson's Codex, 155. Hargr. Co. Litt. 94 a, note 3.

SUFFRAGIUM. Lat. In the Roman law. A vote; the right of voting in the assemblies of the people. Butler's Hor. Jur. 27.

Aid or influence used or promised to obtain some honor or office; the purchase of office. Cod. 4. 3. Nov. pr. § 1. Id. per tot.

SUFFRAUNCE. L. Fr. Sufferance. Par la suffraunce et la negligence le verey possessour; by the sufferance and neglect of the true possessor. Britt. c. 47.

SUGGESTIO FALSI. Lat. Representation of untruth; false representation. To recite in a deed that a will was duly executed, when it was not, is suggestio falsi; and to conceal from the heir that the will was not duly executed, is suppressio veri. 1 P. Wms. 240. See Suppressio veri.

SUGGESTION. [Lat. suggestio, from suggerere, to suggest.] In practice. A statement or entry made on a record by way of information to the court; a statement made incidentally, or out of the course of pleading; a statement on record, of some fact which has occurred in the progress of a cause, such as the death of a co-plaintiff. 2 Arch. Pr. 294. Arch. Forms. 561.

SUGGRUNDIA, Subgrundia, Suggrunda, Subgrunda, Sugrunda. Lat. In the Roman law. The eaves of a house. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 3, § 403, note. Calv. Lex. Brissonius.

SUI HÆREDES. Lat. In the civil law. One's own heirs; proper heirs. Inst. 2. 19. 2. Dig. 38. 16. See Hæredes sui.

SUI JURIS. Lat. In the civil law. One's own master; independent; not subject to the power of another. The title of one of the leading divisions of persons. Quædam personæ sui juris sunt, quædam alieno juri subjectæ; some persons are independent, some subject to another's power. Inst. 1. 8, pr. Sui juris sunt omnes qui non sunt in aliena potestate; all those are sui juris who are not in another's power. Bract. fol. 6. See Dig. 1. 6.

Having capacity to manage one's own affairs; not under legal disability to act for one's self. See Story on Agency, § 2. 9 East, 206.

SUICIDE. [L. Lat. suicidium, from sui, of one's self, and cædes, a killing; felonia de se.] In criminal law. The felonious killing of one's self; the deliberate and intentional destruction of one's self, by a person of years of discretion and in his senses; self murder.* 4 Bl. Com. 189. Suicide involves the deliberate termination of one's existence, while in the possession and enjoyment of his mental faculties. Self-slaughter by an insane man, or a lunatic, is not an act of suicide, within the meaning of the law. Nelson, C. J. 2 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 75. See Felo de se.

In a larger sense,—the voluntary killing of one's self, from whatever cause. See 5 Man. & Gr. 639. 3 Man. Gr. & Scott, 458.

SUIT. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Lat. secta, from sequi, to follow; Lat. lis, actio.] A following; pursuit; prosecution.* The prosecution of some claim, demand, or request. Marshall, C. J. 6 Wheaton's R. 407.

In law language, the prosecution of some demand in a court of justice. Id. ibid. A following, or following up at law; the pursuit of a right or remedy in form of law; judicial prosecution. In this sense, suit is a term of more comprehensive import than action, though commonly used as synonymous with it. Sir Matthew Hale speaks of "the business of prosecution or suit," "the business of suit." Anal. sect. lii. liii. In Finch's words, "suit is the parties dealing in the action." Law, b. 4, ch. 2. According to Lord Coke, the word suit includes an execution, but the word action does not. Thus, if the body of a man be taken in execution, and the plaintiff release all suits, the execution is gone, but if he release all actions, the defendant shall remain in execution. Co. Litt. 291 a. See 10 Wheaton's R. 30, Marshall, C. J. 2 Peters' R. 449. 14 Id. 564.

In a stricter sense,—an action. The terms suit and action are constantly used as synonymous. Thus Blackstone speaks of "the redress of private wrongs by suit or action in courts." 3 Bl. Com. 3. "Mixed actions are suits," &c. Id. 118. And in every day practice, an action is constantly termed a suit. To sue, is to commence an action. But even in this application, suit is the more general term of the two, embracing proceedings both at law and in equity. The expression "suit at law," "suit in equity," "law suit," "chancery suit," are constantly employed; but the term action seems to be properly confined to law proceedings. "Action in equity" is an expression rarely or never used. See 10 Paige's Chanc. R. 516, 517, Walworth, C.

The term suit itself is purely French, and had various senses in the old common law, but, in the sense of an action or judicial prosecution, seems to be derived from that species of suit or secta which a plaintiff produced in court on making his count. See infra.

SUIT. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Lat. secta; O. Sc. soyt.] In old English law. A following another; attendance by a tenant on his lord, especially at his court; called suit of court. A service by coming to the lord's court. Finch's Law, b. 2, ch. 6, p. 144. See Secta curiæ.

Attendance for the purpose of performing some service, as to grind at a certain mill. See Secta ad molendinum.

Pursuit of a fugitive felon. 1 Bl. Com. 297. See Recens insecutio.

A number of persons produced by a plaintiff in court, simultaneously with making his count or declaration, for the purpose of confirming his allegations. Steph. Pl. 429. See Secta.

SUIT, Suyt, Suyte. L. Fr. In old English law. Suit; action. Et si nul voile suer, eit le roy la suit; and if none will sue, the king shall have the suit. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 1. Apres quel temps cesse lour suyt, et soit la suyt nostre; after which time their suit [right of action] shall cease, and the suit shall be ours. Britt. c. 24.

The retinue, chattels, offspring and appurtenances of a villein. Son villein oves-que toute sa suite, et toutz ses chateux. Britt. c. 31.

The followers of a plaintiff, whom he produced to support his count or declaration. Car il en ad suyte bone et suffisaunte; for he hath good and sufficient suit thereof. Id. ibid. Que tiel fuit son droit, il tendy suit & dereigne bon; that such was his right he offers suit and good proof. Yearb. H. 5 Edw. III. 41.

SUITAS. L. Lat. In the civil law. The condition or quality of a suus hæres, or proper heir. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 9, num. 11. Calv. Lex. This term seems to have been framed by the later civilians.

SUITOR. [L. Lat. sectator; O. Sc. soytour.] In old English law. One who attended at court; one who did suit at court; a tenant who attended his lord's court; one who attended court as a judge. In the Saxon county court, the suitors of the court, as they were called, that is, the freemen or landholders of the county, were the judges. 1 Reeves' Hist. 7.

A credible witness by whom a plaintiff supported his loquela or declaration; one of his suit, secta, or following. 1 Reeves' Hist. 248, 249.

In modern law. One who has a suit; a party to a suit; one who attends court as a party to a suit.

SULCUS. L. Lat. In old records. A small brook or stream of water. Paroch. Ant. 531. Cowell.

SULLERYE. In old English law. A plough-land. Co. Litt. 5 a. Perhaps a misprint for sulling, (q. v.)

SULLING. [L. Lat. sulinga.] In old English law. A plough-land. Cowell, voc. Swoling.

Sullings are explained to be elders, (alders, a species of tree,) in Co. Litt. 4 b.

SUM. [L. Lat. summa.] In English law. A summary or abstract; a compendium; a collection. Several of the old law treatises are called sums. Lord Hale applies the term to summaries of statute law. See Summa.

SUMA, Summa. L. Lat. In old English law. A horse-load; called, in English, a soame. Cowell. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 21.

A measure of grain containing eight bushels; a quarter or seam. Cowell. Spelman.

SUMAGE, Summage. [L. Lat. sumagium, summagium.] In old English law. A horse-load; a full load, (onus integrum.) Spelman. Cowell.

A toll for carriage on horse-back. Cowell.

Summa ratio est quæ pro religione facit. That reason or argument is of paramount weight or authority which makes for [or operates in support of] religion. Co. Litt. 341 a. 5 Co. 14 b. 10 Co. 55 a. If ever the laws of God and man are at variance, the former are to be obeyed in derogation of the latter. Broom's Max. 17, [15.]

This maxim is taken from the civil law. Summam esse rationem quæ pro religione facit. Dig. 11. 8. 43. Grotius, de Jur. Bell. lib. 3, c. 12, sect. 7.

Summa est lex quæ pro religione facit. That is the highest law which makes for [goes in support of] religion. 10 Mod. 117, 119.

SUMMA. L. Lat. A summary; a compendium. The compendium of Hengham is divided into Summa Magna, and Summa Parva, which, in some of the old books, are called sums. See Hengham. Gilbert de Thornton, chief justice of the King's Bench in the reign of Edward I. was the author of a summa or abridgment of Bracton, of which Mr. Selden met with a copy in Lord Burleigh's library. Crabb's Hist. 199.

SUMMAGIUM. L. Lat. [from summa, q. v.] In old English law. A horse-load. Pro equo qui portat summagium. Cart. de Forest. c. 14.

SUMMING UP. In practice. The closing address of the counsel in a cause, before the court and jury, after the evidence has been gone through, recapitulating the testimony, and urging the conclusions sought to be drawn from it in behalf of the client.

In English practice, the judge, in charging the jury, is said to sum up. See Charge.

SUMMONEAS. L. Lat. (You summon.) In old practice. A writ of summons; a writ by which a party was summoned to appear in court. The emphatic word in many original writs, especially those of præcipe quod reddat, and in various others.

Summoneas ad auxiliandum; (you summon to aid.) A writ to summon a prayee in aid. Roscoe's Real Act. 280.

Summoneas ad warrantizandum; (you summoned to warranty.) A writ which issued to summon a party who had been vouched to warranty. Roscoe's Real Act. 268. 1 Reeves' Hist. 440.

SUMMONER. [L. Lat. summonitor.] In old practice. A person by whom a defendant was summoned to appear in court, in compliance with a writ. These persons are expressly mentioned in original writs; the sheriff being directed to summon the defendant "by good summoners." It was necessary that there should be two summoners at least, who, if required, might be able to testify that the summons was duly made. Bract. fol. 333 b. They are mentioned by Blackstone as sheriff's messengers, by whom defendants were summoned or warned to appear in court at the return of the original writ. 3 Bl. Com. 279.

A petty officer who called or cited persons to appear in court. Called, in old English, a sumner. Cowell.

SUMMONITIO. L. Lat. [from summonere, to summon.] In old English practice. A summoning or summons; a writ by which a party was summoned to appear in court, of which there were various kinds. Spelman. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 6.

A command or precept of the king that one be before him, to answer or to do something; or that one be, and have such a one to answer, or to do something. Bract. fol. 333.

A precept to the sheriff, that he cause some one to come, or attach him, or have the body of some one, or so attach him as to be secure of having his body. Id. ibid.

SUMMONS. [L. Fr. sumounse; L. Lat. summonitio.] In old practice. A writ directed to a sheriff, requiring him to summon a defendant to appear in court to answer a plaintiff's action. Original writs were, in their nature, for the most part, summonses.

A process by which a defendant was summoned to appear in court in compliance with an original writ, or by which he had notice that the writ had been issued. See 3 Bl. Com. 279. Roscoe's Real Act. 147, 148.

 The process to bring the tenant or defendant into court in all real actions, with one or two exceptions, as in assise of novel disseisin and the writ of deceit, was a summons, commanding the sheriff to summon the tenant to appear in court, according to the requisition of the writ. This command was contained in the original writ, and no separate writ of summons issued to the sheriff. Id. 146. The summons, when actually made, was made by the sheriff issuing his warrant to two persons, called summoners in the original writ, (and who usually were the sheriff's bailiffs,) directing them to command the tenant to render the land, as in the writ, and unless he should do so, to summon him to appear at the return of the writ. On receiving this warrant, the bailiffs prepared a summons, which pursued the form of the warrant, and served it on the tenant of the land. This was the correct practice, as stated by Mr. Roscoe, though according to Booth and Mr. Serjeant Williams, no actual summons was, in their time, ever made in any real action. Id. ibid.

SUMMONS. In modern practice. A writ or process by which an action is commenced, the defendant being thereby summoned to appear in court to answer the plaintiff.* In England, all personal actions are now commenced by one uniform writ of summons, which is a writ issued out of the court in which the action is brought, directed to the intended defendant, commanding him to cause an appearance to be entered in the action within eight days after the writ shall have been served upon him. 3 Steph. Com. 566.

The word summons is immediately derived from the L. Fr. somounse, and seems to be merely the Lat. summoneas, slightly contracted. See Summoneas.

SUMMUM JUS. Lat. Strict right; extreme right. 3 Bl. Com. 392. Lord Mansfield, C. J. 1 Burr. 54. The extremity or rigor of the law. Burr. Sett. Cas. 588. Lord Bacon applies the phrase to strict law, untempered by equity. Works, iv. 274.

Summum jus, summa injuria. The rigor of the law is the height of injury, or, (to preserve the antithesis more closely,) extreme right is extreme wrong. Hob. 125. Branch's Pr. Right carried to an extreme becomes wrong.

SUMPTUARY LAWS. [from Lat. sumptus, expense.] Laws passed by a government to restrain the expenditure of its subjects or citizens, either in apparel, food or otherwise; laws against luxury and extravagant expenses of living.* In England, there were formerly a multitude of penal laws to restrain excess in apparel, chiefly made in the reigns of Edward III. Edward IV. and Henry VIII. all of which were repealed by the statute of 1 Jac. I. c. 25. 4 Bl. Com. 170. See Montesquieu, Esprit des Lois, liv. 7, cc. 1—6. 2 Kent's Com. 329, 330.

SUNDAY. [Lat. Dies Solis, Dies Dominicus.] The first day of the week, on which no judicial act can be done, and no arrest made except in criminal cases. 3 Bl. Com. 290. 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 104. 13 Wendell's R. 425. But a private contract made on Sunday is not for that reason invalid. Id. ibid. In Alabama, all contracts made on Sunday, unless under the circumstances and for the purposes specified, are, by statute, declared void. Code of Alabama, (ed. 1852,) § 1571.

In computing the time of notices and rules in practice, intermediate Sundays are included and counted with ordinary week days; but where the last day falls on Sunday it is usually excluded, and the party has the whole of the following Monday. See 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 702.

SUP'D'C'US. A contraction of supradictus, (q. v.) 1 Inst. Cler. 13.

SUPELLEX. Lat. In the Roman law. Household furniture. Dig. 33. 10.

SUPER. A term in the English exchequer. Bunb. 117.

SUPER ALTUM MARE. L. Lat. On the high sea. Hob. 212. 2 Ld. Raym. 1453. Molloy de Jur. Mar. 231. 1 Kent's Com. 378.

SUPER VISUM CORPORIS. L. Lat. Upon view of the body. 1 Bl. Com. 348. The inquisition must be super visum corporis. 11 Mod. 271.

SUPERARE RATIONES. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. To have a balance of account due to one; to have one's expenses exceed the receipts. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Scaccarium.

SUPERDEMANDA. L. Lat. In old English practice. An over demand; a demand of more than was just or due. Cadit in misericordiam pro superdemanda; becomes subject to amercement for his over demand. Bract. fol. 179 b.

SUPERFICIARIUS. Lat. [from superficies, q. v.] In the civil law. One to whom a superficies, or right of surface, was granted; a superficiary. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 362, 363, §§ 329, 330.

Superficiariæ ædes were buildings erected on hired ground, (in conducto solo.) Dig. 43. 18. 2.

SUPERFICIES. Lat. In the civil law. Surface; every thing on the surface of a piece of ground or of a building, and which is so closely connected with it by art or nature, as to constitute a part of the same; as houses, trees and vines. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 361, § 329. See Dig. 43. 18. According to Dr. Kaufmann, superficies or superficium properly signifies the surface, or every thing connected with the surface of a piece of ground; in legal language, however, it denotes the things connected with the surface of another's ground as its accessory parts, and especially a real right in them which is granted to a person, (jus in re aliena.) Id. ibid. note.

Superflua non nocent [noceant.] Superfluities do [should] not prejudice. Jenk. Cent. 184. Cod. 6. 23. 17. Surplusage does not vitiate.

SUPERINDUCTIO. Lat. In the civil law. A species of obliteration. Dig. 28. 4. 1. 1. See Inductio.

SUPERIOR. In Scotch law. One of whom lands are held by another, answering to the lord, (dominus,) of the English law. One who had the dominium directum, (direct property,) of lands; the direct proprietor. See 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 97. —The grantor of a feudal right, to be held of himself. Bell's Dict.

SUPERIOR COURTS. In English law and practice. The courts of the highest and most extensive jurisdiction. A general term of description, including the Court of Chancery, and the three common law courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, which, from the circumstance of their being all holden at Westminster, are otherwise termed the Courts at Westminster. 3 Steph. Com. 405.

According to Sir Matthew Hale, the term superior, as applied to courts, denotes a lower degree than supreme. Hale's Anal. sect. xi.

SUPERIOR AND VASSAL. In Scotch law. A feudal relation corresponding with the English lord and tenant. See Bell's Dict. 3 Bell's Appeal Cases, 128.

SUPERIORITY. In Scotch law. The dominium directum of lands, without the profit. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 97. See Bell's Dict.

SUPERONERARE. L. Lat. [from super, over, and onerare, to burden.] In old English law. To surcharge; to overburden. Superoneravit; has surcharged. 3 Bl. Com. 238. Quod talis injuste superoneravit communem pasturam suam; that such a one has unjustly surcharged his common pasture. Bract. fol. 229.

SUPERONERATIO. L. Lat. [from superonerare, q. v.] In old English law. Surcharge; a surcharging; a putting of more cattle on a common than the pasture would sustain, or than the party had a right to do. Duo competunt remedia de superoneratione; vel amensuratio, vel assisa novæ disseysinæ de communia pasturæ; two remedies lie for the surcharge; either an admeasurement, or an assise of novel disseisin of the common of pasture. Bract. fol. 229 b. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 23, § 4.

SUPERPLUSAGIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Overplus; surplus; residue or balance. Bract. fol. 301. Spelman.

SUPERSEDE. [Lat. supersedere, from super, above, and sedere, to sit.] Literally, to set above; to make void or inoperative by a superior authority.

To stay, suspend or discharge some judicial proceeding, by another proceeding of higher efficacy. In this way, one writ is frequently superseded by another writ; as execution by a writ of error, a capias by a supersedeas, (q. v.)

In old practice. To omit; to forbear; to refrain or desist from doing a thing. In this sense, (which is the proper classical meaning,) the word is uniformly used in the writs in the Register, being applied to persons exclusively. Thus, a sheriff is commanded that he supersede taking the body of a party; bailiffs, that they supersede holding plea, &c. See Supersedeas. And the word is used in the same sense in modern writs of supersedeas.

To neglect; to disregard; to refuse to do. Quam si supersederint, tunc primo distringantur; which, if they disregard, they shall first be distrained. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 36; c. 62, § 3.

SUPERSEDEAS. Lat. (You supersede or desist.) In practice. A writ issued for the purpose of relieving a party from the operation of another writ, which has been or may be issued against him; a writ issued to a ministerial officer, commanding him to desist from executing or acting under another writ, which has been, or may be, delivered to him. Thus, a defendant may, in certain cases, procure his discharge from custody, under a capias, by obtaining a writ of supersedeas to be directed to the sheriff for that purpose. 1 Tidd's Pr. 279. 1 Burr. Pr. 399.

The name of this writ is derived from its emphatic word in the Latin forms, a great variety of which are to be found in the Register. Tibi præcipimus quod captioni corporis prædicti Roberti, occasione præmissa, supersedeas usque ad, &c.; we command you that you supersede the taking of the body of the aforesaid Robert, on the occasion aforesaid, until, &c. Reg. Orig. 70 b, 71 a. Vobis præcipimus quod, si ita est, tunc executioni judicii per vos in curia prædicta redditi omnino supersedeatis; we command you that if it be so, then you wholly supersede the execution of the judgment rendered by you in the court aforesaid. Id. 145. And see Id. tabula.

SUPER-VIDERE. L. Lat. In old English law. To over-see. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 4.

SUPPLEMENT, Letters of. In Scotch practice. A process by which a party not residing within the jurisdiction of an inferior court, may be cited to appear before it. Bell's Dict.

SUPPLEMENTAL AFFIDAVIT. In practice. An affidavit made in addition to a previous affidavit, for the purpose of supplying some deficiency in it. See 1 Burr. Pr. 344.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL. In equity pleading. A bill filed in addition to an original bill, in order to supply some defect in its original frame or structure. Story's Eq. Pl. § 332. It is the appropriate remedy where the matter sought to be supplied cannot be introduced by amendment. Id. ibid. § 333. Id. §§ 334—338. See 3 Bl. Com. 448.

SUPPLETORY OATH. In modern civil law. An oath administered to a party himself, in cases where a fact has been proved by only one witness, in order to supply or make up the necessary complement of witnesses; two witnesses being always required to constitute full proof.* 3 Bl. Com. 370. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 9, num. 30.

SUPPLICATIO. Lat. In the civil law. A pleading corresponding to the rejoinder of the common law. Calv. Lex. voc. Explicatio.

SUPPLICAVIT. Lat. (He hath besought.) In practice. A writ in the nature of process at the common law, to find sureties of the peace upon articles filed by a party for that purpose. Now rarely used. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 1476. 4 Bl. Com. 253. See Gilbert's For. Rom. 202. 2 Rep. in Ch. 68.

SUPPLICIUM. Lat. In the civil law. Punishment. Cod. 1. 9. 9.

SUPPO'IT'. A contraction of suppositus. 1 Inst. Cler. 13.

SUPPONERE. Lat. In old English law. To put under; to put in place of another; to substitute fraudulently; to put a false thing in place of the true or genuine; to put a strange child in place of the true heir. Aliquando partus supponitur ab uxore, —et aliquando à custode, qui (mortuo vero hærede) supponit extraneum, et nutrit ut hæredem; sometimes a child is fraudulently substituted by the wife, and sometimes by the guardian, who (on the death of the true heir) substitutes a strange child and brings it up as heir. Bract. fol. 69. Partus suppositus; a substituted or suppositious child. Id. ibid.

SUPPORT, Right of. A right arising from contract, or prescription which supposes a contract, where the owner of a house stipulates to allow his neighbor to rest his timbers on the walls of his house. 3 Kent's Com. 436.

SUPPRESSIO VERI. Lat. Suppression or concealment of the truth; one of the classes of fraud. "It is a rule of equity as well as of law, that a suppressio veri is equivalent to a suggestio falsi; and where either the suppression of the truth, or the suggestion of what is false can be proved, in a fact material to the contract, the party injured may have relief against the contract." Spencer, C. J. 18 Johns. R. 405. See 13 Peters' R. 36, Barbour, J. See Suggestio falsi.

SUPRA. Lat. Above; over.

SUPRA PROTEST. (Over protest.) In mercantile law. A term applied to an acceptance of a bill by a third person, after protest for non-acceptance by the drawee. 3 Kent's Com. 87.

SUPRADICTUS. L. Lat. Above said; aforesaid.

SUPREMA VOLUNTAS. Lat. The last will. Et suprema voluntas quod mandat fierique jubet, parere necesse est; and what a last will commands and orders to be done, must be obeyed. Doderidge, J. Latch, 137.

SUPREMUS. Lat. In the civil law. Last; the last. Supremus est quem nemo sequitur. He is last, whom no one follows. Dig. 50. 16. 92.

SUPREME. [from Lat. supremus, highest.] The proper title of the highest courts in a state. Hale's Anal. sect. xi.

SUR. L. Fr. Upon. Sur cognizance de droit; upon acknowledgment of right. See Fine of lands.

SURCESSER. L. Fr. In old practice. To supersede; to desist; to surcease. Yearb. II. 3 Hen. VI. 15.

SURCHARGE. L. Fr. and Eng. [Lat. superoneratio.] The putting by a commoner, of more beasts on the common than he has a right to. 3 Bl. Com. 237.

In equity practice. The showing an omission in an account for which credit ought to have been given. Pulling on Merc. Accounts, 161. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 525. It is used in contradistinction to the word falsify. Id. ibid.

SURCHARGER. L. Fr. To surcharge. Surcharger cele commune. Britt. c. 58.

SURDRE. L. Fr. To arise; to be raised. Purrount surdre excepcions; exceptions or pleas may be raised. Britt. c. 48.

SURDUS. Lat. In the civil law. Deaf; a deaf person. Inst. 2. 12. 3. Surdus et mutus; a deaf and dumb person. Id. ibid. Dig. 28. 1. 6. 1. Id. 28. 1. 7. Id. 50. 17. 124. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 38, § 1; c. 40, § 2.

SURETY. [Lat. fide-jussor; O. Sc. sovertie.] One who is bound for another who is primarily liable, and is called the principal. One who engages to be answerable for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another; one who undertakes to do some act in the event of the failure of another to do it, and as a security for its being done. See Suretyship.

SURETYSHIP. [Lat. fide-jussio; cautio.] The liability or contract of a surety. A contract of suretyship is a contract whereby one person engages to be answerable for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. Pitman, Princ. & Surety, 1, 2. See Burge on Suretyship, 1—15.

SURMISE. L. Fr. and Eng. In old practice. Suggestion. "The plaintiff, upon a surmise of goods come to the hands of the executors, shall have a sci. fa." 1 Leon. 68. Id. 286. Hardr. 82. 311.

To SURMISE. In old practice. To suggest. "A plaintiff surmised by his counsel." 1 Leon. 44. "A juror did surmise." Id. 207.

SURNOSME. L. Fr. A surname; an over-name. Britt. c. 48.

SURPLUS, Surpluis. L. Fr. Excess. Britt. c. 110.

SURPLUSAGE. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Lat. surplusagium.] Excess; superfluity; more than is necessary or proper.

In old law. A sum remaining over; a balance. "Surplusage of an account." 1 Leon. 219.

In pleading. Unnecessary matter of whatever description. Steph. Pl. 422.

In a stricter sense,—matter wholly foreign and irrelevant. Id. ibid. note.

SURPRISE. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Fr. surprendre, from sur, over, and prendre, to take.] The state of being taken unexpectedly or unawares; sudden confusion or perplexity. Literally, an overtaking. One of the grounds of relief in equity.

Mr. Justice Story has observed, that "there does not seem any thing technical or peculiar in the word surprise, as used in courts of equity. Where a court of equity relieves on the ground of surprise, it does so upon the ground that the party has been taken unawares, and that he has acted without due deliberation, and under confused and sudden impressions." 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 120, note.

In a looser sense, the word surprise is sometimes used to denote fraud, or something presumptive of, and approaching to fraud. Id. ibid.

SURREBUTTER. [from Fr. sur, above, and rebutter, q. v.] In pleading. The plaintiff's answer of fact to the defendant's rebutter. Steph. Pl. 59.

SURREJOINDER. [from Fr. sur, above, and rejoinder, q. v.] In pleading. The plaintiff's answer of fact to the defendant's rejoinder. Steph. Pl. 59.

SURRENDER. L. Fr. and Eng. [from sur, over, and rendre, to give or render.] A yielding up an estate for life or years to him that hath an immediate estate in reversion or remainder, wherein the estate for life or years may drown [merge,] by mutual agreement between them. Co. Litt. 337 b. The falling of a less estate into a greater. 2 Bl. Com. 326. 4 Kent's Com. 103.

The giving up by bail, of their principal into custody, in their own discharge. 1 Burr. Pr. 394.

SURRENDEROR. In English law. A party who surrenders, or makes a surrender. 5 East, 132. 9 Id. 405.

SURRENDEREE. In English law. A party to whom a surrender is made.

SURREPTITIOUS. [Lat. surreptitius, from surrepere, to creep in, or under.] Stealthily or fraudulently done, taken away or introduced.

SURROGATE. [from L. Lat. surrogatus, from surrogare or subrogare, to substitute.] One who is substituted or appointed in the room or place of another; one who represents or acts for another.

In English law. A bishop's chancellor; an officer who usually presides in the bishop's diocesan court, and by whom, as the representative of the ordinary, letters of administration are granted where the spiritual court is not presided over by a judge. Holthouse.

In American law. A county officer who has jurisdiction in granting letters testamentary and letters of administration, and of other matters relating to the settlement of the estates of testators and intestates. 2 Kent's Com. 409, et seq.

SURSISA. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. sursise, q. v.] In old English law. Neglect; default. Potest defendere summonitionem et sursisam; he may defend [deny] the summons and the default. Bract. fol. 356.

SURSISE. L. Fr. [from sursiser, q. v.] In old English law. Neglect; omission; default; a ceasing or cessation. De somounses, et de sursises, et de essoines. Britt. c. 120. E ki le cri orat e sursera, la sursise li Rei amend; and whoever hears the cry [hue and cry] and neglects to pursue it, shall make amends for the neglect to the king. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 48.

SURSISER, Surcesser. L. Fr. To neglect; to omit doing a thing; to surcease; to fail to obey process. Si levesque sursist nostre somounse, si soit attache de vener par destresse; if the bishop fail to obey our summons, he shall be attached to appear by distress. Britt. c. 26. See Sursise.

SURSUM REDDERE. L. Lat. In old conveyancing. To render up; to surrender.

SURSUM REDDITIO. L. Lat. In old conveyancing. A surrender.

SURVIVE. [from Fr. survivre, from sur, over, and vivre, to live.] To outlive; to live beyond another; to over-live.

SURVIVOR. [See survive.] One who survives another; one who outlives another; one of two or more persons who lives after the other or others have deceased; the longest liver of two or more joint-tenants, or of any two or more persons who have a joint interest in any thing. See 2 Bl. Com. 183, 184.

Survivors, (plur.) Two or more of certain individuals named or referred to, who are living when any other or others of them happen to die. See 1 Cushing's R. 118. 11 Grattan's R. 67.

This is the natural and proper meaning of the term, which is usually given to it by the courts, in the constructions of wills. 2 Jarman on Wills, 609—616, (435—439, Perkins' ed. 1849.) In some cases, however, survivor has been construed to mean other, where it has appeared necessary in order to give effect to the apparent intention of the testator. See Id. 616—619, (440—442, Perkins' ed.) 2 Williams on Exec. 1256.

SUS. L. Fr. Upon. Susdit; aforesaid. Kelham.

SUS. PER COLL. L. Lat. An abbreviation of suspendatur per collum; let him be hanged by the neck. Words formerly used in England in signing judgment against a prisoner who was to be executed; being written by the judge in the margin of the sheriff's calendar or list, opposite the prisoner's name. 4 Bl. Com. 403. "Judgment was given quod suspendatur per collum." 11 Mod. 230. "All the men condemned at the Old Bailey are hanged by this short note,—suspens. per coll." Holt, C. J. 5 Id. 22.

SUSPENDERE. L. Lat. In old English law. To hang; to execute by hanging. Suspensus; hanged. See Sus. per coll.

SUSPENSION. In Scotch law and practice. A writ passing under the signet, by which the diligence of the law, or the effect of a judgment of a court may be suspended. Bell's Dict.

SUSUM. In old European records. A form of the Lat. sursum, up, upwards. Susum aut jusum was written for sursum aut deorsum, up or down. Spelman, vocc. Susum, Josum. The phrase sursum versum vel deorsum, (upwards or downwards,) occurs in the Digests. Dig. 38. 10. 10. 9, 12. But in the late Kriegel editions of the Corpus Juris, susum is substituted for sursum.

SUTE. L. Fr. In old English law. Suit; prosecution; service. Kelham. Sute à molyn; suit at mill. See Secta ad molendinum.

SUTH. L. Fr. In old English law.

Under. Suth dit; under said; hereafter said. Kelham.

SUTORIA. L. Lat. In old English law. The trade or occupation of a shoemaker. Etiam de hiis qui duobus utuntur officiis, videlicet, sutoriæ et tanneriæ; also of those who practice two trades, for instance, those of shoemaker and tanner. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 35.

SUUM. Lat. His; his own. As to the construction of this word, in the civil law, see Dig. 56. 16. 239. 9.

SYLVA CÆDUA. Lat. In ecclesiastical law. Wood of any kind which was kept on purpose to be cut, and which being cut grew again from the stump or root. Lyndw. Prov. 190. 4 Reeves' Hist. 90. See Silva cædua.

SYMBOLÆOGRAPHY. [from Gr. συμβολαιογράφος, q. v.] The art of drawing written instruments. So defined by West, in his "Symboleography," part 1, lib. 1, sect. 1. West's Symboleography is referred to, as authority, by Mansfield, C. J. 2 Taunt. 85.

ΣΥΜΒΟΛΑΙΟΓΡΑΦΟΣ, Συμβολαιογράφος. Gr. [from συμβόλαιον, an instrument, and γράφειν, to write.] In the civil law. A writer of instruments; a tabellion. Nov. 44, in tit. Id. pr. Id. cc. 1, 2. Nov. 47, c. 1. Nov. 73, c. 5.

ΣΥΜΒΟΛΑΙΟΝ, Συμβόλαιον. Gr. In the civil law. An instrument in writing; a written instrument. Nov. 18, c. 10. Nov. 19. Nov. 44, pr. c. 1, §§ 1, 2, 4; c. 2. Nov. 47, in tit. Id. pr. Id. c. 1. Id. 73.

SYMBOLIC DELIVERY. In the law of sale. A delivery by symbol; the delivery of a thing by delivering another thing as the symbol or representation of it; as the delivery of goods deposited in a warehouse by delivering the key of the warehouse, the transfer of a ship at sea by the delivery of a bill of sale, and of a cargo by the indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading. 2 Kent's Com. 500—502. See 8 Howard's R. 399, Taney, C. J.

ΣΥΜΠΛΟΙΑ, Συμπλοια. Gr. [from σὺν, together, and πλέω, to sail.] A sailing together; a sailing of vessels in company, (SYMPLOIA.) Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 2, § 1.

ΣΥΝΑΛΛΑΓΜΑ, Συνάλλαγμα. Gr. [from συναλλάττω, to contract mutually, from σὺν, together, and ἀλλάττω, to change.] In the civil law. An exchange or interchange; an exchange of acts by the parties to a contract; a reciprocal performance of both parties to a contract, each giving or doing something; the giving or doing of one thing in exchange for, or in consideration of, the giving or doing of another thing. A mutual obligation; a contract. Dig. 50. 16. 19. It implied the doing of some act by both parties, in addition to the words of the contract. Calv. Lex. See Cowell, voc. Quid pro quo.

SYNALLAGMATIC CONTRACT. [from Gr. συνάλλαγμα, q. v.] In the civil law. A bilateral or reciprocal contract, in which the parties expressly enter into mutual engagements, each binding himself to the other. Pothier Obl. part 1, c. 1, sect. 1, art. 2. Civil Code of Louis. Art. 1758.

SYNDIC. In French law. The assignee of an insolvent's or bankrupt's estate. 9 Peters' R. 182. 17 Howard's R. 157.

A person elected by a commune, or other society, to have the care of their suits and legal affairs, or of their affairs generally. Meredith's Emerigon on Ins. 43, note.

An officer in a village, answering to the Span. regidor, whose duty was to see to the repairs of common fences. 12 Peters' R. 450.

SYNDICUS. Græco-Lat. [from Gr. σὺν, with, and δίκη, a cause.] In the civil law. A defender (defensor;) one who was chosen to prosecute or defend a certain cause. Dig. 50. 4. 18. 13. Hence the modern syndic, (q. v.)

SYNGRAPHON, Syngrapha. See the next word.

ΣΥΓΓΡΑΦΟΝ, Σύγγραφον. Gr. [from σὺν, together, and γράφειν, to write.] In the civil and canon law. A writing comprising some contract between two, and being indented in the top, answerable to another that likewise contains the same contract; an indenture. Cowell, voc. Indenture. Co. Litt. 229 a. The civilians defined this kind of instrument to be,—a writing indented between creditor and debtor, on the cutting of which (in cujus scissura, that is, the part where it was cut through,) is written in capital letters this word, ΣΥΓΓΡΑΦΗ, or, in the plural, ΤΑ ΣΥΓΓΡΑΦΑ; and it differs from a chirograph, (χειρόγραφον) because the latter is written by the hand of one only, say the debtor, and left in possession of the creditor. Cowell, ub. sup. See 2 Bl. Com. 296.

SYNOTH, Synod. A name given to the national councils of the Saxons, from their religious character. Crabb's Hist. Eng. Law, 229. See Michel-synoth.

SYR. L. Fr. Sir. A word used by counsel in addressing a court. Keilw. 170 b. Year Books, passim.

T. An abbreviation of Termino, or Term, in the old reports.

T. R. E. An abbreviation of Tempore Regis Edwardi, (in the time of King Edward,) of common occurrence in Domesday, when the valuation of manors, as it was in the time of Edward the Confessor, is recounted. Cowell.

TABELLA. Lat. In the Roman law. A tablet; a small table, on which something short might be written. Used in voting, and in giving the verdicts of juries; and when written upon, commonly translated ballot. Adam's Rom. Ant. 100, 285. The laws which introduced and regulated the mode of voting by ballot were called leges tabellariæ. Id. 99. Calv. Lex. 1 Kent's Com. 232, note.

TABELLIO. Lat. [from tabella, or tabula, a tablet or written instrument; Gr. συμβολαιογράφος.] In the civil law. An officer whose functions were similar to those of the modern notary, being described as "a public writer of contracts," and "one who drew, wrote out, and attested instruments." Calv. Lex. See Cod. 4. 21. 16, 17. Nov. 7, c. 7. Nov. 44. Nov. 73. His office seems to have been to write out, in form, the rough drafts or notes of instruments prepared by another officer called notarius, and attest and authenticate their execution. P. Cyclopædia, voc. Notary. The tabelliones were important officers, having charge of the public records, and exercising in some cases judicial powers. Brande.

In France, the title and office of tabellion were united with those of notary, at an early period. In England, Matthew Paris, writing A. D. 1236, observes, that they were not known. Tabellionum usus in regno Angliæ non habetur. Matt. Par. fol. 424. Cowell. Bracton, however, distinctly mentions such an officer, and speaks of him as a public servant. Tabellio qui dicitur servus publicus. Bract. fol. 4 b.

TABERNA. Lat. [from tabula, a board.] In the civil law. A shop, as being inclosed with boards, (quod tabulis clauditur.) Dig. 14. 3. 3. Id. 14. 3. 5. 10, 13. Id. 14. 3. 8. Id. 14. 3. 13. 2. Id. 14. 3. 18.

Any building fit for habitation, (omne utile ad habitandum ædificium.) Dig. 50. 16. 183.

A wine-shop. Calv. Lex.

In old English law. A drinking house; a tavern. Taverns and wakes (tabernæ vigiliæque,) are spoken of in Fleta, as places of nocturnal resort by servants, to the neglect of their duties. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 9. And see Id. c. 82, § 3.

TABERNACULUM. L. Lat. In old records. A public inn, or house of entertainment. Consuet. Dom. de Farendon, MS. fol. 48. Cowell.

TABERNARIUS. Lat. [from taberna, a shop.] In the civil law. A shop-keeper. Dig. 14. 3. 5. 7.

In old English law. A taverner or tavern-keeper. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 17.

TABLE RENTS. [L. Lat. redditus ad mensam.] In old English law. Rents paid to bishops or religious prelates, reserved or appropriated to their tables or house-keeping. Cowell.

TABLE DE MARBRE. Fr. In old French law. Table of Marble; a principal seat of the Admiralty, so called. These Tables de Marbre are frequently mentioned in the Ordonnance of the Marine. Ord. Mar. liv. 1, tit. 1, art. 10; tit. 2, art. 13; tit. 3, art. 3.

TABULA. Lat. In the civil law. A table or tablet; a thin sheet of wood which, when covered with wax, was used for writing.

An instrument written on such a tablet. Tabulæ, in the plural, is commonly used to signify a testament. Inst. 3. 10. 1. See Id. 2. 10. 12. Dig. 29. 3. Id. 37. 11. But it was immaterial, in this case, what was the material of the table; whether wood, or any other material, as paper, parchment, or the skin of an animal. Dig. 37. 11. 1, pr.

A tablet or board for painting pictures on. Inst. 2. 1. 34. Si quis in aliena tabula pinxerit, quidam putant tabulam picturæ cedere; aliis videtur picturam, qualiscunque sit, tabulæ cedere; sed nobis videtur melius esse, tabulam picturæ cedere. Ridiculum est enim picturam Apellis vel Parrhasii in accessionem vilissimæ tabulæ cedere; if one should paint on the tablet of another, some think that the tablet goes with the painting; others think that the painting, of whatever kind it be, goes with the tablet; but it appears to us to be the better opinion that the tablet should go with the painting. For it would be ridiculous that a painting of Apelles or Parrhasius should go as an accessory to a worthless tablet. Id. ibid. See 1 W. Bl. 324; Blackstone, arg.

TABULA. Lat. A board or plank.

Tabula in naufragio; a plank in a shipwreck. A figurative expression used in the English books, to denote that preference or priority among mortgagees, for which they are allowed to struggle, and which is gained by tacking. The English doctrine of tacking was first solemnly established in Marsh v. Lee, (2 Vent. 337,) under the assistance of Sir Matthew Hale, who compared the operation to a plank in a shipwreck, gained by the last mortgagee. 4 Kent's Com. 177.

TABULÆ. Lat. In the Roman law. Tables. Writings of any kind used as evidences of a transaction. Adam's Rom. Ant. 284. Brissonius.

Tabulæ accepti et expensi; tables of receipt and expense; account books. Ad. Rom. Ant. 284, 547.

TABULARIUS. Lat. [from tabula, q. v.] A notary, or tabellio. Calv. Lex. An officer who drew up or prepared writings, (tabulæ.) Nov. 73, c. 8. See Tabellio.

TAC, Tak. In old records. A kind of customary payment by a tenant. Cowell.

TAC-FREE. In old records. Free from the common duty or imposition of tac. Cowell.

TACIT. [from Lat. tacitus, q. v.] Implied; not expressed. See Tacitus.

TACITUS. Lat. [from tacere, to be silent.] Silent; not speaking; not expressed in words; tacit; implied. Conditio tacita; a tacit condition. Bract. fol. 19. Tacita quædam habentur pro expressis; some tacit things are regarded as expressed. Branch's Pr. Tacitum vel expressum. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 12, § 1.

TACIT RELOCATION. In Scotch law. An implied re-letting of premises, where the tenant continues in possession after the expiration of his term; a tacit renewal of the lease or tack. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 153.

TACIT TACK. In Scotch law. An implied tack or lease; inferred from a tacksman's possessing peaceably after his tack is expired. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 153.

TACK. In Scotch law. A contract whereby the use of any thing is set or let for hire, or a reserved rent, called the tack duty, from and to a determined time. Termed also an assedation. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 153. A lease.

TACKSMAN. In Scotch law. A tenant, or lessee; one to whom a tack is granted. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 153.

TACKING. The uniting securities given at different times, so as to prevent any intermediate purchaser from claiming a title to redeem or otherwise discharge one lien, which is prior, without redeeming or discharging the other liens, also, which are subsequent to his own title. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 412. The term tacking in English law is particularly applied to mortgages, and is descriptive of the method by which a third mortgagee may obtain a priority over a second by buying in the first mortgage and uniting it to his own. See Coote on Mortgages, 391, et seq. 4 Kent's Com. 176. 1 White's Eq. Cas. 406, 410. The doctrine of tacking is not recognized in American law. 4 Kent's Com. 179. 1 White's Eq. Cas. 414, (Am. ed. note.)

TACTIS SACROSANCTIS. L. Lat. In old English law. Touching the holy (evangelists.) Fleta, lib. 3, c. 16, § 21. "A bishop may swear visis evangeliis (looking at the Gospels) and not tactis, and it is good enough." Vaughan, C. J. Freem. 133.

TACTIS SACROSANCTIS SCRIPTURIS. Lat. In old European law. Touching the holy Scriptures. Feud. Lib. 2, tit. 2, pr. Sacrosanctis evangeliis tactis. Cod. 3. 1. 14, § 1.

TACTO PER SE SANCTO EVANGELIO. L. Lat. Having personally touched the holy Gospel. Cro. Eliz. 105. The description of a corporal oath. See Corporal oath.

TAIL. L. Fr. and Eng. [from tailler, to cut; L. Lat. tallium, talliatum.] Limitation; abridgment; limited; abridged; reduced; curtailed, as a fee or estate in fee, to a certain order of succession, or to certain heirs. Literally, cut off, or cut down to certain limits. The word is used both as a substantive and adjective; as in the expressions, tenant in tail, fee-tail. See Fee tail.

TAILE. Taille. L. Fr. A tally. Dyer, 23, (Fr. ed.) Used also as an English word. Cowell. Une taille de bois; a tally of wood. Id. Mist avant un taille enseale que avoit xvi noches; produced a sealed tally which had sixteen notches. Yearb. T. Edw. II. 278. See Tally.

TAILLE. Fr. In old French law. An imposition levied by the king or any other lord, on his subjects. Brande. The royal taille was a tax imposed at once in rem and in personam; that is, each contributor was rendered personally liable to pay a sum proportionate to the estimated value of his immoveable property. It was a property tax affecting the roturier exclusively. Steph. Lect. 358.

TAILLER, Tailer, Tayler. L. Fr. In old English law. To cut; to limit; to tax; to bar. Kelham. Yearb. H. 9 Edw. III. 4. M. 10 Edw. III. 14.

To pronounce; to declare. Kelham.

TAILZIE. In Scotch law. An entail. A tailzied fee is that which the owner, by exercising his inherent right of disposing of his property, settles upon others than those to whom it would have descended by law. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 101. Bell's Dict. See 3 Bell's Appeal Cases, 128.

TAINI, Thaini. L. Lat. In old English law. Freeholders. Co. Litt. 5 b.

TAKE. [Lat. capere; L. Fr. prendre.] To seize a thing or person by authority of law; to arrest a person. Constantly used in this sense, both in ancient and modern practice. See Cape, Capias.

To receive from another by some title; to be entitled to, as a party is said to take by descent, or by purchase, or under a will.

To obtain possession of a thing unlawfully, or feloniously; to appropriate to one's own use with a felonious intent. A felonious taking is of the essence of larceny. 4 Bl. Com. 230.

To lay hands upon an article, without removing it. There may be a taking without an asportation, or carrying away. See Asportation.

To receive the verdict of a jury; to superintend the delivery of a verdict; to hold a court. The commission of assise in England empowers the judges to take the assises, that is, according to its ancient meaning, to take the verdict of a peculiar species of jury called an assise; but in its present meaning, to hold the assises. 3 Bl. Com. 59, 185.

To obtain from a jury; as a counsel is said to take a verdict for his client in court.

TALARE. L. Lat. [from Sax. talan, to pull off.] In old European law. To take or carry away. L. Alaman. tit. 34. Taltum; carried away. Id. ibid. Talaverint. L. Ripuar. tit. 64.

TALE. In old pleading. A plaintiff's count, declaration, or narrative of his case. 3 Bl. Com. 293. Monstre son tale. Dyer, 11 b.

TALE. The count or counting of money. Cowell derives this word from the same source with tally, (q. v.)

TALEA, Talia. L. Lat. In old English law. A tally. Spelman. Cowell. See Tallia.

TALENT. L. Fr. Right; truly. Vous dites talent; you say well or truly. Yearb. P. 4 Edw. III. 7.

TALES. Lat. Such; so many. A term applied to jurors. A tales is a supply of such men as are necessary to make up a deficiency of jurors. Such supplementary jurors are called tales-men, and are commonly taken from the bystanders or persons in court. 3 Bl. Com. 364, 365. A tales may be awarded if one only of the regular jurors appears; and it is said that, at common law, a jury might be composed entirely of tales-men. 10 Co. 102 a, 103 b. This is the law in Ohio. Swan's Statutes of Ohio, (ed. 1854,) c. 62, (17,) sect. 18. 15 Ohio R. 217.

TALES DE CIRCUMSTANTIBUS. L. Lat. So many of the bystanders. The emphatic words of the old writ awarded to the sheriff to make up a deficiency of jurors out of the persons present in court. 3 Bl. Com. 365.

TALIARE, Talliare. L. Lat. In old English law. To cut. Si quis nemus alicujus sine licentia comburat vel taliat; if any one shall burn or cut the wood of another without permission. LL. Aluredi, MS. c. 13, apud Spelman. See Talliare.

TALIO. Lat. [from talis, such, like.] In the civil law. Like for like; punishment in the same kind; the punishment of an injury by an act of the same kind, as an eye for an eye, a limb for a limb, &c. Called similitudo supplicii, (likeness of punishment;) reciproca pœna, (reciprocal punishment.) Calv. Lex. Adam's Rom. Ant. 291.

TALIS. Lat. In old English law. Such; such a one. A word constantly used by Bracton, Fleta, and other early writers, in their illustrations. Tali die, tali anno, et tali hora, venit idem B. cum tali et tali; on such a day, in such a year, and at such an hour, came the said B. with such and such a one. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 6.

Used also in the sense of the expression, "as follows;" though translated "such" in the old books. "The form of the writ is such."

Talis non est eadem, nam nullum simile est idem. "Such" or "like" is not the same, for Nullum simile est idem, (q. v.) Branch's Pr. 4 Co. 18 b.

TALITER. Lat. [from talis, such.] In old pleading. In such a manner; so. Taliter processum est; it was proceeded in such a manner; such proceedings were had. Lord Ellenborough, 1 M. & S. 187. Taliter processum fuit. 2 Mod. 192, 195. See Comb. 125. 3 Comstock's R. 193.

TALLAGE. [L. Lat. tallagium, (q. v.) from Fr. tailler, to cut, or cut out.] In old English law. A share of a man's substance paid by way of tribute, toll or tax. Cowell. Lord Coke derives and defines this word as follows: "Tallagium or tailagium cometh of the Fr. word tailer, to share, [shear,] or cut out a part, and metaphorically is taken when the king or any other hath a share or part of the value of a man's goods or chattels, or a share or part of the annual revenue of his lands, or puts any charge or burthen upon another; so as tallagium is a general word and doth include all subsidies, taxes, tenths, fifteenths, impositions or other burthens or charge put or set upon any man, and so is expounded in our books." 2 Inst. 533. In the statute De Tallagio non Concedendo, the word is restrained to tallages, set or levied by the king or his heirs. Id. ibid.

According to Spelman, tallages were anciently called in English, cuttings, (the literal meaning of the word,) a term which, he observes, was used in Ireland in his day, to denote the exactions of a landlord.

TALLAGIUM. L. Lat. [from Fr. tailler, to cut.] In old English law. Tallage; tax; tribute; imposition. See Tallage. Nullum tallagium vel auxilium, per nos vel hæredes nostros, in regno nostro ponatur seu levetur, &c. No tallage or aid shall be set [imposed] or levied by us or our heirs, in our kingdom, &c. Stat. de Tallagio non Concedendo, c. 1.

The taking an inventory, or making a list of property rated for paying tax. Spelman.

TALLATIO. L. Lat. In old records. A keeping account by tallies. Cowell.

TALLEA, Tallia, Talea, Talia. L. Lat. [L. Fr. taille, from tailler, to cut.] In old English law. A tally; a piece of wood cut with notches in two corresponding parts. Si creditor habet talleam, oportet probare illam; if the creditor have a tally, he ought to prove it. MS. Codex, cited in Cowell. Ut patet per talliam; as appears by a tally. Paroch. Ant. 571. See Tallia.

TALLIA. L. Lat. In old English law. A tally. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 27, § 5; c. 30; c. 61, § 2; c. 63, § 12. See Tallea.

TALLIA. L. Lat. [from Fr. tailler, to cut.] A tax or tribute; tallage; a share taken or cut out of any one's income or means. Called in Ireland, literally, a cutting. Spelman. The word excise, (from Lat. excidere, to cut out,) has precisely the same meaning.

TALLIARE, Taliare. L. Lat. [L. Fr. tailler; Ital. tagliare; from Sax. talan, or tælan, to take away, to correct, according to Spelman.] In old English law. To cut; to cut off; to cut out; to cut down; to reduce, abridge or limit by cutting; to limit or restrain.* To set or put to some certainty, or to limit to some certain inheritance; (ad quandam certitudinem ponere, vel ad quoddam certum hæreditamentum limitare.) Litt. sect. 18. Co. Litt. 22 a. Feodum talliatum; a fee tail. Id. See Tail.

To impose a tax or tallage. Spelman. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 34.

TALLIUM. L. Lat. [from L. Lat. talliare; Fr. tailler, to cut.] In old English law. Tail; a species of limited estate. See Tail.

A tally. Spelman See Tally.

A tax or tallage. Spelman.

TALLY. [L. Fr. taille, from tailler, to cut; L. Lat. talea, talia, tallea, tallia, tallium.] A piece of wood cut with indentures or notches in two corresponding parts, of which one was kept by the creditor, and the other by the debtor. Cowell. Formerly the common way of keeping all accounts. Id. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 70, § 11; c. 82, § 5. See Tallia. "If the tally have only notches or scotches indented, every scotch for twelve pence, according to the common usage." Dyer, 23.

Spelman more closely describes a tally as "a small piece or slip of wood, made smooth on both sides, (clavola vel ligni portiuncula, utrinque complanata,) upon which the amount of a debt was cut, (cui summa debiti inciditur;) and being then split into two parts, one was delivered to the debtor and the other to the creditor, as an evidence of the account, (fissaque inde in duas partes, una debitori, altera creditori traditur in rationis memoriam.) Spelman, voc. Tallium. They were sometimes sealed. Dyer, 23.

In French law, tallies are described as "the parts of a piece of wood cut in two, which two persons use to denote the quantity of goods supplied by the one to the other. For this purpose, each of them has one of the pieces; that in possession of the debtor is properly called the tally, and the other the echantillon. When the goods are delivered, the two pieces are joined together, and a notch cut in them, denoting the quantity supplied; such are the tallies of bakers. These tallies are used instead of writings, and are a kind of written proof of the quantity supplied, when the buyer has the echantillon to join to the tally." Poth. Oblig. part 4, ch. 1, art. 2, § 8.

Tallies were used in the English Exchequer, until abolished by the statute 23 Geo. III. c. 82. The old tallies were ordered to be destroyed by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 15. Wharton's Lex.

TAM. Lat. So; as well. Frequently used with quam, in the expression tam quam, (q. v.)

TAM QUAM. Lat. (As well—as.) In practice. A phrase used where a proceeding is applied or referred to two things or persons. TAUR. L. Fr. [from Lat. taurus.] A bull. Yearb. H. 9 Edw. III. 6.

TAVERN. [from L. Fr. taverne, (q. v.) from Lat. taberna, (q. v.) a wine-shop.] A house licensed to sell liquors in small quantities, to be drank on the spot. Webster. This seems to be the proper sense of the word. See infra.

In a larger sense,—an inn or hotel; a house for the entertainment of travellers, as well as for the sale of liquors, licensed for that purpose. Webster. In New-York, and several other states, the words inn and tavern are used as synonymous. 1 N. Y. Rev. St. [678—681,] 677—680. 3 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 150. 2 Kent's Com. 597, note.

 That tavern originally signified, in England, a wine-shop or wine-house, a place where wine was sold in small quantities and drank, a drinking-house,—appears from the use of the Fr. taverne, and L. Lat. taberna, in the times of Britton and Fleta. See Taverne, Taberna. And this corresponds with the proper meaning of the Lat. taberna, from which it is undoubtedly derived, which was used to signify a wine-shop, (œnopolium, from Gr. οἰνοπώλιον,) and essentially imported a shop or place constructed of boards, (ex tabulis constructa,) where any thing was sold. Calv. Lex. As, in process of time, however, the seller of wine, (including other strong drinks,) began to supply food and lodging for wayfaring men, the term tavern came to be synonymous with inn, (q. v.) and this has been traced as far back as the reign of Elizabeth. 1 Cheeves' (S. C.) Law R. 220. 2 Kent's Com. 597, note. The general disuse of the word "inn" in the United States, has necessarily led to the employment of "tavern" in its place, though without much uniformity or strictness of signification. Thus, in the Revised Statutes of New-York, tavern is used in the sense of a house where liquors are retailed and drunk, and requiring a license as such. 1 Rev. St. [678—681,] 677—680. In the laws of Pennsylvania and Ohio, it is employed in the same sense. Purdon's Dig. (ed. 1857,) 428, pl. 2. Swan's Statutes of Ohio, (1854,) chap. 112, (21,) sect. 1. 2 Kent's Com. 597, note. In other states, the term has been applied to houses where liquor is not retailed. Thus, in Kentucky, taverns must be licensed, even though spiritous liquors be not retailed. Revised Statutes, (ed. 1852,) 665, § 2. And see Swan's Statutes of Ohio, c. 112, (19.) And, in New-York, by Act of 12th April, 1843, c. 97, licenses to keep taverns may be granted without including a license to sell spiritous liquors or wine. So that the word has, by a process of gradual departure from its original and proper meaning, come at last to import the very reverse of it.

TAVERNE. Fr. [from Lat. taberna, q. v.] In old English law. A house or shop where wine was sold and drunk; a wine-shop or wine-house; a drinking-house; a tippling-house; a tavern. Et si per felonie, le quel la felonie fuit faite, dedens meson ou dehors, ou en taverne, ou à la lute, ou à autre assemble; and if feloniously [slain, the coroner shall cause inquest to be made] in what place the felony was committed, within a house, or without, or in a tavern, or at a wrestling-match, or other gathering. Britt. c. 1. Que ils le counterent pur verite à la taverne, ou aillourz de ascun ribaud ou autre, à que home ne doit rien crere; that they heard it mentioned for truth at a tavern, or elsewhere, from some vagabond or other, to whom no credence should be given. Id. c. 4. See Taverner. The word taverne is not found in Kelham's Dictionary.

TAVERNER. L. Fr. and Eng. [Fr. tavernier, from taverne, q. v.] In old English law. A seller of wine; one who kept a house or shop for the sale of wine. Et puis soit enquis de taverners que ount vendu vyns encontre la droit assise; and afterwards it shall be inquired of taverners who have sold wines against the right assise. Britt. c. 30. A retailer of wines. Hardr. 338. Taverner is used as the addition of a person in a writ in the Register. Reg. Orig. 195. But tavern-keeper has now, for the most part, taken its place.

TAVERN-KEEPER. [Fr. taverner, q. v.] One who keeps a tavern. Webster.

One who keeps an inn; an inn-keeper. In New-York and several of the other states, the terms tavern-keeper and inn-keeper, or inn-holder, are used as synonymous. 1 N. Y. Rev. St. [678,—681,] 677—680. 2 Kent's Com. 97, note. See Tavern. Webster defines the word, as used in the United States, to mean, "one who is licensed to sell liquors to be drank in his house, and to entertain travellers and lodgers, together with the horses or oxen composing their teams."

TAX. [L. Fr. taxe; L. Lat. taxa, from Gr. τάξις, from τασσειν, to set in order, to arrange or adjust.] A rate or sum of money assessed on the person or property of a citizen, by government, for the use of the nation or state. Webster.

In a general sense,—any contribution imposed by government upon individuals, for the use and service of the state; whether under the name of toll, tribute, tallage, gabel, impost, duty, custom, excise, subsidy, aid, supply, or other name. Story on the Const. (Abr.) § 472. See 1 Kent's Com. 254—257.

In a stricter sense,—a rate or sum imposed by government upon individuals, (or polls,) lands, houses, horses, cattle, possessions and occupations; as distinguished from customs, duties, imposts and excises. Id. Webster. This is the ordinary sense of the word. In New-York, the term tax has been held not to include a street assessment. 11 Johns. R. 77. 3 Wendell's R. 263. 4 Hill's R. 76. 4 Comstock's R. 419.

Literally, or according to its derivation, —an imposition laid by government upon individuals, according to a certain order and proportion, (tributum certo ordine constitutum.) Spelman, voc. Taxa. Webster observes, that taxes in free governments are usually laid upon the property of citizens, according to their income or the value of their estates. Cowell says it may be so called from the Gr. τάξις, because it was a thing done orderly and moderately. The radical idea of the word seems to be, arrangement, adaptation or adjustment of one thing to another. See To tax, Taxare. It imports, also, essentially, according to Cowell, regularity of imposition and certainty of amount, as distinguished from occasional, extraordinary or uncertain impositions, such as subsidies were. And, according to Spelman, it imports, also, moderation in amount, (non solum ordinem, sed et modum ratione temperatum significat.)

For the distinction between a tax and an assessment, see Assessment.

To TAX. [from L. Lat. taxare, (q. v.) L. Fr. taxer; see Tax.] To lay, impose or assess upon the citizens [or subjects of a government] a certain sum of money, or amount of property, to be paid to the public treasury, to defray the expenses of the government. Webster.

In practice. To assess, fix or determine judicially; to adjust, adapt or proportion.

This is the original and proper sense of the word, retained in the common phrase "to tax costs," but much more expressively shown in the old, but now obsolete phrase, "to tax damages." 2 Leon. 199. Where a clerk, master or judge examines an attorney's or solicitor's bill of costs, and certifies it to be of the proper amount, he is said to "tax the costs." But anciently a jury were said "to tax the damages," when they gave them in their verdict, implying, according to the strict radical meaning of the word, an adjustment or adaptation of the damages to the injury sustained. Bract. fol. 187, 98 b. Britt. c. 53, 87. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 1, § 24. See Taxare, Taxatio, Taxer. Assess is the word substituted, in the latter application, in modern practice, the damages being said to be assessed, and the costs taxed. But assess itself imports radically the same idea of adjustment, (assidere, its Latin form, being compounded of ad, to or by, and sedere or sidere, to set or place.)

In the New-York Code of Procedure the terms adjust and adjustment have been substituted in place of tax and taxation, in their application to costs. Code, (ed. 1859,) § 311.

TAXA. L. Lat. A tax. Spelman.

In old records. An allotted piece of work; a task. Ad taxam operarius; a workman by the piece; a tasker. Cowell. Triturator ad taxam; a thresher in the barn, who worked by the measure, or job, and not by the day. Paroch. Ant. 576.

TAXACION. L. Fr. [from Lat. taxatio, q. v.] In old English law. Taxation; assessment; the finding of damages by a jury. Soit agarde que ele recovere seisine de sa dower, et ses damages par taxacion de jurours; it shall be awarded that she recover seisin of her dower, and her damages by the taxation of the jurors. Britt. c. 111.

TAXARE. Lat. In the civil law. To rate or value. Calv. Lex.

To tax; to lay a tax or tribute. Spelman.

In old English practice. To assess; to rate or estimate; to moderate or regulate an assessment or rate. Item damna dabit per sacramentum juratorum estimanda, et per justitiarios (si opus faerit) taxanda ad minorem quantitatem, si juratores forte modum excesserint; ad plus autem æstimari non debent à justitiariis quam juratores dixerint in sacramento, nisi forte juratores illa damna ex certa scientia ad minus taxaverunt quam deceret; also he shall pay the damages, to be estimated by the oath of the jurors, and to be taxed by the justices (if need be) at a less amount, if the jurors should happen to have exceeded measure; but they ought not to be estimated by the justices at more than the jurors have said in their verdict, unless perchance the jurors have intentionally taxed those damages at less than was proper. Bract. fol. 187. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 36; c. 62, § 4. Dampna quæ taxantur per juratos ad duas marcas; the damages which are taxed by the jurors at two marks. Pasch. 14 Edw. I. rot. 10, coram Rege.

TAXATI. L. Lat. [from Gr. τάξις, order.] In old European law. Soldiers of a garrison or fleet, assigned to a certain station. Spelman.

TAXATIO. Lat. [from taxare, to rate or adjust.] In the civil law. The assessment or moderation by a judge, (judex,) of the damages claimed or sworn to by the actor or plaintiff; the limiting of the damages to a certain amount. Officio judicis debet—taxatione jusjurandum refrænari. Dig. 4. 3. 18. 1 Spence's Chancery, 211, note (c.) In the Novels of Justinian, it is used for a rated sum limited by a judge, (ῥητῆς ποσότητος ὁριζομένης παρὰ τοῦ δικάζοντος.) Nov. 53, c. 1. Nov. 82, c. 10.

Bracton, in his commentary on the civil law definition of an action, (which he adopts,) uses the words taxatio and taxare, in a similar sense. Bract. fol. 98 b.

TAXATIO EXPENSARUM. L. Lat. In old English practice. Taxation of costs. Clerke's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 9.

TAXATIO NORWICENSIS. L. Lat. A valuation of ecclesiastical benefices made through every diocese in England, by Walter, Bishop of Norwich, delegated by the Pope to this office in 38 Hen. III. Cowell.

TAXATION. [Lat. taxatio.] The act or process of taxing, or of imposing a tax. The act or process by which a government imposes upon individuals the payment of a rateable contribution in money, for public uses. See Tax. For the distinction between taxation and assessment, see Assessment.

&c.: and according to the annual value shall the damages be taxed by the justices, single or double, &c. Britt. c. 53. Et puis soient taxes lour damages par les jurours; and afterwards shall their damages be taxed by the jurors. Id. c. 87. Que le pleintife recov'a sa debt et ses damages taxes; that the plaintiff recover his debt and his damages taxed. Yearb. P. 10 Edw. III. 21.

TEAM, Theam, Tem, Them. Sax. [from tyman, to propagate, to teem.] In old English law. Literally, an offspring, race or generation. Spelman. A royalty or privilege granted by royal charter to a lord of a manor, of having, keeping and judging in his court, his bondmen, neifes and villeins, and their offspring or suit, (sequela.) Id. They who had a jurisdiction of this kind, were said to have a court of Theme. MS. Anon. cited ibid. The word is constantly used in the old books in connection with toll, in the expression Toll & Team. Bract. fol. 122 b, 124 b, 154 b.

TECHNICAL. [Græco-Lat. technicus; Gr. τεχνικὸς, from τέχνη, art.] Belonging, or peculiar to an art or profession. Technical terms are frequently called in the books, "words of art," (verba or vocabula artis.)

TEDDING. Spreading. Tedding grass is spreading it out after it is cut in the swarth. 10 East, 5.

TEDING-PENNY. Tething-penny. Sax. In old English law. A small tax or allowance to the sheriff from each tithing of his county, towards the charge of keeping courts, &c. Cowell.

TELLIGRAPHUM, Telligraffum, Telligraphium. Latino-Gr. [from Lat. tellus, land, and Gr. γράφειν, to write.] In Saxon law. A charter or deed of land, (charta seu libellus prædialis.) Spelman. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 10. A writing showing and protecting the title to lands, (scriptum quo prædiorum jus continetur et tuetur.) Spelman. Literally, a land-writing. Telligraphia were evidences or muniments of title. Id. Tandem Cenulphus Rex, serâ ductus pœnitentiâ, telligraphia, id est, libellos quos a supradictis hominibus Uriheh et Osberto injustè perceperat, cum magnâ pecuniâ Ecclesiæ Christi in Dorobernia remisit; at last king Kenulf, led by late repentance, restored the land-writings, that is, the books [bocs, Sax. land-bocs,] which he had unjustly taken from the aforesaid men, Uriheh and Osbert, with a large sum of money, to the Church of Christ in Canterbury. MS. Concil. apud Clovesho, A. D. 800. Spelman. Mr. Reeves observes that the word telligraphum was probably adopted after the Conquest, as a translation of the Saxon land-boc. 1 Reeves' Hist. ub. sup. This supposition seems to be reduced to certainty, by the above quotation.

TELONIUM, Teloneum. Græco-Lat. [Gr. τελώνιον, from τέλος, tax.] In the civil law. A place where tax is collected or received. Calv. Lex. In old English records, a toll-booth. Cowell. Converted into theolonium, in old English law, and used to signify a tax or toll. See Theolonium.

In feudal law. A tax, (vectigal.) Vectigalia quae vulgo dicuntur telonia. Feud. Lib. 2, tit. 56.

TELUM. Lat. [from Gr. τῆλε, or τηλοῦ, far off.] In the civil law. A weapon. Any thing that a man can hurt with. Telorum appellatione, omnia ex quibus singuli homines nocere possunt, accipiuntur; under the appellation of weapons are included all things with which individual men can hurt. Dig. 48. 6. 11. 1. This definition is copied in Fleta. Lib. 4, c. 4, § 4. The Lex Cornelia de Sicariis, punished with death those who went about with a weapon, (cum telo,) with the intent of killing some one. Justinian, commenting on the meaning of telum, in this law, observes, that "according to Caius' interpretation of the Twelve Tables, it commonly signified that which was shot from a bow, [viz. an arrow,] but it now signifies every thing that is thrown from the hand, [any missile weapon,] so that missiles of wood, stone and iron are embraced under the appellation." Inst. 4. 18. 5. See Dig. 48. 8. Teli appellatione et ferrum et fustis, et lapis, et denique omne quod, nocendi causâ, habetur, significatur. Dig. 47. 2. 54. 2. See Arma.

TEM. Sax. An old form of team, (q. v.) Toll & tem. Bract. fol. 104 b.

TEMERE. Lat. In the civil law. Rashly; inconsiderately; without sufficient cause. A plaintiff was said temere litigare, who demanded a thing out of malice, or sued without just cause, and who could show no ground or cause of action. Brissonius.

TEMPLES. The two English inns of court, (the Inner Temple and Middle Temple,) so called, because anciently occupied as the residence of the Knights Templars, on the suppression of which order they were purchased by some professors of the common law, and converted into hospitia, or Inns of Court. They are called the Inner and Middle Temple, in relation to Essex House, which was also a part of the house of the Templars, and called the Outer Temple, because situated without Temple Bar. Encyc. Lond.

TEMPORALIS. Lat. [from tempus, time.] In the civil law. Temporary; limited to a certain time; not perpetual.

Temporalis actio; an action limited within a certain period, beyond which it could not be brought. Inst. 4. 12.

Temporalis exceptio; a temporary exception; an exception which barred or delayed an action for a time. Otherwise called dilatoria. Inst. 4. 13. 8, 10.

TEMPORALITIES. [L. Lat. temporalia.] In English law. The lay-fees of bishops, with which their churches are endowed or permitted to be endowed by the liberality of the sovereign, and in virtue of which they become barons and lords of parliament. Spelman, voc. Temporalia.

TEMPORIS EXCEPTIO. Lat. In the civil law. A plea of time; a plea of lapse of time, in bar of an action. 1 Mack. Civ. Law, 200, § 200. Answering to the plea of the statute of limitations at common law.

TEMPS. L. Fr. In old English law. Time; times. Temps descovenables; non-juridical seasons. Britt. c. 52. Par temps; presently; shortly. Kelham.

TEMPTATIO, Tentatio. L. Lat. [from tentare, to try.] In old English law. Assay or trial. Temptatio panis fiat bis in anno; the assay of bread shall be made twice a year. Cart. 20 Edw. I. n. 51. Cowell.

TEMPUS. Lat. In civil and old English law. Time; a time or term; a limited period of time. See infra. Tempus enim modus tollendi obligationes et actiones, quia tempus currit contra desides et sui juris contemptores; time is a means of removing obligations and actions; because time runs against the slothful and those who are neglectful of their right. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 5, § 12.

TEMPUS CONTINUUM. Lat. In the civil law. A continuous or absolute period of time. A term which begins to run from a certain event, even though he for whom it runs has no knowledge of the event, and in which, when it has once begun to run, all the days are reckoned as they follow one another in the calendar. Dig. 3. 2. 8. 1 Mack. Civ. Law, 180, § 187.

TEMPUS SEMESTE. Lat. In old English law. The period of six months or half a year, consisting of one hundred and eighty-two days. Reg. Jud. 50 b. 6 Co. 62 a. Yelv. 100. Cro. Jac. 166.

TEMPUS UTILE. Lat. In the civil law. A profitable or advantageous period of time. A term which begins to run from a certain event, only when he for whom it runs has obtained a knowledge of the event; and in which, when it has once begun to run, those days are not reckoned on which one has no experiundi potestas, i. e. on which one cannot prosecute his rights before a court. Dig. 3. 6. 6. 1 Mack. Civ. Law, 180, § 187.

TENANCY. [L. Fr. tenaunce; L. Lat. tenentia.] A holding or mode of holding an estate.

In old English law. A house of habitation, or place to live in, held of another. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 4. Cowell.

TENANCY IN COMMON. The holding of an estate in lands by several persons, by several and distinct titles, but by unity of possession.* 2 Bl. Com. 191. 4 Kent's Com. 367. A tenancy in common is where two or more hold the same land, with interests accruing under different titles; or accruing under the same title, but at different periods; or conferred by words of limitation importing that the grantees are to take in distinct shares. 1 Steph. Com. 323.

The holding of a personal chattel, as of a ship or vessel, by several persons at the same time, with distinct but undivided interests. See 3 Kent's Com. 151.

TENANT. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Fr. tenaunt, from tener, to hold; L. Lat. tenens, from tenere, to hold.] One who holds; a holder, especially of lands or tenements.

In feudal law. One who holds of another, (called lord or superior,) by some service, as fealty or rent. See Tenure.

In English law. One who holds of another, (according to the fiction or maxim of tenure,) though, in point of fact, the absolute owner of what he so holds; as a tenant in fee simple.* 2 Bl. Com. 59, 104, 105. 3 Kent's Com. 487.

One who actually holds of another; one who has temporary possession and use of that which is in reality the property of another; as a tenant for life or years. The correlative of landlord.

One who has actual seisin or possession of lands or tenements. Co. Litt. 1 b.

One who has actual possession of lands claimed in suit by another; the defendant in a real action. The correlative of demandant. 3 Bl. Com. 180.

One who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of right, either in fee, for life, years or at will. Cowell. This definition sufficiently expresses the general meaning of the word, as at present used both in English and American law.

 Lord Coke, commenting on the word tenant as used by Littleton, observes that it has all the significations of the Lat. teneo, from which it is derived. For the tenant has [tenet] the estate of the land; he holds [tenet] the land of some superior lord; he is to perform [tenere] the services due; and thereunto he is bounden, [tenetur] by doom and judgment of law. Co. Litt. 1 b. Litt. sect. 1. See Teneo, Tenere.

The word tenant continues to be extensively employed in American law, although the principle of tenure, in the feudal sense, from which it is derived, and which it radically imports, is no longer recognized. See 3 Kent's Com. 488, 513, 514. Its principal use now is to distinguish the degree or quantity of right or interest which persons may have in lands or other subjects of property, as whether in fee, for years, &c. whether in severalty, or in common, &c. As applied to estates in fee simple, it signifies owner or proprietor; as applied to less estates, it signifies holder, occupier, or possessor. In the latter application, however, particularly in regard to estates for years, the word continues to retain in a degree its ancient and peculiar sense of a holding of another by service; and though the service is now a stipulated rent paid as a mere equivalent for the occupation, the proprietor is still known, even in common speech, by the feudal appellation of land lord.

TENANT IN CAPITE. L. Fr. and Lat. In feudal and old English law. Tenant in chief; one who held immediately under the king, in right of his crown and dignity. 2 Bl. Com. 60.

TENANT IN FEE SIMPLE, (or TENANT IN FEE.) He who has lands, tenements or hereditaments, to hold to him and his heirs forever, generally, absolutely and simply; without mentioning what heirs, but referring that to his own pleasure, or to the disposition of the law. 2 Bl. Com. 104. Litt. sect. 1. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 6, § 948. See Fee simple.

TENANT IN TAIL. In English law. He who has lands, tenements or hereditaments, to hold to him and the heirs of his body.* Litt. sect. 14. 2 Bl. Com. 113. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 23, §§ 971, 972. See Fee tail.

TENANT FOR LIFE. One who holds lands or tenements for the term of his own life, or for that of any other person, (in which case he is called tenant pur auter vie,) or for more lives than one. 2 Bl. Com. 120. See Estate for life.

TENANT IN DOWER. A woman who holds the third part of the lands and tenements of which her deceased husband was seised, for the term of her life, as her dower.* 2 Bl. Com. 129. See Estate in dower.

TENANT BY THE CURTESY. One who, on the death of his wife seised of an estate of inheritance, after having by her issue born alive and capable of inheriting her estate, holds the lands and tenements for the term of his life. After the birth of the issue and before the death of the wife, he is called tenant by the curtesy initiate; after the death of the wife, tenant by the curtesy consummate. Co. Litt. 30 a. See Estate by the curtesy.

TENANT FOR YEARS. One who holds lands or tenements under a lease or demise from another, for the term of a certain number of years agreed upon; a lessee for years.* 2 Bl. Com. 140. See Estate for years.

TENANT FROM YEAR TO YEAR. One who holds lands or tenements under the demise of another, where no certain term has been mentioned, but an annual rent has been reserved. See 1 Steph. Com. 271. 4 Kent's Com. 111, 114.

One who holds over, by consent given either expressly or constructively, after the determination of a lease for years. Id. 112.

TENANT AT WILL. One who holds lands or tenements let to him by another, at the will of the lessor.* Litt. sect. 68. 2 Bl. Com. 145. 4 Kent's Com. 110. See Estate at will.

TENANT BY (or AT) SUFFERANCE. One that comes into the possession of land by lawful title, but holds over by wrong, after the determination of his interest. 4 Kent's Com. 116. 2 Bl. Com. 150. Co. Litt. 57 b. See Estate at sufferance.

TENANT A VOLUNTE. L. Fr. Tenant at will. Litt. sect. 68.

TENANT PERAVAILE, (or PARAVAIL.) L. Fr. The lowest tenant, (literally, the under or bottom tenant,) of land, one who held of a mesne lord.* Litt. sect. 555. See Paravail.

TENAUNT. L. Fr. [from tener, to hold.] In old English law. Tenant; a tenant. Pur ceo que le pleintyfe est son tenaunt, et del tenement que il tient de luy est arere; for that the plaintiff is his tenant, and of the tenement which he holds of him is in arrear. Britt. c. 27.

The defendant in a real action. Si le garaunt veigne al jour que il serra somouns, et le pleyntyfe ausi, et le tenaunt nent; if the warrantor come at the day that he shall be summoned, and the plaintiff also, and the tenant not. Britt. c. 75.

TENCON. L. Fr. A dispute; a quarrel. Kelham.

TEND. In old English law. To tender or offer. Cowell.

To TENDER. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Fr. tendre, (q. v.) from Lat. tendere, to stretch or hold out, to extend.] To offer, by presenting a thing, and as it were holding it out to another; to offer to pay an amount of money, by presenting it to another. See Tender.—To carefully offer, or circumspectly endeavor the performance of any thing belonging to us. Cowell. See Tendre.

To offer in words, or by a form of words. See Tender of issue.

TENDER. An offer of a sum of money in satisfaction of a debt or claim, by producing and showing the amount to the creditor or party claiming, and expressing verbally a willingness to pay it.* A mere offer to pay is not, in legal strictness, a tender. 2 Dall. 190. Marshall, arg. 1 Wash. (Va.) R. [348,] 450. The word imports not only a verbal offer, but a corresponding corporeal act, as by producing and showing the amount; and this is strictly sustained by its etymology, the Lat. tendere, from which it is derived, signifying to stretch or hold out, to extend; implying that what is tendered is held out to the party for his acceptance; the party tendering thus representing, both by word and act, not only his willingness, but his readiness, to do all in his power to satisfy the demand. As to the kind of money in which a tender should be made, and generally what is a good tender, see 3 Chitt. Bl. Com. 304, note. United States Digest, Tender.

To constitute a valid legal tender there must be an actual offer of the sum due, unless the actual production of the money be dispensed with by a refusal to accept, or something equivalent thereto; and this offer must be an absolute one, not coupled with any condition. 2 Stark. Evid. 778, 779. 15 Wendell's R. 637; cited by Crawford, J. 1 Wisconsin R. 141, 147. A declaration of willingness and readiness to pay is not a legal tender of payment. Id.

TENDER OF ISSUE. A form of words in a pleading, by which a party offers to refer the question raised upon it to the appropriate mode of decision. The common tender of an issue of fact by a defendant, is expressed by the words, "And of this he puts himself upon the country." Steph. Pl. 54, 230.

TENDRE, Tender. L. Fr. [from Lat. tendere, to reach, to offer.] In old English law. To offer; to tender; to express a readiness. Si ascun pl'—monstre chartres, et tendent averement; if any plaintiff—show charters, and offer proof. Britt. c. 76. Et si le breve soit covenable et bon, si coviendra au pleyntyfe tendre d'averer toute sa entente; and if the writ be regular and good, it behooves the plaintiff to offer to aver or prove [to express himself ready to verify] all his count. Id. c. 98. Littleton uses this word in its present English form. Al jour assesse, de tender à luy; at the day set, to tender to him. Litt. sect. 340.

TENEMENT. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Fr. tener, to hold; L. Lat. tenementum, from tenere, to hold.] A thing holden. 2 Bl. Com. 59.—"A possession holden." Finch's Law, b. 2, ch. 4.—Any thing that may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature, whether it be of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial ideal kind. 2 Bl. Com. 17. See 3 Kent's Com. 401. 17 Pick. R. 105. Tenement is a word of greater extent than land, including not only land, but rents, commons and several other rights and interests issuing out of, or concerning land. 1 Steph. Com. 158, 159. A tenement must lie in tenure and must relate to land. Burr. Sett. Cas. 318.

In the popular sense, a house or building. 2 Bl. Com. 16, 17. A building for a habitation. Webster. A house with the home-stall, or immediate appurtenances. Brande. Sometimes construed in law to have this sense. See 10 Wheaton's R. 236, Story, J. 17 Pick. R. 105, Wilde, J. 2 East, 189. 4 Id. 362. And see Tenementum.

This word is purely French, and in composition is expressed by the English hold. Thus, frank-tenement is translated free-hold. See Hold.

TENEMENT. L. Fr. [from tener, to hold.] Tenement; a tenement; land held of another by service. Del tenement que il tient de luy; of the tenement which he holds of him. Britt. c. 27. Chateux que demorent en le tenement; chattels which remain on the tenement. Id. c. 40. Trova le tenement pleyne; finds the tenement full. Id. ibid. Fraunk tenement; freehold. Id. ibid. Id. c. 47, et passim.

"TENEMENTS," in a will, in its ordinary sense, imports a mere local description of the property; but it sometimes carries a fee, as where the context, or apparent intention of the testator, requires such a construction. See 10 Wheaton's R. 236, Story, J. "The word 'tenements' has never been construed in a will, independently of other circumstances, to pass a fee." Id. 238.

TENEMENTARY (or TENEMENTAL) LAND. [L. Lat. terra tenementalis.] In English law. That part of a manor which is granted out to tenants, as distinguished from the demesne lands of the lord; the tenant's land or tenancy. Called, in Saxon law, the outland. Cowell. Spelman, vocc. Inland, Utland. 2 Bl. Com. 90.

TENEMENTUM. L. Lat. [from tenere, to hold.] In old English law. A tenement; a thing held by service; a fee, fief or feudal estate; an estate which a tenant holds of a lord. Spelman. Devenio homo vester, de tenemento quod de vobis teneo; I become your man, of the tenement which I hold of you. Bract. fol. 80. Liberum tenementum; a free tenement, or freehold, as distinguished from villenagium. Id. fol. 207. Tenementorum, aliud liberum, aliud villenagium; of tenements, one kind is free, the other villeinage. Id. ibid.

A corporeal thing held of another; a thing capable of being viewed, entered upon, measured, cultivated, fed upon. Hence, primarily, land held by service. Intrat dominus in tenementum tenentis sui, et facit ei disseysinam; the lord enters into the tenement of his tenant, and disseises him. Bract. fol. 46 b. Videant tenementum ad quod communia pertinere dicitur. Tenementum videlicet in quo communia pasturæ petitur, qualitatem et quantitatem, et per quas metas; they should view the tenement to which the common of pasture is said to be appurtenant. The tenement, too, in which the common is demanded, its quality and quantity, and by what metes [it is bounded.] Id. fol. 224. Plures habere possunt jus pascendi in uno tenemento; several may have a right of pasture in one tenement. Id. ibid. Nemo possit communiam petere in aliquo tenemento quod excoli possit, vel includi, vel poni in defensum; no one can claim common in any tenement which can be cultivated, or enclosed, or put in defence, [i. e. exclusively appropriated.] Id. fol. 228.

Tenure; the mode or circumstance of holding. Tenementum non mutat statum liberi, non magis quam servi. Poterit enim liber homo tenere purum villenagium, faciendo quicquid ad villenagium pertinebit, et nihilominus liber erit, cum hoc faciat ratione villenagii, et non ratione personæ suæ; the tenure [or mode of holding,] does not alter the condition of a freeman, any more than of a slave. For a freeman may hold pure villeinage, doing whatever shall pertain to villeinage, and nevertheless be a freeman, since he does this in regard of the villeinage, and not in regard of his own person. Bract. fol. 26.

A tenement; a building for habitation or occupation; a messuage, house or shop. There is a writ in the Register, De tenementis legatis, (about tenements bequeathed.) One form of this writ, directed to the mayor and sheriffs of London, recites that, "whereas, according to custom in the said city hitherto used and approved, it is lawful for every citizen of the said city to bequeath his tenements in the said city, by his last will and testament, to whomsoever he pleases, in the same way as his chattels, (licet unicuique civi ejusdem civitatis tenementa sua in eadem civitate, in testamento suo in ultima voluntate sua, tanquam catalla sua legare cuicunque voluerit;) and that one S. late a citizen of the said city, had in his last will and testament bequeathed four shops, with the appurtenances, (quatuor shopas cum pertinentiis,) or four messuages and ten shops, (quatuor mesuagia et decem shopas,) with the appurtenances, &c. to E." Reg. Orig. 244 b. Another writ, directed to the bailiffs of Great Yarmouth, recites a similar custom of the burgesses of that town, and applies it to a messuage bequeathed by will, &c. Id. ibid.

A chattel; a thing bought and held by a villein. Et quod tenementum contineri possit sub generalitate catallorum, quantam ad dominum, videtur, quia ex catallis illorum servorum, (quæ dominorum esse debent,) empta sunt tenementa; and it seems, that as far as concerns the lord, a tenement may be embraced under the general designation of chattels; because, with the chattels of those bondmen, (which ought to be their lords',) tenements are bought. Bract. fol. 26.

TENENDAS. In Scotch conveyancing. That clause of a charter by which the particular tenure is expressed. Bell's Dict.

TENENDUM. L. Lat. [from tenere, to hold; L. Fr. à tener.] In old conveyancing. To hold; literally, to be held. A formal word in charters, by which a tenement was conveyed, expressive of tenure, or indicating that the thing conveyed was to be held, in the feudal sense of the term. It was constantly and closely associated with the word habendum, as in the following examples: Do tali, &c. habendum et tenendum sibi et hæredibus suis; I give to such a one, &c. to have and to hold to him and his heirs. Bract. fol. 17 b, 18. The word, however, was usually made to vary in gender and number, according to the precise appellation of the thing conveyed; tenendam being used with terram or acram, and tenendas with acras. Sciant præsentes et futuri, quod ego talis, dedi et concessi, &c. tantam terram cum pertinentiis, in tali villa, habendam et tenendam tali, &c. Know [all men] present and to come, that I, such a one, have given and granted, &c. to such a one, &c. so much land, with the appurtenances, in such a town; to have and to hold, [literally, to be had, and to be held,] to such a one, &c. Id. fol. 34 b, 35.

The tenendum clause, as it is termed, in old deeds, is described as being expressed at length,—"tenendum per servitium militare," (to hold by knight service;) "tenendum in burgagio," (to hold in burgage;) "tenendum in libero socagio," (to hold in free socage.) 2 Bl. Com. 299. After the statute of Quia Emptores, it was expressed,—"tenendum de capitalibus dominis feodi," (to hold of the chief lords of the fee.) But this expressing nothing more than the statute had already provided for, the clause, according to Blackstone, gradually grew out of use; and Sheppard remarks that, in his day, it was, for the most part, omitted altogether. Shep. Touch. 80. The single word tenendum, (to hold,) was, however, retained, and joined to the habendum, in one clause. Cruise's Dig. tit. xxxii. ch. 2, sect. 52.

In modern conveyancing, the tenendum in this abridged form, (which corresponds with the use of it by Bracton, ub. sup.) is still in use, or, in other words, the English "to hold" is invariably used in immediate connection with "to have," (the ancient habendum;) and though deprived of its peculiar ancient significance, seems entitled to be regarded as something more than a mere word of form: the word "hold," in its ordinary sense of actual possession and entire control of a thing, adding in a considerable degree to the significance of the word "have," with which it is associated.

TENENS. Lat. [from tenere, to hold.] In old English law. A tenant; a holder; one who holds. The correlative of dominus, (lord.) Fleta, lib. 3, c. 12, § 3. Debet tenens manus suas utrasque ponere inter manus utrasque domini sui; the tenant ought to put both his hands between both the hands of his lord. Bract. fol. 80. Potest quis esse tenens meus reddendo mihi reddditum; a man may be my tenant by rendering to me a rent. Id. fol. 169.

TENENS. L. Lat. In old practice. Tenant; the tenant; the defendant in a real action. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 6, § 1.

TENEO. Lat. I hold, (or TENERE, to hold,) is said by Lord Coke to have the following significations:

To have, as an estate. Co. Litt. 1 b.

To hold of some superior. Id. ibid.

To keep, as a covenant. Id. ibid.

To bind, as an obligation. Id. ibid.

To judge or deem. Id. ibid.

See these senses applied to the word tenant. Id. ibid. See Tenere.

TENER. L. Fr. In old English law. To hold. A aver et tener à luy et à ses heires; to have and to hold to him and his heirs. Litt. sect. 625.

To keep. Tener hors de droit heire; to keep out the right heir. Britt. c. 65. Si l' uncle ou l' aunte soit en seisine, ei teigne hors l' neveu; if the uncle or the aunt be in seisin, and hold out the nephew. Id. c. 119. Tenes vous al un; keep yourself to one [issue.] Yearb. M. 5 Edw. III. 106, [plea,] M. 7 Edw. III. 31. T. 1 Edw. II. 14.

TENERE. Lat. In the civil law. To hold. A term expressive of mere fact without reference to right; or expressive of what was termed corporeal and natural possession. Habere, (to have,) and possidere, (to possess,) on the other hand, were terms expressive of right, or what was termed civil possession. Calv. Lex. See Habere.

To observe or keep. Calv. Lex.

To bind. Id.

To be of force or validity. Id.

TENERE. Lat. In old English law. To hold by service, in the feudal sense. De tenemento quod de vobis teneo; of the tenement which I hold of you. Bract. fol. 80. Co. Litt. 1 b.

To hold, judicially. Tenere placitum; to hold plea; to take cognizance of an action; to exercise or entertain jurisdiction. Prohibemus vobis ne teneatis placitum; we prohibit you that you do not hold plea. Reg. Orig. 34. Tenere placita; to hold pleas; to have a court of one's own. Finch's Law, b. 2, c. 14.

To hold, or be seised of; to have. Co. Litt. 1 b.

To hold; to bind. Teneri; to be held or bound. Noverint universi me A. de tali com', teneri B, in x marc'; Know all men that I, A. of such a county, am bound to B. in ten marks. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 3.

To keep, fulfil or perform. Præcipe A. quod, &c. teneat B. conventionem inter eos factum, &c. Command A. that, &c. he keep with B. the covenant made between them. Reg. Orig. 165.

To do, perform or render. Præcipimus vobis quod sine dilatione plenum rectum teneatis W. B. de uno mesuagio, &c. We command you, that without delay you do full right to W. B. of one messuage, &c. Reg. Orig. 1.

To stand good; to have effect. Tenet—tenebit breve; the writ holds—will hold. Bract. fol. 189. Cadit breve versus tales, licet teneat versus alios; the writ falls or abates against such, though it holds against the others. Id. fol. 203.

TENET, (he holds,) and TENUIT, (he held.) L. Lat. In old practice. Words formerly applied to the writ of waste; the writ being said, with regard to the defendant, to be brought either in the tenet or the tenuit. In the tenet, where the particular estate was still subsisting, and the place wasted was to be recovered with damages; in the tenuit, where the particular estate had expired, and damages only were sought to be recovered. Roscoe's Real Act. 123.

TENHEVED. [Sax. tienheofod, from tien, ten, and heofod, head.] In old English law. The head of a tithing, or decennary; a tithingman, chief pledge, head borough or borsholder. Spelman.

TENIER, Tener. L. Fr. To hold; to accept or take. Kelham.

To think; to regard or look upon. Id.

TENMANTALE, Tenmentale. Sax. [from tien, ten, men, and tale, a number or count.] In Saxon and old English law. A tithing or decennary; the number of ten men. LL. Edw. Conf. c. 19.

A tribute paid to the king, of two shillings for every plough-land. Hoveden, A. D. 1194, cited in Spelman. Cart. 29 Edw. I. cited in Cowell.

TENOR. Lat. [from tenere, to hold or direct.] In feudal law. Tenor, or tenure; the mode of holding an estate or fee; a limiting or restricting to a certain course, time or quantity; the declaration or limitation of an estate; the express terms of the feudal donation. Tenor est pactio, contra communem feudi naturam ac rationem, in contractu interposita; tenor is an agreement, contrary to the common nature and reason of a fee, interposed or inserted in the contract [by which it is conveyed.] Hotoman de Verb. Feud. voc. Tenor feud.

Tenor est qui legem dat feodo. It is the tenor [express terms of the feudal donation] which gives law to the fee. 2 Bl. Com. 310. Wright on Ten. 35, 21, 152. It is the tenor of the feudal grant which regulates its effect and extent. Broom's Max. 304, [346.] The declaration by the lord from whom the feud or fee moved, of the continuance or quantity of estate which he meant to confer, governed the fee. 2 Bl. Com. 310. Tenor est qui dat legem feudo, et plerumque naturam feudi mutat; it is the tenure which gives law to the fee, and for the most part changes the nature of the fee. Crag. de Jur. Feud. 50. Zasius in Us. Feud. fol. 123. Wright on Tenures, 21, note.

TENOR. Lat. and Eng. [from tenere, to hold on; to have a continuous progress.] The exact copy of a writing, pursuing the course of its words as they succeed one another.* Tenor always imports a true copy of the thing written, and consists in identity. 3 Salk. 225. Reg. Orig. 220 b. "Tenor signifies the very words." Holt, C. J. 12 Mod. 218. See 1 Cushing's R. 65, 66. See Purport.

The true intent and meaning of an instrument. To do a thing according to the tenor of a writing, is to do it according to the true intent and meaning thereof. Cowell. "According to the tenor, true intent and meaning of these presents," is a clause of frequent occurrence in deeds and other instruments, from which the above explanation may have been derived.

TENSER. L. Fr. To keep; to perform. Kelham.

TENTHS. [Lat. decimæ.] In English law. A temporary aid issuing out of personal property, and granted to the king by parliament; formerly the real tenth part of all the moveables belonging to the subject. 1 Bl. Com. 308.

In English ecclesiastical law. The tenth part of the annual profit of every living in the kingdom, formerly paid to the Pope, but by statute 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3, transferred to the crown, and afterwards made a part of the fund called Queen Anne's Bounty. 1 Bl. Com. 284—286.

TEN'TUM. A contraction of tenementum. 1 Instr. Cler. 13. Com. 228.

TENTUS, Tentum. L. Lat. In old English law. Held; holden. A barbarous participle formed from the verb tenere, (q. v.) Ad curiam tentam ibidem quinto die Aprilis; at a court held in the same place on the fifth day of April. Chartuary of forms, cited Bl. Law Tr. 108, note.

TENUIT. Lat. He held. See Tenet.

TENURA. L. Lat. In old English law. Tenure. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 33.

TENURE. L. Fr. and Eng. [from tener, to hold; L. Lat. tenura.] A manner of holding; the mode of holding a feudal estate. Tenure est la maniere par quoy les tenements sont tenues des seigneurs; tenure is the manner by which tenements are held of lords. Custum. de Norm. c. 28. The mode or principle of holding of a superior by service; the fundamental principle of the feudal system.

In the law of England, the principle of tenure is still expressly retained, it being a fundamental maxim that all the land in the kingdom is held, mediately or immediately, of the sovereign. Co. Litt. 93 a, 1 a, 1 b, 65 a. Wright on Tenures, 136, 137. 2 Bl. Com. 59. 1 Steph. Com. 173. 3 Kent's Com. 487.

In the United States, government is theoretically considered the source of all titles to land, but in the proper feudal sense, the principle of tenure seems to be abrogated; tenants in fee being to all intents and purposes the absolute owners of their estates. See 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 79—81, [37.] In some of the states, tenure in socage is said still to exist in theory, but in others it has been expressly abolished, and practically all land is now held by an allodial title. See 3 Kent's Com. 488, 509—514. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 80, 81, [39.] There is high authority, however, for the opinion that the great feudal principle of tenure has been acknowledged in American jurisprudence, and that we have no lands which are properly allodial, that is, which are not holden. 1 Greenleaf's Cruise Dig. 23, note. The idea of tenure certainly pervades, to a considerable degree, the law of real property in this country; and the language of tenure is everywhere in constant use, all proprietors, owners, or holders of real estates being technically denominated tenants.

TENUS. L. Fr. Holden. Dyer, 29 b.

TERCE. [from Lat. tertius, third.] In Scotch law. Dower; right of dower. A relict's right to the life rent of a third of lands, tithes, wadsets, and annual rents in fee whereof her husband died infeft. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 145.—The right which a widow has to the third part of the rents of the heritage in which her husband died infeft. Bell's Dict.

TERCER. In Scotch law. A widow that possesses the third part of her husband's land as her legal jointure. 1 Kames' Equity, pref.

TERM. [from L. Fr. terme; from Lat. terminus; Gr. τέρμα.] A limit; a bound or boundary, particularly of time.

A limitation of time. Co. Litt. 45 b. A limitation of an estate to a certain period; the period of time for which an estate is granted, as for life or years; the duration of an estate. See 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 159.

An estate or interest conveyed for a certain time, or limited to a certain period of time. Co. Litt. 45 b. Burton's Real Prop. 270, pl. 835. An estate for years is called a term, (terminus,) because its duration or continuance is bounded, limited, and determined; for every such estate must have a certain beginning and certain end. 2 Bl. Com. 143.

A limited and fixed period of time during which courts are statedly held, sit, or are open for the hearing and trial of causes. See Terms of Court, Terminus.

A word, (vocabulum;) a word of art, or technical word; a descriptive expression. See Terme, Terminus, Terms.

TERM. In the civil law. A space of time granted to a debtor for discharging his obligation. Poth. Obl. part 2, ch. 3, art. 3, § 1.

TERM PROBATORY. In English ecclesiastical practice. A certain time within which the plaintiff is required to prove so much of the libel as the defendant has not confessed in his personal answers. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 11, num. 12. The appointment by the judge of such time. Id.

TERM TO PROPOUND ALL THINGS. In English ecclesiastical practice. An appointment by the judge of a time at which both parties are to exhibit all the acts and instruments which make for their respective causes. Id. ibid. num. 22.

TERM TO CONCLUDE. In English ecclesiastical practice. An appointment by the judge, of a time at which both parties are understood to renounce all further exhibits and allegations. Id. ibid. num. 23.

TERME. L. Fr. [from Lat. terminus, q. v.] In old English law. A period of time; the term or period of an estate. A terme que n'est mye uncore passe; for a term which is not yet passed. Britt. c. 64. Ceo mot terme se estent ausibien à terme de vie, come à terme des ans; this word "term" extends as well to a term of life, as to a term of years. Id. c. 114.

A term; an estate for a certain limited period. Graunde droit ad le fermer à recoverer son terme, et son chatell; great right hath the fermor, [termor or lessee,] to recover his term and his chattel. Id. ibid.

A term of court; a judicial period or season. Et que les leyes et custumes de dit roialme, termes et processes, soient tenus et gardes, come ils sount et ount este avant ses heurres; and that the laws and customs of the said realm, the terms and processes, shall be observed and kept, as they are, and heretofore have been. Stat. 36 Edw. III. c. 15. Spelman.

A term, word, or technical expression; a word of art. Et que per les aunciens formes et termes de counter nul home soit perdant, issint que la matter del action soit pleniment monstre; and that no man shall be a loser by the ancient forms and terms of pleading, so that the matter [or substance] of the action be fully shown. Id. ibid.

TERMINARE. Lat. In old English law. To end or determine; to dispose of judicially; to decide. Loquelæ quæ atterminatæ fuerunt coram justitiariis de banco, et non terminatæ, remaneant sine die; plaints which have been adjourned before the justices of the bench, and not determined, shall remain without day. Bract. fol. 355 b. Et ea quæ per eosdem [justiciarios] propter difficultatem aliquorum articulorum terminari non possint, referantur ad justitiarios nostros de banco, et ibi terminentur; and those matters which cannot be determined by the same [justices] on account of difficulty in some points, shall be referred to our justices of the bench, and shall be determined there. Mag. Cart. 9

Hen. III. c. 12. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 3. § 8. Used in a similar sense in the civil law. Oldendorpius. Prateus.

TERMINER. L. Fr. [from Lat. terminare, q. v.] To determine. A oyer et terminer toutes quereles; to hear and determine all complaints. Britt. fol. 1.

TERMINI. Lat. (plur. of terminus, q. v.) Ends; bounds; limiting or terminating points.

TERMINUS. Lat. [from Gr. τέρμα.] A bound or limit, either of space or time; a limiting object, line, or point.

In the civil law. A mark or physical object, as a tree or stone, dividing one piece of land from another. Dig. 47. 21. Calv. Lex. Prateus.

A period of time fixed by law, (terminus juris.) Id.

A limited number. Id.

In old English law. A dividing or division line between lands, where metes or marks were set up. Bundæ, et metæ, et rationabiles divisæ, quæ ponuntur in terminis et finibus agrorum; bounds and metes and reasonable partitions, which are set up on the boundary lines and limits of lands. Bract. fol. 166 b, 167.

A term; a continuance of time; a fixed or limited period of time. Si fiat donatio ad terminum annorum, quamvis longissimum, qui excedat vitas hominum, tamen ex hoc non habebit donatorius liberum tenementum, cum terminus annorum certus sit, et determinatus, et terminus vitæ incertus; if a gift be made for a term of years, though of the longest duration, exceeding the lives of men, yet the donee shall not, in consequence of this, have a freehold, since a term of years is certain and limited, and the term of life uncertain. Bract. fol. 27. Durante termino; during the term. Id. ibid. Post terminum completum; after the term ended. Id. ibid. De termino in terminum; from term to term. Id. ibid. Bracton makes a distinction between terminus and tempus. Fieri poterit donatio ad terminum, vel ad tempus; ad terminum, vitæ vel annorum,—ad tempus, i. quousquè, vel donec provisum fuerit donatorio; a gift may be made for a term, or for a time; for a term, of life or years; for a time, as until provision be made for the donee. Bract. fol. 26 b.

A term; an estate granted for a limited period; a term for years or life. Co. Litt. 45 b. 2 Bl. Com. 143. Terminus et feodum non possunt constare simul in una eademque persona. The term and the fee cannot exist together in one and the same person. Plowd. 29.

A term of court; a juridical period of time. Spelman. Terminus Paschæ; Easter Term. Terminus Trinitatis; Trinity Term. Terminus Sancti Michaelis; Michaelmas Term. Terminus Sancti Hilarii; Hilary Term. Id.

A term or word, (vocabulum.) Id.

TERMINO. Span. In Spanish law. A common; common land. Common because of vicinage. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 1, c. 6, § 1, note.

TERMINUS. Lat. In modern law. A limiting point either of time or space, and either at the beginning or end of a period. The termini of a voyage are the two local points at which it begins and ends. The terminus à quo (limit from which,) is the point where it begins; the terminus ad quem, (limit to which,) is the point where it ends. 3 Kent's Com. 185. The termini of a road or way, are the two points at which it begins and ends. 1 East, 377. 8 Id. 4, 394.

In insurance law, the termini of the voyage are the two local points specified in the policy as the limits of the risk. 1 Arnould on Ins. 333, (339, Perkins' ed.) The terminus à quo, or place at which the risk commences, in policies on ships, is the port of departure; in policies on goods, the port of lading, which frequently but not necessarily, is the same place. Id. ibid. The terminus ad quem, or point at which the risk ends, is the port of the ship's destination, or the port or ports of the cargo's discharge. Id. ibid. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 13, sect. 4, § 1.

The expressions, terminus à quo, and terminus ad quem, are also sometimes applied to points of time. See 7 Man. & Gr. 149, 150, arg.

TERMINUS HOMINIS. L. Lat. In English ecclesiastical practice. A time for the determination of appeals, shorter than the terminus juris, appointed by the judge. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 11, num. 38. See Terminus juris.

TERMINUS JURIS. L. Lat. In English ecclesiastical practice. The time of one or two years, allowed by law for the determination of appeals. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 11, num. 38.

TERMOR. [L. Fr. termer; L. Lat. firmarius.] One who has a term in lands; one who holds lands for a certain time, as for a limited number of years; one who is entitled to a term of years; a lessee for a term. 2 Bl. Com. 142. Called, in the French of Britton, termer and fermer, and in the statute of Glocester, termour. Britt. c. 64. Stat. Gloc. c. 11. Called, by Lord Bacon, terminor. Works, iv. 216, 217.

TERMS. In the law of contracts. Conditions; propositions stated, or promises made, which, when assented to or accepted by another, settle the contract and bind the parties. Webster. "Terms is an expression applicable to the conveyances and covenants to be given, as much as to the amount of, and the time of paying the consideration." Woodbury, J. 8 Howard's R. 451, 466, citing 10 Wendell's R. 219. See 1 Wisconsin R. 313, 314.

TERMS OF COURT. In practice. Those stated periods of the year, during which courts sit for the dispatch of business. The terms of the English courts are supposed by Mr. Selden to have been instituted by William the Conqueror, but Sir Henry Spelman has clearly shown, in the opinion of Blackstone, that they were gradually formed from the canonical constitutions of the church; being indeed no other than those leisure seasons of the year which were not occupied by the great festivals or fasts, or which were not liable to the general avocations of rural business. 3 Bl. Com. 275.

TERRA. Lat. In old English law. Land; properly, arable land. Reg. Orig. 2. 10 Mod. 186. So called, according to Lord Coke, à terendo, quia vomere teritur; (from breaking up, because it is broken by the ploughshare.) Co. Litt. 4 a. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 179, 180, note. See Land.

Terra culta; tilled or cultivated land. Cowell.

Terra excultabilis; land that may be tilled or ploughed. 1 Mon. Angl. 426.

Terra frusca, or frisca; fresh land; not lately ploughed. 2 Mon. Angl. 327.

Terra lucrabilis; land that might be gained from the sea, or enclosed out of a waste, to particular use. 1 Mon. Angl. 406.

Terra Normannorum; Norman's land. Land so called in the reign of Henry III. being such as had been lately held by some noble Norman, who, by adhering to the French king or dauphin, had forfeited his estate in England, which by this means became an escheat to the crown. Paroch. Ant. 197. Cowell. Hale's Anal. sect. viii.

Terra nova; new land. Land newly granted, or newly cleared. Spelman.

Terra sabulosa; gravelly or sandy ground. Cowell.

Terra testamentalis; land held by charter or writing; boc-land. Spelman. Land that might be disposed of by will; devisable land. Cowell.

Terra vestita; land sown with corn; (terra segete sata.) Spelman. Called, in Saxon, gesettes-landes. LL. Canuti, 65 MS.

TERRA SALICA. L. Lat. [from sala, a house.] In the Salic law. Salic land; the land of the house; the land within that enclosure, which belonged to a German house. Esprit des Loix, liv. 18, c. 22. De terra vero Salica in mulierem nulla portio hæreditatis transit, sed hoc virilis sexus acquirit, hoc est, filii in ipsa hæreditate succedunt; no portion of the inheritance of Salic land passes to a woman, but this the male sex acquires, that is, the sons succeed in that inheritance. L. Salic. tit. 62, § 6.

TERRAGE. [L. Lat. terragium, from terra, land.] In old English law. A kind of tax or charge on land; a boon or duty of ploughing, reaping, &c. Cowell.

TERRAR. [L. Lat. terrarium, from terra, land.] In old English law. A book or roll containing a description of the several lands of an individual or of a town; a list of lands, (catalogus terrarum.) Spelman. Otherwise written terrier, (q. v.)

TERRARIUS. L. Lat. [from terra, land.] In old records. A land-holder, (qui terram possidet.) Annal. Waverl. in ann. 1086. Spelman.

TERRE, Tere. L. Fr. [from Lat. terra, q. v.] Land. Taunt de terre ove les appurtenances; so much land with the appurtenances. Britt. c. 39.

TERRE-TENANT, Ter-tenant. L. Fr. and Eng. A tenant, holder or occupier of land; a person in actual possession or occupation of land. Cowell. 2 Bl. Com. 91, 328.

TERRIER. [from L. Fr. terre, land.] In English law. A register or survey of lands; a book or roll in which the several lands, either of an individual or corporation, are described, containing the quantity of acres, boundaries, tenants' names, &c. Called anciently terrar, (q. v.) Cowell. See Arch. Pl. & Evid. 413, 414. Particularly applied to ecclesiastical lands. Tamlyn's Law of Evid. 144. By the ecclesiastical canons, an inquiry is directed to be made from time to time, of the temporal rights of the clergyman in every parish, and to be returned into the registry of the bishop.

This return is denominated a terrier. 2 Phillips on Evid. 119. See Anst. 300—305. 15 East, 641.

TERRITORIUM. Lat. [from terra, land.] A territory, or district; the territorial limits of a government; the extent or limits of the jurisdiction of a court. See Extra territorium. Called by Pomponius in the Digests, the whole amount of the lands within the limits of any state, (universitas agrorum intra fines cujusque civitatis.) Dig. 50. 16. 239. 8. The same writer observes that, according to some, the word was derived from the circumstance that the magistrate of the place has within those limits, the right of terrifying, that is, of clearing away, (terrendi, id est summovendi jus habet.) See the various derivations of the word in Grotius, de Jur. Bell. lib. 3, c. 6, § 4, n. 2. Gronovius, in a note on Grotius, (in loc.) remarks that the etymon of Pomponius is the only true one, and explains it by a reference to the usages of the Roman magistrates.

TERTIA. Lat. In old English and Scotch law. Third; (third part, tertia pars ;) dower. Spelman. Crag. de Jur. Feud. 308. 2 Bl. Com. 129. Closely rendered in Scotch, terce, (q. v.)

TERTIA DENUNCIATIO. Lat. In old English law. Third publication or proclamation of intended marriage. Cum bannum et tertia denunciatio fiat ; when the banns and third publication are made. Bract. fol. 307 b.

TERTIUS INTERVENIENS. L. Lat. In the civil law. A third person intervening; a third person who comes in between the parties to a suit; one who interpleads. Gilbert's For. Rom. 47. A party intervening in behalf of his interest. Clerke's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 35.

TESMOYN, Tesmoyne. L. Fr. In old English law. A witness. Et les nosmes des tesmoynes soient lus, et escritz en la chartre ; et bone cautele serra de procurer que les seals de tesmoynes fussent mys ; and the names of the witnesses should be read, and written in the charter [deed;] and it will be a good precaution to have the seals of the witnesses affixed. Britt. c. 39.

TESMOYNAGE. L. Fr. Testimony. Britt. c. 15.

TESMOYNAUNCE. L. Fr. Testimony. Britt. c. 1.

TEST ACT. In English law. The popular name of the statute 25 Car. II. c. 2, by which it was provided, that all persons having any office, civil or military, (with the exception of some few of an inferior kind,) or receiving pay from the crown, or holding a place of trust under it, should take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation, and also receive the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, according to the usage of the Church of England. 3 Steph. Com. 105. This provision had the effect of excluding not only Papists, but many classes of Protestant Dissenters, also, from every considerable place of trust or public employment; but it was mainly pointed against the former. Id. ibid. Sir William Blackstone calls this and the Corporation Acts, "two bulwarks, erected in order the better to secure the established church against perils from nonconformists of all denominations, infidels, Turks, Jews, heretics, Papists and sectaries." 2 Bl. Com. 58. It was repealed, however, in the year 1828, by statute 9 Geo. IV. c. 17, so far as regarded the administration of the sacrament, and a new form of declaration substituted. 3 Steph. Com. 108.

TEST PAPER. In practice. A paper or instrument shown to a jury as evidence. A term used in the Pennsylvania courts. 7 Penn. St. (Barr's) R. 428. Called also a standard paper. 6 Wharton's R. 284.

TESTA DE NEVIL. An ancient and authentic record in two volumes, in the custody of the Queen's Remembrancer in the Exchequer, said to be compiled by Jollan de Nevil, a justice itinerant, in the eighteenth and twenty-fourth years of Henry III. Cowell. These volumes were printed in 1807, under the authority of the Commissioners of the Public Records; and contain an account of fees held either immediately of the king, or of others who held of the king in capite ; fees holden in frankalmoign; serjeanties holden of the king; widows and heiresses of tenants in capite, whose marriages were in the gift of the king; churches in the gift of the king; escheats, and sums paid for scutages and aids; especially within the county of Hereford. Cowell. Wharton's Lex.

TESTAMENT. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Lat. testamentum, from testari, to testify, or attest.] A disposition of property, to take effect after the death of the person making it.* 4 Kent's Com. 501. See Will.

A disposition of personal property, to take effect after the death of the person making it.* Id. ibid. This is considered the proper sense of the term, in some of the old books. Co. Litt. 111 a. See infra.

A formal declaration or expression of a person's will, as to the disposition he would have made of his property after his death. This is a translation of the celebrated definition of the civil law,—Testamentum est voluntatis nostræ justa sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit. Dig. 28. 1. 1. Blackstone's translation of this definition is, "the legal declaration of a man's intentions, which he wills to be performed after his death." 2 Bl. Com. 499. For other translations, see Testamentum. Webster's definition presents essentially the same idea,—"a solemn authentic instrument in writing, by which a person declares his will as to the disposal of his estate and effects after his death."

 A testament has been distinguished from a will, both by common lawyers and civilians, but on different grounds. Swinburne, and other civilians, while they admit that, in a general sense, the words are synonymous, contend that, in a strict and proper sense, a testament was that kind of a will in which an executor was named, and that the appointment of an executor was of the essence of a testament, without which a will was no proper testament. Swinburne on Wills, part 1, sect. 1, 3. See Finch's Law, b. 2, ch. 15. This idea was derived from the testamentum of the civil law, an essential requisite of which was the appointment of an heir, (hæres,) to take the testator's property. Inst. 2. 23. 2. A different distinction was made between a testament and a will by the old common lawyers. Lord Coke observes that, "in law, most commonly ultima voluntas in scriptis, (a last will in writings,) is used where lands or tenements are devised, and testamentum, (testament,) where it concerneth chattels." Co. Litt. 111 a. Mr. Cruise notices both these distinctions, and expressly adopts the latter, in distinguishing a testament from a devise. Cruise Dig. tit. xxxviii. ch. 1, sect. 11. The distinction made by Swinburne, though adopted by Wentworth and other writers, may be considered as exploded in modern law. That of Lord Coke has maintained its ground more effectually. See 4 Kent's Com. 501. 1 Jarman on Wills, 1. And yet Sheppard expressly observes that "these words [testament and will, or last will,] are synonyma, and are, as it seems, promiscuously used in our law." Shep. Touch. 399. And Littleton himself, in the very section commented on by Lord Coke, applies the word testament to a disposition of lands. Home poit deviser per son testament ses terres et tenements. Litt. sect. 167. In modern law, the terms will and testament, are generally used without distinction, to express the instrument by which a man makes disposition of his property after his death. 1 Steph. Com. 544. Where the instrument is more formally described, both terms are made use of, and it is called a last will and testament. See 4 Kent's Com. 501. This conjoint use of both terms may be traced back as far as the old writ de tenementis legatis in the Register, in which the phrase, in testamento suo, in ultima voluntate suâ, occurs twice. Reg. Orig. 244 b.

The derivation of testamentum from testari and mens, formally adopted in the Institutes of Justinian, will be considered under Testamentum.

TESTAMENTARY. [from testamentum, a will.] Pertaining to a will or testament; as testamentary causes.

Derived from, founded on, or appointed by a testament or will; as a testamentary guardian, letters testamentary, &c.

TESTAMENTARY CAUSES. In English law. Causes or matters relating to the probate of wills, the granting of administrations, and the suing for legacies, of which the ecclesiastical courts formerly had jurisdiction. 3 Bl. Com. 95, 98.

TESTAMENTARY GUARDIAN. A guardian appointed by the last will of a father, for the person, and real and personal estate of his child, until the latter arrives of full age. 1 Bl. Com. 462. 2 Kent's Com. 224.

TESTAMENTO. Span. [from Lat. testamentum.] In Spanish law. A testament. Testamento abierto; an open testament; one dictated vivâ voce. Schmidt's Civ. Law, 214. Testamento cerrado; a close testament; one made in secret. Id. 215.

TESTAMENTUM. Lat. [from testari, to witness or attest; Gr. διαθήκη, (q. v.) a disposition.] In the civil law. A testament; a will, or last will; (Gr. τελευταία βουλήσις.) See Voluntas.

Testamentum est voluntatis nostræ justa sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit. A testament is the formal expression of one's will, respecting what one would have done after his death. Dig. 28. 1. 1. See Id. 29. 3. 2. 1. Translated, in the more antiquated language of Swinburne, "the just sentence of our will, touching that we would have done after our death." Swinburne on Wills, part 1, sect. 2. This has been adopted as the definition of a testament, in 1 Williams on Executors, 6. And see Taylor's Civ. Law, 531, 532, 534. Blackstone translates the same definition, "the legal declaration of a man's intentions, which he wills to be performed after his death." 2 Bl. Com. 499. In the Termes de la Ley, it is rendered, "the true declaration of our last will, in that we would to be done after our death." In Sheppard's Touchstone,—"the full and complete declaration of a man's mind, or last will of that he would have to be done after his death." Shep. Touch. 399. It will be seen that in the original definition, there is no express reference to property, as the subject of the testamentary disposition. Mr. Preston, in his edition of Sheppard, has supplied this idea, by adding to the translation of that author, the clause, [by way of disposition of his property.]

Swinburne goes largely into detail in commenting on this definition, dwelling especially on the force of the words justa and sententia; but the essence of his observations is much more forcibly and elegantly given by Blackstone.

 The celebrated etymology of testamentum in the Institutes, may be noticed under this head. In the principium of the tenth title of the second book, Justinian briefly but emphatically declares that Testamentum ex eo appellatur, quod testatio mentis sit; a testament is so called, because it is a testifying of the mind. This derivation seems to have been adopted from Servius Sulpicius, a distinguished jurist who flourished before the reign of Augustus, and who, in his second book, De sacris detestandis, declared the word to be composed of contestatio and mentis. Its absurdity was long ago pointed out by Aulus Gellius, and later, by the grammarian Laurentius Valla, who very satisfactorily show testamentum to be a simple word, framed from the verb testari, by the use of a common termination, and belonging to the same class with the words calceamentum, condimentum, pavimentum, regimentum, salsamentum, vestimentum and others. A. Gell. Noct. Att. vi. 12. Laurent. Vall. Elegant. lib. 6, c. 36. The civilians, however, as might be expected, have strongly sustained the derivation, though upon different grounds. Swinburne defends it as being not intended as a precise etymology of the word, but "a certain allusion rather of the voice only," meaning probably that it was an explanation drawn from the casual coincidence between the sound or form of the word and its essential meaning. Swinburne on Wills, part 1, sect. 1. Other civilians have treated it as being properly a mere definition,—testatio mentis, a solemn declaration of the mind or intention. That it was intended, however, as an etymon in the proper sense, is clear from the text of the Institutes. Calvin concedes this, and boldly justifies it to its full extent, claiming for jurisconsults the license or right of framing their derivations according to the supposed nature of things, without regard to the proprieties of language or the niceties of grammar. (!) Calv. Lex. voc. Testamentum.

Lord Coke agrees with Justinian in the composition of the word testament, it being entirely to his taste in matters of derivation, as evidenced in his analysis of sacramentum, and other words of similar form. Co. Litt. 322 b. 3 Inst. 165. Blackstone, however, pronounces it to be "an etymon which seems to savour too much of the conceit," adding, very justly, that "the definition of the old Roman lawyers is much better than their etymology." 2 Bl. Com. 499.

TESTAMENTUM. Lat. [from testari, q. v.] In old English law. A testament, or will; a disposition of property made in contemplation of death. Bract. fol. 60. Bracton treats it as a species of donatio mortis causa. Id. ibid. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57. Executoribus ad faciendum testamentum defuncti; to executors to carry into effect the testament of the deceased. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 18.

A writing, charter or instrument, by which conveyances of lands and other things were made; so called, because it operated as a testimony or evidence of the transaction, or because it comprehended the names of the witnesses, (testium nomina contineret.) Spelman.

TESTARI. Lat. [from testis, a witness.] In the civil law. To testify; to attest; to declare, publish or make known a thing before witnesses. Calv. Lex.

To make a will. Id.

TESTATE. [from Lat. testatus.] One who has made a will; one who dies leaving a will; the opposite of intestate, but much less frequently used. See 25 Penn. St. R. 31.

TESTATO. Lat. In the civil law. Testate; having made a will. Dig. 50. 17. 7. See Testatus.

TESTATOR. Lat. and Eng. [from testari, to make a will.] One who makes or has made a testament or will; one who dies leaving a will. This term is borrowed from the civil law. Inst. 2. 14. 5. 6.

TESTATRIX. L. Lat. and Eng. [fem. of testator, q. v.] A woman who makes, or has made a testament or will; a woman who dies leaving a will; a female testator.

TESTATUM. Lat. (Testified.) In practice. The name of a clause inserted in a writ of capias, or execution, when it is issued after the return of non est inventus, or nulla bona to a previous writ, but to the sheriff of a different county; reciting the former writ, and that it is testified, (testatum est, in the old forms,) that the defendant lurks or wanders, or has goods in the county to which the second writ is issued. 3 Bl. Com. 283. 1 Tidd's Pr. 128. 2 Id. 1022.

TESTATUM WRIT. In practice. A writ containing a testatum clause; such as a testatum capias, a testatum fi. fa. and a testatum ca. sa. See Testatum.

TESTATUS. Lat. In the civil law. Testate; one who has made a will. Testatus et intestatus; testate and intestate. Dig. 50. 17. 7.

TESTE. L. Lat. (Witness.) In old English practice. The initial and emphatic word of the clause at the conclusion of writs, containing the attestation of the sovereign, or chief justice out of whose court it was issued, and the day on which it was issued or granted. In original writs, it ran thus: TESTE MEIPSO, apud Westmonasterium, xxiiii die Junii, anno regni nostri tricesimo septimo. (Witness ourself at Westminster, the twenty-fourth day of June, in the thirty-seventh year of our reign.) Reg. Orig. 1, et passim. Id. Appendix, 1—10. In judicial writs, the clause ran thus: TESTE Matthæo Hale, Milite, apud Westmonasterium, &c. (Witness, Sir Matthew Hale, Knight, at Westminster, &c.) Cowell. It corresponded to the date of other instruments, and is called the date, (L. Lat. data, L. Fr. date,) in Bracton and Britton. See Data, Date.

In modern practice, the word teste has been retained as the name of the corresponding clause in modern writs, (which is merely a translation of the old form,) being particularly applied to the day on which the writ is witnessed, that is, issued or supposed to be issued, though it is expressive also of the place where the court is or was sitting at such time. It has indeed been converted into a verb, a writ being frequently said to be teste'd (or, as it is usually written, tested) of such a day.

TESTE MEIPSO. L. Lat. (Witness ourself.) In old English law and practice. A solemn formula of attestation by the sovereign, used at the conclusion of charters, and other public instruments, and also of original writs out of chancery. Spelman.

Teste meipsa, were the words used by a queen. The first writ in the Register is a writ of right patent, running in the name of Queen Elizabeth, and concluding with the clause, Teste meipsa apud Westmonasterium, &c. Reg. Orig. 1.

TESTES. Lat. [plur. of testis, q. v.] In the civil and old English law. Witnesses. Possunt omnes testes et uno annulo signare testamentum; all the witnesses may seal the will with one ring or signet. Inst. 2. 10. 5.

Ponderantur testes, non numerantur, (q. v.) Witnesses are weighed, not counted.

Testibus deponentibus in pari numero, dignioribus est credendum. Where the witnesses who testify are in equal number [on both sides,] the more worthy are to be believed. 4 Inst. 279.

TESTES. L. Fr. In old English law. Heads; polls. Yearb. T. 5 Edw. III. 21.

TESTIFICARE. Lat. [from testis, witness, and facere, to make.] In practice. To testify; to give evidence. Ad testificandum; to testify. See Habeas corpus ad testificandum.

TESTIFY. [from Lat. testificare, q. v.] To give evidence; to bear witness; to declare under oath or affirmation before a tribunal, court, judge or magistrate, for the purpose of proving some fact.

TESTIMONIO. Span. [from Lat. testimonium, q. v.] In Spanish-American law. An attested copy of an instrument; a second original. 8 Texas R. 210. 7 Id. 332, 378.

TESTIMONIUM. Lat. In civil and old English law. Testimony; evidence of a witness. Calv. Lex. Testimonia ponderanda sunt, non numeranda. Evidences are to be weighed, not numbered or counted. Bell's Dict.

Attestation of an instrument. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25.

TESTIMONIUM CLAUSE. In conveyancing. That clause of a deed or instrument with which it concludes: "In witness whereof, the parties to these presents have hereunto set their hands and seals." This, in the old Latin forms, ran: In cujus testimonium, partes, &c. whence the clause has received its name. It is said to be introduced, not as constituting any part of the deed, but merely to preserve the evidence of the due execution of it. Daniel, J. 8 Howard's R. 33—39. See 6 Man. & Gr. 386. A deed without it was held good in Dyer, 22 b. Both Coke and Blackstone, however, enumerate it among the formal and orderly parts of a deed. Co. Litt. 6 a. 2 Bl. Com. 304.

TESTIMONY. [from Lat. testimonium.] Evidence of a witness, or witnesses; evidence given by a witness, under oath or affirmation; as distinguished from evidence derived from writings, and other sources.

TESTIS. Lat. In the civil and common law. A witness. Dig. 22. 5. Cod. 4. 20. Nov. 90. Called, in the old Roman law, superstes, and antistes. Calv. Lex. See Best on Evid. 140, § 114, note.

Testis de visu præponderat aliis. An eye-witness is of more weight than others. 4 Inst. 279.

Nemo in propria causa testis esse debet, (q. v.) No man ought to be a witness in his own cause. Nullus idoneus testis in re sua intelligitur. No one is considered a fit witness in his own matter, [business or cause.] Dig. 22. 5. 10.

Testis corruptus; a bribed or corrupted witness; one prevailed upon by money or persuasion to give evidence. Calv. Lex.

Testis incertus; a doubtful or unreliable witness; one who testifies from hearsay. Id.

Testis inimicus; an unfriendly or hostile witness. Id.

Testis juratus; a sworn witness. Id.

TEXTUS ROFFENSIS. L. Lat. In old English law. The Rochester Text. An ancient manuscript containing many of the Saxon laws, and the rights, customs, tenures, &c. of the church of Rochester, drawn up by Ernulph, bishop of that see, from A. D. 1114, to 1124. Cowell. Blount gives it a much higher antiquity.

THANAGE OF THE KING. [L. Lat. thanagium regis.] In old English law. A certain part of the king's land or property, of which the ruler or governor was called thane. Cowell. Blount.

THANE, Thayne. [Sax. thegen, from thenian, to serve; L. Lat. thanus.] In Saxon law. A noble; a freeman of the highest rank. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 5. 1 Spence's Chancery, 5.

One who served the king; a king's tenant. Cowell. Mr. Selden supposes thane to have been a feudal title. Wright on Tenures, 47, note (c.)

THASSARE, Tassare. L. Lat. In old records. To lay up hay or corn [grain] into a tass, toss, stack, rick or mow. Paroch. Antiq. 550. Cowell.

THEADA, Theoda, Theuda. L. Lat. [from Sax. theod.] People; a people or nation. L. Salic. tit. 48. Spelman.

THECLATURA. L. Lat. In old European law. A mark upon a tree. LL. Longobard. lib. 1, tit. 26. Spelman.

THEFT. See Larceny.

THEFT-BOTE. [from Sax. theofte, theft, and bote, a composition or fine.] In Saxon law. A sum paid by way of composition or satisfaction for a theft. Spelman.

In old English law. The receiving of goods from a thief, to favor and maintain him. Spelman. Cowell. In this application, Spelman supposes bote to have the sense of booty, or plunder (præda.)

ΘΕΙΑ, Θεία. Gr. In the civil law. An aunt. A term applied to both paternal and maternal aunts. Inst. 3. 6. 1. Expressed in Latin, Thia, (q. v.).

ΘΕΙΟΣ, Θεῖος. Gr. In the civil law. An uncle. A term applied to both paternal and maternal uncles. Inst. 3. 6. 1.

THELONIUM. L. Lat. Toll. See Theolonium.

ΘΗΛΥΓΟΝΙΑ, Θηλυγονία. Gr. [from θῆλυς, female, and γόνος, generation.] In the civil law. The female line. Nov. 118, c. 1.

THEM. Sax. In old English law. Another form of theme, (q. v.) Fleta defines it "an acquittance of amercements of the following of their villeins," (acquietantiam amerciamentorum sequelæ propriorum suorum.) Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 9.

THEME. Sax. In Saxon law. The power of having jurisdiction over naifs or villeins, with their suits or offspring, lands, goods and chattels. Co. Litt. 116 a. Otherwise written them and team, (qq. v.) The word occurs in old Scotch law, and is defined by Skene, the power of having servants and slaves. De Verb. Signif.

THEMITIÆ. L. Lat. In old records. Trees planted in fields for fencing or protecting hedges. Spelman.

THEN. Sax. In old English law. A slave. Co. Litt. 116 a. Spelman. Misprinted in Fleta, (lib. 1, c. 47, § 27,) thett.

THEN. [Lat. tunc, L. Fr. donque.] A common word of reference in wills and other instruments. Where life interests are bequeathed to several persons in succession, terminating with a gift to children, or any other class of objects, "then living," the word "then" is held to point to the period of the death of the person last named, (whether he is, or is not the survivor of the several legatees for life,) and is not considered as referring to the period of the determination of the several prior interests. 8 Sim. 448.

THEODEN. Sax. In Saxon law. A husbandman or inferior tenant; an under thane. Cowell.

THEODOSIAN CODE. See Code of Theodosius.

THEOLONIUM. L. Lat. [from Lat. telonium, q. v.] In old English law. Toll. Quieti de theolonio per totum regnum nostrum; quit of toll throughout our whole realm. Reg. Orig. 258 b. THESAURER. Sc. Treasurer. 3 St. Trials, 691.

THESAURUS. Lat. In the civil law. Treasure; a sum of money hidden or buried. Inst. 2. 1. 39. A deposit or concealment of money made so long ago that no memory of it exists, so that it is now without an owner, (vetus depositio pecuniæ, cujus non extat memoria, ut jam dominum non habeat.) Calv. Lex. Brissonius. This description of treasure is copied by Bracton, and from Bracton by Lord Coke. Bract. fol. 120. 3 Inst. 132. See Fleta, lib. 1, c, 43, § 2.

In old English law. Treasury, or exchequer. Cowell.

THESAURUS ABSCONDITUS. Lat. In old English law. Treasure hidden, or buried. Spelman.

THESAURUS INVENTUS. Lat. In old English law. Treasure found; treasure-trove. Bract. fol. 119 b, 122. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 18, § 20. Id. lib. 2, c. 52, § 11. 1 Bl. Com. 95.

THEYN. Sax. In old English law. A freeman. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 26.

THIA. Lat. In the civil and old European law. An aunt. The Latin form of the Gr. θεια, (q. v.) The Ital. zia, and Span. tia are from the same source. Spelman.

THIFT. Sc. In Scotch law. Theft. Thift-bute; theft-bote, (q. v.) 1 Pitc. Cr. Trials, part 2, p. 144.

THING, Thung. Sax. In Saxon law. A lathe, or hundred. Spelman. In quibusdam verò provinciis Angliæ, vocatur lede quod isti thing: but in some provinces of England, that is called lede (lathe) which they call thing. LL. Edw. Conf. c. 34. Hoved. ed. apud Spelman, voc. Thungrevius.

THINGS. [Lat. res; Fr. choses.] The most general denomination of the subjects of property, as contradistinguished from persons. 2 Bl. Com. 16.

"THINGS," in a will, is generally construed to mean things ejusdem generis, (of the same kind.) 1 Dow, 73. Sugden's Law of Property, 221, 222. It will be limited to personal effects, if its connection with other words require. 1 Jarman on Wills, 693, (595, Perkins' ed.)

Things are construed according to that which was the cause thereof. Finch's Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 4.

Things are dissolved as they be contracted. Id. b. 1, c. 3, n. 7.

Things grounded upon an ill and void beginning cannot have a good perfection. Id. b. 1, c. 3, n. 8.

Things incident cannot be severed. Id. b. 1, c. 3, n. 12.

Things accessary are of the nature of the principal. Id. b. 1, c. 3, n. 25.

THINGS REAL, (otherwise called REALTY.) Such things as are permanent, fixed and immoveable, which cannot be carried out of their place, as lands and tenements. 2 Bl. Com. 16. This definition has been objected to, as not embracing incorporeal rights. Mr. Stephen defines things real to "consist of things substantial and immoveable, and of the rights and profits annexed to, or issuing out of these." 1 Steph. Com. 156. Things real are otherwise described to consist of lands, tenements and hereditaments. See Real.

THINGS PERSONAL. Goods, money and all other moveables, which may attend the owner's person wherever he thinks proper to go. 2 Bl. Com. 16. Things personal consist of goods, money, and all other moveables, and of such rights and profits as relate to moveables. 1 Steph. Com. 156.

THINGUS. L. Lat. [from Sax. thœng, or theing, a minister.] In old records. A nobleman; a knight or freeman; a thane, (thanus.) Sciatis me concessisse omnibus militibus, et omnibus thingis, et omnibus libere tenentibus, &c.; know ye that I have granted to all knights, and all thanes, and all free tenants, &c. Crompt. Jurisd. 197. Cowell. Spelman.

THIRD-BOROW. In old English law. A constable. Stat. 28 Hen. VIII. c. 10. Cowell. Skinner, however, supposes it to mean the third pledge in a decennary. Blount.

THIRD NIGHT AWN-HYNDE. (Sax. thrid night agen-hine.) A phrase in the Laws of Edward the Confessor, (c. 17,) descriptive of a person who was entertained a third night in the house of another, and was thence called his domestic, or the inmate of his family. Spelman. The word agenhine is written by Bracton, hogenehyne, (q. v.) and occurs in the old books in various other forms.

THIRD OFFENCE. The third offence it [the law] esteemeth more heinous. Finch's Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 52.

THIRD-PENNY. Sax. [Lat. tertius denarius comitatûs.] In Saxon law. A third part of the profits of fines and penalties imposed at the county court, which was among the perquisites enjoyed by the earl. LL. Edw. Conf. c. 31, 33. Cowell. Crabb's Hist. 17.

THIRDEN-DELE. O. Eng. Third part. Old deed in 1 And. 54.

THIRLAGE. In Scotch law. A service by which the possessor of lands was bound to carry his grain to a certain mill to be ground, and to pay a duty therefor called a multure. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 140. Now commuted for an annual payment in grain, by stat. 39 Geo. III. c. 55. See Bell's Dict.

THOL. In old records. A form of toll, (q. v.) Hence the L. Lat. tholonium. A certain portion of grain and other things sold in a market, paid to its owner. Reg. Priorat. Cokeford, cited in Cowell.

THOLONIUM, Thollonium. L. Lat. [from thol, (q. v.) or a corrupted form of telonium, q. v.] In old English law. Toll; a liberty or privilege of buying and selling within one's own land; (libertas emendi et vendendi in terrâ suâ.) Lamb. Archaion. fol. 132.

THORNTON. The author of a Summa, or abridgment of Bracton, written in the reign of Edward I. Gilbert de Thornton was Chief Justice of the King's Bench in the eighteenth year of this king, and is supposed by Mr. Selden to have written his summa by the king's command, or at least under his favor. Selden describes him as "not a bare epitomizer, but sometimes also an excellent interpreter and expositor of Bracton." Diss. ad Flet. c. 2, sect. 4. Id. c. 3, sect. 1.

THRAVE, Threave. Sax. [L. Lat. trabes, trava.] In old English law. A measure of corn or grain, consisting of twenty-four sheaves or four shocks, six sheaves to every shock. Stat. 2 Hen. VI. c. 2. Cowell.

THREAD. [L. Lat. filum.] A middle line; a line running through the middle of a stream or road. "The thread of the stream." Shaw, C. J. 2 Cushing's R. 207. 4 Wisconsin R. 486, 508. "An abuttor runs to the thread of the street, unless his deed contains an express provision limiting him to the edge." 26 Penn. St. R. 223. See Filum, Filum aquæ, Filum viæ.

THRIMSA, Thrymsa. Sax. [from thrim, three.] A Saxon coin of the value of three shillings. Lamb. Archaion. Spelman.

A coin of the value of the third of a shilling, that is, four-pence, or a groat. Selden's Tit. of Hon. fol. 604. Cowell. 1 Reeves' Hist. 15.

THRITHING, Trithing. Sax. In Saxon and old English law. The third part of a county; a division of a county consisting of three or more hundreds. Cowell. Corrupted to the modern riding, which is still used in Yorkshire. 1 Bl. Com. 116.

THURG TOLL. See Toll thorough.

THURINGIAN CODE. [Lex Aneliorum Werinorum.] One of the barbarian codes, as they are termed; supposed by Montesquieu to have been given by Theodoric, King of Austrasia, to the Thuringians, who were his subjects. Esprit des Lois, lib. 28, c. 1.

THUTHINGA. L. Lat. A tithing. Bract. fol. 117.

TIE. To bind. "The parson is not tied to find the parish clark." 1 Leon. 94.

Tielx, tiex, tieux, tilz; (plur.) such. Litt. sect. 10. Kelham.

TIERCE. L. Fr. [from Lat. tertius.] Third. Tierce mien; third hand. Britt. c. 120.

TIGH, Teage. In old records. A close or enclosure; a croft. Cowell.

TIGNUM. Lat. In the civil law. A beam; the beam of a house. See Servitus tigni immittendi.

In a larger sense, every kind of material out of which houses were built. Appellatione tigni omnis materia significatur, ex qua ædificia fiunt. Inst. 2. 1. 29. See Dig. 10. 4. 7, pr. Id. 41. 1. 7. 10. Id. 47. 3. 1. Id. 50. 16. 62.

TIMBER. Properly, such trees only as are fit to be used in building, as oak, ash and elm, [and pine in the United States.] 2 Bl. Com. 281. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 20, § 26. But some trees may, by the custom of the country, be reckoned timber which are not properly so; as birch, beech, cherry, aspen, willow, white-thorn, holly, black-thorn, horse chestnut, lime, yew, crab and hornbeam. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 20, § 26. Cruise's Dig. tit. iii. ch. 2, sect. 7, (White's ed.)

TIME. [Lat. tempus; Fr. temps.] A word expressive both of a precise point or terminus, and of an interval between two points.

When time is to be computed from, or after a certain day, it has been held that that day is to be excluded in the computation, unless it appear that a different computation was intended; for no moment of time can be said to be after a given day, until that day has expired. See 1 Pick. R. 485. 7 J. J. Marsh. R. 202. 1 Blackf. R. 392. 4 N. Hamp. R. 267. 3 Penn. R. 200. See United States Digest, Time. So, if time is to be computed from any act done, it has been held that the day on which the act is done is to be excluded in the computation, for a day is to be considered as an indivisible point of time, and there can be no distinction between a computation from an act done, and a computation from the day on which the act was done. See 1 Pick. R. 485, 494, 495. But there are cases in which the contrary has been held. 9 Cranch, 104. 4 Wash. C. C. R. 232. It has indeed been said that there is no general rule on this subject, and in computing time from an act or an event, the day is to be inclusive or exclusive, according to the reason of the thing, and the circumstances of the case. 15 Vesey, Jr. 248. See 4 Kent's Com. 95, note.

In computing the six years mentioned in the statute of limitations, the words of the statute being "within six years next after the cause of action accrued," the day on which the cause of action accrued is to be included. 15 Mass. R. 193.

TIME IMMEMORIAL. [L. Lat. tempus immemoriale.] Time out of memory; time out of mind. Described in the old books as "time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary," (tempus cujus contrarium memoria hominum non existit.) Litt. sect. 170, 143, 145. This is apparently taken from the civil law, in which the phrases quod memoriam excedit, cujus origo memoriam excedit, cujus contrarium memoria non extat, occur. 1 Mack. Civ. Law, 299, § 283, note (e.) Id. 300, Kaufmann's note.

There is a singular confusion in the English books between the phrases "time immemorial," or "time out of memory," and the opposite phrase, "time of memory;" both being applied to the same arbitrary period of time commencing from the reign of Richard I. Thus, it has been said so late as the preamble of the statute 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, that the expression "time immemorial," or "time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," was then, by the law of England, in many cases, considered to include and denote the whole period of time from the reign of Richard I. But this same period is expressly called by Hale and Blackstone "time of memory."

Hale's Hist. Com. Law, 4. 2 Bl. Com. 31. The expression "time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary" properly refers to the period anterior to the reign of Richard I. and is so explained by Mr. Serjeant Stephen in his New Commentaries. 1 Steph. Com. 45. See Time of memory, Time out of memory.

TIME OF MEMORY. [L. Lat. tempus memoriæ; L. Fr. temps de memorie.] In English law. Time commencing from the beginning of the reign of Richard I. 2 Bl. Com. 31. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, 4. "Whatsoever was before that time is before time of memory. What is since that time is, in a legal sense, said to be within or since time of memory." Id. ibid.

Lord Coke defines time of memory to be "when no man alive hath had any proof to the contrary, nor hath any conusance to the contrary." Co. Litt. 86 a, b.

TIME OUT OF MEMORY. Time beyond memory; time out of mind; time to which memory does not extend. This phrase being the opposite of time of memory, ought to be referred to a time anterior to that described as "time of memory." But it has been strangely referred to the same period. See Time immemorial. What is before time of memory is supposed without a beginning, or at least, such a beginning as the law takes notice of. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, 4.

TIME POLICY. In the law of insurance. A policy in which the risk is limited to a certain fixed term or period of time specified, instead of being limited by local termini. 1 Arnould on Ins. 409, (414, Perkins' ed.) A policy on time insures no specific voyage, but covers any voyage within the prescribed time, and the loss and damage the ship may sustain by the perils insured against, within the limited period. 12 Peters' R. 378. 3 Wendell's R. 283.

TIMOR. Lat. In the civil law. Fear. Vani timoris justa excusatio non est. The excuse of a groundless fear is not valid. Dig. 50. 17. 184.

TINEL. L. Fr. A place where justice was administered. Kelham. Tinel (or tynel) le roy; the king's hall. Id. Blount.

TINEMAN. Sax. In old forest law. A petty officer of the forest who had the care of vert and venison by night, and performed other servile duties. The word occurs in the forest laws of Canute, where it is explained to mean homo minutus. Const. Canut. R. de Foresta, c. 4. Spelman.

TINET. [L. Lat. tinettum.] In old records. Brush-wood and thorns for fencing and hedging. Cart. 21 Hen. VI. Cowell. Blount.

TINEWALD. The ancient parliament, or annual convention in the Isle of Man, held upon Midsummer-day, at St. John's chapel. Cowell.

TINNELLUS. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. The sea-mark; high-water mark; tide-mouth. Skene de Verb. Signif.

TIN-PENNY. [Sax. teon-penig, from teon, ten.] In Saxon law. A customary tribute paid to the tithing-man, to support the trouble and charge of his office. Cowell. Chartul. Abbat. Radinges, MS. cited ibid. Dufresne seems to have been mistaken in defining this word to mean a tax of acknowledgment paid for tin mines, or the liberty of digging tin.

TINSEL OF THE FEU. In Scotch law. The loss of the feu, from allowing two years of feu duty to run into the third unpaid. Bell's Dict.

TIPSTAFF. [L. Lat. saio, from Sax. saiol, or sagol, a staff.] In English practice. A ministerial officer who attends the judges while sitting in court, and at their chambers, and is particularly charged with the custody of prisoners, or persons committed to prison. 1 Tidd's Pr. 54, 349. See 12 Mod. 634. So called from the staff he carries, which is painted or ornamented at the extremity, or, according to Cowell, tipt with silver. The tipstaffs were formerly appointed by the Warden of the Fleet Prison. 1 Tidd's Pr. 53.

TITHES. [from Sax. teotha, tenth; L. Lat. decimæ.] In English law. The tenth part of the increase, yearly arising and renewing from the profits of lands, the stock upon lands, and the personal industry of the inhabitants. 2 Bl. Com. 24. A species of incorporeal hereditament; being an ecclesiastical inheritance collateral to the estate of the land, and due only to an ecclesiastical person by ecclesiastical law. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 151, § 133.

The above definition of Blackstone has been censured as faulty, in its supposing tithe to consist in all cases of the tenth part of the increase yearly arising and renewing. 2 Chitt. Bl. Com. 24, note. It has been adopted, however, without objection, by Mr. Stephen. 3 Steph. Com. 123. Mr. Crabb very succinctly defines tithes to be the "tenths of the produce of the ground, or of personal industry." 1 Crabb's Real Prop. ub. sup.

Prædial tithes are such as arise immediately from the ground; as grain of all sorts, hay, wood, fruits, and herbs. Id. ibid.

Mixed tithes are such as do not arise immediately from the ground, but from things nourished by the ground; as calves, lambs, chickens, colts, milk, cheese, and eggs. Id. ibid.

Personal tithes are such as arise by the industry of man, being the tenth part of the clear gain, after charges deducted. Id. ibid. See 2 Chitt. Bl. Com. 24, note.

Tithes are now commuted into a rent charge, the amount of which is annually adjusted according to the average price of corn, [grain.] 1 Crabb's R. Prop. 161, et seq. Wharton's Lex.

TITHING. [Sax. teothung, theothing; a company of ten; L. Lat. tithinga, tithingum, tethinga, theothinga, decenna, decuria.] In Saxon law. The number or company of ten freeholders, with their families, who all dwelt together and were sureties or free-pledges to the king for the good behavior of each other. Cowell. 1 Bl. Com. 114. 1 Reeves' Hist. 13. Otherwise called a decennary or friborg, (qq. v.)

TITHING-MAN. [Sax. tienhefod, head of ten; L. Lat. decanus friborgi, capitalis plegius; thethingmannus.] In Saxon law. The head or chief of a tithing; one of the ten freeholders or pledges who composed the tithing, annually appointed to preside over the other nine; a chief pledge, head borough, or borsholder.* 1 Bl. Com. 114. 2 Inst. 73. Spelman, vocc. Friborga, Decanus friborgi.

In modern law,—a constable. "After the introduction of justices of the peace, the offices of constable and tithing-man became so similar, that we now regard them as precisely the same." Willcock on Constables, Introd.

In New-England,—a parish officer annually elected to preserve good order in the church during divine service, and to make complaint of any disorderly conduct. Webster.

TITHING-PENY, Thething peny, Tedinpeni. In Saxon and old English law. Money paid to the sheriff by the several tithings of his county. Cowell.

TITIUS. Lat. A Roman name, very commonly used in the civil law, in illustrating rules by examples; like the "John Stiles," or "John Doe" of the old English books, and the "A. B." of modern treatises. Si in chartis membranisve tuis carmen vel historiam vel orationem Titius scripserit, hujus corporis non Titius sed tu dominus esse videris; if Titius shall have written a poem, or a history, or an oration upon your papers or parchments, you and not Titius will be deemed the owner of the corpus, i. e. the poem, &c. so written. Inst. 2. 1. 33. Titius filius hæres mihi esto; let Titius my son be my heir. Id. 2. 16, pr. Dig. 28. 5. 1, 2, 3.

Titius (or Ticius) is also sometimes used by Bracton, in his illustrations. Ticius alienam plantam in solo suo posuit; ipsius erit planta. Titius has set another man's plant in his ground; the plant shall be his. Bract. fol. 10. Si Titius consul factus fuerit; if Titius shall be made consul. Id. fol. 99 b. But these are obvious quotations from the civil law. Occasionally the name is employed in illustrating the practice of the English courts. Titius de tali loco, et socii sui justitiarii itinerantes in tali comitatu; Titius of such a place, and his companions, justices itinerating in such a county. Id. fol. 236 b. But the instances of this are very rare; the letters of the alphabet being generally employed in the examples, as they are in the writs in the Register. Si feoffavero A. et A. B. et B. C. et sic in infinitum. Id. fol. 81. Sir William Blackstone makes occasional use of this name. 1 Bl. Com. 56. 2 Id. 10.

TITLE. [L. Fr. tytle; Lat. titulus, q. v.] The lawful cause or ground of possessing that which is ours, (justa causa possidendi quod nostrum est.) Co. Litt. 345 b.—The means whereby the owner of lands has the just possession of his property. 2 Bl. Com. 195.—The means whereby the owner of lands, or other real property, has the just and legal possession and enjoyment of it. Cruise Dig. tit. xxix. ch. 1, sect. 2.—The means whereby a man cometh to land. Co. Litt. ub. sup. See Titulus. These definitions, it will be seen, confine the application of the word to real property. In modern law, however, it is constantly applied to personal property also. When two titles concur, the best is preferred. Finch's Law, b. 1, c. 4, n. 82.

According to Lord Coke, the word title seems strictly to have imported, in the old law of real property, something less than right, or, as he describes it, "title properly is, as some say, where a man has a lawful cause of entry into lands, whereof another is seised, for the which he can have no action." Co. Litt. 345 b. 8 Co. 153 b. "But legally," he adds, "it includes a right also, for every right is a title, but every title is not such a right for which an action lies." Co. Litt. ub. sup. Hale and Finch make a distinction between the terms. See Hale's Anal. sect. xxxii. Finch's Law, b. 2, ch. 2. In modern practice, however, they are constantly associated together.

A title is further described in the old books as consisting for the most part of muniments, which fortify and protect the ground of possession, (plerumque constat ex munimentis quæ muniunt et tuentur causam.) 8 Co. 153 b. See Title deeds, Abstract of title.

TITLE DEEDS. Deeds which constitute, or are the evidence of title to lands; muniments of title; the written evidences of ownership of lands. See Title, Abstract of title, Muniments.

TITTLE. A point used in the spelling or abbreviation of words. Thus, the writing of South. instead of South'. is called a defect of a tittle. Yearb. T. 7 Hen. VI. 25. See 6 Mod. 273, arg.

TITULADA. Span. [from Lat. titulus.] In Spanish law. Title. White's New Recop. b. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 2.

TITULATUS. Lat. In canon law. Annexed to a church, (ecclesiæ ascriptus.) Spelman.

TIT'LUS. A contraction of titulus. 1 Inst. Cler. 13.

TITULUS. Lat. [from tueri, to protect.] In the civil law. Title; the source or ground of possession, (causa possessionis;) the means whereby possession of a thing is acquired, whether such possession be lawful or not. 1 Mack. Civ. Law, 243, § 233. Id. 197, § 279. Heineccius makes a distinction between titulus, (title,) and modus adquirendi, (the manner of acquiring;) describing the former as the remoter, the latter as the proximate or immediate cause of ownership. Hein. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 339.

In old English law. Title; ground of ownership of land. A vero domino ejici potuit et impune, si tempus quod sufficiat pro titulo non intervenerit; but he may be ejected by the true owner, and with impunity, if a time have not intervened sufficient to constitute a title. Bract. fol. 165 b.

A lawful cause or ground of possession. Titulus est justa causa possidendi id quod nostrum est; title is the lawful ground of possessing that which is ours. 8 Co. 153 b. Co. Litt. 345 b.

TITULUS. Lat. In old ecclesiastical law. A temple or church; the material edifice, (ecclesiæ materialis.) Spelman. So called, as Spelman supposes, because the priest in charge of it derived therefrom his name and title.

T'LE. A contraction of tale. 1 Inst. Cler. 13.

T'NSGR'. A contraction of transgressio. 1 Inst. Cler. 13.

TO, [Lat. ad, usque ad,] in expressing a boundary, is a term of exclusion, unless, by necessary implication, manifestly used in a different sense. "I consider the law to be clearly settled, that a boundary on a stream, or by a stream, or 'to' a stream, includes the flats at least to low-water mark, and in many cases to the middle thread of the river. It may be different when the boundary is 'to the bank,' for in such cases, the boundary is or may be limited to the very bank, and may not extend into the stream, or the flats thereof." Story, J. 3 Sumner's R. 178.

TO LANGE AND TO BRED. A Saxon or old English phrase used in Bracton, the meaning of which is very obscure. It occurs in the following passage: Et sciendum quod statim in ipsa inquisitione, et coram coronatoribus, præsentatur Englischeria, sed diversimodè tamen, secundum diversas consuetudines comitatuum. In quibusdam vero comitatibus, presentatur Englischeria, sive mortuus fuerit masculus sive fœmina, per duos masculos ex parte patris, et per duas fœminas ex parte matris, de propinquioribus parentibus interfecti, qui olim dicebantur To lange and To bred. (And it is to be known that Engleschery is to be presented immediately, at the time of taking the inquest, and before the coroners, but yet in a different manner, according to the different customs of counties. In some counties, Engleschery is presented, whether the dead person be a male or a female, by two males on the part of the father, and by two females on the part of the mother, of the nearest relatives of the slain person, who were anciently called To lange and To bred.) Bract. fol. 135. The context seems to explain this phrase to mean, "two males and two females." The word "to," at least is clearly expressive of number, and Cowell's version, "Too long and too broad," is obviously absurd. In the parallel passage in Fleta the phrase does not appear. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 30, § 2.

TO WIT. [O. Eng. to wyt, to wyte; Lat. videlicet, scilicet, sciendum; L. Fr. ascavoir, asaver.] Literally, to know. See Wit. A term used to call attention to something particular, or as introductory to a detailed statement of what has been just before mentioned generally. See Scilicet.

The ancient use and import of this now familiar expression may be understood from an order of King James III. of Scotland for dissolving the parliament and calling a new one, entered in the records of parliament, 21st February, 1487, which commences as follows: "We do you to wit, [that is, we make you to know, or give you to understand] that our sovereign lord, by the advice of his council, has," &c. The same form of expression is used in the New Testament. 2 Cor. viii. 1. The declaration of thanks of Henry IV. on being made king of England commences thus: "Sirs, I thank God and zowe [you,] spiritual and temporal, and all the states of the land, and do zowe to wyte it es noght my will," &c. 1 State Trials, 154.

TOFT. [L. Lat. toftum.] In old English law. The place where a messuage has stood; the site of a decayed house. Cowell. Shep. Touch. (by Preston,) 95.

Et si nent* torcenouse, uncore fait a suffrer, tout soit ele damaiouse; if the nuisance be damageous and tortious, [i. e. productive both of loss and wrong, damnum cum injuria,] then, &c. And if not tortious, it must be submitted to, though it may be damageous. Britt. c. 61.

TORCULARIUM. Lat. In the civil law. A wine-press. Dig. 19. 1. 17, pr.

TORMENTUM. L. Lat. In old practice. An engine. Tormentum, Anglicè vocat' a pistol, onerat' cum pulvere bombardico et glandine plumbea; Ang. charged with gunpowder and one leaden bullet. 2 State Trials, 745.

TORN. An old form of tourn, the sheriff's county court in England. Mirr. c. 1, § 16.

TORNARE. L. Lat. To turn; to return. Spelman.

TORNEAMENTUM. L. Lat. In old records. A tournament, or tourney. Spelman. Cowell, voc. Turney.

TORRALE, Torralium. L. Lat. [from torrere, to roast, or dry by fire.] In old English and Scotch law. A kiln or malt-house; a house or place where grain or malt was dried. Spelman. 3 Bl. Com. 235. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Torralium.

TORT. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Lat. tortus, tortum, twisted, or crooked.] Wrong; injury; the opposite of right, (droit.) So called, according to Lord Coke, because it is wrested, or crooked, being contrary to that which is right and straight. Co. Litt. 158 b. Celuy que droit avera, recovere; et que tort avera, soit puny; he who shall have the right, shall recover; and he who shall have [done] wrong shall be punished. Britt. c. 68. De son tort demesne, (q. v.) of his own wrong. De fait et à tort; de facto and wrongfully. Britt. c. 107. The Spanish tuerto (q. v.) has the same sense.

In modern practice, tort is constantly used as an English word to denote a wrong or wrongful act, for which an action will lie, as distinguished from a contract. 3 Bl. Com. 117.

TORT FEASOR. L. Fr. and Eng. A wrong-doer; a trespasser. Cro. Jac. 383. Cowell.

TORTIOUS. [L. Fr. torcenouse.] Wrongful; having the quality of a tort, (q. v.)

TORTUM. Lat. [from torquere, to twist or crook.] Crooked; twisted; not straight.

Injustice; wrong; the opposite of right, (rectum.) Spelman.

Tortura legum pessima. The torture or wresting of laws is the worst [kind of torture.] Bacon's Works, iv. 434.

TOSCHEODERACH, Toschodairach, Tochederach. In old Scotch and Irish law. A serjeant, or serjeant-at-arms, (serviens curiæ;) one who executed the process of the courts in summoning parties; a messenger or summoner. Reg. Mag. lib. 1, c. 6, § 7. Skene, on this passage, translates the word "ane mair of fee." Spelman. In Skene's De Verborum Significatione several senses are given.

TOT. In old English practice. A word written by the foreign opposer or other officer, opposite to a debt due the king, to denote that it was a good debt; which was hence said to be totted. Stat. 42 Edw. III. c. 9. Stat. 1 Edw. VI. c. 15. Cowell.

TOT. L. Fr. [from Lat. totus.] All; although. Kelham.

Tot à primer; as soon; immediately. Id.

Tot en tot; wholly; entirely. Id.

Tot fois; tot voies; always. Id.

Tot le meins; full at the least. Id.

Tot outre; entire. Id.

TOTA CURIA. L. Lat. In the old reports. The whole court. Tota curia contra eum; the whole court against him. Yearb. M. 9 Hen. VI. 34.

TOTAL LOSS. In insurance law. A loss on account of which the assured is entitled to recover from the underwriter the whole amount of his subscription. 2 Arnould on Ins. 990, (993, Perkins' ed.) A total loss, within the meaning of the policy, may arise either by the total destruction of the thing insured, or, if it specifically remains, by such damage to it as renders it of little or no value. 3 Kent's Com. 318. A loss is said to be total, if the voyage be entirely lost or defeated, or not worth pursuing, and the projected adventure frustrated. Id. ibid.

An absolute total loss takes place when the subject insured wholly perishes, or its recovery is rendered irretrievably hopeless; and it is one which entitles the assured to claim from the underwriter the whole amount of his subscription, without giving notice of abandonment. 2 Arnould on Ins. 990, (993, Perkins' ed.)

A constructive total loss takes place when the subject insured is not wholly destroyed, but its destruction is rendered highly probable, and its recovery, though not utterly hopeless, yet exceedingly doubtful. Id. ibid. It is a constructive total loss if the thing insured, though existing in fact, is lost for any beneficial purpose to the owner. In such cases, the insured may abandon all his interest in the subject insured, and all his hopes of recovery, to the insurer, and call upon him to pay as for a total loss. 3 Kent's Com. 318. To recover from the insurer in such cases, an abandonment is indispensable. Id. 320, 321.

TOTHUL. L. Fr. In English law. Tothill Fields, where trials by battel were conducted. Yearb. M. 4 Edw. III. 12.

TOTIDEM VERBIS. Lat. In so many words.

TOTIES QUOTIES. Lat. Literally, so often,—as often. As often as; as often as it shall happen. Cas. temp. Talbot, 52. Lord Ellenborough, 6 M. & S. 81. Toties quoties sibi, aut eorum numero majori, conveniens fore videbitur; as often as it shall seem meet to them, or the greater number of them. 7 Man. & Gr. 39.

TOTIS VIRIBUS. Lat. With all one's might or power; with all his might; very strenuously. A phrase in the old reports. "Baron Price totis viribus contra." Bunb. 36. Id. 197. "Holt, C. J. totis viribus contra." 12 Mod. 289.

TOTUM. Lat. The whole; all. Totum præfertur unicuique parti. The whole is preferred to any single part. 3 Co. 41 a, Ratcliff's case. The whole blood should inherit before the half blood. Id. ibid. For the construction of the word totum in the civil law, see Dig. 50. 16. 25.

TOUCH. In insurance law. To stop at; to stop at a port. If there be liberty granted by the policy to touch, or to touch and stay, at an intermediate port on the passage, the better opinion now is, that the insured may trade there, when consistent with the object and the furtherance of the adventure, by breaking bulk, or by discharging and taking in cargo, provided it produces no unnecessary delay, nor enhances nor varies the risk. 3 Kent's Com. 314, and cases there cited. These words were formerly construed more strictly. 1 Arnould on Ins. 364, (370, Perkins' ed.)

TOUCHER. L. Fr. In old English law. To relate to; to affect; to touch. Une manere de accion y ad pledable en nostre court, que est appele mixte, par taunt que ele touche la persone v's que la demaunde est faite, et estre ceo, ele touche la chose demaunde; there is one kind of action pleadable [i. e. that may be brought] in our court, which is called mixt, for as much as it touches the person against whom the demand is made; and besides this, it touches the thing demanded. Britt. c. 71. Articles touchauntz nostre corone. Id. c. 29.

TOUCHING A DEAD BODY. In criminal evidence. An old method adopted to ascertain the guilt of a person suspected of murder, by requiring him or her to touch the corpse of the murdered person; the belief being that the body would bleed at the touch of the murderer. See 11 How. State Trials, 1402, 1403. 14 Id. 1324, 1326. Burr. Circ. Evid. 478, 479.

TOUCHING THE GOSPELS. See Tactis, Tacto, &c.

TOURN, Torn, Turn. [L. Fr. tourne; L. Lat. tournus, turnus, from tour, a circuit, or perambulation.] In old English law. The county criminal court, held before the sheriff twice a year, in every hundred of the kingdom. The tourn and the leet were originally one; and hence this court is called the turn [i. e. the circuit] of the sheriff to keep a court leet in each respective hundred. 2 Inst. 71. Mirr. c. 1. § 13, 16. Magna Charta, c. 35. Bract. fol. 155. 4 Bl. Com. 273. Britton observes, that that which is called before the sheriff, the tour of the sheriff, (tour de viscounte,) is called, in the court of a freeman, and in franchises and in hundreds, view of frank-pledge, (the old name of the leet.) Britt. c. 29. See Turnus.

TOUT. (pl. Touts.) L. Fr. [from Lat. totus.] All.

TOUT ATRENCHE (or ATTRENCHE.) L. Fr. Altogether; entirely. Yearb. P. 5 Edw. III. 18. P. 8 Edw. III. 7, 8.

TOUT TEMPS PRIST. L. Fr. [L. Lat. semper paratus.] Always ready. The emphatic words of the old plea of tender; the defendant alleging that he has always been ready, (tout temps prist,) and still is ready, (et uncore prist,) to discharge the debt. Yearb. M. 3 Hen. VI. 30. P. 11 Hen. VI. 6. 3 Bl. Com. 303. 2 Salk. 622.

TOUT UN SOUND. L. Fr. [L. Lat. idem sonans.] All one sound; sounding the same. An expression formerly applied to a name where it sounded in pronunciation so like another, as not to be distinguished. In debt, where the writ was against Baxster, and the obligation was Baxter, the writ was held good, because it is all one sound in speech, (eo que il est tout un sound en parlans.) Yearb. M. 3 Hen. IV. 4.

TOWN. [L. Fr. ville; L. Lat. villa; Lat. oppidum.] A collection of houses in one neighborhood;* a generical term, comprehending under it the several species of cities, boroughs and common towns. 1 Bl. Com. 115.

In modern law, the term town is usually applied to a collection of houses larger than a village, but anciently it seems to have comprehended any collection of houses, however small. Indeed, Sir William Blackstone supposes the word to have particularly denoted a tithing, which was almost the smallest civil division of the kingdom, consisting of ten houses or families. 1 Bl. Com. 114, 115. "Tithings, towns, or vills," he observes, "are of the same signification in law." Id. 114. Lord Coke gives to towns, one mark of distinction, viz. the circumstance of having, or having had, in time past, a church and celebration of divine service, sacraments and burials; without which, he observes, it cannot be a town in law. Co. Litt. 115 b. But Blackstone regards this as rather an ecclesiastical than a civil distinction. 1 Bl. Com. 114. Littleton observes, that every borough is a town, but not è converso. Litt. sect. 171.

In the United States, the term town is generally used to denote those civil divisions or subdivisions of a state which are intermediate between villages on the one hand, and cities on the other. It is, however, said to denote in Pennsylvania, and some other of the middle states, both a village and a city. Bouvier. This is preserving the ancient general sense of the word. In New-York and the eastern states, towns or townships are the subdivisions of counties, including within their limits, villages and towns proper. Webster observes that "in the United States, the circumstance that distinguishes a town from a city, is generally that a city is incorporated with special privileges, and a town is not." But in many of the states there are incorporated towns which are not cities, and there are also incorporated villages.

 Town is derived by Webster from the Sax. tun, from tynan, to shut, and originally imported, according to the same authority, a walled or fortified place; a collection of houses enclosed with walls, hedges, or pickets for safety. This is making the radical idea of the word the same with that claimed for borough, from burgus, (qq. v.) But according to Blackstone, the original import of the word town was tith- ing or vill, a neighborhood of ten families, which would justify the derivation of the word from the Sax. tien, ten; and this accords with the derivation of borough from the Sax. borg, borh, or borhoe, the Saxon name of the tithing or decennary. See Borough.

The corresponding Latin word villa seems to have undergone, in England, changes of signification similar to those of the English town. Spelman observes that villa, among the Anglo-Saxons, was used in its Roman sense of a farm or private country residence, (pro prædio unius alicujus in rure,) provided with suitable buildings for laying up the fruits raised upon it, (cum idoneis ædibus ad reponendos ejusdem fructus honestato;) and that it was not originally employed in the sense of a collection or neighborhood of several mansions, (the proper signification of the Latin oppidum,) though in the course of time it came to be. Spelman, voc. Villa. Bracton, in explaining the origin in England, of the word villa, throws some light on the primitive meaning of town. Et unde videndum est, quid sit mansio et quid sit villa. Et sciendum quod de jure gentium agris sunt termini positi, ædificia sunt collata sive vicinata, et ex qua collatione fiunt civitates et villæ, et ex pluribus ædificiis collatis et vicinatis, et non ex uno ædificio constructo. Ut si quis in agris unicum faciat ædificium, non erit ibi villa, sed cum ex processu temporis inceperint coadjuvari [coadunari?] et vicinari plura ædificia, incipit esse villa, &c. (We must see, then, what a mansion is, and what a town or vill is. And it is to be understood that according to the law of nations, [that is, the public or general law of states,] certain limits are marked out in lands, and houses built together, [within them] or erected into a neighborhood, out of which cities and towns are formed, which are thus composed of several buildings erected together, and not of a single edifice. Hence where a man builds a single house in the fields, it will not be a town or vill; but when, in process of time, several buildings have become united together for common safety, and formed into a neighborhood, it begins to be a town, &c.) Bract. fol. 211. From what the same author has said in another passage, it would appear that two houses standing in the neighborhood of each other would not constitute a vill, or town, but any larger number would. See Bract. fol. 434.

TOWN-REEVE. In English law. The reeve or chief officer of a town. See Reve.

TRA. In old practice. The mark ʌ made to show where a clause or word left out, and interlined in writing, should come in. According to the Instructor Clericalis, it was derived from the Lat. trahere, to draw; "because by it the words left out are signified to be these (where 'tis placed) drawn into writing." 1 Instr. Cler. 20.

TRABES. Lat. In the civil law. A beam or rafter of a house. Calv. Lex.

In old English law. A measure of grain, containing twenty-four sheaves; a thrave. Spelman.

TRACEA. L. Lat. In old English law. The track or trace of a felon, by which he was pursued, with the hue and cry; a foot-step, hoof-print or wheel-track. Bract. fol. 116, 121 b.

TRACTARE. Lat. In old English law. To treat, or handle. Male tractare; to mal-treat, or ill-treat. Verberaverunt et male tractaverunt; beat and ill treated. Bract. fol. 57.

To draw or drag (to execution.) Tractari et suspendi; to be drawn and hanged. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 22, § 6.

TRADAS IN BALLIUM. L. Lat. (You deliver to bail.) In old English practice. The name of a writ which might be issued in behalf of a party who, upon the writ de odio et atia, had been found to have been maliciously accused of a crime; commanding the sheriff that if the prisoner found twelve good and lawful men of the county who would be mainpernors for him, he should deliver him in bail to those twelve, until the next assize. Bract. fol. 123. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 252.

TRADE. The act or business of exchanging commodities by barter; or the business of buying and selling for money; traffic; barter. Webster.

The business which a person has learned and which he carries on for procuring subsistence, or for profit; occupation, particularly mechanical employment; distinguished from the liberal arts and learned professions, and from agriculture. Id.

TRADE MARK. A distinctive mark used by persons in trade; a distinctive mark, sign or device used by merchants and manufacturers; a mark, sign, device, ticket, wrapper or label put upon manufactured goods to distinguish them from others. See 3 B. & C. 541. 2 Keen, 213.

TRADER. One who trades; one who is engaged in trade, or the business of buying and selling; one who gets a livelihood by buying and selling for gain.* 2 Kent's Com. 389. 2 Bl. Com. 476. 2 Steph. Com. 195.

The meaning of the word trader in the English bankrupt law has been enlarged from time to time by statute, until it now includes the following descriptions of persons: viz. bankers, brokers, persons using the trade of a scrivener, receiving other men's monies or estates into their trust or custody, persons insuring ships or their freight or other matters against perils of the sea, warehousemen, wharfingers, packers, builders, carpenters, shipwrights, victuallers, keepers of inns, taverns, hotels or coffee-houses, dyers, printers, bleachers, fullers, calenderers, cattle or sheep salesmen, livery-stable keepers, coach proprietors, carriers, ship-owners, auctioneers, apothecaries, market-gardeners, cow-keepers, brick-makers, alum-makers, lime-burners and millers. Stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 2. Stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 10. 2 Steph. Com. 194, note (g.)

TRADERE. Lat. To deliver; to transfer the possession. In the civil law, this word was properly expressive of the mere fact of transfer, without reference to the right. Calv. Lex. But it signified also a transfer of the property. Inst. 2. 1. 40.

To betray. Hence traditor, a traitor.

TRADESMAN. In England, a shopkeeper; a small shop-keeper.

In the United States, a mechanic or artificer of any kind, whose livelihood depends upon the labor of his hands. Bell, J. 4 Penn. St. (Barr's) R. 472.

In a larger sense, any person engaged in mechanical pursuits and employments; including manufacturers of every class. Id. 473.

TRADICION. Span. [from Lat. traditio, q. v.] In Spanish law. Delivery. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 2, c. 9.

TRADITIO. Lat. [from tradere, to deliver.] In the civil law. Delivery; transfer of possession; a giving possession of a corporeal thing. Heineccius defines it, modus acquirendi derivativus quo dominus, qui jus et animum alienandi habet, rem corporalem ex justa causa in accipientem transfert; (a derivative mode of acquiring, by which the owner of a corporeal thing, having the right and the will of aliening it, transfers it for a lawful consideration to the receiver.) Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 380.

In old English law. Delivery or livery. Est traditio de re corporali propria vel aliena, de persona in personam de manu propria vel aliena, sicut procuratoria, dum tamen de voluntate domini, in alterius manum gratuita translatio. Et nihil aliud est traditio, in uno sensu, nisi in possessionem inductio de re corporali, ideo dicitur quod res incorporalis non patitur traditionem; sicut ipsum jus quod rei sive corpori inhæret; et quia non possunt res incorporales possideri sed quasi, ideo traditionem non patiuntur, sed quasi, nec adquiruntur nec retinentur nisi per patientiam et usum; delivery is the voluntary transfer of one's own or another's corporeal thing, from person to person, out of one's own hand or another's (as of an attorney's, if with the consent of the principal) into the hands of another person. And delivery is nothing else, in one sense, than the induction into possession of a corporeal thing, so called, because an incorporeal thing does not admit of delivery, such as the right itself which inheres in the thing or corpus; and because incorporeal things cannot be possessed, but as it were, therefore they do not admit of delivery, but as it were, nor are they acquired nor retained except by sufferance and use. Bract. fol. 39 b. This passage is materially abridged by Blackstone in quoting it. 2 Bl. Com. 317. Fleta follows Bracton, but with considerable modification. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 15, § 4.

Traditio loqui facit chartam. Delivery makes a deed speak. 5 Co. 1 a, Clayton's case. Delivery gives effect to the words of a deed. Id. ibid.

Traditio nihil amplius transferre debet vel potest, ad eum qui accipit, quam est apud eum qui tradit. Delivery ought to, and can, transfer nothing more to him who receives than is with him who delivers. Dig. 41. 1. 20, pr.

TRADITIO CLAVIUM. Lat. In the civil law. Delivery of keys; a symbolical kind of delivery, by which the ownership of merchandize in a warehouse might be transferred to a buyer. Inst. 2. 1. 44.

TRADITIO REI. Lat. Delivery of a thing. Lord Ellenborough, 5 M. & S. 82.

TRADITION. Delivery. A close translation or formation from the Lat. traditio, (q. v.) 2 Bl. Com. 307.

TRADITOR. L. Lat. [from tradere, to betray.] In old English law. A traitor; one guilty of high treason. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 21, § 8. Id. lib. 2, c. 52, § 14.

TRADITUR IN BALLIUM. L. Lat. In old practice. Is delivered to bail. Emphatic words of the old Latin bail-piece. 1 Salk. 195.

TRAHENS. Lat. [from trahere, to draw.] In French law. The drawer of a bill. Story on Bills, § 12, note.

TRAHERE. Lat. In old English law. To draw; as a principal thing does an incident. Id quod majus est trahit ad se id quod minus est. That which is greater draws to it that which is less. Bract. fol. 175.

To draw or bring in by superior power; to draw a person against his will; to bring into court. Trahere in placitum; to draw into plea; to make one a party to a suit; to implead. A. queritur quod B. trahit eum in placitum; A. complains that B. draws him into plea. Reg. Orig. 34. Si contra voluntatem trahatur in placitum; if against his will he be drawn into plea. Bract. fol. 402.

To draw to execution. Trahitur et decollatur; is drawn and beheaded. 1 Pitc. Crim. Trials, part 2, pp. 202, 203.

In the civil law. To put off; to delay or protract. Calv. Lex.

TRAHIR, Trair. L. Fr. [from Lat. trahere, q. v.] In old English law. To draw. Trait et pend'; drawn and hanged. Yearb. M. 19 Hen. VI. 102.

TRAIL-BASTON. [from Fr. trail, to draw, and baston, a staff.] Draw-staff. The name given to certain justices appointed by Edward I. with extraordinary powers to try offences, and particularly with authority to inquire into and punish the malpractices of sheriffs, coroners, sub-escheators, constables, bailiffs and other officers. Yearb. (Add.) T. 2 Edw. III. 14. See Justices of Trail-baston. Spelman gives at length a commission of this kind granted by the king in the fifth year of his reign to Roger de Grey, and others his justices for the counties of Essex, Hertfordshire, Cambridgeshire and Huntingdonshire. It was sometimes called Trebaston. Yearb. ub. sup.

TRAISTIS. Sc. In old Scotch law. A roll containing the particular dittay (q. v.) taken up upon malefactors, which, with the portuous, (q. v.) is delivered by the justice clerk to the coroner, to the effect that the persons whose names are contained in the portuous may be attached, conform to the dittay contained in the traistis. So called, because committed to the traist, [trust] faith and credit of the clerks and coroner. Skene de Verb. Signif.

TRAITOROUSLY. In criminal pleading. An essential word in indictments for treason. The offence must be laid to have been committed traitorously. Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, 100.

TRAJECTITIUS. Lat. [from trajicere, to send across.] In the civil law. Sent across the sea. See Pecunia trajectitia.

TRANSACT. In Scotch law. To compound. Lord Hardwicke, Ambl. 185.

TRANSACTIO. Lat. [from transagere, to finish.] In the civil law. The settlement of a suit or matter in controversy, by the litigating parties, between themselves, without referring it to arbitration. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 8, num. 14. An agreement by which a suit, either pending or about to be commenced, was forborne or discontinued on certain terms. Calv. Lex. See Dig. 2. 15. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 17, § 2.

TRANSCRIBERE. Lat. [from trans, over or across, and scribere, to write.] To write over; to copy; to transcribe.

In the civil law. To transfer; to transfer one's rights to another. Calv. Lex.

TRANSCRIPT. L. Fr. and Eng. [L. Fr. transescrit, from Lat. transcriptum, q. v.] In practice. A copy, particularly of a record. This has always been the import of the word, it rarely or never being applied to copies of other writings. Et le transcript de cel enroulement soit delivere al visconte; and the transcript of this enrolment shall be delivered to the sheriff. Britt. c. 2. Le transcript del fin. Yearb. M. 9 Edw. III. 2.

TRANSCRIPTUM. Lat. In old practice. A transcript. Reg. Orig. 169. See Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 2.

To TRANSFER. [from Lat. transferre, q. v.] To carry or pass over; to pass a thing over to another; to convey. Usually applied to the acts of persons, but expressive also of the act or operation of the law.

TRANSFER. [Lat. translatio.] The passing of a thing or property from one person to another; alienation; conveyance. 2 Bl. Com. 294.

TRANSFERRE. Lat. [from trans, over or across, and ferre, to bring.] In the civil and old English law. To bring over or across; to bring or carry from one place or person to another; to transfer. Dig. 50. 17. 11.

According to Lord Coke, this is a more general word than alienare, (q. v.) 2 Inst. 406. Transferuntur dominia sine titulo et traditione, per usucapionem, scil. per longam, continuam, et pacificam possessionem; properties are transferred without title and delivery, by usucapion, that is to say, by long, continued and peaceable possession. Co. Litt. 113.

TRANSFRETARE. L. Lat. [from trans, across, and fretum, a strait.] In old English law. To cross a strait, or the strait. Particularly applied to the Straits of Dover. Reg. Orig. 193 b. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 5, § 17. Licentia transfretandi; liberty to cross the strait. Reg. Orig. 193 b.

TRANSFRETATIO. Lat. [from transfretare, q. v.] In old English law. A crossing of the Strait (of Dover;) a passing or sailing over from England to France. The royal passages or voyages to Gascony, Brittany and other parts of France, were so called; and time was sometimes computed from them. Stat. of Merton, c. 8. Stat. of Marlbridge, c. 9. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 66, § 1.

TRANSGRESSIO. Lat. [from transgredi, to pass or step over.] In old English law. Transgression; violation of law, either by going beyond measure, (excedendo modum et mensuram,) or doing less than one ought, (vel faciendo citra debitum,) out of malice and fraud, or by negligence and omission. Bract. fol. 101 b. Transgressio est cum modus non servatur nec mensura; transgression (or trespass) is when neither moderation nor measure is observed. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 1, § 4.

TRANSIGERE. Lat. [from trans, across or through, and agere, to drive.] Literally, to drive through. To press to a conclusion; to dispatch or bring to an end.

In the civil law. To terminate a controversy; to end or settle a matter in litigation. Properly said of a plaintiff who withdrew or discontinued his action, upon a settlement with the defendant; and was thus said ab actione transire, to pass from or relinquish his action. Calv. Lex.

TRANSIRE. Lat. [from trans, across or over, and ire, to go.] To go, or pass over; to pass from one thing, person or place to another; to become changed from one thing into another.

Transit in rem judicatam. It passes into a matter adjudged; it becomes converted into a res judicata or judgment. A contract upon which a judgment is obtained is said to pass in rem judicatam. Story, J. 2 Sumner's R. 436. Lord Kenyon, 1 East, 436. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. 3 East, 251. Spencer, C. J. 18 Johns. R. 480. When a cause of action has once passed in rem judicatam, the defendant and every other person is forever afterwards precluded from availing himself of any pre-existing matter, which might have been insisted upon in bar of the recovery. Van Ness, J. 14 Johns. R. 442. This phrase occurs in the old statute of Articuli Cleri. Si aliqua causa vel negotium, cujus cognitio spectat ad forum ecclesiasticum, et coram ecclesiastico judice fuerit sententialiter terminatum, et transierit in rem judicatam, nec per appellationem fuerit suspensum, &c.; if any cause or matter, the cognizance whereof belongs to the ecclesiastical court, and which shall have been terminated by sentence before the ecclesiastical judge, and shall have passed into a matter adjudged, and not been suspended by appeal, &c. Artic. Cleri, c. 6. Bracton (who is followed by Fleta,) applies it to a judgment which becomes absolute or final from lapse of time. Post longum intervallum transit judicium in autoritatem rei judicatæ. Bract. fol. 288. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 21, § 15.

Transit terra cum onere. The land passes with the burden; the land passes with the incumbrance attached to it. Where land passes from one person to another, the covenants created by the original deed of conveyance pass along with it, and bind the present owner or occupier. Co. Litt. 231 a. Shep. Touch. 178. Applied to the obligation of covenants running with land. Broom's Max. 204, 313, [372, 553.]

TRANSIRE. L. Lat. In old English law. The name given to a custom-house warrant or let-pass, [permit.] Stat. 14 Car. II. c. 11. Cowell. See Hale de Jur. Mar. pars 2, (de port. mar.) c. 11.

TRANSITORY. [from Lat. transitorius, from transire, to pass over.] Passing from place to place; that may pass or be changed from one place to another; not confined to one place; the opposite of local. A transitory action is one that may be brought, or in which the venue may be laid in any county. Steph. Pl. 289. 1 Tidd's Pr. 427.

TRANSITURA. L. Lat. In old European law. A tribute paid for the liberty of passage. Capit. Carol. lib. 4, c. 59.

TRANSITUS. Lat. [from transire, to pass over.] Passage from one place to another; transit. In transitu; on the passage, transit or way. 2 Kent's Com. 543. "The transitus of the goods, and consequently the right of stoppage, is determined by actual delivery to the vendee, or by circumstances which are equivalent to actual delivery." Id. ibid. See Stoppage in transitu.

TRANSLADO. Span. A transcript. See Traslado.

TRANSLATE. In English law. To transfer. Hale's Anal. sect. xxxiii.

TRANSLATION. [from Lat. translatio, from transferre, to transfer.] Transfer; a transferring. "Touching acquisition and translation of estates." Hale's Anal. sect. xxxiii. "A translation or transfer of property being thus admitted by law, it became necessary that this transfer should be properly evidenced." 2 Bl. Com. 294. This word is closely formed from the translatio of the civil law, but is rarely used.

In ecclesiastical law. The removal of a bishop from one diocese to another. Cowell. 1 Wooddes. Lect. 178.

TRANSPASSARE. L. Lat. In old European law. To pass or go through. L. Alaman. tit. 82. Spelman.

TRANSPORT. In old New-York law. A conveyance of land.

TRANSPORTATION. [from Lat. transportatio, from transportare, to carry over.] In English criminal law. The sending of a person out of the kingdom, as a punishment; the sending a convicted criminal into another country; banishment or exile. 1 Bl. Com. 137. 3 Id. 377.

Transportation is said by Sir W. Blackstone to be "a punishment at present unknown to the common law, and wherever it is now inflicted, it is either by the choice of the criminal himself, to escape a capital punishment, or else by the express direction of some modern act of parliament." 1 Bl. Com. ub. sup. It is said by Mr. Barrington to have been first inflicted as a punishment, by statute 39 Eliz. c. 4. Barr. Obs. Stat. 445, note [o]. Dr. Wooddeson observes that the first mention of transportation eo nomine, is in the statute 18 Car. II. c. 3, s. 2. 2 Wooddes. Lect. 301. It is now chiefly regulated by statute 5 Geo. IV. c. 84. 4 Steph. Com. 444.

TRANSUMPT. [from Lat. transumptus, from transumere, to take from one to another.] In Scotch law. A judicial transcript of a writing; an authorized, authentic copy, as of the evidences of title to land. Transumpts are copies of deeds produced in the action of transumpt, collated and signed by the clerk, and then declared by the court to have the same effect with an extracted decree. Bell's Dict.

The name of an action brought for the purpose of obtaining such transcripts or copies. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 4, p. 116. Whishaw.

TRANSVERSA. L. Lat. In old English law. A toll or tribute paid for the liberty of passage. Spelman.

TRANSVERSAL. Cross; oblique. Hale's Hist. Com. Law. c. 11.

TRANSVERSALIS. Lat. [from transversus, across.] Cross; oblique; transverse. See Linea transversalis.

TRASLADO. Span. In Spanish law. A copy; a sight. White's New Recop. b. 3, tit. 7, c. 3. Id. c. 5, § 2. Id. b. 3, tit. 10, c. 1, § 7.

TRASSANS. L. Lat. [from trassare, q. v.] Drawing; one who draws. The drawer of a bill of exchange. Heinecc. de Camb. c. 6, § 4.

TRASSARE. L. Lat. [from Fr. tracer, to track.] In old Scotch law. To draw; to pursue by the foot-marks or foot-steps. Nullus perturbet aut impediet canem trassantem, aut homines trassantes cum ipso ad sequendum latronem, aut ad capiendum malefactores; no one shall disturb or hinder a dog drawing, or men drawing with a dog in pursuit of a robber, or for the purpose of taking malefactors. Reg. Maj. lib. 4, c. 32. See Dog-draw.

In modern European law. To draw a bill of exchange. See Trassans, Trassatus.

TRASSATUS. L. Lat. [from trassare, q. v.] One who is drawn, or drawn upon. The drawee of a bill of exchange. Heinecc. de Camb. c. 6, §§ 5, 6.

TRAVAILLER. L. Fr. To vex, harass, trouble, or disturb; to prosecute. Kelham.

To TRAVERSE. [from L. Fr. traverser, q. v.] In pleading. To deny. Steph. Pl. 52. Id. Appendix, Note (25.) To plead "not guilty" to an indictment.

TRAVERSE. In pleading. Denial. Pleas in bar are either by way of traverse, or by way of confession and avoidance. Steph. Pl. 52.

A particular form of denial; otherwise termed a special or formal traverse. Id. 153, 165. Id. Appendix, note (25.)

TRAVERSER. In pleading. One who traverses or denies. A prisoner or party indicted, so called from his traversing the indictment.

TRAVERSER. L. Fr. In old pleading. To traverse; to deny. Ou le tenaunt purra traverser, et tendre de averrer par l'assise; where the tenant may traverse and offer to verify by the assise. Britt. c. 77. Si la party le traverse et le dedie; if the party traverse and deny it. Id. c. 86.

TREASON. [from L. Fr. treson, from treer, trehir, trahir, to betray; O. Sc. tressone, tressoun; L. Lat. proditio.] In criminal law. The offence of attempting to overthrow the government of a state to which the offender owes allegiance; or of betraying the state into the hands of a foreign power. Webster.

In England, treason is an offence particularly directed against the person of the sovereign, and consists, (1) in compassing or imagining the death of the king or queen, or their eldest son and heir: (2) in violating the king's companion, or the king's eldest daughter unmarried, or the wife of the king's eldest son and heir: (3) in levying war against the king in his realm: (4) in adhering to the king's enemies in his realm, giving to them aid and comfort in the realm or elsewhere: and (5) slaying the chancellor, treasurer, or the king's justices of the one bench or the other, justices in eyre, or justices of assize, and all other justices assigned to hear and determine, being in their places doing their offices. 4 Steph. Com. 185—193. 4 Bl. Com. 76—84. This definition of treason, or rather this enumeration of acts of treason, was settled by the statute 25 Edward III. c. 2.

In the United States, the definition of treason is fixed by the constitution, it being declared to "consist only in levying war against the United States, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort." Const. U. S. Art. III. sect. 3. See Story on the Const. (Abr.) §§ 939, 940. The words of this definition are, as Mr. Justice Story observes, copied from the English statute of treason of Edward III. Id. § 942. See supra. And as to the offence of treason in American law, both against the United States, and the several states of the Union, see Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, b. 7, ch. 1, §§ 2715—2777. See United States Digest, Treason.

TREASURE TROVE. [L. Fr. tresor trouve; L. Fr. thesaurus inventus.] Literally, treasure found. Money or coin, gold, silver, plate or bullion found hidden in the earth or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown. 1 Bl. Com. 295. Finch's Law, b. 2, c. 17. See Thesaurus. Called in the Saxon times, fynderinga, (q. v.)

TREATY. [Lat. fœdus.] In international law. An agreement between two or more independent states. Brande.—An agreement, league, or contract between two or more nations or sovereigns, formally signed by commissioners properly authorized, and solemnly ratified by the several sovereigns, or the supreme power of each state. Webster.

A treaty is, in its nature, a contract between two nations; not a legislative act. It does not generally effect of itself the object to be accomplished, especially so far as its operation is infra-territorial, but is carried into execution by the sovereign power of the respective parties to the instrument. Marshall, C. J. 2 Peters' R. 314.

In the United States, a different principle is established. Our constitution declares a treaty to be the law of the land. It is, consequently, to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an act of the legislature, whenever it operates of itself, without the aid of any legislative provision. But when the terms of the stipulation import a contract, when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, the treaty addresses itself to the political, not the judicial, department, and the legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule for the court. Id. ibid.

TREBLE COSTS. In practice. A rate of costs given in certain actions, consisting, according to its technical import, of the common costs, half of these, and half of the latter. 2 Tidd's Pr. 988. The word treble, in this application, is not understood in its literal sense of thrice the amount of single costs, but signifies merely the addition together of the three sums fixed as above. Id. ibid. Treble costs have been abolished in England, by statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97.

TREBLE DAMAGES. [L. Lat. damnum triplum.] In practice. Damages given by statute in certain cases, consisting of the single damages found by the jury, actually tripled in amount. The usual practice has been for the jury to find the single amount of the damages, and for the court, on motion, to order that amount to be trebled. 2 Tidd's Pr. 893, 894. 1 Burr. Pr. 237. 1 Arch. Pr. 222.

The practice of giving treble damages prevailed among the Ripuarians, from whose code Spelman intimates it may have been originally borrowed. L. Ripuar. tit. 11, § 3.

TREBUCHET, Tribuch. [L. Lat. trebuchetum, terbichetum; from Celt tre, town, and buchet, bucket.] In old English law. A tumbrel or cucking-stool. Cowell. 4 Bl. Com. 169. According to Mr. Barrington, the Fr. trebuchet signifies an instrument with which gold is weighed. Obs. Stat. 56, note [c.]

TREBUCHETUM. L. Lat. A machine anciently used in the siege of towns. Barr. Obs. Stat. 54, note [y.]

In old English law. The trebuchet, (q. v.)

TREE. (Lat. arbor,) distinguished from lignum, (wood.) See Arbor, Lignum.

TREET. [L. Fr. treyt; Lat. triticum.] In old English law. Fine wheat. Stat. 51 Hen. III. Blount. Britt. c. 40. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 9, § 1.

TRENCHEA, Trenchia. L. Lat. [from Fr. trancher, to cut.] In old English law. A trench, dike, or channel for water. Reg. Orig. 252 b. Cowell.

Tres faciunt collegium. Three make a corporation; three members are requisite to constitute a corporation. Dig. 50. 16. 85. 1 Bl. Com. 469. A rule of the Roman law, originating in the opinion of Neratius Priscus, as adopted by Marcellus in the first book of his Digests.

TRESAEL. L. Fr. A great great grandfather. Britt. c. 119. Otherwise written tresaiel, and tresayle. 3 Bl. Com. 186. Litt. sect. 20.

TRESON. L. Fr. [from treer, to draw.] Treason. Britt. c. 8.

TRESOR. L. Fr. Treasure. Tresor musce en terre trove; treasure found hidden in the earth. Britt. c. 17. Tresor musce en terre et trove; treasure hidden in the earth and found. Id. ibid.

TRESORER. L. Fr. In old English law. A treasurer. Britt. fol. 2 b.

TRESORIE. L. Fr. Treasury. Yearb. M. 9 Edw. III. 21.

TRESPASS. [L. Fr. trespas; L. Lat. transgressio.] In the largest sense. Any transgression or offence against the law of nature, of society, or of the country in which we live; whether it relates to a man's person or his property. 3 Bl. Com. 165. Any misfeasance, or act of one man, whereby another is injuriously treated or damnified. Id. ibid.—Any transgression of the law under treason, felony, or misprision of either. Staundf. Pl. Cor. fol. 38. Cowell.

In a stricter sense,—an injury committed by one person upon another, with violence, actual or implied. The law will imply violence though none is actually used, where the injury is of a direct and immediate kind, and committed on the person, or tangible and corporeal property of another. Of actual violence, an assault and battery is an instance; of implied, a peaceable but wrongful entry upon another's land. Steph. Pl. 17. See Finch's Law, b. 3, c. 6.

In the strictest sense,—an entry on another's ground, without a lawful authority, and doing some damage, however inconsiderable, to his real property. 3 Bl. Com. 209.

TRESPASS. [Fr. trespas; Lat. transgressio.] In practice. An action which lies to recover damages for some trespass, or injury committed with force either actual or implied, upon the person, or the personal or real property of another. See 1 Chitt. Pl. 166, 167.

TRESPASS DE BONIS ASPORTATIS. (Trespass for goods carried away.) In practice. The technical name of that species of action of trespass for injuries to personal property, which lies where the injury consists in carrying away the goods or property. See 3 Bl. Com. 150, 151. 1 Chitt. Pl. 171. See De bonis asportatis.

TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT. (Trespass wherefore he broke the close.) In practice. The technical name of that species of the action of trespass which lies for unlawfully entering on another's land. 3 Bl. Com. 209. See Quare clausum fregit.

TRESPASS VI ET ARMIS. (Trespass with force and arms.) In practice. The technical name of the action of trespass for injuries to the person or property, as distinguished from trespass on the case; it being the proper remedy whenever the act complained of is directly and immediately injurious, or was done with direct violence, which the law will in such case imply, whether it was actually used or not. Hence the injury is said to have been committed with force and arms. See 3 Bl. Com. 208. 1 Chitt. Pl. 166. See Vi et armis, Force and arms.

TRESPASS ON THE CASE. [L. Fr. trespas sur le cas; L. Lat. transgressio super casum.] In practice. The technical name of that species of the action of trespass which lies for injuries unaccompanied with force, or where the damage sustained is merely consequential. See 3 Bl. Com. 122, 209. Sometimes termed case, and so called from the circumstance of the plaintiff's case being anciently set forth in the original writ by which it was commenced.

Mr. Serjeant Stephen observes that it is not easy to give a short and sufficiently comprehensive definition of the scope of this action. He himself defines it to be an action which "lies where a party sues for damages for any wrong or cause of complaint, to which covenant or trespass will not apply." Steph. Pl. 17. For the distinction between trespass and case, see 2 Greenl. Evid. § 224.

TRESPASSAUNT. L. Fr. Passing over; a passer by; a passenger. A la nosaunce de mesme le chemyn, a peril de trespassauntz; to the nuisance of the said road, to the peril of passengers. Britt. c. 29.

TRESPASSER. L. Fr. To pass over; to pass by. See Trespassaunt.

To pass away; to die. Kelham.

To offend or transgress; to trespass. Id.

TRESPASSER AB INITIO. A trespasser from the beginning, or from the first act. A term applied to a person who, after lawfully entering on another's premises, commits some wrongful act, which in law is construed to affect and have relation back to his first entry, so as to make the whole a trespass. See 3 Bl. Com. 213. 3 Steph. Com. 498. Broom's Max. 140. 8 Co. 290, The Six Carpenters' case. 1 Smith's Lead. Cas. 62, 65.

TRESTORNARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To turn aside; to divert a stream from its course. Aqua trestornata; a stream diverted from its course. Bract. fol. 115, 234 b. De aquis trestornatis. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 18.

To turn or alter the course of a road. Cowell.

TRESTOURNER. L. Fr. In old English law. To turn aside or divert from its course. Ewe trestourne; a stream diverted from its channel. Britt. c. 61. Finch uses misturn, apparently as a translation of this word. "To reduce a water-course that is misturned." Law, b. 2, c. 2.

TRESVIRI. Lat. In the Roman law. Officers who had the charge of prisons, and the execution of condemned criminals. Calv. Lex.

TRET. L. Fr. [from treer, to draw.] A drawing or draught; the drawing of a net. Britt. c. 72, 103.

Drawn, as a juror. Yearb. H. 3 Hen. VI. 3.

TRETHINGA. L. Lat. In old English law. A trithing; the court of a trithing. Mag. Cart. Johan. c. 25.

TREUGA, Treuva, Trevia. L. Lat. [from Teut. treue, true or truth.] A suspension of arms which occasionally took place in the middle ages, putting a stop to private hostilities. Brande. Spelman. Otherwise called Treuga Dei, the Truce of God, and Pax Dei, the Peace of God. Cowell. 1 Robertson's Charles V. Appendix, Note xxi.

TREYNE. L. Fr. In old English law. Drawn; dragged to the scaffold. Treyne et pendu; drawn and hanged. Britt. c. 23.

TREYT. L. Fr. Drawn, or withdrawn, as a juror. Written, also, treat. Cowell.

TRIAL. [from L. Fr. trier; L. Lat. triatio, q. v.] In a general sense. The formal investigation and decision of a matter in issue between parties, before a competent tribunal. Mr. Stephen supposes the word to have originally been used in this sense, without being confined to matters of fact. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (29.) See Triare.

In a stricter sense,—the examination before a competent tribunal, according to the laws of the land, of the facts put in issue in a cause, for the purpose of determining such issue. 4 Mason's R. 232.—The finding out, by due examination, the truth of the point in issue, or question between the parties, whereupon judgment may be given. Co. Litt. 124 b.—The examination of the matter of fact in issue in a cause. 3 Bl. Com. 330. Trial has been long used to express the investigation and decision of fact only. Steph. Pl. Appendix, Note (29.) Mr. Stephen calls it the decision of an issue in fact. Id. 76, 77.

In the strictest sense,—the examination and decision of an issue in fact, by a jury, under the supervision of the court. (Exactissima litis contestatæ, coram judice, per

TRIAL AT BAR. In practice. A trial which takes place before all the judges, at the bar of the court in which the action is brought; a trial before the full court in term.* This mode of trial is allowed only in causes of unusual importance, which require great examination, and cannot be had without leave of the court. 2 Tidd's Pr. 747, 748.

TRIAL AT NISI PRIUS. In practice. The ordinary kind of trial which takes place at the sittings, assizes or circuit, before a single judge. 2 Tidd's Pr. 751, 819. See Nisi Prius.

TRIARE. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. trier, q. v.] In old English law. To try. Bracton uses this word in the general sense of determine, making it synonymous with terminare. Dictum est superius, in cujus curia actiones criminales debeant terminari, sive in comitatu vel extra, sive in curia domini regis, vel alibi; nunc autem dicendum, ubi triandæ sunt actiones civiles, quæ sunt in rem vel in personam. (It has been explained above, in whose court criminal actions ought to be determined, whether in the county court, or out of it, or in the king's court or elswhere; now we are to consider where civil actions, whether in rem, or in personam, are to be tried.) Bract. fol. 105.

Triabitur; shall be tried. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 11, § 5. Triantur; are tried. Id. § 4.

TRIATIO. L. Lat. [from triare, to try.] In old English law. Trial. Co. Litt. 124 b. Spelman. Triatio ibi semper debet fieri, ubi juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam. Trial ought always to be had where the jurors can have the best information. 7 Co. 1, Bulwer's case.

Triatio bilinguis; trial by a jury de medietate linguæ. Molloy de Jur. Mar. 448.

TRIBUERE. Lat. In the civil law. To give. Calv. Lex.

To distribute. See Actio tributoria.

TRIBUNAL. Lat. In the Roman law. An elevated seat occupied by the prætor, when he judged, or heard causes in form. Originally a kind of stage made of wood in the form of a square, and moveable, but afterwards built of stone in the form of a semi-circle. Adam's Rom. Ant. 132, 133. Now used as an English word, in the sense of a court or forum.

TRIBUTE. [from Lat. tributum, from tribuere, to give.] A tax; that which is given by a subject to the sovereign of a country. Used in this sense in the old books.

A sum of money paid by an inferior sovereign or state to a superior potentate, to secure the friendship or protection of the latter. Brande. A sum paid in acknowledgment of dependence or subjection. This is the modern sense of the word.

TRIBUTUM. Lat. [from tribuere, to give.] In the Roman law. Tribute. Dig. 50. 16. 27. 1.

TRIDUUM. L. Lat. [from tres, three, and dies, day.] In old English law. The space of three days. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 7.

TRIENS. Lat. In the Roman law. A subdivision of the as, containing four unciæ; the proportion of four-twelfths or one-third. Tayl. Civ. Law, 492. 2 Bl. Com. 462, note (m.)

A copper coin of the value of one-third of the as. Brande.

In feudal law. Dower, or third. 2 Bl. Com. 129.

TRIGAMUS. L. Lat. [from Gr. τρίγαμος, from τρὶς, three times, and γάμος, marriage.] In old English law. One who has been thrice married; one who, at different times and successively, has had three wives; a trigamist. 3 Inst. 88. See Bigamus.

TRIGILD. Sax. [from thry, three, and gelde, a payment; L. Lat. trigeldum.] In Saxon law. A triple gild, geld or payment; three times the value of a thing, paid as a composition or satisfaction. Spelman, voc. Geldum.

TRINEPOS. Lat. In the civil law. A great-grandson's or great-grand-daughter's great-grandson. Inst. 3. 6. 4. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2, § 1.

TRINEPTIS. Lat. In the civil law. A great-grandson's or great-grand-daughter's great-grand-daughter. Inst. 3. 6. 4.

TRINITY TERM. One of the four terms of the English courts of common law, beginning on the twenty-second day of May, and ending on the twelfth of June. 3 Steph. Com. 562.

TRINIUMGELDUM. L. Lat. [Sax. tri-nigon-geld.] In old European law. An extraordinary kind of composition for an offence, consisting of three times nine, or twenty-seven times the single geld or payment. Spelman.

TRINODA NECESSITAS. L. Lat. In

Saxon law. A threefold necessity or burden. A term used to denote the three things from contributing to the performance of which no lands were exempted, viz. pontis reparatio, (the repair of bridges,) arcis constructio, (the building of castles,) et expeditio contra hostem, (military service against an enemy.) 1 Bl. Com. 263, 357.

TRIORS, Triers. In practice. Persons appointed by the court to try challenges of jurors. 1 Burr. Pr. 455.

TRIPARTITE. [Lat. tripartitus, from ter, three times, and partitus, divided.] In conveyancing. Of three parts; a term applied to an indenture where the parties to it are arranged in three parts, (a first, second and third part,) and the indenture itself is executed in three parts.

TRIPARTITUS. Lat. In the civil law. Consisting of three parts; threefold. Inst. 1. 1. 4.

TRIPLICACION. L. Fr. In old pleading. A rejoinder in pleading; the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication. Britt. c. 77.

TRIPLICARE. L. Lat. In old pleading. To rejoin; to answer a plaintiff's replication. Cum servus replicaverit contra dominum de manumissione, dominus potest triplicare versus eum, quod manumissio non fuit sufficiens nec perfecta; where the slave has replied against the lord respecting the manumission, [has pleaded a manumission,] the lord may rejoin against him that the manumission was not sufficient nor perfect. Bract. fol. 194 b. See Fleta, lib. 5, c. 6, § 54.

TRIPLICATIO. Lat. In the civil law. The answer of a plaintiff (actor,) to the rejoinder, (duplicatio,) of a defendant, (reus.) Inst. 4. 14. 2. Corresponding to the surrejoinder of the common law. See Fleta, lib. 6, c. 36, § 11.

In old pleading. The defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication; a rejoinder. Ad replicationem sequitur triplicatio, et ad triplicationem quadruplicatio; after the replication follows the triplication, (rejoinder,) and after the triplication, the quadruplication, (surrejoinder.) Bract. fol. 400 b. See Fleta, lib. 6, c. 36, § 10.

TRIPLICAUNT. L. Fr. In old pleading. Rejoining. A quel le defendaunt purra respondre en triplicaunt; to which the defendant may answer by way of triplication or rejoinder. Britt. c. 27.

TRIPLUM. Lat. In the civil law. The triple value of a thing. Actio in triplum; an action for the triple value. Inst. 4. 6. 21, 24.

TRIPLY. Sc. In Scotch practice. A pleading corresponding with the Lat. triplicatio, from which the term also was taken. 3 How. St. Trials, 478, 637, 638.

TRISTRIS, Tristis, Tritis. L. Lat. In old forest law. A freedom from the duty of attending the lord of a forest when engaged in the chase. Spelman.

TRITAVUS. Lat. In the civil law. A great-grandfather's great-grandfather. Inst. 3. 6. 4. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2, § 1.

TRITAVIA. L. Lat. In the civil law. A great-grandfather's great-grandmother. Inst. 3. 6. 4.

TRITHING. Triding. [L. Lat. trithinga, trithingus, tritingum.] In Saxon and old English law. A division of a county, consisting of three hundreds. 1 Bl. Com. 116. Spelman. Cowell. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 23. The third part of a county. Id.

A court held for a trithing. Id.

The trithing mentioned in Magna Charta, (c. 36,) seems to have been intended for tithing. 2 Inst. 73.

TRITHINGREVE. In old English law. An officer who governed a trithing. Fleta, lib, 2, c. 61, § 23.

TRITINGUM. L. Lat. In old English law. A trithing; a division of a county consisting of three or four or more hundreds. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 23. Called, also, tithringum. Id. ibid.

A court held for such a division of a county. Id. ibid. In Fleta, it is said, that in modern times, hundreds, wapentakes, and trithings are held as one and the same thing. Id. ibid.

TRIUMVIRI. Tresviri. Lat. In the civil law. (Three men.) Subordinate magistrates appointed for various purposes. The triumviri capitales had the charge of prisons and of the execution of criminals. The triumviri monetales had the charge of the mint. The triumviri nocturni had the charge of the watch and the preventing of fires. Calv. Lex. Adam's Rom. Ant. 158.

TRIVERBIAL DAYS. [from Lat. tria, three, and verba, words.] In the civil law. Judicial or juridical days; days allowed to the prætor for deciding causes; days on which the prætor might speak the three characteristic words of his office, viz. do, dico, addico. Calv. Lex. Otherwise called dies fasti, (q. v.) 3 Bl. Com. 424, and note (w.) See Do, dico, addico.

TR'NS'. A contraction of transgressio. Year Books, passim.

TRONA. L. Lat. In old English law. A beam for weighing. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, §§ 2, 15.

TRONAGE. [L. Lat. tronagium, from trona, a beam for weighing.] In old English law. A custom or toll for the weighing of wool. Cowell. 8 Co. 46 b. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 1, § 16.

Tronator; a weigher. Cowell.

TROVE. L. Fr. [from trover, q. v.] Found. De tresor trove, de wrekes trove; of treasure found, of wrecks found. Britt. c. 17. De chose perdu et trove sur terre; of a thing lost, and found upon the earth. Id. ibid.

TROVER. L. Fr. In old English law. To find. Home que le trovera en terre; the man who shall find in the earth. Britt. c. 17. Trover plegges; to find pledges. Id. c. 26. Trover suerte de suer; to find surety to sue or prosecute. Id. ibid.

TROVER. In practice. An action which lies to recover the value of a personal chattel, or goods, wrongfully converted by another to his own use. So called from the formal allegation in the declaration, that the defendant found (from trover, to find) the goods in question, being the property of the plaintiff, and that he converted them to his own use. Hence it is sometimes called an action of trover and conversion.

This action was, in its original, an action of trespass on the case, for recovery of damages against such persons as had actually FOUND another's goods, and refused to deliver them on demand. But from the advantages it possessed in certain respects over detinue, it was at length, by a fiction of law, permitted to be brought against any man who had in his possession, by any means whatsoever, the personal goods of another, and sold them or used them without the consent of the owner, or refused to deliver them when demanded. 3 Bl. Com. 152. The fact of the finding (though the allegation of it is still retained in the declaration) is now wholly immaterial; the injury lying in the conversion. Id. ibid. See Browne on Actions, 424—446.

TROVEURE. L. Fr. [from trover, to find.] In old English law. A thing found, such as treasure, wrecks, waifs, &c. De troveures; of things found. The title of the seventeenth chapter of Britton. En quel meyns teles troveures sount devenues; in what hands such things found have come. Id. ibid. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 7.

TROVOUR. L. Fr. [from trover, to find.] In old English law. A finder. Car tresor musce en tèrre et trove, volons que soit nostre, et si il soit trove en meer, adonques soit il al trovour; for treasure hidden in the earth and found, we will that it be ours; and if it be found in the sea, then it shall belong to the finder. Britt. c. 17.

TROWE, Troye, Truffe. L. Fr. Corrupted forms of trove, found. Kelham.

TROY WEIGHT. [Lat. pondus Trojæ.] A weight of twelve ounces to the pound, chiefly used in weighing gold, silver, diamonds, and other articles of jewelry. Supposed by some to be so called from Troyes, a city of France; but by others to have reference to the monkish name anciently given to London, of Troy Novant, founded on the legend of Brute. Its meaning, according to this derivation, is London weight, and it is considered to have been the original weight of the kingdom of England. Brande's Dict. vocc. Troy weight, Weight.

TRUCE. [L. Lat. treuga; Lat. induciæ.] In international law. A suspension or temporary cessation of hostilities between belligerent powers; an armistice. Wheaton's Intern. Law, 442, [470.] A truce does not terminate the war, but it is one of the commercia belli which suspends its operations. 1 Kent's Com. 159. Vattel, b. 3, c. 16.

The word truce seems to be immediately derived from the L. Lat. treuga, which, according to Spelman, properly denoted a suspension of hostilities in the private wars of the middle ages; (pactio de pace pro tempore conservanda, proprie inter privatos homines qui capitales olim sectarentur inimicitias.) The civilians made a distinction between induciæ and treuga, explaining the former to mean a suspension of arms for a moderate interval, the latter for a longer period. Calv. Lex.

TRUCE OF GOD. [L. Lat. treuga Dei.] A suspension of arms which occasionally took place in the middle ages, putting a stop to private hostilities. So called because promulgated under the authority of the church. See Treuga Dei.

 This kind of truce was frequently promulgated during the middle ages, for the purpose of restraining the hostilities in which the inferior feudatories of the several monarchies of Europe were constantly engaged. Thus, in the county of Roussillon, A. D. 1027, it was determined in a synod of the clergy, that no man should attack his enemy from the hour of nones on Saturday, to the hour of prime on Monday. In 1041, a general truce of God was accepted by the barons, first of Aquitaine, and then of all France, to last from the Wednesday evening of every week to the Monday morning following. This regulation was admitted by Edward the Confessor in England, in 1042, with some additions of great festivals and other days. It was confirmed by many councils, especially the Lateran council of 1179. The observance of it was sworn by knights, burgesses, and peasants of the age of fourteen and upwards, and the penalty of its infringement was excommunication. Brande. Dr. Robertson supposes the clause in the form of an English indictment, which, as an aggravation of the criminal's guilt, mentions his having assaulted a person who was "in the peace of God and of the king," to be borrowed from the Truce or Peace of God and of the king, (Treuga and Pax Dei, and Pax Regis.) 1 Rob. Charles V. Appendix, Note xxi.

TRUE BILL. [L. Lat. billa vera.] In criminal practice. The endorsement made by a grand jury upon a bill of indictment, when they find it sustained by the evidence laid before them, and are satisfied of the truth of the accusation. 4 Bl. Com. 306.

TRUST. [Lat. fiducia, fides, fidei-commissum.] A confidence; a confidence reposed in one person for the benefit of another; a confidence so reposed, respecting property. See infra. "What is a trust? A confidence, for which the party is without remedy, save in a court of equity." Henley, Lord Keeper, in Burgess v. Wheate, 1 W. Bl. 180.

An obligation or duty, arising out of confidence.* An obligation upon a person, arising out of a confidence reposed in him, to apply property faithfully, and according to such confidence. Willis on Trustees, chap. 1, p. 2. Stair's Inst. b. 4, tit. 6, § 2, cited ibid.

A right or interest, arising out of confidence.* An equitable right, title or interest in property, real or personal, distinct from the legal ownership thereof. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. 964. An equitable right or interest in property, which another holds in confidence, as the legal owner.* Both these definitions are essential to make up the complete idea of the word.

 The radical idea of a trust is confidence, and this is the word employed by Lord Coke in his definition of a use, which has been adopted by Mr. Butler and Mr. Lewin, as the best and most exact definition of a trust. Butler's Co. Litt. Note 249, lib. 3. Lewin on Trustees, 15. See infra. The same idea is still more aptly expressed by the Roman term fidei-commissum, which literally means a thing committed to one's faith; and Justinian explains that it was so called, because it rested upon no obligation of law, (nullo vinculo juris,) but only on the honor of those to whom it was committed, (sed tantum pudore eorum qui rogabantur, continebantur.) Inst. 2. 23. 1.

A trust, then, in its simplest elements, is a confidence reposed in one person, who is termed the trustee, for the benefit of another, who is called the cestui que trust; and it is a confidence respecting property, which is thus held by the former for the benefit of the latter. Out of this confidence arise two estates in the property which is the subject of it; a legal estate in the trustee, which consists essentially in obligation; and an equitable estate in the cestui que trust, which consists in right and beneficial enjoyment. So that a trust embraces the two ideas of an obligation on the part of one person, and a corresponding right on the part of another, which are presented in the definitions above given; both founded upon, and growing out of the radical idea of confidence, which has been already explained.

In a trust thus constituted, the legal owner holds the direct and absolute dominion over the property, in the view of the law; but the income, profits or benefits thereof in his hands belong wholly, or in part, to others. The legal estate in the property is thus made subservient to certain uses, benefits or charges in favor of others; and these uses, benefits or charges, constitute the trusts which courts of equity will compel the legal owner, as trustee, to perform, in favor of the cestui que trust, or beneficiary. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 964.

Mr. Cruise defines a trust or trust estate to be "a right in equity to take the rents and profits of lands whereof the legal estate is vested in some other person; to compel the person thus seised of the legal estate, who is called the trustee, to execute such conveyances of the land as the person entitled to the profits, who is called the cestui que trust, shall direct, and to defend the title to the land." In the mean time, the cestui que trust, when in possession, is considered, in a court of law, as tenant at will to the trustee. Cruise's Dig. tit. xii. ch. 1, sec. 3. Chancellor Kent expresses the same idea, in more comprehensive terms: "A trust, in the general and enlarged sense, is a right on the part of the cestui que trust to receive the profits, and to dispose of the lands in equity." 4 Kent's Com. 304.

Lord Coke's definition of a use, which has been already alluded to, may now be given. "A use is a trust or confidence reposed in some other, which is not issuing out of the land, but as a thing collateral, annexed in privity to the estate of the land, and to the person touching the land; scilicet, that cestui que use shall take the profit, and that the terre-tenant shall make an estate, according to his direction." Co. Litt. 272 b. Mr. Butler calls this "the best definition of a trust in equity." Butler's Co. Litt. Note 249, lib. 3. Mr. Lewin expressly adopts it as the definition of a trust, (though he modifies the latter part of it,) and comments on its different clauses in detail. Lewin on Trustees, 15. The language of the definition savours of the technical and antiquated learning of the times, and requires some such commentary as that of Mr. Lewin to understand it fully; but it is valuable as prominently presenting the radical idea of a confidence, which is either omitted, or indirectly alluded to, in most of the standard definitions. As to the learning of trusts in general, see 2 Story's Eq. Jur. 960—982. 4 Kent's Com. 301—313. 1 Greenleaf's Cruise's Digest, tit. xii. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 297—348. United States Digest, Uses and Trusts.

As to the original meaning of uses and trusts, Mr. Stephen has very properly remarked, that "the books are rather vague, and not always correct in their account." Blackstone says, that "uses and trusts were in their original of a nature very similar, or rather exactly the same." 2 Bl. Com. 327. Mr. Cruise also remarks, that "the words use and trust were perfectly synonymous." Cruise's Dig. tit. xii. ch. 1, sect. 2. There can be no doubt, however, that there might be "trusts" which involved no "uses," in the proper meaning of that term. Thus, Lord Bacon expressly distinguishes a "use" from a "special" or "transitory trust." Bac. Read. Uses. Again, it is clear that a "trust" was referable rather to the person in whom the confidence was reposed; "use" to the person for whose benefit it was reposed. Thus, it is said by Lord Chief Baron Gilbert, "If the use be not a thing annexed to the land, it will be asked of me, what it is; to which I answer, that a use is an equitable right to have the profit of lands, the legal estate whereof is in the feoffee, according to the trust and confidence reposed in him." Gilb. Us. (by Sugden,) 374. And again, Lord Bacon remarks: "For a trust which is the way to a use, it is exceedingly well defined by a civilian of great understanding, Fides est obligatio conscientiæ unius ad intentionem alterius." Bac. Read. Uses. 1 Steph. Com. 329, note (d.) Mr. Stephen observes, that uses and trusts were in their origin closely united, but not identical. A trust was the confidence reposed by one man in another, when he invested him with the nominal ownership of property, to be dealt with in some particular manner, or held for some particular person or purpose pointed out. If the trust was of a certain description, viz. to hold land for the benefit of another person, generally, and to let him receive the profits, the sort of interest or right which consequently attached to the latter person was called a use, to distinguish it from the nominal ownership or estate of the trustee. 1 Steph. Com. 328, 329.

The idea of a trust in the law of England was no doubt originally taken from the fidei-commissum (q. v.) of the Roman law; the word itself is of Teutonic origin, and may be traced back to the usages of the ancient Germans. See Trustis.

TRUSTEE. One who is entrusted with property for the benefit of another. One to whom property is conveyed, or by whom it is held, or required to be held, for the benefit of another.

One who has the legal estate in lands or other property, as distinguished from the cestui que trust, or person beneficially interested. The correlative term truster, though used in Scotch law, and in itself very significant and convenient, has not been adopted in England, and is rarely used in the United States. See 9 Iredell's Law R. 191.

TRUSTEE PROCESS. The name given, in the New England states, to the process of foreign attachment, or garnishment, (q. v.) The strict trustee process extends to the goods, effects and credits of the principal debtor in the hands of his agent, trustee or debtor, and who, as trustee, is summoned to appear and answer. It does not extend to the real estate in the hands of the trustee. Cushing on Trustee Process, 4—16. 2 Kent's Com. 403, note. Drake on Attachment, § 451. See United States Digest, Trustee process.

TRUSTER. In Scotch law. The maker or creator of a trust. 7 Bell's Appeal Cases, 297.

TRUSTIS. L. Lat. In old European law. Trust; faith; confidence; fidelity. Si quis eum occiderit qui in truste dominica est; if any one slay him who is in his lord's trust, [bound in fealty to his lord.] L. Salic. tit. 45, § 4. Si quis eum occiderit qui in truste regis est; if any one slay him who is in the king's trust, [who has sworn fealty to the king.] L. Ripuar. tit. 11. Spelman. Esprit des Lois, liv. 30, c. 16, 22.

The vernacular word expressed in these early codes by the barbarous Latin trustis, was no doubt the same in form with the modern English trust, and as the quotations show, of very similar meaning. It was the root of the word antrustio, which denoted a faithful or trusty follower. See Antrustio.

TRY. [L. Lat. triare, q. v.] In practice. To examine or investigate judicially; to examine by means of judicial evidence; to inquire into and test the truth of allegations of fact, by means of judicial evidence adduced for the purpose. The proper function of a court and jury, in cases of issues of fact.

Trial is properly the joint act of judge, jury and counsel; the counsel presenting the allegations and the evidence, and the judge and jury hearing and weighing them. Hence counsel are frequently said to try the causes in which they are engaged.

The term try is also applied, in criminal cases, to persons, as subjects of judicial action. Courts are said to "try prisoners" charged with crimes. 1 W. Bl. 683.

TU, semper ora, tu protege, tuque labora.

Do thou always pray, do thou protect, and do thou labour. An ancient verse quoted by Lord Bacon, as comprehending the three English tenures of frankalmoign, knight's service, and socage. Arg. in Low's case, Works, iv. 235.

TUAS RES TIBI HABETO. Lat. Have (or take) your things to yourself. The form of words by which, according to the old Roman law, a man divorced his wife. Dig. 24. 2. 21. Otherwise expressed, TUAS RES TIBI AGITO. Id. See Tayl. Civ. Law, 363.

TUBUS, (dimin. TUBULUS.) Lat. In the civil law. A pipe by which smoke was conveyed beyond a wall. Calv. Lex.

A pipe for conveying water. Id.

TUCHAS. Span. In Spanish law. Objections or exceptions to witnesses. White's New Recop. b. 3, tit. 7, c. 10

TUER. L. Fr. To kill, or slay. Tue; slain. L. Fr. Dict. Rompur' le lees & tuer' la daim'; broke the leash and killed the doe. Yearb. M. 18 Hen. VI. 6.

Tuerie; slaughter. Kelham.

TUERI. Lat. In the civil law. To protect; to take care of; to preserve. Calv. Lex.

To be protected. Id.

TUERTO. Span. [from Lat. tortum.] In Spanish law. Tort. Las Partidas, part 7, tit. 6, l. 5.

TUGURIUM. Lat. [from tectum, a covering.] In the civil law. A hut or cot; a small rude building for sheltering cattle. Calv. Lex.

A rude or rustic dwelling. Dig. 50. 16. 180. A small country house; a cottage. Calv. Lex.

TUICION. L. Fr. [from Lat. tuitio.] Protection. Et prient tuicion del esglise; and pray protection of the church. Britt. c. 16.

TUITIO. Lat. [from tueri, to protect.] In the civil law. Protection; defence. Spiegelius.

TUITISCUS, Theutiscus, Theotiscus. L. Lat. [from Sax. theod, people.] In old European law. Of the people, or native population; the language of a country. Tuitiscè; in the vernacular. Spelman, voc. Suonpouch.

TULIT. Lat. [from ferre, to bring.] In old practice. Brought. Tulit breve de recto; brought a writ of right. Yearb. M. 1 Edw. II. 1.

TULLIANUM. Lat. In the Roman law. That part of a prison which was under ground. Supposed to be so called from Servius Tullius, who built that part of the first prison in Rome. Adam's Rom. Ant. 290.

TUMBRELL. [L. Fr. tumberell; L. Lat. tumbrellum, timbrellum, tymborale.] In old English law. The ancient name of the castigatory, or trebuchet, (qq. v.) An engine for the correction or punishment of scolds and unquiet women. Lamb. Eirenarch. lib. 1, c. 12. It was used, however, for other purposes, also, and ranked with the pillory and other infamous punishments of the times. Bracton speaks of the pœna pilloralis et tymboralis as causing both suffering and disgrace. Bract. fol. 104 b. Britton and Fleta associate the gallows, pillory and tumbrell together. Britt. c. 20. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, §§ 18, 29. The pillory and tumbrell are mentioned in similar connection in an old manuscript of the laws, statutes and customs of the borough-town of Montgomery, cited in Cowell.

TUN. Sax. [L. Lat. tuna.] A farm or town, (prædium, villa.) A common termination in the names of towns in England, now written ton. Spelman distinguishes this from ham, a similar termination, by the circumstance that tun properly signified a rural estate, (villa rustica,) and ham, a chief house or mansion, (answering to the villa urbana of the Romans;) the former, in other words, signifying the tenemental lands of a lordship; the latter, the lord's manor house and demesnes.

TUNC. Lat. Then. The correlative of nunc, (now.) Dyer, 18 a.

TUNGINUS. L. Lat. In old European law. A judge who ranked next to the count, (comes.) Answering, as Spelman supposes, to the thegn or thanus of the old Anglo-Saxon laws. Tunginus vel centenarius mallum judicent; the thane or centenary shall hold a court. L. Salic. tit. 48, § 1. Si quis de parentela tollere se voluerit, in mallo ante tunginum aut centenarium ambulet, et ibi quatuor fustes alvinos super caput suum franget, &c.; if any one desires to remove or relieve himself from parentage, he shall appear in court before the thane or centenary, and there break four alder staves over his head, &c. Id. tit. 63.

TUNGREVE. Sax. [from tun, town, and greve, gerefa, reeve; L. Lat. tungrevius.] In Saxon law. The reeve or chief officer of a town; a town-reeve. Spelman, vocc. Tungrevius, Leda.

TURBA. Lat. [from Gr. θορυβεῖν, to be in disorder.] In the civil law. A multitude, a crowd or mob; a tumultuous assembly of persons. Said to consist of ten or fifteen, at the least. Dig. 47. 8. 4. 2, 3. Calv. Lex. Hotoman. Prateus. Spiegelius.

TURBA. L. Lat. [O. Fr. tourbe.] In old European law. A number of old men to whom judges in the middle ages were sometimes obliged to refer dubious cases, that they might inform them what was the practice or custom with regard to the point to be determined. Dr. Robertson mentions this as a mode of judicial determination established in the middle ages, which affords the clearest proof that judges, while they had no other rule to direct their decrees but unwritten and traditionary customs, were often at a loss how to find out the facts and principles, according to which they were bound to decide. It was called Enqueste par tourbe. 1 Rob. Charles V. Appendix, No. xxv. Ducange, voc. Turba.

TURBA, Turbus. L. Lat. [from Sax. tyrb, a turf, or piece cut out of the ground.] In old English law. A turf or sod, (cæspes;) a cut of earth, (terricidium.) Spelman. Two kinds of turba are mentioned by Spelman; one cut or sliced from the surface of the ground; the other dug out of it: both being used for fuel. See Turbaria.

TURBARE. Lat. In the civil law. To disturb; to confound; to mix together. Calv. Lex.

TURBARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To cut or dig turf. Spelman, voc. Turba.

TURBARIA. L. Lat. In old English law. The soil or ground from which turf is dug; a turbary or turfery. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 2. Cum duo vel plures teneant boscum, turbariam, piscariam, vel alia hujusmodi in communi absque hoc quod aliquis sciat suum separale; when two or more hold a wood, a turbary, a fishery, or other such thing in common, without this that any one knows [without any one's knowing] his several. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 22. John de Gray, Bishop of Norwich, granted the monks of that church the liberty of digging turves in his turbaries, (ut fodiant turbas in turbariis ejus,) for the necessary uses of their house at Elmham, without waste of the turbary, (sine wasto turbarii) and without any sale of the turves. Registr. Eccles. Norwic. cited in Cowell.

TURBARY. [L. Lat. turbaria, from turba, a turf.] In English law. A right or liberty of digging turf. A right to dig turves on another man's ground. Kitchin, fol. 94. Cowell. See Common of Turbary, Turbaria.

The ground where turves are dug. Cowell.

TURN. See Tourn.

TURNPIKE ROADS are distinguished from highways in general, by the manner in which the expense attending their maintenance is defrayed, viz. by tolls collected from passengers. 3 Steph. Com. 259. A turnpike road, however, is regarded, in law, as a public highway, established by public authority for public use, and is to be regarded as a public easement, and not as private property. Shaw, C. J. 16 Pick. R. 177.

TURNUS. L. Lat. In old English law. The turn; the sheriff's court, so called. See Tourn. Nec aliquis vicecomes vel ballivus faciat turnum suum per hundredum, nisi bis in anno, et non nisi in loco debito et consueto, videlicet, semel post Pascham, et iterum post festum Sancti Michaelis; nor shall any sheriff or bailiff make his turn through the hundred, unless twice in a year, and not unless in the due and accustomed place, to wit, once after Easter, and again after the feast of St. Michael. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 42. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, §§ 1, 2. Item pertinet ad vicecomitem visus franciplegii in turnis suis duobus, singulis annis, per hundreda [et] wapentakya faciendis, et ideo qualiter debent fieri turni videndum est; the view of frank-pledge also belongs to the sheriff in making his two turns every year through the hundreds and wapentakes, and therefore it is to be seen how the turns are to be made. Bract. fol. 155.

TURPIS. Lat. In the civil law. Base; mean; vile; disgraceful; infamous; unlawful. Applied both to things and persons. Calv. Lex.

Turpis arbiter; a bribed or corrupted judge. Id.

Turpis persona; an infamous person. Id.

Turpe judicium; a sentence of infamy. Id.

Turpe lucrum; unlawful gain. Id.

Turpis est pars quæ non convenit [congruit] cum suo toto. The part which does not agree with its whole, is of mean account, [entitled to small or no consideration.] Plowd. 101. Shep. Touch. 87. Bacon's Works, iv. 269.

TURPIS CAUSA. Lat. A base or immoral consideration; an iniquitous, or unlawful consideration. Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. Out of an immoral consideration no action arises. Broom's Max. 350. "No court will lend its aid to a man who founds his cause of action upon an immoral or an illegal act. If, from the plaintiff's own stating or otherwise, the cause of action appear to arise ex turpi causâ, or the transgression of a positive law of this country, there the court says he has no right to be assisted." Lord Mansfield, C. J. Cowp. 343.

TURPIS CONTRACTUS. Lat. An immoral or iniquitous contract. Ex turpi contractu actio non oritur. Out of an immoral contract no action arises. 2 Kent's Com. 466. It is a general rule that an agreement cannot be made the subject of an action, if it can be impeached on the grounds of dishonesty or as being opposed to public policy,—if it be either contra bonos mores, or forbidden by the law. Lord Kenyon, C. J. 6 Term R. 16. "The reason why the common law says such contracts are void, is for the public good: you shall not stipulate for iniquity. All writers upon our law agree in this,—no polluted hand shall touch the pure fountains of justice." Wilmot, C. J. 2 Wils. 341, 350.

TURPITUDO. Lat. [from turpis, q. v.] Baseness; infamy; immorality; turpitude. Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem est audiendus, (q. v.) No one alleging his own baseness or infamy, is to be heard; no man is allowed to say in court, that he has done an infamous act. Calv. Lex.

TURRIS. Lat. In old English law. A tower; the tower; the Tower of London. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 11, §§ 6, 7.

TUS. L. Fr. All; a corruption of touts. Tus jours; forever. Kelham.

TUT. L. Fr. All; a corruption of tout. Tut le reaume; the whole kingdom. Kelham.

TUTELA. Lat. [from tueri, to protect or guard.] In the civil law. Tutelage; that species of guardianship which continued to the age of puberty; the guardian being called tutor, and the ward, pupillus. 1 Domat, Civ. Law, b. 2, tit. 1, p. 260. A guardianship of the person. Calv. Lex. Est autem tutela (ut Servius definivit,) vis ac potestas in capite libero, ad tuendum eum qui per ætatem se defendere nequit, jure civili data ac permissa; tutelage, (as Servius has defined it,) is an authority and power given, and permitted by the civil law over a free person, [or person sui juris] for the purpose of protecting him who, by reason of his [tender] age, is unable to protect himself. Inst. 1. 13. 1. This is taken, with some variation, from the definition of Paulus in the Digests. Dig. 26. 1. 1, pr. Impuberes autem in tutela esse, naturali juri conveniens est; ut is qui perfectæ ætatis non sit, alterius tutela regatur; that persons under puberty should be in, [or under] tutelage, is agreeable to the law of nature, [which dictates] that one who is not of perfect age should be under the government and protection of another. Inst. 1. 21. 6. Pupilli pupillæque, cum puberes esse cæperint à tutela liberantur; pupils [wards,] both male and female, when they arrive at puberty, are freed from tutelage. Id. 1. 22, pr.

TUTELA LEGITIMA. Lat. In the civil law. Legal tutelage; tutelage created by act of law, as where none had been created by testament. Inst. 1. 15, pr. This resembles the modern appointment of guardian by the court of chancery. Cooper's Notes, *446, 447. Hallifax, Anal. b. 1, c. 9, num. 6.

TUTELA TESTAMENTARIA. Lat. In the civil law. Testamentary tutelage or guardianship; that kind of tutelage which was created by will. Dig. 26. 2. Calv. Lex. Hallifax, Anal. b. 1, c. 9, num. 3, 4. Inst. 1. 13. 3. Id. 1. 14.

TUTELÆ ACTIO. Lat. In the civil law. An action of tutelage; an action which lay for a ward or pupil, (pupillus,) on the termination of tutelage, against the tutor or guardian, to compel an account. Inst. I. 21. 7. Dig. 27. 3, 4. Calv. Lex. Enumerated by Bracton and Fleta, among actions ex quasi contractû. Bract. fol. 100 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 1.

TUTELAM REDDERE. Lat. In the civil law. To render an account of tutelage, (tutelæ rationes reddere.) Calv. Lex. Tutelam reposcere; to demand an account of tutelage. Id.

Tutius erratur ex parte mitiori. It is safer to err on the milder side. Branch's Pr. 3 Inst. 220.

Tutius semper est errare acquietando, quam in puniendo; ex parte misericordiæ quam ex parte justitiæ. It is always safer to err in acquitting than in punishing;—on the side of mercy, than on the side of justice. Branch's Pr. 2 Hale's P. C. 290.

TUTOR. Lat. [from tueri, to protect.] In the civil law. A guardian who had the charge of persons under the age of puberty, and who had also the care of their affairs. Inst. 1. 13. 1. Id. 1. 20. 7. See Tutela. Tutores autem sunt qui eam vim ac potestatem habent, [i. e. vim ac potestatem in capite libero, ad tuendum eum qui per ætatem se defendere nequit, jure civili data ac permissa;] exque ipsa re nomen acceperunt. Itaque appellantur tutores, quasi tuitores ac defensores. (Tutors are those who have such power and authority, [i. e. a power and authority given by law over a free person, for the purpose of protecting him who, by reason of his age, cannot protect himself;] and they have taken their name from that same circumstance. Accordingly they are called tutores [tutors,] being, as it were, tuitores [protectors, from tueri, to protect,] and defenders.) Inst. 1. 13. 2. This definition is taken, with some variations, from that of Paulus in the Digests. Dig. 26. 1. 1. 1.

In old English law. A guardian. Bracton uses tutor and curator indifferently, without observing the distinction made between these terms by the civil law; and custos is employed in the same sense. Bract. fol. 28, 28 b. So tutrix and curatrix. Id. ibid.

In Scotch law, tutor is used in the sense of the civil law, as distinguished from curator. Ersk. Pr. b. 1, tit. 7. Bell's Dict. And the same distinction (tuteur and curateur) is adopted in the Civil Code of Louisiana. Art. 263.

TUTRIX. Lat. In old English law. A female tutor or guardian. Bract. fol. 28 b.

TUZ. L. Fr. All; a corruption of touts. Tuz ceuz; all those. Kelham. Encontre tuz iceaus; against all those. Artic. sup. Cart.

TWA NIGHT GEST. Sax. On the second night, a guest. According to the laws of Edward the Confessor, a person who was entertained in the house of another, was called and to be considered, on the second night of his entertainment, a guest. LL. Edw. Conf. c. 17. Spelman, voc. Homehyne. Expressed in the Latin of Bracton, secunda nocte, gust. Bract. fol. 124 b. In the French of Britton, l'autre nuyt geste. Britt. c. 12. Bracton speaks of this regulation as an ancient custom.

TWAITE. In old English law. A wood grubbed up, and turned to arable land. Co. Litt. 4 b.

TWELFHENDE, Twelfhind, Twelfhundemen. Sax. [from twelf, twelve, and hynd, hund, a hundred; L. Lat. twelfhindi.] The highest order of persons under the Saxon government, who were valued or rated at twelve hundred shillings. Cowell.

TWELVE-MONTH, in the singular number, includes all the year; but twelve months are to be computed according to twenty-eight days for every month. 6 Co. 62. See Month.

TWELVE TABLES. [Lat. Leges Duodecim Tabularum.] A celebrated body of Roman laws, framed by decemvirs appointed A. U. C. 303, on the return of three deputies or commissioners who had been sent to Greece to examine into foreign laws and institutions. They consisted partly of laws transcribed from the institutions of other nations, partly of such as were altered and accommodated to the manners of the Romans, partly of new provisions, and mainly, perhaps, of laws and usages under their ancient kings. 1 Kent's Com. 521. This code has been preserved to modern times, only in fragments, which have been collected and edited by Gothofred, Gravina and other writers. See 1 Kent's Com. 521—525, note, where a valuable summary of it is given.

TWICE IN JEOPARDY. See Once in jeopardy. 1 Kent's Com. 611, note, (7th ed.) Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, § 573, et seq.

TWIGILD. Sax. [from twy, two, and gild, or geld, a payment.] In Saxon law. A double payment, or composition for one offence. Spelman.

TYHTLAN. Sax. In Saxon law. An accusation, impeachment or charge of any offence. Nec componat aliquis pro ulla tyhtlan, si non intersit testimonium præpositi regis; nor shall any one compound for any accusation, unless there be present evidence on behalf of the king. LL. Ethelr. c. 2. Cowell.

TYLWITH. Brit. [from tyle, the site of a house, or tylath, a beam in a building.] A tribe or family branching or issuing out of another. Cowell.

TYMBORALE. L. Lat. In old English law. The tumbrell. Bract. fol. 104 b. See Tumbrell.

U.

U. L. Fr. Or. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 6.

U. R. An abbreviation of Uti rogas, (q. v.)

UBERRIMA FIDES. Lat. The most abundant or abounding good faith. An expressive phrase of the Roman law, frequently used in the modern books. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 317. "The law requires uberrima fides in the formation of the contract" [of insurance.] 3 Kent's Com. 283. Marine insurance is emphatically a contract—uberrimæ fidei, of the most abounding good faith. 2 Duer on Ins. 380.

UBI. Lat. Where, (in quo loco.) An adverb of place. Calv. Lex.

Where, in the sense of when, (quando;) expressive of circumstance. See the maxims infra.

Ubi aliquid conceditur, conceditur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. Where any thing is granted, that also is granted without which the thing cannot exist. Broom's Max. [364.]

Ubi aliquid impeditur propter unum, eo remoto, tollitur impedimentum. Where any thing is impeded by one single cause, if that be removed, the impediment is removed. Branch's Pr. citing 5 Co. 77 a, Paget's case. This maxim in the passage referred to reads, Cum aliquid, &c.

Ubi cessat remedium ordinarium, ibi decurritur ad extraordinarium. Where the ordinary remedy fails, recourse must be had to an extraordinary one. 4 Co. 92 b, Slade's case.

Ubi eadem ratio, ibi idem jus. Where the reason is the same, there the law is the same. 7 Co. 18 b, Calvin's case. Like reason doth make like law. Co. Litt. 10 a. Broom's Max. 64, [114, 115.] Where the reason of a rule established in one case is found to apply to another case, the same rule will be established in the latter. See Id. 65, 66. The older and fuller form of this maxim was, Ubi eadem est ratio, ibi idem jus erit. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 16, § 34. Another form was, Ubi eadem ratio, ibi idem jus esse debet. Where the same reason is, there the same law ought to be. Yearb. M. 19 Hen. VI. 38.

Ubi culpa est, ibi pœna subesse debet. Where the crime is committed, there ought the punishment to be undergone. Jenk. Cent. 325.

Ubi damna dantur, victus victori in expensis condemnari debet. Where damages are given, the vanquished party ought to be condemned in costs to the victor. 2 Inst. 289.

Ubi factum nullum, ibi fortia nulla.

Where there is no fact, there can be no force; where there is no principal fact or act done, there can be no accessory act. 4 Co. 42 b, Syer's case. The significance of this maxim turns upon the technical meaning of the words factum and fortia in the old law. See Factum, Fortia. The maxim itself appears to have been taken from Bracton. Ubi factum, ibi poterit esse forcia quandoquè, sed nunquam forcia sine facto. Bract. fol. 128. In Branch's Principia, fortia has been converted into sortia, and the maxim translated, "Where there is no deed committed, there can be no consequences;" and the error and translation have both been followed in Wharton's Lexicon.

Ubi jus, ibi remedium. Where there is a right, there is a remedy; where the law gives a right, it gives a remedy for the recovery of such right.* Broom's Max. 91, [146.] There is no wrong without a remedy. Id. ibid. If a man has a right, he must have a means to vindicate and maintain it, and a remedy, if he is injured in the exercise and enjoyment of it; and indeed it is a vain thing to imagine a right without a remedy, for want of right and want of remedy are reciprocal. Holt, C. J. 2 Ld. Raym. 953. If the law confer a right, it will also confer a remedy. Lord Kenyon, C. J. 1 East, 220. This maxim has been considered so valuable, that it gave occasion for the first invention of that form of action called an action on the case. Broom's Max. ub. sup.

Ubi lex aliquem cogit ostendere causam, necesse est quod causa sit justa et legitima. Where the law compels a man to show cause, it is necessary that the cause be just and lawful. 2 Inst. 289.

Ubi lex est specialis, et ratio ejus generalis; generaliter accipienda est. Where a law is special, but the reason of it general, it is to be taken generally. 2 Inst. 43.

Ubi lex non distinguit, nec nos distinguere debemus. Where the law does not distinguish, neither ought we to distinguish. 7 Co. 5 b, Calvin's case. Holt, C. J. 12 Mod. 293.

Ubi major pars est, ibi totum. Where the greater part is, there the whole is. Moor, 578. Ubi major pars, ibi tota. In corporations, the majority governs. 10 Mod. 75.

Ubi non est directa lex, standum est arbitrio judicis, vel procedendum ad similia. Where there is no positive law, [applicable to a case,] it must rest in the discretion of the judge, or it must be determined by the principles of similar cases. Ellesm. Postn. 41. Branch's Pr.

Ubi non est condendi auctoritas, ibi non est parendi necessitas. Where there is no authority for establishing a rule, there is no necessity of obeying it. Davies' R. 69.

Ubi non est lex, ibi non est transgressio, quoad mundum. Where there is no law, there is no transgression, as far as relates to the world. 4 Co. 16 b. This seems to be an application of the text, Romans, iv. 15.

Ubi non est principalis, non potest esse accessorius. Where there is no principal there can be no accessory. 4 Co. 43 b, Syer's case.

Ubi nulla est conjectura quæ ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate non grammatica, sed populari ex usu. Where there is nothing to call for a different construction, [the] words [of an instrument] are to be understood, not according to their strict grammatical meaning, but according to their popular and ordinary sense. Grotius de Jure Belli ac Pacis, lib. 2, c. 16, § 2. Mr. Duer observes, in reference to this maxim, that the term conjectura is constantly used by Grotius, as denoting the collection of the intent by other means than the sole explanation of the words. That is, it denotes construction, as distinguished from mere interpretation. 1 Duer on Ins. 215. The words of Grotius are, Si nulla sit conjectura quæ ducat aliò, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica quæ est ex origine, sed populari ex usu.

Ubi nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dos. Where there is no marriage, there is no dower. Bract. fol. 92. 2 Bl. Com. 130. The converse rule is also given by Bracton: Ubi matrimonium, ibi dos. Where there is marriage, there is dower. Id. ibid. In Branch's Principia, this maxim is erroneously and ungrammatically made to read nullum dos, and the error has been copied by several authors who have cited it. The maxim seems to have been borrowed (though with a different sense attached to the word dos,) from that of the civil law: Ubicunque matrimonii nomen non est, nec dos est. Dig. 23. 3. 3.

Ubi pugnantia inter se in testamento juberentur, neutrum ratum est. Where repugnant or inconsistent directions are contained in a will, neither is valid. Dig. 50. 17. 188, pr.

Ubi quid generaliter conceditur, inest hæc exceptio, si non aliquid sit contra jus fasque. Where a thing is granted generally, this exception is always implied, that there be nothing contrary to law and right. Branch's Pr.

Ubi quis delinquit, ibi punietur. Where a man offends, there he shall be punished. 6 Co. 47 b, Dowdale's case. In cases of felony, the trial shall be always by the common law in the same place where the offence was, and shall not be supposed in any other place. Id. ibid.

UBI REVERA. Lat. Where in reality; where in truth, or in point of fact. Cro. Eliz. 645. Cro. Jac. 4.

Ubi verba conjuncta non sunt, sufficit alterutrum esse factum. Where words are not conjoined [used conjunctively] it is sufficient that either one [of the things expressed] be done. Dig. 50. 17. 110. 3.

UBICUNQUE FUERIMUS IN ANGLIA. L. Lat. Wheresoever we shall be in England. The style of the return of writs in the court of King's or Queen's Bench; it being in theory a moveable court, attendant upon the sovereign's person. 3 Bl. Com. 41, 284. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 5. Id. lib. 2, c. 64, § 19.

Ubicunque est injuria, ibi damnum sequitur. Wherever there is an injury, there a damage results. Branch's Pr.

UDAL. A term mentioned by Blackstone, as used in Finland to denote that kind of right in real property which is called in English law, allodial. 2 Bl. Com. 45, note (f.) See Allodium. The term is used in Orkney and Zetland. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 3, pp. 6, 82.

UL, Ulle. L. Fr. [from Lat. ullus.] Any; any one. Kelham.

ULNA. Lat. In old English law. An ell. So generally translated in the books; but in Dyer it is expressly said that ulna means a yard, and not an ell. Dyer, 303 b. Blackstone observes that the ancient ell answers to the modern yard. 1 Bl. Com. 275. Duæ ulnæ infra listas; two ells within the lists. Magna Charta, c. 25. The Scotch eln or elne has followed the old Lat. ulna more closely than the English word. See Skene de Verb. Signif. voc. Particata.

ULNA FERREA. L. Lat. In old English law. The iron ell; the standard ell of iron, kept in the Exchequer for the rule of measure. Totam terram illam quæ continet in fronte—in latitudine 44 ulnas, de ulnis ferreis Johannis Regis Angliæ, &c.; all that land which contains in front,—in breadth, 44 ells, of the iron ells of John King of England, &c. 2 Mon. Angl. 383.

ULNAGIUM. L. Lat. [from ulna, q. v.] In old English law. Aulnage, or alnage; ell or yard measure. Dyer, 303 b.

ULNARE. L. Lat. [from ulna, q. v.] In old English law. To measure by the ulna or ell; to measure cloth. Si autem filius burgensis, tunc ætatem habere intelligitur, cum denarios discretè sciverit numerare, et pannos ulnare, et alia negotia similia paterna exercere; if he be the son of a burgess, he is considered to be of age, when he knows how to count money correctly, and to measure cloths, and to manage other like matters of his father's. Bract. fol. 86 b. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 11, § 7.

Ulnator; a measurer; an alnager. Dyer, 303 b.

ULTERIUS CONCILIUM. L. Lat. Further argument. A common term in the older reports. 1 Burr. 1020. 2 Wils. 243.

ULTIMA VOLUNTAS. Lat. In old English law. Last will; the last will. In testamento suo, in ultima voluntate sua; in his testament, in his last will. Reg. Orig. 244 b.

Ultima voluntas testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention. Co. Litt. 322 b. Expressed by Littleton, La volunte de devisour, fait pur son testament, serra performe solonque l' entent del devisour. Litt. sect. 586.

ULTIMUM SUPPLICIUM. Lat. The extreme punishment; the extremity of punishment; the punishment of death. 4 Bl. Com. 17. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 21, § 1. A term derived from the civil law. Ultimum supplicium esse mortem solam interpretamur; we interpret the extreme punishment to mean death only. Dig. 48. 19. 21.

ULTIMUM TEMPUS PARIENDI. Lat. The extreme period of bearing; the extreme period between the conception and the birth of a child. 2 Steph. Com. 317.

ULTIMUS HÆRES. Lat. In old English law. The last heir. A term applied to the lord to whom an escheat fell; he being considered as taking by descent in a kind of caducary succession. 2 Bl.

Com. 245. Ultimi hæredes aliquorum sunt eorum domini; the last heirs of some tenants are their lords. Glanv. lib. 7, c. 17. Spelman. In Scotch law, it is applied to the king. Ersk. Pr. b. 2, tit. 10.

ULTRA. Lat. [L. Fr. outre, ultre.] Beyond; the opposite of infra, (q. v.) Talis infirmitas infra annum propriè dicitur languor, si autem ultra annum duraverit, dici poterit morbus sonticus; such an infirmity within a year is properly called sickness; but if it last beyond a year, it may be called a settled or incurable sickness. Bract. fol. 344 b. Remedial statutes are construed liberally, and ultra, but not contra the strict letter. 1 Kent's Com. 465. Dwarris on Statutes, 726.

ULTRA MARE. L. Lat. [L. Fr. outre meer.] Beyond sea. One of the old essoins or excuses for not appearing in court at the return of process. Bract. fol. 338. See Essoin.

ULTRA VIRES. Lat. Beyond the powers or capacity. "A deed ultra vires is null and void." 1 Kames' Equity, 309. See 35 Eng. Law & Eq. R. 13.

ULTRE. L. Fr. [from Lat. ultra, q. v.] Beyond; more than; longer than. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 46.

ULTRONEOUS WITNESS. In Scotch law. A volunteer witness; one who appears to give evidence, without being called upon. 2 Alis. Crim. Pr. 393.

UM. L. Fr. Man. A corrupted form of home. Kelham. See LL. Gul. Conq. l. 41.

UMBESETTING. O. Sc. In old Scotch law. Obstructing or besetting. "Umbesetting of the hie gait;" obstructing of the highway. 1 Pitc. Cr. Trials, part 1, p. 58.

UMBILICUS. Lat. Literally, the navel; the centre of any thing. The name given to the fourth and middle part of the Digests, consisting of eight books, from the twentieth to the twenty-seventh, both inclusive.

UMPIRAGE. Decision by an umpire. Hale's Anal. sect. xlvii.

UMPIRE. A person to whom a matter which has been submitted to arbitrators, is, in case of their disagreement, referred for final decision.* The umpire is sometimes named in the submission; but more generally, the submission merely provides that he shall be appointed by the arbitrators. Russell's Arbitrator, 214. Billing on Awards, 106.

Umpire is supposed to be derived from the Lat. impar, uneven or odd. It is, however, also expressed in Latin, imperator, with which the Scotch oversman and French sur-arbitre correspond in signification. 2 Kames' Equity, 290. Civ. Code of Louis. Art. 3083.

UN FOITZ. L. Fr. One time; once. Yearb. P. 6 Edw. III. 75.

Un ne doit prise advantage de son tort demesne. One ought not to take advantage of his own wrong. 2 And. 38, 40.

UNA CUM. L. Lat. Together with. Latch. 146.

UNA CUM OMNIBUS ALIIS. Lat. Together with all other things. A phrase in old conveyancing. Hob. 175.

Una persona vix potest supplere vices duarum. One person can hardly fill the places of two. Branch's Pr. citing 7 Co. 118 a, Acton's case. In the passage referred to, the maxim reads, Difficile est ut unus homo vicem duorum sustineat. It is difficult for one man to fill the place, or discharge the duty of two.

UNA VOCE. Lat. With one voice; unanimously; without dissent. "The court, unâ voce, gave judgment." Hob. 129.

UNANIMITER. L. Lat. [from unus, one, and animus, mind.] In old English law. Unanimously; without dissent. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 34, § 36.

UNANIMITY. In practice. The entire agreement or concurrence of a petit jury in their verdict; all the jurors being of one and the same mind. A quality uniformly required in English and American practice.

 Anciently, it was not necessary (at least, not in civil causes) that all the twelve should agree; but, in case of a difference among the jury, the method was to separate one part from the other, and then to examine each of them as to the reasons of their differing in opinion; and if, after such examination, both sides persisted in their former opinions, the court caused both verdicts to be fully and distinctly recorded, and then judgment was given ex dicto majoris partis juratorum, (according to the verdict of the major part of the jurors.) Thus, in a grand assise upon a writ of right, [in the reign of King Henry III.] between the abbot of Kirkstede and Edmund de Eyncourt, eleven of the jury found for the abbot, and one for Edmund de Eyncourt. In this case, the verdict of the eleven was first recorded. "Robertus de Harblinge et omnes alii præter Radul- phum filium Simonis dicunt super sacramentum suum," &c. Then follows the dictum of the twelfth: "Et prædictus Radulphus filius Simonis dicit super sacramentum suum," &c. Then follows the judgment: "Sed quia prædicti undecim concorditer et præcise dicunt quod prædictus abbas et ecclesia sua prædicta majus jus habeant tenendi, &c. ideo consideratum est quod prædictus abbas et successores sui teneant prædicta tenementa de cætero in perpetuum," &c. Plac. Cor. Justic. itiner. in Com. Lincoln, anno. 56 H. III. rot. 29, in dorso. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, (Runnington's ed. 1820,) 349, note.

In an assise of novel disseisin, in the reign of Edward I. between William Tristram, plaintiff, and John Simenel and others defendants, where the whole jury consisted of only eleven, ten found for Tristram and one for Simenel, and both verdicts were recorded in this manner: Decem jurati dicunt quod," &c. "et undecimus juratorum, scilicet Johannes Kineth, dicit," &c. "Et quia dicto majoris partis juratorum standum est, consideratum est quod prædictus Willielmus recuperet," &c. (Ten jurors say that, &c. and the eleventh juror, to wit, John Kineth, says, &c. And because the saying of the major part of the jurors should be abided by, it is considered that the aforesaid William recover, &c.) Pasch. 44 Edw. I. rot. 10, coram rege.

UNARE. L. Lat. In old records. To inn; to get in, or make up hay fit for carriage, after mowing. Cartul. S. Edmund. MS. cited in Cowell.

UNCIA. Lat. In the Roman law. An ounce; the twelfth of the Roman as, or pound. See As.

The twelfth part of any thing, as of an inheritance; the proportion of one-twelfth. Tayl. Civ. Law, 492. 2 Bl. Com. 462, note (m.) See Fleta, lib. 6, c. 17, § 1.

UNCIA. L. Lat. In old charters of the British kings. A measure of land, the quantity of which is very obscurely explained in the books. In Cowell, it is said to have consisted of twelve modii, and each modius possibly 100 feet square.

UNCIA. Lat. In old English law. An ounce; the twelfth part of a pound. Viginti denarii fac' unciam, et duodecim unciæ faciunt libram; twenty pennies make an ounce, and twelve ounces make a pound. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 1.

UNCIARIUS HÆRES. Lat. In the Roman law. An heir to one-twelfth of an estate or inheritance. Calv. Lex.

UNCORE. L. Fr. Still; again; once more. Uncore jugement de breve. Yearb. M. 10 Edw. III. 15.

UNCORE PRIST. L. Fr. Still ready. Formal words in the old plea of tender. See Tout temps prist.

UNCUTH. Sax. [from un, not, and cuth, known.] In Saxon law. Unknown; a stranger. A person entertained in the house of another was, on the first night of his entertainment, so called. Bract. fol. 124 b.

UNDE. Lat. Whence; wherefrom. See infra.

Whereof. Unde rectatus est; whereof he is accused. Rot. Cl. 3 Edw. I. m. 61.

Whereupon. Et unde dicit; and whereupon he says. Yearb. M. 1 Edw. II. 1.

UNDE COGNATI. Lat. In the civil law. A species of the bonorum possessio, (q. v.) granted to cognates, or relations on the part of the mother. Inst. 3. 10. 1, 2. Dig. 38. 8. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10, § 724. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 11, num. 5.

UNDE LEGITIMI. Lat. In the civil law. A species of the bonorum possessio (q. v.) granted to agnates, or the lawful heirs. Inst. 3. 10. 1, 2. Dig. 38. 7. Hein. El. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10. § 723. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 11, num. 5.

UNDE LIBERI. Lat. In the civil law. A species of the bonorum possessio, (q. v.) granted to emancipated children, or the proper heirs of the deceased. Hein. El. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10, § 722. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 11, num. 5. Inst. 3. 10. 1, 2. Dig. 38. 6.

UNDE NIHIL HABET. L. Lat. (Whereof she hath nothing.) In old English law. The name of the writ of dower, which lay for a widow, where no dower at all had been assigned her within the time limited by law. 3 Bl. Com. 183. F. N. B. 147 E. Roscoe's Real Act. 39.

UNDE VI. Lat. (Wherefrom by force.) In the civil law. The technical name of that species of interdict which was granted to recover the possession of an immoveable thing wherefrom a person had been ejected by force. Inst. 4. 15. 6. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 15, § 1303. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 250, § 253.

UNDE VIR ET UXOR. Lat. In the civil law. A species of the bonorum possessio, (q. v.) granted to a husband or wife, and by which they succeeded each other, on failure of the cognati. Inst. 3. 10. 1, 2, Dig. 38. 11. Hein. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10, § 725. Hall. Anal. b. 2, c. 11, num. 5.

UNDEFENDED. In pleading. Without defence, or denial. Where judgment passes by default against a defendant, the language in which the default is recorded is, that the defendant "says nothing in bar or preclusion of the action, whereby the plaintiff remains therein undefended against the said defendant." Arch. Forms, 336.

UNDERLEASE. In conveyancing. A lease granted by one who is himself a lessee for years, for any fewer or less number of years than he himself holds. If a deed passes all the estate or term of the termor, it is an assignment; but if it be for a less portion of time than the whole term, it is an underlease, and leaves a reversion in the termor. 4 Kent's Com. 96.

UNDERLY, Underlie. Sc. In Scotch law. To abide by; to submit to. To underly the law (ad subeundum legem.) 1 Pitc. Crim. Trials, part 1, p. 92. See Id. p. 22.

UNDER-SHERIFF. [L. Lat. sub-vicecomes; L. Fr. south-viscount.] A person appointed by the sheriff of a county to perform all his ordinary duties in his behalf, and upon whom the whole duties of the office devolve, in case of a vacancy by death or otherwise, until a new sheriff is chosen. Sometimes confounded with a deputy-sheriff; but the latter term is properly applicable to those officers whom the sheriff appoints to execute process in his behalf, and who have no other powers than such as appertain to that particular duty. See 1 Chitt. Bl. Com. 345, note.

UNDER TENANT. A tenant under one who is himself a tenant; one who holds by underlease, from a lessee. See Underlease.

UNDERWRITER. In the law of insurance. An insurer; so called from his underwriting or subscribing the policy. A term constantly applied to insurers, whether they be corporations or individuals, but most properly applicable to the latter.

In England, marine insurances are most commonly undertaken by private persons, a certain number of whom usually subscribe the policy, each engaging, on his own separate account, to indemnify to the extent of a particular sum of money, being a proportion of the whole value of the subject of insurance; and these are called, in reference to the method used of thus subscribing their names, underwriters. 2 Steph. Com. 174. The only parties who sign their names at the foot of the policies, in other words, subscribe them, are the insurers, who are hence called the underwriters, or sub-scribers. 1 Arnould on Ins. 37, (38, Perkins' ed.) In policies of insurance effected with private underwriters, where it is not usual for one person to take upon himself the whole risk of the insurance, each underwriter signs or subscribes the policy, adding on the same line with his name, the sum he intends to insure. The next underwriter to whom the policy is tendered, then in like manner writes under the first subscription his name and the sum he means to insure, and the rest follow in order, until the aggregate of the separate sums written opposite to the name of each underwriter, or, in technical language, "till the aggregate of their several subscriptions" amounts to the sum which the party effecting the policy desires to protect by the insurance. Id. ibid.

In the United States, where insurances are generally made by incorporated companies, the underwriting or subscription usually consists of the signature of the president or vice-president of the company and the sum insured, with the attestation of the secretary.

UNDIQUE. Lat. On all sides; from every quarter. Undique collatis membris; members being collected from every quarter. A phrase applied to a contract compounded of different contracts. See 1 Curtis R. 350; Curtis, J.

UNDRES. Sax. In old English law. Minors, or persons under age. Ante ætatem vero viginti unius annorum, robustos vel habiles ad arma suscipienda pro patriæ defensione non reputantur, et ideo undres dicuntur, et sub tutela dominorum interim remanebunt; before the age of twenty-one years, they are not regarded as able-bodied, or fit to bear arms for the defence of the country, and therefore they are called undres, and in the mean time they shall remain under the protection of their lords. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 9, § 4. Cowell.

UN-FREE-MAN. Sc. [L. Lat. forensis.] In Scotch law. A stranger. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Forensis.

UNG. L. Fr. One; an old form of un. Kelham.

UNGELD. Sax. [from un, without, and geld, payment.] In Saxon law. One for whom no payment was to be made. A person so far out of the protection of the law, that if he were murdered, no geld or fine should be paid, or composition made by him that killed him. Cowell.

UNIARE. L. Lat. [from unus, one.] To unite; to make one; to join in a body. Si quando uniantur duo populi, non amittentur jura sed communicabuntur; if at any time two nations become one, their rights will not be lost, but shared between them. Grot. de Jur. Bell. lib. 2, c. 9, § 9.

UNICA TAXATIO. L. Lat. In old practice. A single taxation. The technical name of the award of the venire on the record, where damages on a default or demurrer are to be assessed at the same time with those on an issue; the language of the record being, that "because it is convenient and necessary that there be but one taxation, (unica taxatio, in the Latin forms,) in the suit, therefore, as well to try the issue as to inquire of the damages," the sheriff is commanded to summon a jury. Arch. Forms, 296.

UNICUS. Lat. [from unus, one.] A single one. See Unica taxatio.

UNIFORMITY OF PROCESS ACT. The English statute of 2 Will. IV. c. 39, establishing a uniform process for the commencement of actions in all the courts of law at Westminster. 3 Steph. Com. 566.

UNILATERAL CONTRACT. [Fr. contrat unilaterale.] In modern civil law. A contract where the party to whom an engagement is made, makes no express agreement on his part. Civil Code of Louis. Art. 1758. Poth. Obl. part 1, ch. 1, sect. 1, art. 2.

UNIO. Lat. In canon law. A consolidation of two churches into one. Cowell.

UNIO PROLIUM. Lat. In German law. Union of offsprings; a species of adoption by which the children of a former marriage are made equal, in regard to the right of succession, with the children of a second marriage. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 11, § 188. Hallifax, Anal. b. 1, c. 8, num. 6.

UNITAS. Lat. [from unus, one.] In old English law. Unity; the uniting or consolidating of two or more things together. Unitas juris; unity of right. Bract. fol. 76 b.

UNITY. In the law of estates. The peculiar characteristic of an estate held by several in joint-tenancy, and which is fourfold, viz. unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession. In other words, joint tenants have one and the same interest, accruing by one and the same conveyance; commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. 2 Bl. Com. 180.

UNITY OF INTEREST. One of the properties of a joint estate; all the joint-tenants being entitled to one period of duration or quantity of interest in the lands. 2 Bl. Com. 181.

UNITY OF TITLE. One of the essential properties of a joint estate; the estate of all the tenants being created by one and the same act, whether legal or illegal. 2 Bl. Com. 181.

UNITY OF TIME. One of the essential properties of a joint estate; the estates of the tenants being vested at one and the same period. 2 Bl. Com. 181.

UNITY OF POSSESSION. One of the essential properties of a joint estate, each of the tenants having the entire possession as well of every parcel as of the whole. 2 Bl. Com. 182.

The term unity of possession is defined by Cowell, "the joint possession of two rights by several titles," called, in the civil law, consolidatio fructus et proprietatis. The example he gives of it is the following: If I take a lease of land from one upon a certain rent, and afterwards I buy the fee-simple, this is an unity of possession by which the lease is extinguished.

Unius omnino testis responsio non audiatur. The answer of one witness shall not be heard at all; the testimony of a single witness shall not be admitted under any circumstances. A maxim of the civil and canon law. Cod. 4. 20. 9. Decret. Greg. IX. lib. 2, tit. 20, c. 23. 3 Bl. Com. 370. Best on Evid. 426, § 390, and note.

Uniuscujusque contractus initium spectandum est, et causa. The commencement and cause of every contract are to be regarded. Dig. 17. 1. 8. Story on Bailm. § 56.

Universalia sunt notiora singularibus. Universal or general things are more known than particular things. 2 Rol. R. 294.

UNIVERSAL LEGACY. [Fr. legs universel.] A testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or several persons the whole of the property which he leaves at his decease. Civil Code of Louis. Art. 1599.

UNIVERSAL REPRESENTATION. In Scotch law. A term applied to the representation by an heir, of his ancestor. Bell's Dict.

UNIVERSITAS. Lat. [from universus, the whole.] In the civil law. A corporation aggregate. Dig. 3. 4. 7. Literally, a whole formed out of many individuals. 1 Bl. Com. 469. Si universitas ad unum redit, et stet nomen universitatis; if the corporation be reduced to one member, yet the name of a corporation will be preserved. Dig. ub. sup. Universitas vel corporatio non dicitur aliquid facere, nisi id sit collegialiter deliberatum, etiam si major pars id faciat; a corporation is not said to do any act, unless it have been deliberated upon in corporate form, even though a majority of the members should do it. Davies' R. 48.

UNIVERSITAS RERUM. Lat. In the civil law. Literally, a whole of things. Several single things, which, though not mechanically connected with one another, are, when taken together, regarded as a whole in any legal respect, (corpus quod ex distantibus constat.) 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 154, § 149. Inst. 2. 20. 18.

UNIVERSITAS FACTI. Lat. In the civil law. A plurality of corporeal things of the same kind, which are regarded as a whole; e. g. a herd of cattle, a stock of goods. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 154, § 149. Inst. 2. 20. 18.

UNIVERSITAS JURIS. Lat. In the civil law. A quantity of things of all sorts, corporeal, as well as incorporeal, which, taken together, are regarded as a whole; e. g. an inheritance, an estate. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 154, § 149.

UNIVERSUS. Lat. The whole; all together. Calv. Lex.

In old English law. The whole; all. Universitatem vestram scire volumus; we will that all of you know. Cart. Conf. 49 Hen. III.

UNKOUTH. Unknown. The L. Fr. form of the Sax. uncouth, (q. v.) Britt. c. 12.

UNLAGE. Sax. [from un, without, and lag, law.] An unjust law. LL. Hen. I. c. 34, 84. Cowell.

UNLARICH. In old Scotch law. That which is done without law, or against law. Spelman.

UNLAW. In Scotch law. An amercement for not appearing in court. Skene de Verb. Signif. voc. Amerciamentum. 2 Forbes' Inst. 225.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY. [L. Lat. illicita congregatio.] In English criminal law. Any meeting whatsoever of great numbers of people, with such circumstances of terror as cannot but endanger the public peace, and raise fears and jealousies among the subjects of the realm. 4 Steph. Com. 278. An unlawful assembly is when three or more do assemble themselves together to do an unlawful act, as to pull down enclosures, &c., and part without doing it, or making any motion towards it. 4 Bl. Com. 146.

In American criminal law, any tumultuous disturbance of the public peace by three persons or more, having no avowed, ostensible, legal or constitutional object, assembled under such circumstances, and deporting themselves in such a manner as to produce danger to the public peace and tranquillity, and which excites terror, alarm and consternation in the neighborhood, is an unlawful assembly. Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, § 2473. 4 Penn. Law J. 31. 4 C. & P. 372, cited ibid.

"UNMARRIED," in a will, denotes either never having been married, or not having a husband or wife at the time. The former is its ordinary signification, and it has been so construed in several cases, though the effect of such construction was to render it inoperative. 1 Jarman on Wills, 457, (425, Perkins' ed.) But the sound rule, it is said, in such cases, would seem to be, to construe the expression as used in its less accustomed sense. Id. ibid.

UNO FLATU. Lat. In one breath. 3 M. & Gr. 45. "The whole matter begins in an instant et quasi uno flatu." 3 Leon. 12, case 28. Uno flatu et uno intuitu; at one breath, and in one view. 3 Story's R. 504.

Uno absurdo dato, infinita sequuntur. One absurdity being allowed, numbers without end follow. 1 Co. 102.

UNQUES. L. Fr. Ever; always. Ne unques; never. See Ne unques, &c.

UNQUES PRIST. L. Fr. Always ready. Cowell. Another form of tout temps prist, (q. v.)

UNSOLEMN WAR. War denounced without a declaration; war made not upon general, but special declaration; imperfect war. Cowen, J. 1 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 409. A war is none the less public or national, because it is unsolemn. Id. ibid.

UNTHRIFT. A prodigal; a spendthrift. 1 Bl. Com. 306.

Unumquodque eodem modo quo colligatum est, dissolvitur,—quo constituitur, destruitur. Every thing is [properly] dissolved by the same means by which it is put together,—destroyed by the same means by which it is established. 2 Rol. R. 39. Broom's Max. 417, 414.

Unumquodque est id quod est principalius in ipso. Every thing is [in other words] that which is the more principal thing in it; the most important constituent of a thing represents, or is the thing itself. Branch's Pr. Hob. 123.

Unumquodque principiorum est sibimetipsi fides; et perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Every general principle [or maxim of law] is its own pledge or warrant; and things that are clearly true are not to be proved. Branch. Co. Litt. 11.

UNWRITTEN LAW. See Lex non scripta.

UPLANDA. L. Lat. [from Sax. up, above, and land.] In old records. Elevated land; firm or dry land; the opposite of marshy ground. Spelman. Ingulph. Hist. Croyl. cited ibid.

UPLIFTED HAND. In practice. A form in which an oath is sometimes taken; the right hand being held up while it is administered, instead of being laid upon the gospels. See Depose. It seems to have been occasionally used in England at an early period. Præsentibus igitur xii. juratoribus, et quatuor villatis, imprimis jurabit quilibet de villata per se, vel omnes simul erectis sursum manibus singulorum, in hæc verba; the twelve jurors then being present, and the four townsmen, in the first place each of the townsmen shall swear by himself, or all of them holding up all their hands together at the same time, in these words. Bract. fol. 143 b.

UPPER BENCH. The court of King's Bench, so called during the exile of King Charles the Second. 3 Bl. Com. 202, 203.

UPSUN. In Scotch law. Between the hours of sunrise and sunset. Poinding must be executed with upsun; [i. e. while the sun is up.] 1 Forbes' Inst. part 3, p. 32.

URBAN SERVITUDE. [Lat. servitus prædii urbani.] In the civil law. A servitude annexed to an urban estate, or prædium urbanum, (q. v.) Such as the servitude or right of support, of drip, of drain, &c. 3 Kent's Com. 436.

URBS. Lat. In the civil law. A city. Generally limited to the space within the walls, but in its application to Rome, it included the suburbs. Urbis appellatio muris, Romæ autem continentibus ædificiis finitur, quod latius patet. Dig. 50. 16. 2, pr. See Id. 50. 16. 87. Id. 50. 16. 139, pr. Id. 50. 16. 147. Derived by Pomponius, in the Digests, from urbum, the curvature or curved mark of a plough, which was used in founding a city. Dig. 50. 16. 239. 6.

URE. L. Fr. and Eng. Effect; practice. Mis en ure; put in practice; carried into effect. Kelham. Put in ure. 1 Leon. 90. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5.

URER. L. Fr. In old English law. To enure. Un releas prendra effect, et urera; a release shall take effect and enure. Litt. sect. 305, 306, 307.

USA. L. Lat. In old Saxon records. A river or stream. Spelman.

USAGE, in its broadest sense, includes both custom and prescription, but is ordinarily applicable to trade; designating the habits, modes and course of dealing which are generally observed either in any particular branch of trade, or in all mercantile transactions. 2 Greenl. Evid. § 248. As to the effect of usage in controlling the interpretation of a policy, see 1 Duer on Ins. 253—311. As to its effect in the construction of a charter-party, see Abbott on Ship. [274,] 353, et seq. "The office of an usage is strictly one of exposition, and it is allowable to be given in evidence as one means of arriving at the intention of the parties, and can never be received to thwart it when it is clearly and fully expressed." Bennett, J. 26 Vermont R. 136.

USANCE. Fr. In mercantile law. The common period fixed by the usage or custom or habit of dealing between the country where a bill is drawn, and that where it is payable, for the payment of bills of exchange. Story on Bills, § 50. It means in some countries, a month, in others two or more months, and in others half a month. Id. § 144. See Id. § 332, and note.—A period of so many days or months after the date of a bill of exchange, according to the custom of different places, before the bill becomes due. McCulloch's Dict.

USARE. L. Lat. In old European law. To use, or enjoy. Villam tenere et usare; to hold and use a farm. Chart. Alam. 67. Spelman.

USE. The profit or benefit of lands or tenements. Shep. Touch. 501.—The right in equity to have the profit or benefit of lands or tenements. Id. (by Preston,) ibid. —The equity and honesty to hold the land in conscientia boni viri. Shep. Touch. ub. sup.—A confidence reposed in another, who was tenant of the land, or terre-tenant, that he should dispose of the land according to the intentions of cestuy que use, or him to whose use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits. As if a feoffment was made to A. and his heirs, to the use of (or in trust for) B. and his heirs; here at the common law, A. the terre-tenant, had the legal property and possession of the land, but B. the cestuy que use, was in conscience and equity to have the profits and disposal of it. 2 Bl. Com. 328. This definition of Blackstone seems to be merely that of Lord Coke, stated in clearer terms. A trust or confidence reposed in some other, which is not issuing out of the land, but as a thing collateral, annexed in privity to the estate of the land, and to the person touching the land; scilicet, that cestui que use shall take the profit, and that the terre-tenant shall make an estate according to his direction. Co. Litt. 272 b. These are the definitions of uses as they existed before the Statute of Uses, 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10. As to the nature of uses before and since the statute, see 2 Bl. Com. 327, 337. 1 Steph. Com. 328—344. 4 Kent's Com. 288—301. 1 Greenleaf's Cruise's Digest, tit. xi.

USE. [Lat. usus.] In the civil law. The bare use of a thing for necessary purposes. See Usus.

USEE. A person for whose use a suit is brought. A term used in some of the Southern states. 24 Mississippi R. 77.

USER DE ACTION. L. Fr. In old practice. The pursuing or bringing an action. Cowell.

USO. Span. [from Lat. usus, use.] In Spanish law. Usage; that which arises from certain things which men say and do and practice uninterruptedly for a great length of time without any hindrance whatever. Las Partidas, part. 1, tit. 2, l. 1.

USQUE AD. L. Lat. As far as; till; until; to; up to. See 1 Stra. 179, 181, arg. Construed exclusively. 2 Mod. 280. 4 Id. 182. Usque ad filum aquæ; as far as the thread of the stream. Bract. fol. 208 b.

UST. L. Fr. Had. Ust este; had been. Yearb. M. 8 Edw. III. 2. Ussent; (they) had. Usses, ussomus; should or would have. Id. ibid.

USUALIS. Lat. In old English law. Usual, ordinary. Usualis annus; the ordinary year, consisting of three hundred and sixty-five days; called, also, annus minor. Bract. fol. 359 b.

USUARIUS. Lat. In the civil law. One who had the mere use of a thing belonging to another, for the purpose of supplying his daily wants; an usuary. Dig. 7. 8. 10, pr. Calv. Lex.

USUCAPERE. Lat. [from usus, use, and capere, to take.] In the civil law. To acquire by use; to make one's own by possession. Dig. 41. 3. Calv. Lex. To gain a title by such means.

USUCAPIO. Lat. [from usus, use, and capio, a taking.] In the civil law. The acquisition of property by continued possession for a time defined by law; (adjectio dominii per continuationem possessionis temporis lege definiti.) Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 6, § 438. Dig. 41. 3. Commonly Anglicized, usucapion. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 5, num. 2.—The right acquired by the long possession of any thing substantial and corporeal, to the exclusion of the real owner. Cooper's Just. Inst. Notes, *472. It was a kind of prescription founded upon the Twelve Tables, and was distinguished from prescription, properly so called, which rested on the prætorian law. Usucapion was perfected by one year's possession of a moveable, and two years' of an immoveable chattel; prescription required ten years as against parties present, and twenty years as against parties absent. Usucapion did not, while prescription did take place as to incorporeal hereditaments, as services incident to estates. Usucapion transferred the property of the thing itself; prescription operated only in bar of the right of the owner or mortgagor. Id. ibid. These distinctions were abolished by Justinian, and prescription now comprehends the meaning of both terms. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 5, num. 3. 2 Bl. Com. 264, note (f.)

USUFRUCT. [Lat. ususfructus.] In the civil law. The right of using and enjoying the profits of a thing belonging to another, without impairing the substance. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 3, num. 8. It is distinguished from a use, which is a mere limited right, importing a use for necessary purposes only. Id. num. 11. See Usus, Ususfructus.

USUFRUCTUARIUS. Lat. [from ususfructus, q. v.] In the civil law. One who had the usufruct of a thing; an usufructuary. Inst. 2. 4. 3. Dig. 7. 9. Distinguished from usuarius (one who had a mere use) by the following circumstances: first, he had the full profit or enjoyment of the thing used, whereas the usuarius had it only for the purpose of supplying his daily wants and necessities; secondly, he might transfer his right to another, which the usuarius could not; and thirdly, he might cultivate the land himself, which the usuarius could not. Calv. Lex.

USURA. Lat. [from usus, use; Gr. τόκος, q. v.] In the civil law. Money given for the use of money; interest. Dig. 50. 16. 121. Commonly used in the plural, usuræ. Dig. 22. 1.

Usura centesima, usuræ centesimæ or usuræ asses; twelve per cent. per annum, or one per cent. monthly. The highest rate of interest allowed before the time of Justinian. 2 Bl. Com. 462, and note (m.) Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 15, num. 6. Calv. Lex.

Usuræ deunces; eleven per cent. 2 Bl. Com. ub. sup.

Usuræ dextances; ten per cent. Id. ibid.

Usuræ dodrantes; nine per cent. Id. ibid.

Usuræ besses; eight per cent. Id. ibid.

Usuræ septunces; seven per cent. Id. ibid.

Usuræ semisses; six per cent. Id. ibid.

Usuræ quincunces; five per cent. Id. ibid.

Usuræ trientes; four per cent. This was the rate established by Justinian. Id. ibid.

Usuræ quadrantes; three per cent. Id. ibid.

Usuræ sextances; two per cent. Id. ibid.

Usuræ unciæ; one per cent. Id. ibid.

USURA. Lat. In old English law. Interest, or usury, as it was called. Usura dicitur quia datur pro usu æris; usury is so called because it is given pro usu æris, for the use of money. 2 Inst. 89. Usura dicitur ab usu et ære, quasi usuæra, i. e. usus æris; usura (usury) is derived from usus and ære (æs,) as it were usuæra, i. e. usus æris; the use of money. 5 Co. 70 a, Clayton's case.

Usura est commodum certum quod propter usum rei mutuatæ recipitur. Sed secundario spirare de aliqua retributione, ad voluntatem ejus qui mutuatus est, hoc non est vitiosum; usury is a certain benefit which is received for the use of a thing lent. But to have an understanding [literally, to breathe or whisper] in an incidental way, about some compensation to be made at the pleasure of the borrower, is not unlawful. Branch's Pr. 5 Co. 70 b, Clayton's case. Glanv. lib. 7, c. 16.

USURA MARITIMA. Lat. [Gr. τόκος θαλασσίος.] Maritime interest. 2 Bl. Com. 458. Otherwise called fœnus nauticum, (q. v.) Dig. procem. (de Conf. Dig.) § 5.

USURÆ. Lat. In old English law. Usury; interest of money. Provisum est, et à rege concessum, quòd usuræ non currant contra aliquem infra ætatem existentem, &c.; it is provided and granted by the king that interest shall not run against any one being within age, &c. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 8. Stat. Merton, c. 22.

USURARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To pay interest; to carry or be chargeable with interest. Artic. Mag. Cart. Johan. c. 34. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 7.

USURARIUS. L. Lat. In old English law. An usurer. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 14.

USURPARE. Lat. In the civil law. To interrupt a use, or usucapion; the opposite of usucapere, (q. v.) Calv. Lex.

USURPATIO. Lat. [from usurpare, q. v.] In the civil law. The interruption of a usucapion, by some act on the part of the real owner. Dig. 41. 3. 2. Calv. Lex.

USURPATION. The exercise or use of an office or franchise, without authority. 3 Bl. Com. 262.

In English ecclesiastical law. The absolute ouster or dispossession of the patron of a benefice, which happens when a stranger that has no right presents a clerk, who is thereupon admitted and instituted. Co. Litt. 227. 3 Bl. Com. 242.

USURY. [from Lat. usura, q. v.] In old English law. Interest of money; increase for the loan of money; a reward for the use of money. 2 Bl. Com. 454.

In modern law. Unlawful interest; a premium or compensation paid or stipulated to be paid for the use of money borrowed or returned, beyond the rate of interest established by law. Webster.—An unlawful contract upon the loan of money, to receive the same again with exorbitant increase. 4 Bl. Com. 156. The illegal profit which is required and received by the lender of a sum of money, from the borrower, for its use. Bouvier. See United States Digest, Usury.

USUS. Lat. [from uti, to use.] In the civil law. Use; the use of a thing; the right to the use of a thing. Properly, the use of a thing, as land or a house, for the mere purpose of supplying one's daily wants or necessities, (ad necessitatem ;) as distinguished from ususfructus, which was the larger right of using and enjoying a thing at one's pleasure. The usuarius had the usus, (bare use,) but not the fructus, (enjoyment;) the usufructuarius had both. Calv. Lex. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 4, § 415. Minus juris est in usu, quam in usufructu; nam is qui fundi nudum habet usum, nihil ulterius habere intelligitur, quam ut oleribus, pomis, floribus, fœno, stramentis et lignis ad usum quotidianum utatur; inque eo fundo hactenus ei morari licet, ut neque domino fundi molestus sit, neque iis per quos opera rustica fiunt, impedimento ; nec ulli alii jus quod habet, aut locare, aut vendere, aut gratis concedere potest ; cum is, qui usumfructum habet, possit hæc omnia facere ; there is less of right in a use than in a usufruct; for he who has the naked use of land, is understood to have nothing more than the liberty of using so much of the herbs, fruits, flowers, hay, straw and wood, as may be sufficient for his daily wants; and he is permitted to stay [or be commorant] upon the land, only on condition that he neither becomes troublesome to the owner, nor is a hindrance to those by whom the labors of husbandry are performed; nor can he either let, or sell, or gratuitously grant to any other, the right which he has; whereas he who has the usufruct can do all these things. Inst. 2. 5. 1. See Dig. 7. 8. Id. 50. 16. 203.

USUS. Lat. In old English law. A use. See Use. Usus est dominium fiduciarium ; a use is a fiduciary ownership. Bacon's Read. Stat. Uses. Usus et status, sive possessio, potius differunt secundum rationem fori, quam secundum rationem rei ; the use and the estate, or possession, differ more in the reason of the law, than in the nature of the thing itself. Id. ibid.

USUS BELLICI. Lat. In international law. Warlike uses, or objects. "It is the usus bellici which determine an article to be contraband." 1 Kent's Com. 141.

USUSFRUCTUS. Lat. [from usus, use, and fructus, fruit or enjoyment.] In the civil law. The right of using and enjoying the profits of things belonging to another, without impairing the substance of the things themselves; (jus alienis rebus utendi fruendi, salva rerum substantia.) Inst. 2. 4, pr. It is a right to a corporeal thing, (est jus in corpore,) which being destroyed, the usufruct itself must necessarily be taken away, (quo sublato et ipsum tolli necesse est.) Id. ibid. See Dig. 7. 1. 1, 2, It is a species of personal servitude, where the land serves the person. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 4, § 414. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 31, § 1.

UT. Lat. In the civil law. That. A particle properly expressive of the final cause or object of a thing, (proprium est finalem dicere causam.) Calv. Lex.

That. A particle expressive of qualification; the mark of a modus. Id. As in the four innominate contracts, do UT des, do UT facias, facio UT des, facio UT facias, (qq. v.) It expresses what in the common law is termed consideration, (q. v.)

As, (sicut ;) expressive of similitude. Id.

As, as though, (tanquam.) Id.

Although, (quamvis.) Id.

But, (sed.) Id.

When, (quando.) Id.

UT. Lat. In old English law. That. A particle, particularly appropriated to express a modus, or qualification, as si was used to express a condition. Bract. fol. 18 b. Co. Litt. 204 a. See Scito quod ut, &c. This shows that modus and conditio had essentially a different import. The use of ut, in this peculiar application, was taken from the civil law. See supra.

That; in order that. See Ut res magis valeat, &c.

As. See Ut de feodo.

UT AUDIVI. Lat. As I heard. Freem. 5, 19. Bunb. 165. Dyer, 30 b. A reporter's note.

UT CREDO. Lat. As I believe. Dyer, 76 b. A reporter's note.

UT CURRERE SOLEBAT. Lat. As it was wont to run. A part of the maxim, Aqua currit et debet currere, ut currere sole-

bat. Every proprietor of land on the bank of a fresh water river has a right to the use of the water as it was wont to run, (ut currere solebat,) without diminution or alteration; and no owner has, in general, a right to use it to the prejudice of other owners above or below him, by throwing it back upon the former, or subtracting it from the latter. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 101.

UT DE FEODO. L. Lat. As of fee. Et regulariter verum est quod dominicum dici potest omne illud tenementum de quo antecessor obiit seysitus ut de feodo, sive cum usufructu, vel sive; and regularly, it is true that every tenement may be called demesne, of which the ancestor died seised as of fee, whether with the usufruct or without. Bract. fol. 263. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, § 25. See Demesne.

UT HOSPITES. Lat. As guests. 1 Salk. 25, pl. 10.

Ut pœna ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat. That the punishment may reach a few, but the fear of it effect all. A quotation from Cicero, (pro Cluentio, 46,) adopted as a maxim in criminal law, expressive of one of the principal objects of human punishment. 4 Inst. 6. 4 Bl. Com. 11.

Ut res magis valeat quam pereat. That the thing, or subject matter, may rather have effect than be destroyed. "We must construe the words of the instrument, if possible, ut res magis valeat quam pereat." Grose, J. 10 East, 427. A maxim expressive of one great object regarded by courts in the construction of contracts, viz. the preservation of the contract itself. See 3 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 235, Cowen, J. It is a part of the maxim, Benigne faciendæ sunt interpretationes, &c. and expresses the same sentiment with the maxim, Benedicta est expositio quando res redimitur a destructione, (qq. v.) Blackstone applies it to the construction of statutes. 1 Bl. Com. 89. The expression quo res magis valeat quam pereat occurs in Dig. 34. 5. 12. And see Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 16.

UTAS. L. Lat. [L. Fr. utave.] In old English practice. Octave; the octave, (octava;) the eighth day following any term or feast; as the Utas of St. Michael, the Utas of St. Hilary. Cowell. Yearb. H. 9 Edw. III. 4. Dyer, 78, (Fr. ed.)

"UTENSILS," in a will, held not to pass plate or jewels. Dyer, 59 b, pl. 15. 2 Williams on Exec. 1024.

UTERINE. [Lat. uterinus, q. v.] Born of the same mother, (ex eodem utero.) A uterine brother or sister is one born of the same mother, but by a different father. See Uterinus.

UTERINUS. Lat. [from uterus, womb.] In old English law. Uterine; born of the same mother. Soror vel frater de una et eadem matre, sed diverso patre, soror uterina, frater uterinus, dici poterunt; a sister or brother from one and the same mother, but a different father, may be called a uterine sister and uterine brother. Bract. fol. 68 b.

UTERQUE. Lat. Both; each. "The justices being in doubt as to the meaning of this word in an indictment, demanded the opinions of grammarians, who delivered their opinions that this word doth aptly signify one of them." 1 Leon. 241.

UTFANGTHEFE, Utfangethef. Sax. [from ut, out, fang, taken, and theof, thief.] In Saxon and old English law. Literally, an out-taken thief, (fur extra captus.) Spelman. Utfangethef vero dicitur latro extraneus, veniens aliunde de terra aliena, et qui captus fuit in terra ipsius qui tales habeat libertates. Utfangthefe signifies a strange thief, who comes from another place, from another's land, and who is taken in the land of him who has such liberties. Bract. fol. 154 b. According to this explanation, ut, in this compound word, is to be taken in immediate connection with thefe, and not with fang, as Spelman seems to understand it.

UTHESIUM. Lat. In old English law. Hue; a form of hutesium, produced apparently, by a transposition of the aspirate. Si ceperint misericordias pro defaltis, vel pro uthesio non levato vel non secuto; if they have taken amercements for defaults, or for not raising or following the hue. Bract. fol. 116 b. See Hue, Hutesium.

UTI. Lat. As. See Uti rogas, Uti possidetis.

UTI. Lat. In the civil law. To use. Strictly, to use for necessary purposes; as distinguished from frui, to enjoy. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 4, § 415.

UTI FRUI. Lat. In the civil law. To have the full use and enjoyment of a thing, without damage to its substance. Calv. Lex. Hence the term ususfructus, (q. v.)

UTI POSSIDETIS. Lat. (As you possess.) In the civil law. A species of interdict, (q. v.) for the purpose of retaining possession of a thing, granted to one who, at the time of contesting suit, was in possession of an immoveable thing, in order that he might be declared the legal possessor. Hallifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 6, num. 8. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 15, § 1300. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 259, § 252. It was a species of proceeding by which the possession of land or of houses was contended for; and that party succeeded in it who was in possession at the time of the interdict, provided he had not obtained the possession from his adversary by force, (vi,) clandestinely, (clam,) nor precariously, (precariò.) Inst. 4. 15. 4. See Dig. 48. 17. 1. Cod. 8. 6.

UTI POSSIDETIS. Lat. (As you possess, i. e. each keeping what you respectively have.) In international law. A term used to denote the principle of a treaty which leaves belligerent parties mutually in possession of what they have acquired by their arms during the war. Brande. The uti possidetis is the basis of every treaty of peace, unless it be otherwise agreed. 1 Kent's Com. 173.

UTI ROGAS. Lat. (As you ask.) In Roman law. The form of words by which a vote in favor of a proposed law was orally expressed. Uti rogas, volo vel jubeo; as you ask, I will or order; I vote as you propose; I am for the law. The letters U. R. on a ballot, expressed the same sentiment. Adam's Rom. Ant. 98, 100.

Utile per inutile non vitiatur. The useful is not vitiated by the useless. Where an instrument contains, in addition to proper matter, that which need not have been stated, such unnecessary matter will not vitiate the other. Calv. Lex.

This maxim of the civil law has long been adopted in the common law, as a maxim of conveyancing, of pleading, and of evidence. Surplusage does not vitiate that which in other respects is good and valid. Co. Litt. 3 a, 227 a. 3 Co. 10 a, Dowtie's case. Broom's Max. 82, [486.] Steph. Pl. 378. Averments wholly immaterial need not be proved. Best on Evid. 303, § 263. The maxim is thus further explained in the civil law. Where the useful can be separated from the useless matter, in accordance with nature, law, or the interest of parties, it will not be impaired by it; but where the two are not separable without impugning some rule of nature or of law, or contravening the intention of the parties, there the useful matter is vitiated by the useless. Calv. Lex.

UTILIDAD. Span. In Spanish law. The profit of a thing. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 2, ch. 1.

UTILIS. Lat. In the civil law. Useful; beneficial; equitable; available. Actio utilis; an equitable action. Calv. Lex. Dies utilis; an available day; one on which a party might sue, or have access to the prætor or judge. Id.

UTILITAS. Lat. [from utilis, q. v.] Advantage; benefit; interest; utility; profit. See Calv. Lex.

UTLAGARE. L. Lat. [from Sax. utlagh, q. v.] In old English law. To outlaw; to put out of the law; to put out of the protection of the law. Nullus liber homo capiatur—aut utlagetur, aut exulatur, &c.; no freeman shall be taken,—or outlawed, or exiled, &c. Magna Charta, c. 29. Extunc utlagabitur, sicut ille qui est extra legem, sicut Laughelesman; he shall thenceforth be outlawed, as one who is out of the law, as a lawless man. Bract. fol. 125. Minor vero, et qui infra ætatem duodecim annorum fuerit, utlagari non potest, nec extra legem poni; a minor, and he who is within the age of twelve years, cannot be outlawed, nor put out of the law. Id. fol. 125 b.

UTLAGARIA. L. Lat. [from utlagare, q. v. L. Fr. utlagerie.] In old English law. Outlawry. Bract. fol. 128 b. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28.

UTLAGATIO. L. Lat. [from utlagare. q. v.] In old English law. The outlawing of a person; outlawry. Sequi ad utlagationem; to pursue to outlawry. Bract. fol. 125 b. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28.

UTLAGATUS. L. Lat. [from utlagare, q. v.] In old English law. An outlawed person; an outlaw. Bract. fol. 125 b, 128 b. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28. Utlagatus est quasi extra legem positus; caput gerit lupinum; an outlaw is, at it were, put out of the law; he carries a wolf's head. 7 Co. 14 a, Calvin's case. See Caput lupinum, Wolf's head.

UTLAGE. L. Fr. An outlaw. Britt. c. 12.

UTLAUGHE, Utlagh, Utlaghe. [from Sax. ut, out, and lag, or lagh, law.] Sax. and O. Eng. In old English law. Outlaw; an outlaw. In primis forisfacit patriam et regnum, et exul efficitur, et talem vocant Anglici Utlaughe, et alio nomine antiquitus solet nominari, scilicet, Frendlesman, et sic videtur, quod forisfacit amicos; in the first place, he forfeits [puts himself out of] the country and the realm, and is made an exile, and such a one the English call Ut laughe, and he was anciently called by another name, to wit, Frendlesman, and so it appears that he forfeits [puts himself out of the company of] his friends. Bract. fol. 128 b. Utlaghe, bannitum extra legem; utlaghe signifies proclaimed out of the law. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 25.

UTLAND. Sax. [from ut, out, and land.] In Saxon law. Outland, (terra exteru;) tenemental land; the tenancy; the lands which lay without the demesnes of a manor. Spelman. To Wutfege that inland, & to Alfege that utland; to Wulfee the inland or demesnes, and to Elfey the outland or tenancy. Testam. Brither. in itin. Cantii, apud Lambard. Spelman, voc. Inland.

UTLARY, Utlawry. Old forms of outlawry, (q. v.) The following appear to have been the successive forms of the word: L. Fr. utlagerie; L. Lat. utlagaria, (from Sax. utlagh;) O. Eng. utlagery, utlary, utlawry, outlawry.

UTLEP, Utlepe. Sax. In old English law. Escape; the escape of a robber or robbers, (escapium latronum.) Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 14.

UTRUBI. Lat. In the civil law. With whichever; (Lat. apud quem; Gr. παρ ὁποτέρω.) The name of a species of interdict for retaining a thing, granted for the purpose of protecting the possession of a moveable thing, as the uti possidetis was granted for an immoveable. Inst. 4. 15. 4. Dig. 43. 31. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 15, § 1301. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 250, § 252. It was, in other words, the mode of contesting or trying the right to the possession of moveable property. Inst. ub. sup.

UTRUM. See Assise of Utrum.

UTRUMQUE NOSTRUM. L. Lat. Both of us. Words used formerly in bonds. Distinguished from quemlibet nostrum, each of us. Wingate's Max. 12, pl. 9. See Dyer, 19 b.

UTTER. An old form of outer, framed apparently from the Sax. ut, out. See Utter barrister.

To UTTER. [from Sax. ut, out.] In criminal law. To put out, or put forth; to publish; to circulate; to offer to circulate. To utter and publish an instrument is to declare or assert directly or indirectly, by words or actions, that it is good. Uttering it is a declaration that it is good, with an intention to pass, or an offer to pass it. Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, § 1445. 1 Baldwin's C. C. R. 367. 2 Michigan (Gibbs') R. 550.

UTTER BARRISTERS, (properly OUTER BARRISTERS, Lat. juris consulti.) In English practice. The title of the great body of barristers-at-law; pleaders without the bar. So called, to distinguish them from benchers, or those who have been readers, who are sometimes admitted to plead within the bar, as the king's and queen's counsel. Cowell. See Bar, Barrister.

UTYME. L. Fr. An eighth. Mem. in Scacc. 25 Edw. I.

UX'. An abbreviation of uxor. 1 Instr. Cler. 13.

UXOR. Lat. Wife; a wife; the wife. Non vir sine uxore, quia agitur de jure uxoris; nec uxor sine viro, quia vir est caput uxoris, et eam defendere debet; not the husband without the wife, because the action is about the right of the wife; nor the wife without the husband, because the husband is the head of the wife, and is bound to defend her. Bract. fol. 202.

Uxor furi desponsata non tenebitur ex facto viri, quia virum accusare non debet, nec detegere furtum suum, nec feloniam, cum ipsa sui potestatem non habeat, sed vir; the wife of a thief will not be bound by the act of her husband, because she ought not to accuse her husband, nor disclose his theft or felony, since she has not power of herself, but her husband. 3 Inst. 108. Bract. fol. 151 b.

VADIARE DUELLUM. L. Lat. In old English and Scotch law. To wage or gage the duellum; to wage battel; to give pledges mutually for engaging in the trial by combat. Si autem per corpus suum intret in defensionem, nihil excipiendo, sta- tim vadictur inter eos duellum; if he go into the defence by his body, making no plea, battel shall immediately be waged or gaged between them. Bract. fol. 157. Reg. Maj. lib. 4, c. 2. Skene de Verb. Sign. See Vadium, Wager of battel.

VADIARE LEGEM. L. Lat. In old English law. To wage law; to give gage or security to make one's law at a day assigned. Glanv. lib. 1, c. 9. Spelman, voc. Lex. Admissus fuisset ad vadiandum et faciendum legem suam; was admitted to wage and make his law. Reg. Orig. 116. Vadiata lege, habebit diem ad faciendam legem; law being waged, he shall have a day to make law. Bract. fol. 156 b. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 44, § 2. See Wager of law.

VADIATIO. L. Lat. [L. Fr. gager.] In old English law. Wager. Vadiatio duelli; wager of battel, (q. v.) Vadiatio legis; wager of law, (q. v.) 3 Bl. Com. 341. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 53, § 2.

VADIMONIUM. Lat. In the Roman law. Bail or security; the giving of bail for appearance in court; a recognizance. Calv. Lex.

VADIUM. L. Lat. [from Lat. vades, (q. v.;) L. Fr. gage.] In old English law. Gage; security to do some act, as to engage in the duellum, to appear in court, &c.; security by pledge of property. Dat appellatus vadium se defendendi, et appellator vadium disrationandi; the appellee gives gage to defend himself, and the appellor gage to make good his charge. Bract. fol. 137. 3 Bl. Com. 341. According to Fleta, the word signifies peace, (vadium pacem significat.) Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 30.

Per vadium ponere; to put by gage; to attach a defendant by taking gage, that is, certain of his goods, which he forfeited if he did not appear. 3 Bl. Com. 280. Pone per vadium et salvos plegios; put by gage and safe pledges. Id. ibid.

In vadio exponere; to put in pledge; to pawn. Cowell.

VADIUM MORTUUM. L. Lat. [Fr. mort gage.] A dead gage or pledge; a mort gage; a mortgage.

VADIUM, (plur. VADIA.) L. Lat. In old records. Wages; salary, or other reward of service upon compact or covenant. Cowell. See Vadia.

VADUM. Lat. In old records. A ford, or wading place. Vadibilis; fordable. Cowell.

VAGABOND. Fr. and Eng. [from Lat. vagabundus, from vagari, to wander.] A wandering person; one who habitually goes about from place to place; one who has no settled residence or domicil. Les vagabonds sont les gens sans domicile; vagabonds are people without a domicile. Vattel, liv. 1, c. 19, s. 219. A vagabond is said to be a person who, without travelling in quest of a domicil, has really and truly no certain domicil at all. Phillimore on Domicil, 23. See Vagabundus.

In English and American law, vagabond is always used in a bad sense, denoting one who is without a home; a strolling, idle, worthless person. Vagabonds are described in old English statutes as "such as wake on the night and sleep on the day, and haunt customable taverns and ale-houses, and routs about; and no man wot from whence they came, nor whither they go." 4 Bl. Com. 169. Rogues and vagabonds are classed together by statutes 17 Geo. II. c. 5; 5 Geo. IV. c. 83; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 38. 4 Steph. Com. 309. In American law, the term vagrant is employed in the same sense. See Vagrant.

VAGABUNDUS. L. Lat. [from vagari, to wander.] In public law. A wandering person; one who has no settled residence. Vagabundum nuncupamus eum qui nullibi domicilium contraxit habitationis; we call him a vagabond who has nowhere contracted a domicile of residence. Carpzovius, tit. 3, art. 1, s. 65. Phillimore on Domicil, 23, note.

VAGRANT. A wandering, idle person; a strolling or sturdy beggar. A general term, including, in English law, the several classes of idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues. 4 Steph. Com. 308, 309.

In New-York, all idle persons who, not having visible means to maintain themselves, live without employment; all persons wandering abroad and lodging in taverns, groceries, beer-houses, out-houses, market-places, sheds or barns, or in the open air, and not giving a good account of themselves; all persons wandering abroad and begging, or who go about from door to door, or place themselves in the streets, highways, passages, or other public places, to beg or receive alms, shall be deemed vagrants. 1 Rev. Stat. [632,] 640, 641, § 1.

VAGRANT ACT. The English statute of 5 Geo. IV. c. 83. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 621.

VAILLER. L. Fr. To be worth; to be of the value. Et la chose ne vaille mye doze deners; and the thing is not worth twelve pence. Britt. c. 15.

VAILLE. L. Fr. Sufficient. Kelham. Vigil; watch. Id.

VAL. L. Fr. Down; downwards; under. See Vail, Paravail.

VALE. Span. In Spanish law. A promissory note. White's New Recop. b. 3, tit. 7, c. 5, § 3.

Valeat quantum valere potest. It shall have effect as far as it can have effect. A leading maxim in the construction of deeds and other instruments. Expressed at length, Quando res non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When a thing is of no effect as I do it, it shall have effect as far as it can. Lord Mansfield, C. J. Cowp. 600. Or more fully, Cum quod ago non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When that which I do is of no effect as [or in the particular form in which] I do it, it shall have effect as far as it can. 4 Kent's Com. 493. When a deed cannot take effect according to the letter, it will be construed so as it may take some effect or other. Shep. Touch. (by Preston,) 87. This maxim has been applied to the effect of a confession of judgment. Van Ness, J. 14 Johns. R. 450. It has been applied also to statutes. "Clearly we may say of a statute as much as we do every day of deeds, and other private acts, valeat quantum valere potest. Cowen, J. 6 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 48.

VALECTA, Valetta, Valettus. L. Lat. [from Fr. valet.] In old English law. A body-servant, or attendant, (qui heri est à persona;) a valet. Spelman. Reg. Orig. 25 b.

A ward of the crown. De puellis vel valettis qui sunt, vel esse debent, in custodia regis. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 14. Translated, in old English, valet, valect and vadelect. Cowell.

VALENTIA. L. Lat. [from valere, to be worth, to be of value; L. Fr. vaillance.] In old English law. Value; worth. Ad valentiam; to the value. Bract. fol. 315 b. A common phrase in old indictments for larceny. Cowell. A distinction was made between valentia and pretium, (price.) Thus, where the number of the things taken was to be expressed in the indictment, as of young doves in a dove-house, young hawks in a wood, there must be said, pretii, (of the price,) or ad valentiam, (to the value;) but of divers dead things, ad valentiam, and not pretii. West's Symboleog. part 2, tit. Indictment, sect. 70. Cowell. Fleta uses valentia and valor in close connection. Ad valentiam veri valoris; to the worth of the true value. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 4.

VALERE. Lat. To be strong; to have strength, force, effect or validity; to be effectual or operative; to be good or valid in law. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 6. See Valeat quantum, &c. Perinde valere.

To be of value; to be worth. See Valentia, Valor.

VALESHERIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Walleschery, or Welshery; the fact of being a Welshman. See Wallesheria.

VALET, Valect, Vadelect. In old English law. A servitor or gentlemen of the privy chamber, according to Camden. In the accounts of the Inner Temple, it is used for a bencher's clerk or servant. Cowell calls it a French word.

Anciently, a name specially denoting young gentlemen, though of great descent or quality, but afterwards given to those of the rank of yeomen. Selden's Tit. of Honour, 831. See Stat. 20 Ric. II. st. 1, c. 2. In Borel's Glossary it is said that the word was anciently applied to the king's eldest son. See Barringt. Obs. Stat. 344, note [f.]

VALOR. Lat. [from valere, to be worth.] In old English law. Value; worth; rate; a rate; a valuation. See infra. Ad valorem, (q. v.) is a phrase still used.

VALOR BENEFICIORUM. Lat. In English law. A rate or valuation of benefices, or spiritual preferments. 1 Bl. Com. 284.

VALOR MARITAGII. L. Lat. In old English law. Value of marriage. Statute of Merton, c. 6. If an infant ward of a guardian in chivalry refused a match tendered by the guardian, he or she forfeited the value of the marriage (valorem maritagii,) to the guardian; that is, so much as a jury would assess, or any one would bonâ fide give to the guardian for such an alliance. 2 Bl. Com. 70. Called, in Scotch law, avail of marriage. Bell's Dict.

VALOUR. O. Eng. Value. "Of smal substaunce, and of no valour." Stat. 8 Hen. VI. c. 7. "To the valoure of fourty shelynges by yere." Stat. 10 Hen. VI. c. 2.

VALUABLE CONSIDERATION. A consideration which the law esteems an equivalent for a grant, such as money, marriage, or the like. 2 Bl. Com. 297. Marriage is a valuable consideration, but, in order to support a conveyance, it must be prospective, or contemporaneous with the deed. See 2 Selden's R. 342, 344.

VALUE RECEIVED. In mercantile law. A phrase usually employed in a bill of exchange or promissory note, to denote that a consideration has been received for it. As to its effect, see Story on Bills, §§ 63, 64. "The object of inserting these words is to show that it is not an accommodation bill, but made on a valuable consideration given for it by the payee." Bayley, J. 3 M. & S. 353.

VALUED POLICY. In insurance law. A policy expressing the value which has been set on the ship or goods insured, in the nature of liquidated damages.* 3 Kent's Com. 272, 273. A policy is valued, when the parties, having agreed upon the value of the interest insured, in order to save the necessity of further proof, have inserted the valuation in the policy, in the nature of liquidated damages. 1 Duer on Ins. 97. See 1 Arnould on Ins. 303, (309, Perkins' ed.)

VALVASINI. L. Lat. In feudal law. A name given to the valvasores minores. Feud. Lib. 2, tit. 10.

VALVASOR, Valvassor, Vavasor, Vavassor. L. Lat. [from vassalus, a vassal, according to some feudists; from valva, a door, according to others; from Sax. wal, a wall or rampart, according to Spelman, conveying the idea of guard.] In feudal and old English law. A principal vassal, not holding immediately of the sovereign, but of those who so held; a vassal of the second degree or rank; or of a rank next to the capitanei. Feud. Lib. 1, tit. 7. Lib. 2, tit. 10. Spelman. They were also designated as valvasores majores, to distinguish them from valvasores minores, who held under them. Id. In the Books of Feuds three degrees are mentioned, majores, minores, and minimi. Feud. Lib. 1, tit. 7, § 1; tit. 14, § 1; tit. 15. The valvasores minores were also termed valvasini. Lib. 2, tit. 10.

Valvasores, however, was a term sometimes used to denote those who held immediately of the king, (qui à rege tenent immediate) or capitanei, as they were otherwise called. Spelman.

Valvasor is mentioned by Lord Coke and Blackstone as an ancient name or title of dignity in England, next beneath a peer. 2 Inst. 667. 1 Bl. Com. 403. In Bracton the word is written vavasor, (q. v.)

Vana est illa potentia quæ nunquam venit in actum. That power is vain [idle or useless] which never comes into action, [which is never exercised.] 2 Co. 51.

Vani timores sunt æstimandi, qui non cadunt in constantem virum. Those are to be regarded as idle fears which do not affect a steady [firm or resolute] man. 7 Co. 27. See Timor.

VANTARIUS. L. Lat. In old records. A fore-footman. Spelman. Cowell.

VARDA. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. Ward; custody; guardianship. Answering to warda, in old English law. Spelman, quoting Skene. It had also the sense of award, (Sc. waird.) Skene de Verb. Signif.

VARECH, Vraicq. Fr. In French law. Sea-weed. Ord. Mar. liv. 4, tit. 10. Otherwise called sar and goüesmon. Id. ibid.

VARENNA. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. A warren. Answering to warenna, in old English law. Spelman, quoting Skene.

VARRANTIZATIO. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. Warranty. Crag. de Jur. Feud. 152.

VAS. Lat. In the civil law. A pledge; a surety; one who became bail or surety for another in a criminal proceeding or civil action. Calv. Lex. The plural vades, (q. v.) was more commonly used.

VASALLUS. L. Lat. In feudal law. A vassal; the grantee of a fief; a feudatory. Feud. Lib. 1, tit. 26. Lib. 2, tit. 2, et passim. Skene writes the word, vassallus.

VASLETTUS. L. Lat. A valet or ward. Cowell. Spelman.

VASSAL. [L. Lat. vasallus, vassallus, from vassus, q. v.] In feudal law. The grantee of a fief, feud or fee; one who held of a superior or lord; a feudal tenant; a feudatory. 2 Bl. Com. 53. 1 Robertson's Charles V. Appendix, Note viii. Esprit des Lois, liv. 30, c. 16.

VASSAL. In Scotch law. A tenant; one who holds of a superior; the grantee or holder of a feu. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 110. Ersk. Pr. b. 2, tit. 3, § 3.

VASSATICUM. L. Lat. In feudal law. Vassalage; the service of a vassal or tenant; feudal service. Spelman.

VASSELERIA. L. Lat. Vassalage; the tenure of vassals. Cowell.

VASSUS. L. Lat. [from Welsh gwâs, a page, according to Sir F. Palgrave; perhaps from the Lat. vas, a pledge.] In feudal and old European law. A feudal tenant, or feudatory; a feudal lord. Esprit des Lois, b. 30, c. 16. The following passage illustrates the meaning of this word and of vassalus, which is supposed to be derived from it: De vassis dominicis, qui adhuc intra casam serviunt, et tamen beneficia habere noscuntur, statutum est, ut quicunque ex eis cum domino imperatore domi remanserint, vassalos suos casatos secum non retineant; sed cum comite cujus pagenses sunt, ire permittant; concerning the king's servants who still serve within the house [palace,] and yet are known to have benefices, [feudal estates,] it is ordained that as many of them as shall remain at home with the lord the emperor, shall not keep their own house vassals with them, but shall permit them to go with the count whose countrymen they are. Capitul. 2, A. D. 812, art. 7, ed. Balus. tom. 1, p. 494. From this it would appear that vassus denoted one who held immediately of the king, and vassallus, an inferior feudatory, or vassal proper.

VASTITAS. L. Lat. [from vastum, q. v.] In old English law. A waste. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 22, § 6.

VASTUM. L. Lat. [L. Fr. gast.] In old English law. Waste. Stat. Marlbr. c. 17. Item de hoc quod dicit vastum et exilium, sciendum quod non sunt referenda ad eundem intellectum, sed vastum et destructio fere idem sunt, quia convertibiliter se habent vastum et destructio, et vastum idem est quod destructio, et è converso, et se habent ad omnem destructionem generaliter; also, as to this that he says, "waste and exile," it is to be known that the words are not to be referred to the same meaning, but waste and destruction are almost the same thing, because waste and destruction are convertible, and waste is the same as destruction, and è converso, and they relate to every kind of destruction generally. Bract. fol. 316 b. Vastum and destructio are both mentioned in Magna Charta, and in the statute of Marlbridge, (c. 17.) Accedat ad locum vastatum et inquirat de vasto facto; he shall go to the place wasted, and inquire of the waste done. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 14. Sine destructione et vasto hominum vel rerum; without destruction and waste of men or of things. Mag. Cart. c. 4.

VASTUM. L. Lat. In old records. A waste or common lying open to the cattle of all tenants who have a right of commoning. Paroch. Antiq. 171. Cowell.

VASTUM FORESTÆ VEL BOSCI. L. Lat. In old records. Waste of a forest or wood. That part of a forest or wood, wherein the trees and underwood were so destroyed that it lay in a manner waste and barren. Par. Antiq. 351, 497. Cowell.

VAULT. L. Fr. [from vailer, to be worth, to be of value or force.] In old English law. Is worth. Litt. sect. 251. Id. sect. 255. Ne vault; it avails not. Vault riens; it avails nothing. Yearb. 26 Hen. VIII. 4. Le plee ne vault; the plea is bad. Dyer, 29.

VAVASOR, Valvasor. L. Lat. [see valvasor.] In old English law. The vassal or tenant of a baron; one who held under a baron, and who had also tenants under him. Vavassores Roberti Fossard reddunt compotum de Lxiii s. 4d.; the vavasors of Robert Fossard render an account of 63s. 4d. Rot. Pip. de an. 5 Regis Steph. Everwicscire. Et si amodo exurgat placitum de divisione terrarum, si interest barones meos dominicos, tractetur placitum in curiâ meâ; et si est inter vavassores istorum dominorum, tractetur in comitatu; and if a plea [controversy] should arise respecting the division of lands, if it concern my barons, the plea [suit] shall be litigated in my court, and if it be between the vavasors of those lords [barons] it shall be managed in the county court. Chart. Hen. I. apud Spelman, voc. Valvasor.

One who in dignity was next to a baron; a title of dignity next to a baron. Camd. Brit. 109. See Valvasor. Bracton, in enumerating the various ranks of persons under the king, mentions them in the following order: dukes, counts or earls, barons, magnates or vavasors, and knights, (duces, comites, barones, magnates sive vavasores, et milites.) Bract. fol. 5 b. And again, immediately after describing barons, as powerful men under the king (potentes sub rege,) he proceeds to a description of vavasors as men of great dignity, (viri magnæ dignitatis,) adding the following etymology of the word: Vavasor enim nihil melius dici poterit quam vas sortitus ad valetudinem; for a vavasor cannot be better described than a vessel or pledge (vas) chosen for strength. Id. ibid.

The term vavasor first came into use in England after the Conquest, being another form of valvasor, which was employed in the feudal law of the continent. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 24. See Valvasor. As a title of dignity, it occurs as late as the time of Chaucer, but afterwards fell into disuse, and is now wholly antiquated. 1 Bl. Com. 403. The etymology of the word given by Bracton seems to present vas, (a vessel,) validus, (strong,) and sortitus, (chosen,) as its constituent elements, which is very different from that given of valvasor, (q. v.)

VAVASORY. [L. Lat. vavasoria.] In old English law. The fee of a vavasor; a lesser fee than a barony. Bract. fol. 93 b. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 14.

Cent.* 107.

VENDICARE. Lat. In the civil and old English law. To claim a thing as one's own; to assert a right to a thing. To take a thing as one's own. Calv. Lex. Ubi flumen mihi abstulit meum prædium per alvei constitutionem, deinde redit ad antiquum alveum, de jure stricto, in prædio quodam [quondam] meo nihil possum vendicare, cedit enim iis qui prope ripam prædia habent. Where a river, in consequence of the form of its channel, has carried away my land, and afterwards returns to its former channel, in strict law I can claim no right in the land that before was mine, for it belongs to those who have the lands on the bank. Bract. fol. 9 b. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 10.

VENDICATIO. Lat. [from vendicare, q. v.] In old English law. A claim. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 21.

VENDITÆ. L. Lat. [from vendere, to sell.] In old European law. A tax upon things sold in markets and public fairs. Spelman. Bignonius.

VENDITIO. Lat. [from vendere, to sell.] In the civil law. In a strict sense, sale; the act of selling; the contract of sale, otherwise called emptio venditio. Inst. 3. 24. Dig. 18. 1. Calv. Lex.

In a large sense,—any mode or species of alienation; any contract by which the property or ownership of a thing may be transferred. Id.

VENDITIONI EXPONAS. L. Lat. (You expose to sale.) In practice. A judicial writ directed to a sheriff, commanding him to expose to sale goods which he has already taken under an execution. So termed, from the emphatic words of the Latin form. Reg. Jud. 33 b. Cowell. It properly issues on a return made by the sheriff to a fieri facias, that he has taken goods which remain in his hands unsold for want of buyers. 2 Tidd's Pr. 1020.

VENDITOR. Lat. [from vendere, to sell.] In civil and old English law. A seller; a vendor. Inst. 3. 24. Cod. 4. 54. Bract. fol. 41.

VENDITOR REGIS. L. Lat. In old English law. The king's seller or salesman; the person who exposed to sale those goods and chattels which were seized or distrained to answer any debt due to the king. Cowell.

VENDITRIX. Lat. In the civil law. A female vendor. Cod. 4. 51. 3.

VENDOR. [Lat. venditor.] A seller;

the person who sells a thing; the correlative of vendee.

VENDOR'S LIEN. An equitable lien allowed the vendor of land upon the land sold, for the purchase money.* Miller's Equit. Mortg. 4—6. 4 Kent's Com. 151, 152. The doctrine of a vendor's lien, in its general statement, is, that the vendor of land, if he has taken no security, although he has made an absolute conveyance by deed, with a formal acknowledgment in the deed or on the back of it, that the consideration has been paid, yet retains an equitable lien for the purchase money, unless there be an express or implied waiver and discharge of it; and this lien will be enforced in equity against the vendee, volunteers, and all others claiming under him with notice; that is, against all persons except bonâ fide purchasers without notice. 1 White's Eq. Cas. 222, Am. ed. note, citing 9 Cowen's R. 316, 318. 2 Rand. R. 428, 429. 3 Bibb's R. 183, 184. 6 B. Monroe's R. 74, 75. 5 Ohio R. 35, 39. 6 Yerger's R. 50. 4 Blackford's R. 339, 340. 4 Scammon's R. 148, 151. 5 Alabama R. 363, 364. 1 Smedes & Marsh. R. 197, 206. 4 Missouri R. 253. The doctrine, as laid down in the words of Lord Eldon, in the leading case of Mackreth v. Symmons, (15 Ves. Jun. 329,) is, that "where the vendor conveys, without more, though the consideration is upon the face of the instrument expressed to be paid, and by a receipt endorsed upon the back, if it is the simple case of a conveyance, the money or part of it not being paid, as between the vendor and the vendee and persons claiming as volunteers, upon the doctrine of this court, which, when it is settled, has the effect of contract, though perhaps no actual contract has taken place, a lien shall prevail; in the one case, for the whole consideration, in the other, for that part of the money which was not paid." The principle of the doctrine is thus expressed by the same judge, in the case last referred to: "that a person having got the estate of another, shall not, as between them, keep it and not pay the consideration; and there is no doubt that a third person, having full knowledge that the other got the estate without payment, cannot maintain that, though a court of equity will not permit him to keep it, he may give it to another person without payment."

The doctrine of a vendor's equitable lien for unpaid purchase-money, upon an absolute conveyance of land, has been adopted in the states of New-York, Maryland, Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky, and has been recognized in the Circuit and Supreme Courts of the United States. 1 Mason's R. 192, 212. 4 Wheaton's R. 256. 7 Id. 46. In some other states, as Pennsylvania, North Carolina, South Carolina and Massachusetts, it has either been rejected, or never recognized. In Connecticut, Vermont and Delaware, its existence remains undecided and doubtful. See 1 White's Equity Cases, 222, Am. ed. note, and the cases there cited.

VENELLA. L. Lat. [from venire, to go or pass.] In old English law. A narrow way or passage; a lane. In viis et venellis villæ prædictæ; in the streets and lanes of the said town. Reg. Orig. 267 b. Spelman.

VENEOUR. L. Fr. [Lat. venator.] A hunter. Kelham.

VENER. L. Fr. [from Lat. venire, q. v.] In old English law. To come; to appear. Vener en sa court; to come, or appear in his court. Britt. c. 27. Vendra; shall come. Vent; comes. Kelham. Come les parties viendrount en court; when the parties shall have come or appeared in court. Britt. c. 91.

VENESON. L. Fr. In old English law. Venison; deer; animals of the chase. Britt. c. 21. See Venison.

VENIA. Lat. Pardon; forgiveness; indulgence. Veniæ facilitas incentivum est delinquendi. Facility of pardon is an incentive to crime. 3 Inst. 236.

In the civil law. Favor; privilege; courtesy; permission. Calv. Lex. See Venia ætatis.

VENIA ÆTATIS. Lat. In the civil law. The privilege of age. A privilege granted to a person not of age, by the prince or sovereign, whereby the party is entitled to act, and to have all the powers to act, as if he were of full age. Calv. Lex. Cod. 2. 45. Vicat. Vocab. Story's Confl. Laws, § 60, note. This grant does not, except in special cases, include the power of disposing of real property, but it confers all the other privileges of majority, and prevents the minor from being relieved against acts done by him after he has obtained it. Macpherson on Infants, 576. Grants of this kind, called lettres de bene- fice d'age, were known to most of the old French coûtumes. Id. ibid.

The venia ætatis is known to the Spanish and Roman Dutch law; but its grant depends upon the conduct and discretion of the minor. Id. ibid.

VENIAUNCE.* L. Fr. In old English law. Vengeance; revenge; an avenging. Suer veniaunce de la mort par appel de felonie; to sue or prosecute vengeance for the death, by an appeal of felony. Britt. c. 1. See Id. c. 23.

VENIRE. Lat. In the civil and old English law. To come; to appear; to appear in court, (comparere in judicio.) Calv. Lex. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 2. See Venit.

To arrive, as a time or day. Dig. 50. 16. 213.

To come to, or into; to enter upon, (adire, accedere, ingredi.) Calv. Lex.

To become subject to. Id. Venire in crimen; to be accused of a crime. Id.

VENIRE. Lat. (To come.) In practice. The name of a writ by which a jury is summoned. Otherwise termed a venire facias, (q. v.)

VENIRE FACIAS. L. Lat. (You cause to come.) In practice. A judicial writ, directed to the sheriff of the county in which a cause is to be tried, commanding him that he cause to come before the court, on a certain day therein mentioned, twelve good and lawful men of the body of his county, qualified according to law, by whom the truth of the matter may be the better known, and who are in no wise of kin either to the plaintiff or to the defendant, to make a jury of the country between the parties in the action, because as well the plaintiff as the defendant, between whom the matter in variance is, have put themselves upon the jury; and that he return the names of the jurors, &c. 2 Tidd's Pr. 777, 778. 3 Bl. Com. 352. So termed from the emphatic words of the Latin form: Præcipimus tibi quod venire facias coram justitiariis nostris apud Westmonasterium, à die, &c. duodecim, &c. We command you that you cause to come before our justices at Westminster, on the day, &c. twelve, &c. Reg. Jud. 7, 30 b.

In English practice, though the venire facias is always sued out, it is not used; it being the practice of the court to suppose that the jurors have been summoned upon it, and have failed to appear; and upon this fictitious default another writ called a distringas is awarded on the record, which is accordingly issued at the same time with the venire, and under which the jury are in fact summoned to try the cause. Steph. Plead. 80. See Distringas juratores.

In the United States, the venire has been generally adopted, though in some states it has been dispensed with, except in special cases. 2 N. Y. Rev. St. [410,] 331, § 9.

The venire facias is a very ancient writ, and was formerly used in England for a great variety of purposes. Bracton mentions a writ of this kind issued to the sheriff to inquire whether a certain grantor of lands was of sound mind, and otherwise of capacity to convey, on the day of the grant. Bract. fol. 14 b. Many special writs of venire are contained in the Register, but these have long been disused. Reg. Jud. tabula.

VENIRE FACIAS DE NOVO. L. Lat. (You cause to come anew.) In practice. A second writ of venire, to summon another jury for a new trial, commonly called a venire de novo. This is the old common law mode of proceeding to a second trial, and differs materially from the granting a new trial, inasmuch as the venire de novo is awarded for some defect appearing upon the face of the record, a new trial is granted for matter entirely extrinsic. 2 Arch. Pr. 261.

A new venire, issued in certain cases where a cause has not been tried. 1 Arch. Pr. 183.

VENISON, Veneson. L. Fr. and Eng. [from venatio, prey taken in hunting.] In English law. Animals of the chase, particularly deer.* 3 Bl. Com. 71. See Vert.

VENIT. Lat. [from venire, q. v.] In old pleading. Comes. The word which expressed the appearance of a defendant in court. See Venit et defendit, Comes and defends.

VENIT ET DEFENDIT. L. Lat. In old pleading. Comes and defends. The proper words of appearance and defence in an action. 1 Ld. Raym. 117. Venit et defendit vim et injuriam; comes and defends the force and injury. 2 Show. 443. Venit et defendit omnem feloniam, et pacem domini regis infractam; comes and defends all the felony, and breach of the king's peace. Bract. fol. 138 b. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 16, § 6.

VENIT ET DICIT. L. Lat. In old pleading. Comes and says. Yearb. M. 1 Edw. II. 2. 2 Salk. 544.

VENKU. L. Fr. In old English law. Vanquished; overcome in judicial combat. Et si le defendaunt soit venku, si soit le jugement tiel, que il soit treyne et pendu, et autrement tormente à la mort à nostre volounte; and if the defendant be overcome, the judgment shall be such, that he be drawn and hanged, and otherwise tormented to death at our pleasure. Britt. c. 22.

VENTE. Fr. [from vendre, to sell.] In old English law. Sale. De wast, et de vente et destruccion; of waste, and of sale, and destruction. Britt. c. 26. Destruccion de tenements, exil de villeyns, ou vente des terres. Id. c. 66.

VENTER. Lat. The belly, or womb, (uterus muliebris.)

In the civil and old English law. A pregnant woman; a mother; a wife. Dig. 25. 4. Id. 37. 9. Calv. Lex. Partus sequitur ventrem, (q. v.) "If a man hath issue two sons by divers venters." Litt. sect. 6. "If a man hath issue a son and a daughter by one venter, and a son by another venter, and the son of the first venter purchase lands," &c. Id. sect. 7.

An unborn child. Dig. 25. 5. Id. 25. 6. Id. 37. 9. Tayl. Civ. Law, 248. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 23, § 20.

VENTRICES. L. Lat. In old English law. Fanners of threshed grain. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 2.

VENTRITICUM. See Molendinum.

VENUE, Visne. L. Fr. and Eng. [from L. Lat. visnetum, neighborhood.] In pleading and practice. A neighborhood; the neighborhood, place or county in which an injury is declared to have been done, or fact declared to have happened. 3 Bl. Com. 294. Steph. Pl. 280.

The statement in a declaration, of the county in which a fact happened. To "lay a venue," is to allege a place. Id. 281, 283.

A jury summoned from a particular county or place. "The venue was to come from Oxford." Id. ibid.

The county in which an action is intended to be tried, and from the body of which the jurors who are to try it are summoned. "To change the venue," is to direct the trial to be had in a different county from that where the venue is laid. 1 Tidd's Pr. 602, et seq.

 The term venue is particularly applied in pleading, to the statement of the county in the margin of the declaration, in its commencement. It was also applied in England, until recently, to the statement in the body of pleadings, of a place at which each traversable fact alleged happened; the rule, as technically expressed, being that every material and traversable allegation should be laid with a venue. Steph. Pl. 281. But by Reg. Gen. of Hil. Term, 4 Will. IV. it was provided that no venue should be stated in the body of the declaration, or in any subsequent pleading. Id. 287.

The original and proper form of this word seems to have been visne, being that in which it occurs in the oldest reports. Le brefe de faire venir les 24, fuit del visne de Loundres, et nemy del visne de Friday strete; the writ to cause the twenty-four to come [the venire for the 24 jurors] was of the visne of London, and not of the visne of Friday street. Year Book, M. 18 Edw. II. 827. See Year Book, P. 12 Ric. II. 641. Visne is used for venue as late as 1630. Trye's Jus. Filiz. 231. The L. Lat. visnetum, used by Bracton, closely corresponds with this form of the word. See Visnetum. Visinetus (q. v.) is used in the Register. Reg. Orig. 33. Venew is an old form given in Cowell and Blount. Venue seems properly to denote a coming (from vener, to come,) and is so used in the statute of Westminster 1. See infra.

VENUE. L. Fr. [from vener, to come.] In old English law. A coming; a resorting or resort. Per le venue des graunds gents; by the resort of great men. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 1.

VER. The old Scotch form of the Sax. were. Skene ad Reg. Maj. lib. 3, c. 19. Spelman.

VERBA. Lat. (plur. of verbum, q. v.) Words. Verba artis ex arte. Words of art [are to be taken] according to art. If technical terms are employed in a contract, they are to be taken in a technical sense. 2 Kent's Com. 556, note.

Verba accipienda ut sortientur effectum. Words are to be taken [so as] that they may have effect. Bacon's Arg. Jurisd. of Marches, Works, iv. 258.

Verba æquivoca, ac in dubio sensu posita, intelliguntur digniori et potentiori sensu. Equivocal words, and such as are put in a doubtful sense, are [to be] understood in the more worthy and effectual sense. 6 Co. 20 a, Gregory's case. Thus, where "the feast of St. Michael" is spoken of, if there are two feasts, it shall be intended of the most worthy and notorious feast. Year Book, 20 Hen. VI. 17. So if mention be made of "J. S." generally, it shall be intended of the father, or of the eldest son, for they are the most worthy. Year Book, 37 Hen. VI. 29 b. 21 Hen. VI. 8, 13 Hen. IV. 4 b. So where "any court of the queen, of record," is spoken of, it shall be intended "one of the four eminent and excellent courts at Westminster." 6 Co. 19 b.

Verba aliquid operari debent. Words ought to work or operate somewhat; words ought to have some operation or effect.* "Words are so to be understood that they work somewhat, and be not idle and frivolous." Bacon's Max. 18, in reg. 3. See Verba cum effectu, &c. Mr. Duer refers to Rutherford, (vol. 2, 312,) as furnishing an admirable illustration of this rule, in its application to a supposed bequest. A testator devises all his plate, with the exception of 1,000 ounces, to his eldest son, and directs him, within a certain time after his decease, to deliver the 1,000 ounces to his younger son, of such sort, and in such pieces as he pleases. The words "as he pleases," may be referred to either son; but apply them to the elder and they are useless, since without them he would have all the discretion they purport to give; but apply them to the younger, and they are rendered effectual, by conferring on him a valuable privilege that otherwise he could not have claimed. 1 Duer on Ins. 216.

Verba fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem. Words are to be taken most strongly against him who uses them. Bacon's Max. 11, reg. 3. "This rule," observes Lord Bacon, "that a man's deeds and his words shall be taken strongliest against himself, though it be one of the most common grounds of the law, is, notwithstanding, a rule drawn out of the depth of reason; for first, it is a schoolmaster of wisdom and diligence in making men watchful in their own business; next, it is author of much quiet and certainty, and that in two sorts: first, because it favoureth acts and conveyances executed, taking them still beneficially for the grantees and possessors; and secondly, because it makes an end of many questions and doubts about construction of words; for if the labour were only to pick out the intention of the parties, every judge would have a several sense, whereas this rule doth give them a sway to take the law more certainly one way." Id. ibid.

This maxim seems to have been purposely given by Lord Bacon in its most general terms; and is so quoted by Blackstone. 2 Bl. Com. 280. Lord Coke confines it to written instruments, or charters, and the maxim is generally quoted after him, Verba chartarum fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem. The words of charters [deeds or written instruments,] are taken most strongly against him who uses them. Co. Litt. 36 a. 13 East, 80. Broom's Max. 254, [456.] It is applied in the construction of pleadings, as well as of conveyances and contracts. Id. 254—258, [461—464.] Being, however, a rule of some strictness and rigor, it is, according to Bacon, "the last to be resorted to, and is never to be relied upon but where all other rules of exposition of words fail; and if any other come in place, this giveth place." Bac. Max. 16. 2 Bl. Com. 380. See 1 Duer on Ins. 210, 211.

Verba cum effectu sunt accipienda. Words are to be taken with effect, or so as to have effect. Bacon's Max. 18, in reg. 3. This maxim is derived from the civil law. Calv. Lex. See Verba aliquid operari debent.

Verba debent intelligi ut aliquid operentur. Words ought to be understood so as to have some operation. 8 Co. 94 a, Edward Fox's case.

Verba dicta de persona intelligi debent de conditione personæ. Words spoken of a person are to be understood of the condition of the person. 2 Roll. R. 72.

Verba generalia generaliter sunt intelligenda. General words are to be understood generally. 3 Inst. 76. That which is generally spoken shall be generally understood, unless qualified by some special subsequent words. Shep. Touch. 88. Co. Litt. 42 a. But see the following maxim.

Verba generalia restringuntur ad habilitatem rei vel personæ. General words are to be restricted to the capacity of the thing or person, [of which they are spoken.] "All words, whether they be in deeds or statutes, or otherwise, if they be general and not express and precise, shall be restrained to the fitness of the matter or person. As if I grant common in omnibus terris meis [in all my lands] in D. and I have in D. both open grounds, and several, [enclosed,] it shall not be stretched to common in my several, much less in my gardens and orchards. Perk. pl. 103. So, if I grant to a man omnes arbores meas cres- centes super terras meas in D. [all my trees growing upon my lands in D.] he shall not have apple trees or other fruit trees growing in my gardens or orchards, if there be any other trees upon my ground. 14 Hen. VIII. 2. So, if I grant to J. S. an annuity of x. l. a year, pro consilio impenso et impendendo, [for his counsel given and to be given,] if J. S. be a physician, it shall be understood of his counsel in physic; and if he be a lawyer, of his counsel in law. 41 Edw. III. 6, 19. So, if I do let a tenement to J. S. near by my dwelling-house in a borough, provided that he shall not erect or use any shop in the same without my license, and afterwards I license him to erect a shop, and J. S. is then a miller, he shall not, by virtue of these general words, erect a joiner's shop." Bacon's Max. 50, 51, reg. 10. See, for other illustrations, Broom's Max. 275—278, [501—505.] This is a maxim of the civil law, as Lord Bacon mentions in another passage. "It is a rule that general words shall never be stretched too far in intendment, which the civilians utter thus: Verba generalia restringuntur ad habilitatem personæ vel ad aptitudinem rei." Bacon's Max. 17, in reg. 3.

Verba in differenti materia per prius, non per posterius, intelligenda sunt. Words on a different subject are to be understood by what precedes, not by what comes after. A maxim of the civil law. Calv. Lex. Spiegelius.

Verba intelligenda sunt in casu possibili. Words are to be understood in [of] a possible case. A maxim of the civil law. Calv. Lex. Accursius in Inst. 3. 14, De obligationibus, § 1.

Verba intentioni, et non e contra, debent inservire. The words [of an instrument] ought to subserve the intention of the party, and not the reverse, [i. e. the intention, the words.] 8 Co. 94 a, Edward Fox's case. One of the most ancient and important maxims of construction of deeds as well as wills. 1 Spence's Chancery, 527. The construction should be as near to the minds and apparent intents of the parties, as possible it may be, and law will permit. Shep. Touch. 86. Otherwise more briefly expressed, Verba intentioni debent inservire. 2 Bl. Com. 379. 2 Kent's Com. 555. The mutual intention of the parties to the instrument is the great, and sometimes the difficult object of inquiry, when the terms of it are not free from ambiguity. To reach and carry that intention into effect, the law, when it becomes necessary, will control even the literal terms of the contract, if they manifestly contravene the purpose; and many cases are given in the books, in which the plain intent has prevailed over the strict letter of the contract. Id. 554, and note.

Verba ita sunt intelligenda, ut res magis valeat quam pereat. The words [of an instrument] are to be so understood, that the subject matter may rather be of force than perish, [rather be preserved than destroyed, or, in other words, that the instrument may have effect, if possible.] Bacon's Max. 17, in reg. 3. Plowd. 156. 2 Bl. Com. 380. 2 Kent's Com. 555. A leading maxim of construction, very commonly expressed by its latter clause, Ut res magis valeat quam pereat, (q. v.) and sometimes still more briefly, Ut res valeat.

Verba mere æquivoca, si per communem usum loquendi in intellectu certo sumuntur, talis intellectus præferendus est. [In the case of] words merely equivocal, if they are taken by the common usage of speech in a certain sense, such sense is to be preferred. A maxim of the civil law. Calv. Lex. Zasius. Prateus.

Verba nihil operari melius est quam absurde. It is better that words should have no operation at all, than [that they should operate] absurdly. A maxim of the civil law. Calv. Lex. Baldus. Oldendorpius.

Verba non tam intuenda, quam causa et natura rei, ut mens contrahentium ex eis potius quam ex verbis appareat. The words [of a contract] are not so much to be looked at, as the cause and nature of the thing [which is the subject of it,] in order that the intention of the contracting parties may appear rather from them than from the words. A maxim of the civilians. Calv. Lex. Baldus. Oldendorpius. Prateus.

Verba offendi possunt, imo ab eis recedere licet, ut verba ad sanum intellectum reducantur. Words may be opposed [taken in a contrary sense,] nay, we may disregard them altogether, in order that the [general] words [of an instrument] may be restored to a sound meaning. A maxim of the civilians. Calv. Lex. Spiegelius. Prateus.

Verba ordinationis quando verificari possunt in sua vera significatione, trahi ad extraneum intellectum non debent. When the words of an ordinance can be carried into effect in their own true meaning, they ought not to be drawn to a foreign intend-ment. A maxim of the civilians. Calv. Lex. Spiegelius.

Verba posteriora propter certitudinem addita, ad priora quæ certitudine indigent, sunt referenda. Subsequent words, added for the purpose of certainty, are to be referred to the preceding words which require the certainty. Wingate's Max. 167, max. 53. Broom's Max. 253, [449.]

Verba pro re et subjecta materia accipi debent. Words ought to be understood in favor of the thing and subject matter. A maxim of the civilians. Calv. Lex. Baldus. Prateus.

Verba quantumvis generalia, ad aptitudinem restringuntur, etiamsi nullam aliam paterentur restrictionem. Words, however general they may be, are restrained for the purpose of adaptation, even though they may admit of no other kind of restriction. A maxim of the civilians. Zasius. Spiegelius. Prateus.

Verba quæ aliquid operari possunt non debent esse superflua. Words which can have any kind of operation, ought not to be considered superfluous. Calv. Lex. Spiegelius. Prateus.

Verba relata hoc maxime operantur per referentiam, ut in eis inesse videntur. Related words [words connected with others by reference] have this particular operation by the reference, that they are considered as being inserted in those [clauses which refer to them.] Co. Litt. 9 b, 359 a. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. 14 East, 568. Words to which reference is made in an instrument, have the same effect and operation as if they were inserted in the clauses referring to them. Broom's Max. 288, [521.] Lord Coke gives the following illustration of this maxim: "If a father enfeoff a son, to have and to hold to him and to his heirs, and the son enfeoffs the father as fully as the father enfeoffed him, by this the father hath a fee simple." Co. Litt. 9 b. It is sometimes more briefly expressed, Verba relata inesse videntur. Tindal, C. J. 4 Man. & Gr. 4. Heath, J. 5 Taunt. 337. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. 6 M. & S. 212.

Verba secundum materiam subjectam intelligi nemo est qui nesciat. There is no one who does not know that words are to be understood according to their subject matter. Calv. Lex. Baldus. Spiegelius.

Verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiori sensu. Words are always to be taken in the milder sense. 4 Co. 13 a. An old maxim in the law of slander, now exploded. See Mitior sensus.

Verba strictæ significationis ad latam extendi possunt, si subsit ratio. Words of a strict or narrow signification may be extended to a broad meaning, if there be ground in reason for it. A maxim of the civilians. Calv. Lex. Spiegelius. Prateus.

Verba sunt indices animi. Words are the indices or indicators of the mind or thought; words are the exponents of intention. Latch, 106. See Index animi sermo.

VERBA CANCELLARIÆ. L. Lat. Words of the chancery. The technical style of writs framed in the office of chancery. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 3.

VERBA PRECARIA. Lat. In the civil law. Precatory words; words of prayer or entreaty; words of trust, or used to create a trust, (verba fidei-commissaria.) Such as peto, (I beg;) rogo, (I ask;) volo, (I will;) mando, (I commend.) Also deprecor, (I entreat;) cupio, (I desire;) injungo, (I enjoin;) desidero, (I desire.) Calv. Lex. The most common words of trust were peto, rogo, volo, mando, fidei tuæ committo. Inst. 2. 24. 3.

VERBAL CONTRACTS. In the civil law. Contracts in which, besides the consent of the parties, a solemn form of words was required to perfect the obligation. Hallifax, Anal. b. 2, c. 16, num. 1. They were chiefly two; stipulation and fidejussion. Id. ibid. See Inst. 3. 16, De verborum obligationibus.

VERBERA. Lat. In old English law. Blows; beatings. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 53, § 1.

VERBERARE. Lat. In the civil law. To beat, so as to cause pain, (cum dolore cædere.) Calv. Lex. Distinguished from pulsare, (q. v.)

VERBUM. Lat. [from verum, true.] A word; an expression, or saying; a clause. Calv. Lex. Verborum ordo; the order of words; the orderly arrangement of words in writs. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 3.

VERD. [from Lat. viridis, green.] In forest law. The privilege of cutting green wood within a forest for fuel. Spelman. Called, also, greenhew, (q. v.)

The right of pasturing animals in the forest, otherwise called herbage. Id. See Skene de Verb. Signif.

VERDEROR. [L. Lat. viridarius; Fr. verdeur, from verd, or vert, q. v.] In forest law. An officer of the forest, sworn to maintain and keep the assises of the forest, and to view, receive and enrol the attachments and presentments of all manner of trespasses of vert and venison in the forest.

Manwood, part 1, p. 332. His office is properly to look to the vert, and see it well maintained. Cromp. Jur. 165. Cowell. The verderors sit in the courts of attachments and swein-mote. 3 Bl. Com. 71, 72.

VERDICT. [Lat. veredictum, from vere, truly, and dictum, said; or veritas, truth, and dictum, a saying; L. Fr. verdit, verdist.] In practice. Literally, a saying or declaration of the truth, (veritatis dictum.) The opinion declared by a jury as to the truth of matters of fact submitted to them for trial. The determination of a jury upon the matters of fact in issue in a cause, after hearing the case, the evidence, and the charge of the court. The finding of a jury in favor of one or the other party to an action at law, with such damages (in case of a finding for the plaintiff,) as they consider him entitled to. See 3 Bl. Com. 375—378.

Cowell defines a verdict to be "the answer of a jury made upon any cause, civil or criminal, committed by the court to their examination." This is literally true of the verdict in criminal cases, which is in terms of exact response to a question; the question submitted to the jury being in effect, "Is the party accused guilty or not guilty?" the answer or verdict,—"guilty," or "not guilty." In civil cases, a verdict, though substantially an answer, also, is in its form a report, or, in technical language, a "finding;" its language being,—"We find for the plaintiff (so much) damages," or "We find for the defendant." See Finding.

 The derivation and component elements of this word may be very satisfactorily illustrated by a reference to the practice in trials by jury, as laid down in the oldest books. The oath of a juror, on the trial of assises, is given by Bracton in the following terms: Hoc auditis justitiarii, quod VERITATEM DICAM de assisa ista, &c. et pro nihilo omittam quin VERITATEM DICAM, sic me Deus adjuvet, et hæc sancta. Hear this, ye justices, that I will say the truth of this assise, &c. and for nothing will I omit to say the truth. So help me God, and these holy [gospels.] Bract. fol. 185. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 9, § 1. The words of the oath in the parallel passage of Britton are as follows: Ceo oyes vous justices, que jeo VERITE DIRRAY de ceste assise, &c. et pur rienz ne lerray que jeo VERITE DIRRAY, si Dieu moy eyde et les seyntz. Britt. c. 52. The oath of a juror, corresponding to the modern grand juror, is given by Bracton in the following words: Hoc audite justitiarii, quod ego VERITATEM DICAM de hoc quod à me interrogabitis ex parte domini Regis, et fideliter faciam id quod mihi præcipietis ex parte domini Regis, et pro aliquo non omittam quin ita faciam pro posse meo, sic me Deus adjuvet et hæc sancta Dei evangelia. Hear this, ye justices, that I will say the truth of that which ye shall ask of me on behalf of the lord the king, and I will faithfully do that which ye shall give in charge to me in behalf of the lord the king, and for any thing will I not omit so doing, as far as I am able. So help me God, and these holy gospels of God. Bract. fol. 116. The emphatic words of these oaths,—veritatem dicam,—verite dirray, clearly show the composition of the Latin veredictum, and French verdit, (used by the writers above quoted,) from which the English verdict is formed; the word, in fact, being essentially French. See Verdit. In stating the practice on the trials of assises, Bracton proceeds to say, that the jurors having made the oath, should retire to some private place, and there deliberate among themselves upon the matter given them in charge; and that no person should have access to, nor speech with them, until they had declared their verdict, (donec suum dixerunt veredictum;) nor should they themselves, by sign or word, communicate to any one what they intended to say. And he then adds: "Contingit etiam multotiens quod juratores IN VERITATE DICENDA sunt sibi contrarii, ita quod in unam declinare non possunt sententiam;" it happens also very frequently that the jurors in saying the truth, [this is the literal meaning,—in modern phraseology, "in declaring their verdict,"] are of different minds, so that they cannot settle into one opinion. Bract. fol. 185 b. See Fleta, lib. 5, c. 12, § 2. Truth, then, was, at this early period of practice, of the essence of a verdict, in the grammatical sense of the term. The juror's oath was "to say the truth;"—his verdict, "the saying of the truth." The modern expression "a true verdict" would have then been a pleonasm; a false verdict would have been an absurdity in terms. Hence, where the finding of a jury is mentioned by Bracton, as subject to be termed true or false, the simple word dictum is constantly used. If true, it was termed verum dictum, or verdict proper; if false, falsum dictum, a false saying. Bract. fol. 186. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 17, § 9. The jurors were said, verita- tem dicere, to say the truth, and mendacium dicere, to say a falsehood, according to the case. Bract. fol. 185 b. Veredictum, in other words, was never applied to a false finding; a false verdict was no verdict at all. The great rule, in fine, applied by Bracton to a juror's oath was: Veritas habenda est in juratore, justitia et judicium in judice. Id. 186 b.

Dictum, it may be further observed, is frequently used by the writer last named, as the equivalent of veredictum. Cum autem, post sacramentum suum, dixerint veredictum suum, sive pro una parte sive pro alia, secundum eorum dictum proferetur judicium. Bract. fol. 185 b. The finding of the jury was also sometimes termed judicium, (a judgment;) though as a general rule, judgment was the province of the court. See Id. fol. 186 b.

VERDIST, Vereduist. L. Fr. In old English law. Verdict. Et solonc le verdist du pays sur ceo charge, soient juges; and according to the verdict of the country upon this charge, they shall be judged. Britt. c. 22. Et solonc le verdist, se face le jugement; and according to the verdict, shall the judgment be. Id. c. 68. The more common form of this word was verdit, (q. v.)

VERDIT. L. Fr. [from ver, true, and dit, a saying.] In old English law. Verdict; a declaration by a jury of the truth of a matter in issue, submitted to them for trial. Come ilz serrount de un accord, tauntost voysent à la barre devaunt les justices, à doner lour verdit; et solonc lour verdit soit jugement rendu pour un des parties; as soon as they [the jurors] shall be of one accord, they shall go to the bar, before the justices, to give their verdict, and according to their verdict shall judgment be rendered for one of the parties. Britt. c. 53. The English "verdict" seems to be immediately derived from this word.

VEREDI. Lat. In the civil and old European law. Public post horses. Cod. 12. 51. 4, 7, 12, 13, 15. Calv. Lex. See Paraveredus.

VEREDICTUM. L. Lat. [from verè, truly, or verus, true, and dictum, a saying.] In old English law. A verdict; a declaration of the truth of a matter in issue, submitted to a jury for trial. Statim dicatur eis, quod de quolibet capitulo, separatim et per se, sufficienter, distincte, et aperte respondeant in veredicto suo; it shall be immediately said to them, that to every article, separately and by itself, they shall make a sufficient, distinct, and open answer in their verdict. Bract. fol. 116. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 9. Id. lib. 5, c. 12. See Verdict.

VERECTUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Fallow-ground. Domesday. Cowell. See Warectum.

VEREY. L. Fr. [from Lat. verus.] In old English law. True. A la verey value; at the true value. Britt. c. 18. De la verey value. Id. c. 21. Que n'est mye son vereye juge; who is not his true or proper judge. Id. c. 121. See Verray, Verrey.

VERGE. L. Fr. and Eng. In English law. A privileged space around, or immediately adjoining the king's palace or residence. See Pax regis. The compass of the jurisdiction of the Court of the Marshalsea or Palace Court. 3 Bl. Com. 76. Et que le mareshal de nostre hostel tiegne nostre lieu dedans la verge de nostre hostel; and that the marshal of our household hold our place within the verge of our household. Britt. fol. 1 b. "We see further, that the law doth so esteem the dignity of the king's settled mansion-house, as it hath laid unto it a plot of twelve miles round, which we call the verge, to be subject to a special and exempted jurisdiction depending upon his person and great officers. This is as a half-pace or carpet spread about the king's chair of state," &c. Bacon's Charge upon the Commission for the Verge; Works, iv. 383, 384.

VERGE. L. Fr. [from Lat. virga, q. v.] In old English law. A rod, wand or staff, used as an ensign of office. Et puis preignent les justices les verges del viscounte, &c.—Et apres le serement fait, luy soit la verge rendue. And then the justices shall take the staves of the sheriff, &c.—And after the oath made, the staff shall be returned to him. Britt. c. 2.

VERGENS AD INOPIAM. L. Lat. In Scotch law. Verging towards poverty; in declining circumstances. 2 Kames' Equity, 8.

VERGERS. [L. Lat. virgatores.] In English law. Officers who carry white wands before the justices of either bench. Cowell. Mentioned in Fleta, as officers of the king's court, who oppressed the people by demanding exorbitant fees, (gravia feoda petentes.) Fleta, lib. 2, c. 38.

VERIFICARE. Lat. [from verus, true, and facere, to make.] In old pleading. To make out or prove to be true; to verify. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 37, § 4. See Et hoc paratus est verificare.

VERIFICATION. [Lat. verificatio, from verificare, to verify.] In pleading. Literally, a making out to be true; the proving of an assertion to be true; called, in the old books, an averment. An assertion of the ability of the pleader to prove the matter alleged in his plea. 6 Man. & Gr. 37, note (c.) A formula with which all affirmative pleadings, not concluding to the country, are required to conclude, and which is usually expressed in the following words: "And this the said plaintiff" (or defendant,) "is ready to verify." Steph. Pl. 433, 434.

VERIFY. [L. Lat. verificare, q. v.] In pleading. To make out to be true; to prove. See Verification.

VERITAS. Lat. [from verus, true.] Truth; verity. Veritas à quocunque dicitur, à Deo est; truth, by whomsoever it is spoken, is of God. 4 Inst. 153.

Veritas nihil veretur nisi abscondi. Truth fears nothing but to be hid. 9 Co. 20 b, Case of avowry.

Veritas nimium altercando amittitur. Truth is lost by excessive altercation. Hob. 344.

Veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. The truth of the name removes [the effect of] error of demonstration. Bac. Max. reg. 25. A well-known maxim frequently applied in construing wills. 8 Taunt. 313. 2 Jones' (N. C.) Equity R. 72. See Præsentia corporis, tollit, &c.

VERITE, Veritee. L. Fr. [from Lat. veritas, q. v.] Truth. Puesse dire sa grosse veritee; may relate the whole truth of his case. Kelham.

VERRAY, Verrai, Verrey, Very. L. Fr. [from Lat. verus, q. v.] In old English law. True. A chescun verray heire; to every true heir. Britt. c. 118. Si la cause soit verrey; if the reason be true. Id. c. 28. Encontre les verreys heires. Id. c. 43. A la very value. Id. c. 53. Soun verrai tenaunt; his immediate tenant. Yearb. H. 2 Edw. II. 27.

VERS. L. Fr. [from L. Lat. versus, q. v.] In old practice. Against. Excepcions vers le juge, ou vers le pleyntyfe, vers qui il purra dire; exceptions against the judge or against the plaintiff, against whom he may say. Britt. c. 57. The same with envers, (q. v.)

VERSARI. Lat. In the civil law. To be employed; to be exercised; to be continually engaged; to be conversant. Versari male in tutelâ; to misconduct one's self in a guardianship. Calv. Lex. Versari in lucro; to be in gain, or a gainer. Id.

VERSUS. L. Lat. In practice. Against; an abbreviation of the Lat. adversus. Used by Bracton indifferently with contra, (q. v.) Actio competit contra eum; an action lies against him. Bract. fol. 103 b. Actio datur versus eum; an action is given against him. Id. ibid. Retained in modern practice, in the titles of causes, but commonly in its contracted forms, vs, and v. The Fr. form vers frequently occurs in Britton. See Vers, Vs.

VERT. [from Fr. verd, from Lat. viridis, green.] In forest law. Every thing that grows and bears green leaf within the forest, that may cover a deer. Manwood, part 2, fol. 6, 33. Otherwise called green-hue, and by Blackstone green-sword. "Vert and venison" is an expression used to denote the wood of a forest, and the animals or deer in it. 4 Inst. 289. 3 Bl. Com. 71. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 486. Over-vert is high wood, (hault bois;) nether-vert is underwood, (south bois, or sub-bois.) Cowell.

VERUS. In old English law. True. Verus dominus; the true lord. Bract. fol. 210. Meum verum et legitimum, ordino, facio et constituo procuratorem; I ordain, make and constitute my true and lawful attorney. Reg. Orig. 306. From this word were formed the L. Fr. ver, verray, verrey, vereye, and very; the last being also used as an English word. See Very.

VERY. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Lat. verus, q. v.] True; actual; immediate. "Very lord and very tenant" (verus dominus et verus tenens,) is used in the old books to denote those that were immediate lord and tenant one to the other. Bro. Abr. Hariot. 23. O. N. B. 42. A man was not "very tenant," until he had attorned to the lord by some service. Cowell. A la very value; to the true value. Britt. c. 53. Le very cas fuit; the case in fact was. Dyer, 62, (Fr. ed.)

VESQUE, Veske. L. Fr. A bishop. Kelham.

VESQUIR. L. Fr. To live. Si il vesquist; if he was alive. Kelham.

VESSEL is used, in maritime law, as a synonyme of ship, and in the same general sense. See 3 Kent's Com. 129—363. As between the terms themselves, vessel seems to be the one of larger import, as it undoubtedly is in popular acceptation. "To the term vessel generally," observes M. Jacobsen, "we affix but a very indefinite idea; originating in the infancy of commerce, from L. 1. § 6, D. de exercitoria actione, [Dig. 14. 1. 1. 6.] in which all vessels are termed ships, and this want of precision still prevails in the law, and among its professors." Jacobsen's Sea Laws, citing Stypmann Jus Marit. pars. iii. cap. 148. Straccha, pars. i—2. Casaregis disc. i—29. By the English statute of 5 & 6 Will. IV. "ship" is declared to comprehend every description of vessel navigating on the sea, and "steam vessels" employed in carrying passengers or goods are trading ships. Under the term vessel, it was said by Mr. J. Patteson, in a late English case, a boat would, in common parlance, be included. 4 Carr. & P. 559. See Id. 569.

Vessel occurs as a L. Fr. word in the old books. Des neyes hors de meer en nostre royalme cheys hors de vessel, volons ausi que le vessel, et, &c. Britt. c. 1.

VEST. [from Fr. vester, Lat. vestire, to clothe.] To clothe with possession; to deliver full possession of land or of an estate; to give seisin; to enfeoff.* Spelman, voc. Vestire. See Devest, Invest.

To pass to a person; to become fixed in a person; to give an immediate right of present enjoyment; to give a present fixed right of future enjoyment; to give a legal or equitable seisin.* 4 Kent's Com. 202. A statute or conveyance is said "to vest an estate in a person;" an estate is said "to vest or be vested in a person." Id. 238, 245. In the old books, a person is said to be "vested of" an estate. "Any interest whereof the king was vested." Bacon's Works, iv. 234.

VESTED LEGACY. A legacy, the right to which vests permanently in the legatee, though the legacy is not payable until a future time.* A legacy to one, to be paid when he attains the age of twenty-one years, is a vested legacy; an interest which commences in præsenti, although it be solvendum in futuro; and if the legatee dies before that age, his representative shall receive it out of the testator's personal estate, at the same time that it would have become payable, in case the legatee had lived. 2 Bl. Com. 513.

VESTED REMAINDER. A fixed interest [in lands or tenements] to take effect in possession, after a particular estate is spent. 4 Kent's Com. 202.—Vested remainders (or remainders executed, whereby a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in futuro,) are where the estate is invariably fixed, to remain to a determinate person, after the particular estate is spent. As if A. be tenant for twenty years, remainder to B. in fee; here B.'s is a vested remainder, which nothing can defeat or set aside. 2 Bl. Com. 168, 169.

In New-York, a vested remainder has been defined by statute, "when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the lands, upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent estate." 1 Rev. St. [723,] 718, § 13.

VESTER, Vestre. L. Fr. In old English law. To vest; to enure. Kelham.

Vestue; clothed. Contract vestue; a clothed contract. The opposite of nue; naked or nude. Britt. c. 28. Obligation doit estre vestue de v. maneres de garnementz; obligation ought to be clothed in five kinds of garments. Id. ibid.

VESTIGIUM. L. Lat. In the law of evidence. A trace, or track; a mark left by a physical object. Vestigia carectæ; the tracks of a cart. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 25, § 6.

VESTIMENTUM. L. Lat. [from vestire, to clothe.] In old English law. Clothing. A figurative expression denoting the character, quality or circumstance of right, as opposed to the negation or destitution of right, which was compared to a state of nakedness. Possessio est nuda, donec ex tempore et seysina pacifica acquiratur vestimentum; the possession is naked, until a clothing [i. e. of right] be acquired by time and peaceable seisin. Bract. fol. 160.

In feudal law. Investiture; seisin. Lord Mansfield, C. J. 1 Burr. 109, quoting Bract. fol. 160.

In old English law. The technical form of a contract, requisite to give it effect. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, §§ 3, 4.

VESTIRE. L. Lat. In feudal law. To deliver full possession of land or of an estate, (plenam possessionem terræ vel prædii tradere;) to give seisin; (seisinam dare;) to enfeoff or invest, (infeodare.) Spelman. To clothe with possession.

In old English law. To clothe a contract in the proper form to give it validity.

Such a contract was said to be vestitum, (clothed) as distinguished from nudum, (naked.) Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, § 3.

VESTITURA. L. Lat. [from vestire, q. v.] In feudal law. Investiture; delivery of possession. Spelman, voc. Vestire.

VESTURA. L. Lat. [from vestire, to clothe.] In feudal and old English law. Literally, a garment. A possession, or admittance to a possession or seisin. Cowell.

In old English law. A crop of grass or corn, [grain.] Cowell.

Vest, vesture; livery, delivery. An allowance of some set portion of the products of the earth, as corn, grass, wood, &c. for part of the salary or wages to some officer, servant or laborer, for their livery or vest. Id.

VESTURA TERRÆ. L. Lat. In old English law. The vesture of the land, that is, the corn, grass, underwood, sweepage and the like. Co. Litt. 4 b. See Keilw. 48. 4 Leon. 43. Palm. 174. Owen, 37.

VESTURE. In old English law. Profit of land. "How much the vesture of an acre is worth." Extent. Maner. 4 Edw. I. Cowell.

VETERA STATUTA. Lat. Ancient statutes. The English statutes from Magna Charta to the end of the reign of Edward II. are so called; those from the beginning of the reign of Edward III. being contradistinguished by the appellation of Nova statuta. 2 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 85.

VETITUM NAMIUM. L. Lat. [from vetitum, prohibited, and namium, taking; L. Fr. vee de name, q. v.] In old English law. A refused or prohibited taking or distress; a refusal to re-deliver a distress; a prohibition of its being taken again by the owner;* the detention of a distress, (detentio namii.) Bract. fol. 155 b. Lord Coke explains this to be, when the bailiff of a lord distrained beasts or goods, and the lord forbid the bailiff to deliver them when the sheriff came to replevy them, and to that end directed him to drive them to places unknown, or to take such a course as they should not be replevied; or where, without any word, they were eloined, or so handled by a forbidden course as they could not be replevied, for then they were forbidden in law to be replevied. 2 Inst. 140. Vetitum namium has sometimes been considered as the Latin form of withernam. 3 Bl. Com. 148. But Lord Coke has clearly shown it to have been a different act or proceeding. 3 Inst. ub. sup. And Bracton expressly calls it detentio namii pro districtione facienda; the detention of a thing taken by way of distress. Bract. fol. 155 b. And see Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, §§ 32, 33. See Vee de name.

VETO. Lat. I forbid. The word by which the Roman tribunes expressed their negative against the passage of a law or other proceeding, which was also called interceding, (intercedere.) Adam's Rom. Ant. 13, 145, 146.

In modern times, this word has been used to designate the power enjoyed by the executive department of a government, of negativing bills which have been passed by the legislature. Brande. 1 Kent's Com. 239—241.

VETUS JUS. Lat. The old law; old law. A term used in the civil law, sometimes to designate the law of the Twelve Tables, and sometimes merely a law which was in force previous to the passage of a subsequent law. Calv. Lex.

A law, principle or doctrine of long standing. Cod. 9. 2. 6.

VETUSTAS. Lat. [from vetus, old.] In the civil law. Antiquity; ancient or former law or practice; the same with antiquitas, (q. v.) Inst. 3. 1. 15.

Time out of memory, (tempus quod memoriam hominum excedit.) Calv. Lex.

VEUTA TERRÆ. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. veu de terre.] View of land. Mentioned by Skene as a French term, corresponding with the Lat. visus terræ. Skene ad. lib. 1. Reg. Maj. c. 9. Spelman. See Visus, View.

VEXATA QUÆSTIO. L. Lat. A vexed question; a question often agitated or discussed, but not determined or settled; a question or point which has been differently determined, and so left doubtful. 7 Co. 45 b, Kenn's case. Lord Mansfield, C. J. 3 Burr. 1547. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. 9 East, 215. Vexata et spinosa quæstio; a vexed and thorny question. Brownl. (part 2,) 318.

VEY. L. Fr. Way. Haut vey; highway. Kelham.

VEYER. L. Fr. To see; to view. Veyer est; it is to be seen. Kelham. Veyet; sees. Id.

VEYLE. L. Fr. Elder. Kelham.

VEYLLE. L. Fr. A town. Kelham.

VEYN. L. Fr. [from Lat. vanus.] In old English law. Void. Et si rien soit fait devaunt ceux substitutz, volons que soit veyn, et de nule force; and if any thing be done before those substitutes, we will that it be void, and of no force. Britt. fol. 3.

VEYSIN. L. Fr. [from Lat. vicinus.] In old English law. A neighbor. Les veysins del hundred. Britt. c. 62.

VI AUT CLAM. Lat. In the civil law. By force, or covertly. Dig. 43, 24. A thing was said to be done vi, when it was done contrary to a prohibition on the part of a possessor. Vi factum videri, si quis contra quam prohiberetur, fecerit. Id. 43. 24. 1. 5. Vi factum id videtur esse qua de re quis, quum prohiberetur, fecit. Dig. 50. 17. 73. 2. A thing was said to be done clam, which was done by a person having, or anticipating to have a controversy with another. Clam [factum id videtur esse,] quod quisque, quum controversiam haberet habiturumve se putaret, fecit. Id. ibid.

VI BONORUM RAPTORUM. Lat. In the civil law. Of goods taken away by force. The name of an action given by the prætor as a remedy for the violent taking of another's property. Inst. 4. 2. Dig. 47. 8. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 2.

VI ET ARMIS. L. Lat. [L. Fr. ovesque force et armes.] In old practice and pleading. With force and arms. Emphatic words in writs and declarations of trespass, in which an act of force and violence was charged. Rex, vice-comiti Lincoln' salutem. Si A. fecerit te securum de clamore suo prosequendo, tunc pone per vadium et salvos pleg' B. quod sit coram justitiariis nostris apud Westm. in octavis sancti Michaelis, ostensurus quare VI ET ARMIS, in ipsum A. apud N. insultum fecit, et ipsum verberavit, vulneravit et male tractavit; ita quod de vita ejus desperabatur; et alia enormia ei intulit, ad grave damnum ipsius A. et contra pacem nostram. Et habeas ibi nomina pleg' et hoc breve. (The King to the Sheriff of Lincoln, greeting: If A. make you secure of prosecuting his claim, then put B. by gage and safe pledges, that he be before our justices at Westminster, on the octave of St. Michael, to show wherefore, with force and arms, he made an assault upon the said A. at N. and beat, wounded, and ill treated him, so that his life was despaired of; and other wrongs to him did, to the grievous damage of the said A. and against our peace. And have you there the names of the pledges and this writ.) Reg. Orig. 93. This was the original writ in the action of trespass for an assault and battery, and its language is very closely followed in modern declarations of trespass. 2 Chitt. Pl. 846, 852. See Force and arms.

VIA. Lat. In the civil law. Way; a way; a road; a right of way. The right of walking, riding, and driving over another's land, (jus eundi, et agendi, et ambulandi.) Inst. 2. 3, pr. A species of rural servitude, which included iter (a foot-path,) and actus, (a drift-way.) Id. ibid. Dig. 8. 3. 1, pr. Id. 8. 3. 7. Id. 8. 3. 23, pr.

In old English law. A way; a public road; a foot, horse, and cart way. Co. Litt. 56 a. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, §§ 1, 2.

VIA PUBLICA. Lat. In the civil law. A public way or road, the land itself belonging to the public. Dig. 43. 8. 2. 21.

VIA REGIA. L. Lat. In English law. The king's highway for all men. Co. Litt. 56 a. Stat. Marlbr. c. 15. The highway or common road; called the king's highway, because authorized by him and under his protection. Cowell. Called, also, via regalis. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 24, § 8.

Via trita via tuta. The beaten path is the safe path. The usual course of practice ought to be pursued. 3 Bing. N. C. 45. Courts of law will not sanction a speculative novelty, without the warrant of any principle, precedent, or authority. Broom's Max. 58. Otherwise expressed, Via trita est tutissima. The beaten way is the safest. 10 Co. 142 a. 4 M. & S. 168.

VIAGIUM, Viaggium. L. Lat. In old English and maritime law. Voyage; a voyage. In nostri contemptum et deceptionem, ac viagii nostri prædicti, quantum in ipso fuit, retardationem manifestam; in contempt and fraud of us, and to the manifest retarding of our said voyage as far as in him lay. Reg. Orig. 24 b. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 13, sect. 5, § 1. See Voyage.

VIAGE. L. Fr. A voyage; an expedition. Kelham.

VIANDER. In old English law. A returning officer. 7 Mod. 13.

VIATOR. Lat. [from via, a way or road.] In the Roman law. A summoner or apparitor; an officer who attended on the tribunes and ædiles. So called, because they were often on the road, (quod sæpe in via essent,) it being anciently their office to summon the senators from the country where they resided. Adam's Rom. Ant. 192. Calv. Lex.

A traveller; a foot passenger. Id.

VIC'. A common abbreviation of vicecomes in old writs.

VICAR. [L. Lat. vicarius, from vicis, place or stead.] One who acts in the place of another, (qui vicem alterius gerit ;) one who is deputed or authorized to perform the functions of another; a substitute; a deputy. See Vicarius.

In English ecclesiastical law. The incumbent of an appropriated benefice. The distinction of a parson and vicar is this: the parson has, for the most part, the whole right to all the ecclesiastical dues in his parish; but a vicar has generally an appropriator over him, entitled to the best part of the profits, to whom he is, in effect, perpetual curate, with a standing salary. 1 Bl. Com. 388. Vicar was a title not known till the reign of Henry III. 1 Chitt. Bl. Com. 387, note. See 1 H. Bl. 421.

VICARAGE. In English ecclesiastical law. The living or benefice of a vicar, as a parsonage is of a parson. See 1 Bl. Com. 387, 388. 1 Wooddes. Lect. 188—193.

VICARIUS. Lat. [from vicis, place or stead.] A deputy; a substitute; one who acts in the place of another, (qui vice fungitur alterius.) Vicarius non habet vicarium. A deputy has not [cannot have] a deputy. A delegated power cannot be again delegated. Broom's Max. 384, [665.] See Delegata potestas, &c.

In the civil law. The slave of a slave. Dig. 33. 8. 6. 3. The expression vicarius vicarii is used in the same passage. See Tayl. Civ. Law, 421, 422.

In old European law. The deputy of a count; a viscount. Esprit des Lois, liv. 30, c. 18. Nullus comes, vicarius, villicus, &c. seu quilibet alius rem ab alio possessam sine judicio usurpet ; no count, viscount, steward, &c. or any one else, shall take a thing out of the possession of another without judicial process. LL. Wisegothor. lib. 8, tit. 2, l. 5. See Id. lib. 9, tit. 2, l. 8. Id. lib. 12, tit. 1, l. 2. Capitul. lib. 3, c. 11. LL. Longob. lib. 2, tit. 47, l. 1. Spelman.

VICE. Fr. and L. Fr. [from Lat. vitium.] In old English law. Fault; defect. Si le brefe soit abatu pur errour, ou pour autre vice ou defaute ; if the writ be abated for error, or for other fault or defect. Britt. c. 46. Et ausi par vice de escripture, [est le brefe abatable ;] et ausi par vice del parchemyn, ou par vice de rasure ; and also by defect of the writing, [is the writ abatable,] and also by defect of the parchment, or by the defect of rasure. Id. c. 48.

In French law. A defect or imperfection in a thing sold. Civil Code of Louis. Art. 2496, et seq.

VICE. Lat. [ablat. of vicis, place.] In the place or stead, (loco.) Vice mea ; in my place. Used both in Latin and English, in the composition of words denoting a delegated or deputed authority. See infra. See Vicis.

VICE-ADMIRALTY COURTS. In English law. Courts established in the Queen's possessions beyond the seas, with jurisdiction over maritime causes, including those relating to prize. 3 Steph. Com. 435. 3 Bl. Com. 69.

VICE-CHANCELLOR. [L. Lat. vicecancellarius.] An equity judge who acts as assistant to the chancellor, holding a separate court, from which an appeal lies to the chancellor. There are three vice-chancellors who hold courts in England,—the Vice-Chancellor of England, and two others. 3 Steph. Com. 418.

VICE-COMES, (or VICECOMES.) L. Lat. [L. Fr. viscount.] In old English law and practice. Sheriff; the sheriff of a county. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 17. Id. Johan. c. 24. Reg. Orig. passim. Spelman. So called, as being the deputy of the earl, or comes, to whom the custody of the shire is said to have been committed at the first division of England into counties. But the earls, in process of time, by reason of their high employments and attendance on the king's person, not being able to transact the business of the county, were delivered of that burden; reserving to themselves the honor, but the labor was laid on the sheriff. So that now the sheriff does all the king's business in the county, and though he be still called vicecomes, yet he is entirely independent of, and not subject to the earl; the king by his letters patent committing custodiam comitatus to the sheriff, and him alone. 1 Bl. Com. 339. 7 Co. 33, and pref. 9 Co. 49. Dalton's Sheriff, 2. Sewell's Sheriff, 3, 4. Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 24, note.

Viscount, the corresponding French term, has become, in England, like earl, exclusively a title of nobility. In the Royal Court of the Island of Jersey, however, the sheriff is still called viscount. 7 Ad. & Ell. (N. S.) 989, 1002. See Viscount.

VICECOMES NON MISIT BREVE. L. Lat. The sheriff hath not sent the writ. The form of continuance on the record after issue and before trial. 7 Mod. 349. 11 Id. 231. See Continuance.

VICE-COMITISSA. L. Lat. In old English law. A viscountess. Spelman. Vice-comitissa dotissa; viscountess dowager. Com. 185.

VICE-CONSUL. L. Lat. In old English law. The deputy or substitute of an earl, (comes,) who was anciently called consul; answering to the more modern vicecomes. See Consul.

VICE-DOMINUS. L. Lat. In Saxon law. The governor of a province; (præfectus provinciæ.) Ingulph. p. 870, l. 46. Alfred is said to have divided this office into two, the judex, or justice, and vicecomes, or sheriff. Id. ibid. Spelman. Blackstone, quoting Camden, makes the title synonymous with vidame and valvasor. 1 Bl. Com. 403. In Cowell, it is translated viscount, or sheriff.

In canon law. A bishop's deputy. Calv. Lex. A vidame. (?) See Vidame.

VICE-GERENT. In old English law. A deputy or lieutenant, (locum tenens.) Stat. 31 Hen. VIII. c. 10. Cowell.

VICE-JUDEX. L. Lat. In old Lombardic law. A deputy judge. LL. Longob. lib. 2, tit. 30, l. 2. Spelman.

VICINAGE. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Lat. vicinus, near.] Neighborhood; near dwelling; vicinity. 2 Bl. Com. 33. Cowell.

VICINETUM. L. Lat. [from Lat. vicinus, near, adjacent.] In old English law. A neighborhood, or vicinage; visne or venue.* Magna Charta, c. 14. A place which neighbors inhabited, (locus quem vicini habitant.) Spelman. Anciently understood of the same vill or the parts adjacent, or of the same hundred; in later law, of the same county. Id. Answering to the Lat. vicinia and vicinium. Visinetum, visinetus, visnetum, are other forms of this word, which occur in the old books. In old Scotch law, it is written voisinetum, (from Fr. voisin.)

VICINIA. Lat. [from vicinus, near.] In the civil law. Nearness of dwelling; neighborhood; a neighborhood; a neighboring place. Distinguished from confinium, as being applied to urban estates. Calv. Lex.

VICINITAS. Lat. [from vicinus, near.] Neighborhood; vicinity.

In old Scotch law. The verdict of an assise or jury. Quon. Attach. c. 83. Skene in loc. Spelman.

VICINUS. Lat. In the civil law. Near; adjacent; neighboring. Applied more particularly to urban estates, or those which were separated by a common wall; confinis being the term applied to adjacent rural estates. Calv. Lex. Places were said to be neighboring (vicini,) when the voice of a person shouting could be heard from one to the other. Id.

In old English law. A neighbor. Vicini viciniora facta præsumuntur scire. Neighbors are presumed to know the acts that are done in their more immediate neighborhood. 4 Inst. 173.

VICIOUS. L. Fr. [from vice, q. v.] Faulty; defective; bad. Respondre à cel escript vicious; to answer to such faulty writing. Britt. c. 28. Soit le brefe trove vicious; the writ be found defective. Id. c. 46. Est le brefe abatable et vicious. Id. c. 48. Le brefe purra estre vicious en plusurs maneres; the writ may be faulty in many ways. Id. ibid.

VICIS. Lat. Change; turn. Pro hac vice; for this turn.

Place; stead; office; duty. See Vice.

VICONT. L. Fr. Sheriff. Litt. sect. 101. Dyer, (Fr. ed.) passim.

VICONTIEL, Vicountiel. L. Fr. and Eng. [from vicont or vicount, sheriff.] In English practice. Belonging to the sheriff. Vicontiel writs are such as were triable in the county or sheriff's court. O. N. B. 109. Cowell. Or they were such as were directed to the sheriff, and not to be returned to any superior court, till finally executed by him. 3 Bl. Com. 238.

VICONTIELS, Vicountiels. [L. Lat. vicecomitilia.] In old English law. Farms for which the sheriff paid a rent to the king, and made what profit he could of them. Stat. 33 & 34 Hen. VIII. c. 16. Spelman. Cowell. Called, also, vicontiel rents. Stat. 22 Car. II. c. 6. Cowell. Now placed under the management of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests. Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 99, §§ 12, 13.

VICOUNT, Vicounte. L. Fr. An old form of viscount, (q. v.) Stat. Westm. 1, c. 15.

VICTUS. Lat. In the civil law. Sustenance; support; the means of living. The word included every thing necessary to the support of human life, (quæ ad vivendum homini necessaria sunt.) Dig. 50. 16. 43.

VICUS. Lat. In old English law. A street in a town; a passage between two rows of houses, (in oppido via est, domuum seriem complexa.) Fortescue de L. L. Angl. c. 24, note. Vici et venelli; streets and lanes. Reg. Orig. 267.

A village; a neighborhood of houses out of a town. Vicus ex domibus constat extra oppida. Fortesc. de L. L. Angl. ub. sup.

VIDAME. In French feudal law. Originally, an officer who represented the bishop, as the viscount did the count. In process of time, these dignitaries erected their offices into fiefs, and became feudal nobles, such as the vidame of Chartres, Rheims, &c.; continuing to take their titles from the seat of the bishop whom they represented, although the lands held by virtue of their fiefs might be situated elsewhere. Brande.

A chief in the neighborhood of a church or abbey who acted as its protector. Steph. Lect. 236.

Blackstone, quoting Camden, makes vidame to be a title in old English law, synonymous with that of valvasor. 1 Bl. Com. 403.

Videbis ea sæpe committi, quæ sæpe vindicantur. You will see those offences often committed, which are often punished. 3 Inst. Epilog.

VIDEL'T. A contraction of videlicet. 1 Inst. Cler. 13.

VIDELICET. Lat. [from videre, to see, and licet, it is permitted.] To wit; that is to say; namely. Literally, it may be seen; you may see; it is to be seen. A term compounded similarly with scilicet, (q. v.) and of similar import, being used as prefatory to a particular statement of something that was just before mentioned in general terms.

Lord Hobart says of a videlicet, in its application to conveyancing, that it "is neither a direct several clause, nor a direct entire clause, but it is intermedia." Hob. 172. And again, "it is clear that it is not a substantive clause of itself; and, therefore, you can neither begin a sentence with it, nor make a sentence of it, by itself; but it is, (as I may say,) clausula ancillaris, a kind of handmaid to another clause, and to deliver her mind, [i. e. the meaning of the other clause,] not her own." Id.

In modern pleading, a videlicet is used where a party alleges a fact, (such as time, quantity, or value,) which he does not wish to be held to prove strictly. The terms actually used for this purpose are the English "to wit," or "that is to say," immediately previous to the allegation, which is called "laying the time, &c. under a videlicet." Steph. Pl. 293.

VIDENDUM EST. Lat. It is to be seen; it is to be considered. A common expression in Bracton.

VIDERE. Lat. In old practice. To view. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 6, § 4.

VIDETUR. Lat. It is seen; it appears; it seems; it is considered; it is supposed. Qui tacet consentire videtur. He who is silent is considered to consent.

VIDIMUS. L. Lat. (We have seen.) In old English practice. A species of exemplification of the enrolment of charters or other instruments. So called, from its initial words: Vidimus quoddam scriptum, &c. (We have seen a certain writing.) An innotescimus or vidimus are all one, and are always of a charter of feoffment, or some other instrument which is not of record. 5 Co. 54 a, Page's case. Co. Litt. 225 b. See Barringt. Obs. Stat. 5, note [h.]

VIDUA. Lat. In civil and old English law. Widow; a widow. Dig. 50. 16. 242. 3. Reg. Orig. 175 b. Magna Charta, c. 7. According to Javolenus in the Digests, this word in the Roman law was applied to women who had not been married. Dig. ub. sup.

VIDUA REGIS. L. Lat. In old English law. A king's widow. The widow of a tenant in capite. So called, because she was not allowed to marry a second time without the king's permission; obtaining her dower also from the assignment of the king, and having the king for her patron and defender. Spelman.

VIDUITAS. Lat. [from vidua, widow.] In old English law. Widowhood; viduity. Burr. Sett. Cas. 794. "Chaste viduity." Lord Ellenborough, 10 East, 520.

VIEF, Vif. L. Fr. [from Lat. vivus.] Living; alive; live. Vief naam; a live distress. Kelham.

VIER. L. Fr. [from Lat. videre.] To see. Vient; they see. Kelham.

VIERS, Vers. [from Lat. versus.] Towards. Kelham.

VIEW. [L. Fr. veue; L. Lat. visus.] In practice. Inspection, or examination of a place or person, in the course of an action.

In many of the old real actions, the tenant might demand a view of the land in question; or, if a rent was to be recovered, a view of the land out of which it issued. In other actions, as in assise of novel disseisin and waste, the view was had by the jury. The reason of this proceeding was, that the tenant or jury might know with certainty what the demandant sought to recover, and that the defence might be shaped accordingly. Roscoe's Real Act. 247. 3 Bl. Com. 299. Britt. c. 45. Cowell.

In some modern actions, as in trespass quare clausum fregit, where it appears to the court, or a judge in vacation, to be proper and necessary that the jurors who are to try the issues, should, for the better understanding of the evidence, have a view of the messuages, lands, or place in question, the court or a judge will grant a rule or order for such view; and a similar proceeding may be had in criminal cases. 2 Tidd's Pr. 795—798. 1 Burr. 252.

VIEW. [Lat. prospectus; Fr. vue.] Prospect; the prospect from one's house or ground, of which his neighbor is not permitted to deprive him, by erecting a new building, or any other obstruction. A species of urban servitude, derived from the civil law. 3 Kent's Com. 448. Dig. 8. 2. 3. Defined in the Civil Code of Louisiana, to be "every kind of opening which may more or less facilitate the means of looking out of a building." Art. 711.

VIEW OF FRANK PLEDGE. [L. Lat. visus franci plegii.] In old English law. The office which the sheriff in his county court, or the bailiff in his hundred, performed in looking to the king's peace, and seeing that every man were in some frank pledge, or decennary.* Cowell. See Stat. 18 Edw. II. A. D. 1325. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 208.

The ancient name of the court leet. 4 Bl. Com. 275. See Court leet, Frank pledge.

VIEWERS. [L. Fr. vejours; Lat. visores.] In old practice. Persons appointed under writs of view, to testify the view. Roscoe's Real Act. 253.

Vigilantibus et non dormientibus jura subveniunt. The laws relieve or succor those who are vigilant, not those who sleep [upon their rights.] Bract. fol. 175 b. 2 Inst. 690. Wingate's Max. 672, max. 174. More briefly, Vigilantibus jura subveniunt. The laws assist the vigilant. 1 P. Wms. 297. A party who is entitled to a remedy at law, must be active and vigilant in its prosecution. If he neglects for a long and unreasonable time to ask the assistance of the law, to recover a right, it will be refused him, both as a punishment of his neglect, and on the principle of restraining litigation by limiting actions to certain periods. See 3 Bl. Com. 188. Broom's Max. 391, [692,] et seq. Called, by Sir William Scott, "a universal maxim." 5 Rob. Adm. R. 105. Bracton introduces this maxim in the following passage, which is probably the earliest instance of its application in the English books: Sciendum quod statim et sine mora, [fieri debeat querela,] cum desides et sui juris contemptores non juvat juris beneficium, et VIGILANTIBUS ET NON DORMIENTIBUS JURA SUBVENIUNT; it is to be known that [the plaint ought to be made] at once and without delay,—for the favor of the law does not help those who are slothful and neglect their rights, and the laws aid those who are vigilant, and not those who sleep. Bract. fol. 175 b. The maxim seems to be derived from the civil law. Calv. Lex. Spiegelius. It is applied to the contract of sale, as expressive of the same principle with Caveat emptor, viz.: that purchasers should exercise proper vigilance and caution. 2 Kent's Com. 487, 488, note.

VIGILIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Watch. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 28.

A wake. Id. lib. 2, c. 82, § 3.

VIGORE CUJUS. L. Lat. By force whereof. 1 Ld. Raym. 412.

VIIS ET MODIS. L. Lat. (By ways and means.) In practice. The technical name of a citation by which actions against non-residents are sometimes commenced, and which is served by posting up in certain public places; as on the Royal Exchange in London, according to the practice of the English admiralty; or at the Key in Leith, at the market cross of Edinburgh, and the pier aud shore of Leith, according to the practice of Scotland.* Story's Confl. Laws, § 546.

VILL. [L. Fr. ville, from Lat. villa, q. v.] In English law. A word of various significations, as A manor. Spelman, voc. Villa. Cowell.

A tithing. 1 Bl. Com. 114. Spelman, voc. Hamel.

A town. 1 Bl. Com. 114. Litt. sect. 171. Co. Litt. 5 a, 115 b. Fortescue, de L. L. Angliæ, c. 24, note.

A township. 2 Stra. 1004. 4 M. & S. 378.

A parish. Cro. Car. 150. Cowell.

A part of a parish. 1 Bl. Com. 115. Cowell.

A village. Spelman. 12 Mod. 546.

 The original meaning of vill in England, seems to have been derived from the Roman sense of the term villa; a single country residence or farm; a manor, as Spelman defines it. See Town, In Bracton's time, this signification had become antiquated, for he expressly says that a single dwelling-house was not a vill. Si quis in agris unicum faciat ædificium, non erit ibi villa. Bract. fol. 211. The term, however, was applied to any collection of houses, consisting of more than two. Id. fol. 434. 2 Stra. 1004. And hence it finally came to comprehend towns and cities. See Town. Britton gives the relative signification of the terms vill, parish and manor, in the following passage: Car en une ville purrount estre plusurs parockes, et en une paroche plusurs maners; for in one vill there may be several parishes, and in one parish several manors. Britt. c. 50. This seems strictly to be the proper subordination of the terms in modern English law; although in some cases a parish may now contain several vills. 1 Bl. Com. 115. A farm consisting of a capital mansion, two ancient cottages and one modern one, all rented by one and the same farmer, who occupied the great house himself, and put four laborers and their families into the three cottages, was held to be no vill, in respect to the appointment of overseers of the poor. 1 W. Bl. 419. 3 Burr. 1391, S. C.

VILLA. Lat. [from vehere, to carry.] In the Roman law. A farm house; a country residence, (domus in rure.) Gloss. ad Dig. 50. 16. 27. So called, quasi vehilla, because the products of the land were carried (vehebantur) to it for keeping, and carried away for sale. Calv. Lex. Adam's Rom. Ant. 578. See Dig. 50. 16. 211.

VILLA. Lat. In Saxon law. A farm, or country residence; a manor. Spelman.

A collection of neighboring houses, consisting of more than two. Bract. fol. 212, 434.

A town or vill. See Vill. Villa est ex pluribus mansionibus vicinata, et collata ex pluribus vicinis; et sub appellatione villarum continentur burgi et civitates; a vill (town) is a collection of several neighboring dwellings, consisting of several neighbors; and under the denomination of vills (or towns) are comprehended boroughs and cities. Co. Litt. 115 b. See Town.

VILLA REGIA. Lat. In Saxon law. A royal residence, (qua ædes et curia regalis habentur.) Spelman.

VILLAIN. An old form of villein. "A villain is such a servant as himself and whatsoever he possesseth is the lord's, if he claim it." Finch's Law, b. 2, ch. 10.

VILLAN. A form of villein, more closely following the Lat. villanus. It is used by Blackstone in the expressions villan socage, villan services. Bl. L. Tracts, 95, 96.

VILLANUS. Lat. [from villa, a farm, or village.] In old European law. A bondman employed in agricultural labors. So called, because annexed to a farm, or country estate, (adscriptus villæ.) Distinguished from a slave or serf, (servus,) by the circumstances that he paid a fixed rent to his master for the land which he cultivated, and after paying that, all the fruits of his labor and industry belonged to himself in property. 1 Robertson's Charles V. Appendix, Note ix. Brande.

In old English law. A bondman; an agricultural bondman; a villan, or villein, (q. v.) Villanus amercietur, salvo wainagio suo; the villein shall be amerced, saving his wainage, [i. e. his implements of husbandry.] Magna Charta, c. 14. 2 Inst. 28. Bract. fol. 116 b. Donec villanus ad villanum convincatur; until the villein shall be proved to be a villein. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 22, § 1. Bracton uses villanus and servus indifferently. Bract. fol. 246, 25.

VILLANUM SERVITIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Villein service. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 13, § 1.

VILLATA. L. Lat. [from villa, a vill, or town.] In old English law. A township. Stat. Marlbr. c. 25. Bract. fol. 124 b, 150.

An inhabitant of a vill or town; a townsman. Bract. 143 b, 154.

VILLE. L. Fr. In old English law. A vill; a town. Britt. c. 50. Litt. sect. 171.

VILLEIN, Villeine, Villeyn, Villain, Vileyn, Vyleyn. L. Fr. and Eng. [from Fr. ville, Lat. villa, a country residence, a farm, or village.] In old English law. A feudal tenant of the lowest class, who held by base and uncertain services, and was employed in rustic labors of the most sordid kind; an agricultural bondman, of little better condition than a slave.

 The word villein seems to be of Norman origin, although the class of persons to whom it was applied existed among the Saxons in a state of even grosser degradation. 2 Bl. Com. 92. "These villeins," observes Sir W. Blackstone, "belonging principally to lords of manors, were either villeins regardant, that is, annexed to the manor or land; or else they were in gross, or at large, that is, annexed to the person of the lord, and transferable by deed from one owner to another. They could not leave their lord without his permission; but if they ran away, or were purloined from him, might be claimed and recovered by action, like beasts, or other chattels. They held, indeed, small portions of land, by way of sustaining themselves and families, but it was at the mere will of the lord, who might dispossess them whenever he pleased; and it was upon villein services, that is, to carry out dung, to hedge and ditch the lord's demesnes, and any other the meanest offices; and their services were not only base, but uncertain both as to their time and quantity. A villien, in short, was in much the same state with us, as Lord Molesworth describes to be that of the boors in Denmark, and which Stiernhook attributes also to the traals or slaves in Sweden, which confirms the probability of their being, in some degree, monuments of the Danish tyranny." 2 Bl. Com. 93. As to the condition of villeinage, see Yearb. M. 7 Edw. II. 214. T. 8 Edw. II. 280. See a count for a villein, Yearb. M. 19 Hen. VI. 65.

The Lat. villanus, and Fr. villeyn are used by Bracton and Britton as respectively synonymous with servus, and serf, a slave. Bract. fol. 6 b, 7, 24 b, 25. Britt. c. 31. The following passage from the former author presents in few words a forcible picture of the villein's abject condition: Servi autem sub potestate dominorum sunt, nec solvitur dominica potestas quamdiu manentes fuerint in villenagio, levantes et cubantes, sive terram tenuerint sive non. Item si non sunt manentes in villenagio, sed vagantes per patriam, euntes et redeuntes, semper sub potestate dominorum sunt quamdiu redierint, et cum consuetudinem revertendi habere desierint, incipiunt esse fugitivi ad similitudinem cervorum domesticorum. (But slaves are under the power of their lords, nor is their lords' power dissolved as long as they are abiding in villenage, levant et couchant, whether they hold land or not. Also, if they are not abiding in villenage, but wandering through the country, going and returning, they are always under the power of their lords, as long as they continue to return, and when they cease to have the habit of returning, they begin to be fugitives, after the likeness of tamed deer.) Bract. fol. 66.

VILLEIN IN GROSS. In old English law. A villein who was annexed to the person of the lord, and transferable by deed from one owner to another. 2 Bl. Com. 93.

VILLEIN REGARDANT. L. Fr. and Eng. In old English law. A villein annexed to the lord's manor, or land, (villæ ascriptus.) 2 Bl. Com. 93. Cowell.

VILLEIN SERVICES. [L. Lat. villana servitia.] In old English law. Base services, such as villeins performed. 2 Bl. Com. 93. They were not, however, exclusively confined to villeins, since they might be performed by freemen, without impairing their free condition. Bract. fol. 24 b.

VILLEIN SOCAGE. [L. Lat. villanum socagium.] In old English law. A privileged kind of villenage; the tenants, (who were called villein socmen, or sokemen,) doing villein services, but of a certain and determinate kind. Bract. fol. 26 b, 209. 2 Bl. Com. 98—100.

VILLENAGE. [L. Lat. villenagium.] In old English law. The state, condition, service or tenure of a villein; bondage.* A servile kind of tenure belonging to lands or tenements, whereby the tenant was bound to do all such services as the lord commanded, or were fit for a villein to do. Cowell. See Villein.

VILLENAGIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Villenage; the condition or tenure of a villein; bondage. Glanv. lib. 5, c. 1.

That part of a lord's lands where his villeins dwelt. Bract. fol. 6 b.

VILLENOUS JUDGMENT. [L. Lat. villanum judicium.] In old English law. A sentence which cast the reproach of villany and shame upon him against whom it was given. Cowell. This was formerly pronounced upon conspirators; and it was that they should lose their liberam legem, [frank-law,] whereby they were discredited and disabled as jurors or witnesses; forfeit their goods and chattels and lands for life; have their lands wasted, their houses razed, their trees rooted up, and their own bodies committed to prison. 4 Bl. Com. 136.

VILLEYN. L. Fr. In old English law. A villein. Si ascun villeyn purchase tenement à luy et à ses heires, de autre que de son seigniour, et autre que son seigniour luy engette, pusse le villeyn recoverer par ceste assyse encontre toutes gentz, forsque vers son seigniour; if any villein purchase a tenement to him and to his heirs, of another than of his lord, and another than his lord eject him, the villein may recover by this assise against all persons except against his lord. Britt. c. 38. Car le pleyntyfe est mon villeyn; for the plaintiff is my villein. Id. c. 49.

Vim vi repellere licet, modo fiat moderamine inculpatæ tutelæ, non ad sumendam vindictam, sed ad propulsandam injuriam. It is lawful to repel force by force, provided it be done with the moderation of blameless defence, not for the purpose of taking revenge, but to ward off injury. Co. Litt. 162 a.

VINCULACION. Span. In Spanish law. An entail. Schmidt's Civ. Law, 308.

VINCULO. Span. [from Lat. vinculum.] In Spanish law. The bond, chain or tie of marriage. White's New Recop. b. 1, tit. 6, c. 1, § 2.

VINCULUM. Lat. A chain; a connected series; a connection or relation. See Consanguinity.

A bond; a band; a tie. Vinculum matrimonii; the bond or tie of marriage; the matrimonial obligation.

The binding force of law. Obligatio est juris vinculum; obligation is a bond of law, or legal tie. Bract. fol. 99.

VINDICARE. Lat. In the civil law. To claim, or challenge; to demand one's own; to assert a right in or to a thing; to assert or claim a property in a thing; to claim a thing as one's own. Calv. Lex.

To avenge; to punish.

VINDICATIO. Lat. [from vindicare, q. v.] In the civil law. The claiming a thing as one's own; the asserting of a right or title in, or to a thing.

The name of an action in rem, by which a thing or right was claimed. Appellamus autem in rem quidem actiones, vindicationes; we call actions in rem, vindications. Inst. 4. 6. 15. Id. 4. 6. 1. See Dig. 6. 1.

VINUM. Lat. Wine. As to the interpretation of this word in the civil law, see Dig. 33. 6. 9.

VINUM ADUSTUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Brandy. Bunb. 119, case 185. Literally, burnt wine.

VIOL. Fr. In French law. Rape. Barr. Obs. Stat. 139.

VIOLENT PRESUMPTION. In the law of evidence. Proof of a fact by the proof of circumstances which necessarily attend it. 3 Bl. Com. 371. Sometimes called a necessary presumption. Violent presumption is many times equal to full proof. Id. Violenta præsumptio [aliquando est] plena probatio. Co. Litt. 6 b. As if a landlord sues for rent due at Michaelmas, 1754, and the tenant cannot prove the payment, but produces an acquittance for rent due at a subsequent time, in full of all demands, this is a violent presumption of his having paid the former rent, and is equivalent to full proof; for though the actual payment is not proved, yet the acquittance in full of all demands is proved, which could not be without such payment; and it therefore induces so forcible a presumption, that no proof shall be admitted to the contrary. 3 Bl. Com. ub. sup. See Burr. Circ. Evid. 60—67.

VIOLENT PROFITS. In Scotch law. The double of the rent of a tenement within a burgh, or the highest profits a party could make of lands in the country; recoverable against a tenant in a process of removing. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 157. Ersk. Inst. b. 2, tit. 6, § 24. So called, because the law considers the tenant's possession, after the warning, as violent. Id. ibid. See Bell's Dict.

Viperina est expositio quæ corrodit viscera textus. That is a viperous interpretation which eats out the bowels of the text. 11 Co. 34 a, Powlter's case. The force of the very strong epithet viperina is much weakened by the translation "bad exposition," given in Branch and Wharton.

VIR. Lat. A man; a husband. Vir et uxor sunt quasi unica persona, quia caro una et sanguis unus; res licet sit propria uxoris, vir tamen ejus custos, cum sit caput mulieris; husband and wife are, as it were, one person, because one flesh and one blood; though a thing may be the property of the wife, yet the husband is the keeper of it, since he is the head of the woman. Co. Litt. 112 a.

Vir et uxor censentur in lege una persona. Husband and wife are regarded in law as one person. Jenk. Cent. 27.

VIRGA. Lat. [L. Fr. verge.] In old English law. A rod or white staff, such as sheriffs, bailiffs, &c. carried as a badge or ensign of their office. Cowell.

VIRGA. L. Lat. [Sax. gird, gyrd.] In old English law. A yard. Spelman.

Virga alnaria; a yard measured according to the legal ell or true standard. Cowell. Cartular. Radinges, MS. fol. 120, cited ibid.

Virga ferrea; the iron yard; the standard yard which was of iron; a yard according to that standard. Cowell. Lib. Cart. Prior. Leominstr. cited ibid.

VIRGA TERRÆ, (or VIRGATA TERRÆ.) L. Lat. In old English law. A yard-land, (Sax. girdland;) a measure of land of variable quantity, containing in some places twenty, in others, twenty-four, in others, thirty, and in others, forty acres. Cowell. Co. Litt. 5 a. Shep. Touch. 93.

VIRGATA REGIA. L. Lat. In old English law. The royal verge; the verge; the bounds of the king's household, within which the court of the steward had jurisdiction. Crabb's Hist. 185. A space of twelve leagues in circuit around the king's palace or residence. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 2; c. 4, § 2.

VIRGATOR. L. Lat. In old English law. A verger. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 38.

VIRIDARIUS. L. Lat. In old English law. A verderor, (q. v.) Reg. Orig. 177 b.

VIRIDIS, Viride. Lat. In old English law. Vert, (q. v.) Cowell, voc. Vert.

VIRIDIS CERA. L. Lat. In old English law. Green wax, (q. v.)

VIRIPOTENS. Lat. [from vir, a man, and potens, capable.] In the civil law. Marriageable; viripotent, (quæ virum pati potest.) Dig. 36. 2. 30. Calv. Lex.

VIRO, Virro. L. Lat. In old European law. An old form of baro, (q. v.) and of the same signification. Answering to the Saxon thane. Spelman calls it a Norman word.

VIRTUS. Lat. In old English practice. The substance or tenor. Tunc legat prothonotarius virtutem brevis; then the prothonotary shall read the substance of the writ. Bract. fol. 185 b. Virtus actionis; the substance of the action. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 11.

VIRTUTE CUJUS. Lat. By virtue whereof. 1 Ld. Raym. 412. 3 Salk. 352.

VIRTUTE OFFICII. L. Lat. By virtue of office. 15 Johns. R. 269, 270. Distinguished from colore officii, (q. v.)

VIS. Lat. In the civil and old English law. Force; the onset or pressure of a greater thing, which cannot be repelled, (majoris rei impetus, qui repelli non potest.) Paulus, Sent. lib. 1, tit. 7. Dig. 4. 2. 2. Calv. Lex. Prateus. This definition of the civil law is slightly modified by Bracton, who is followed by Fleta; majoris rei impetus cui resisti non potest. Bract. fol. 162. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 4, § 1.

Violence; unlawful violence. Co. Litt. 161 b. Whatever is done without any authority of law, against the free will of any one (quicquid nullo jure fit, contra liberam alicujus voluntatem.) Calv. Lex. The opposite of law or right. Id.

The act of seeking one's remedy without authority or process of law. Vis est quoties quis quod sibi deberi putat, non per judicem reposcit. Bract. fol. 162 b. This is copied from Dig. 4. 2. 13.

Efficacy; virtue; power to produce an effect. Scire leges, non est verba earum tenere, sed vim et potestatem. To know the laws is not to observe their mere words, but their force and power. Dig. 1. 3. 17. Vis and potestas, however, were distinguished by the civilians; the former being considered the stronger term. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 13, § 203, note.

VIS ET METUS. Lat. In Scotch law. Force and fear. Bell's Dict.

VIS ABLATIVA. Lat. In the civil law. Ablative force; force which is exerted in taking away (auferendo) a thing from another. Calv. Lex. Bracton adopts this term, but seems to confine it to force used in removing a moveable thing from an immoveable one, and makes it convertible with vis perturbativa, (q. v.) Bract. fol. 162.

VIS ARMATA. In civil and old English law. Armed force; force exerted by means of arms, weapons or any thing that can hurt or injure. Est vis armata, non solum si quis venerit cum telis, verum etiam omnes illos dicimus armatos, qui haberent quo nocere possunt; that is armed force, not only where one comes with weapons, but we call all those armed who have any thing with which they can hurt. Bract. fol. 162. Telorum autem appellatione omnia in quibus singuli homines nocere possunt, accipiuntur; sed si quis venerit sine armis, et in ipsa concertatione ligna sumpserit, fustes et lapides, talis dicetur vis armata; under the denomination of weapons are understood all things with which men may hurt each other; but if one comes without arms, and in the heat of strife takes up stakes, clubs and stones, this will be called armed force. Id. fol. 162 b. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 4, § 4. Co. Litt. 162 a. Dig. 43. 16. 3. 2, 3, 4, 5.

VIS CLANDESTINA. Lat. In old English law. Clandestine force; such as is used by night. Alia vis clandestina, et de nocte. Bract. fol. 162.

VIS COMPULSIVA. In civil and old English law. Compulsive force; that which is exerted to compel another to do an act against his will; force exerted by menaces or terror. Est vis compulsiva quæ aliquando metum inducit, ubi scilicet quis alium in carcere et in vinculis detinuerit, vel evaginato gladio, compulerit ad aliquid dandum vel faciendum contra ipsius voluntatem; compulsive force is that which sometimes induces fear, as, for instance, where one detains another in prison and in chains, or, drawing a sword, compels him to give or do something against his will. Bract. fol. 162.

VIS DIVINA. Lat. [Gr. θεοῦ βία.] In the civil law. Divine or superhuman force; the act of God. Vinnius ad Inst. lib. 3, tit. 15, § 2, n. 5. Dig. 19. 2. 25. 6.

VIS EXPULSIVA. Lat. In old English law. Expulsive force; force used to expel another, or put him out of his possession. Bracton contrasts it with vis simplex, and divides it into expulsive force with arms, and expulsive force without arms. Bract. fol. 162. Expulsiva [vis] locum habet in rebus corporalibus et immobilibus, sicut in terris et tenementis. Item locum habet in rebus incorporalibus, sicut in iis quæ in jure consistunt, sed non ita omnino, sed in parte et alio modo; expulsive force has place in [takes place, or may be exercised upon] corporeal and immoveable things, as in lands and tenements. It also has place in incorporeal things, as in those things which consist in right, though not altogether, but partly, and with modification. Id. ibid.

VIS EXTURBATIVA. Lat. In the civil law. Exturbative force; force used to thrust out (exturbare) another. Force used between two contending claimants of possession, the one endeavoring to thrust out the other. Calv. Lex.

VIS FLUMINIS. Lat. In the civil law. The force of a river or stream; the force exerted by the rapidity or magnitude of a current of water. Quod si vis fluminis de tuo prædio attulerit, palam est, eam tuam permanere; but if the force of a stream should sweep away a part of your land, and carry it to your neighbor's land, it is clear that it would still continue yours. Inst. 2. 1. 21. More fully expressed in the Digests: Quod si vis fluminis partem aliquam ex tuo prædio detraxerit, et meo prædio attulerit, palam est eam tuam permanere. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 2. This is copied, with some variation, in Fleta. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 6.

VIS IMPRESSA. Lat. Impressed force. The original act of force out of which an injury arises, as distinguished from vis proxima, the proximate force, or immediate cause of the injury. 2 Greenl. Evid. § 224. "There, the original motion, the vis impressa, is continued, though diverted." Blackstone, J. 2 W. Bl. 895.

VIS INERMIS. Lat. In old English law. Unarmed force; the opposite of vis armata, (q. v.) Bract. fol. 162.

VIS INJURIOSA. Lat. In old English law. Wrongful force; otherwise called illicita, (unlawful.) Bract. fol. 162.

VIS INQUIETATIVA. Lat. In the civil law. Disquieting force. Calv. Lex. Bracton defines it to be where one does not permit another to use his possession quietly and in peace, (ubi quis non permittit alium uti possessione, quiete et in pace.) Bract. fol. 162.

VIS LAICA. L. Lat. In old English law. Lay force; an armed force used to hold possession of a church. Reg. Orig. 59, 60. See De vi laica amovenda.

VIS LICITA. Lat. In old English law. Lawful force. Bract. fol. 162.

VIS MAJOR. Lat. In the law of bailment. Irresistible force, (cui resisti non potest;) such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable; as the inroads of a hostile army, or public enemies, piracy and robbery by force. Story on Bailm. §§ 25, 26, 246, 249. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 16.

In the civil law, this term is sometimes used as synonymous with vis divina, or the act of God. Calv. Lex. See Dig. 19. 2. 25. 6.

VIS PERTURBATIVA. Lat. In old English law. Perturbative force. Force used between parties contending for a possession. Or, as Bracton explains it, where one contends that he possesses the thing, though he has not the right, and the other asserts that he is in possession, since he has the right, (ubi quis contendit se possidere cûm jus non habeat, et alius dicat se esse in possessione, cûm jus habeat.) Bract. fol. 162.

VIS PROXIMA. Lat. Immediate force. See Vis impressa.

VIS SIMPLEX. L. Lat. In old English law. Simple or mere force. Distinguished by Bracton from vis armata, and also from vis expulsiva. Bract. fol. 162.

VISCONTE, Viscont, Viscounte. L. Fr. In old English law. Sheriff. Britt. c. 2. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 17. Fet Assaver, §§ 52, 59. A touz les viscountes des counteez ; to all the sheriffs of the counties. Conf. Cartar. 25 Edw. I.

VISCOUNT, Vicount. [L. Fr. viscounte, visconte, viscont, viconte, vicont, from Lat. vice-comes, q. v.] In old English law. Sheriff. Cowell. Reg. Orig. 302 b. But the L. Fr. words just given were more commonly used in this sense. In the Royal Court of Jersey, however, the sheriff is still called viscount. 7 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 984.

In modern English law. A degree of nobility next to an earl. Cowell. 1 Bl. Com. 398. Strictly, a vice-earl. The Lat. comes and vice-comes, show more clearly than the English, the connection of these titles. Viscount, according to Camden, is an old name of office, but a new one of dignity, never heard of in England till the reign of Henry VI. who in his eighteenth year, in parliament, created John Lord Beaumont, Viscount Beaumont. Camd. Brit. 170. Cowell. Co. Litt. 69 b. 9 Co. 125 a.

VISINETUS. L. Lat. In old English law. Venue. Tunc summoneas, &c. de visinetu suburbii London quod sint coram, &c.; then summon, &c. of the visne of the suburb of London, that they be before, &c. Reg. Orig. 33.

VISITATION. Inspection; superintendence; direction; regulation. A power given by law to the founders of all eleemosynary corporations. 2 Kent's Com. 300—303. 1 Bl. Com. 480, 481. In England, the visitation of ecclesiastical corporations belongs to the ordinary. Id. ibid.

VISITATION, in the law of nations, is distinguished from search, though the terms are constantly used in connection with each other. The right of visitation is sometimes called the right of visit. The British government disclaim the right of search in time of peace, but they claim at all times the right of visit, in order to know whether a vessel, pretending, for instance, to be American, and hoisting the American flag, be really what she seems to be. 1 Kent's Com. 153, note. The inter-visitation of ships at sea is a branch of the law of self-defence, and is, in point of fact, practised by the public vessels of all nations, including those of the United States, when the piratical character of a vessel is suspected. The right of visit is conceded for the sole purpose of ascertaining the real national character of a vessel sailing under suspicious circumstances, and is wholly distinct from the right of search. It has been termed by the Supreme Court of the United States, the right of approach for that purpose. Id. ibid. See Search, Right of.

VISITATION BOOKS. In English law. A series of books belonging to the College of Arms, or Herald's College, containing the pedigrees and arms of the nobility and principal gentry in England, made out by the heads of the respective families, or some person on their behalf, and delivered to the heralds, who, by virtue of commissions from the crown, were authorized to require them to be made out, proved and delivered. Hubback's Evid. of Succession, 538, 541. By the terms of their commissions, the heralds were authorized to make circuits through the different counties within their respective provinces, and "to peruse and take knowledge, survey and view of all manner of arms, cognizances, crests and other like devices, with the notes of the descents, pedigrees and marriages of all the nobility and gentry therein," &c. Id. 541. The books or records compiled from the materials obtained during these visitations or progresses, were hence called visitation books, and they are frequently admitted as evidence in the courts. Id. ibid. 1 Bl. Com. 105.

VISNE. L. Fr. [L. Lat. visnetum, q. v.] In old English law. Venue; vicinity; vicinage; neighborhood; a neighboring place. Deux fraunks homes terre tenauntz del visne; two freemen, terre-tenants of the neighborhood. Britt. c. 45. Loialx gents de la visne ou tiel fact si fist; lawful men from the vicinity where the act was done. Rot. Parl. 4 Hen. IV. See Venue.

A neighbor. Qui ilz voisent somoundre lez visnes de estre à certien jour; that they go to summon the neighbors to be at a certain day. Britt. c. 45.

Visne is often used as an English word in the old books. "A jury out of the visne." 1 Leon. 301. "The visne shall come from both places." Id. ibid. "The visne may better know the truth." Id. ibid. And see 3 Id. 172.

VISNETUM. L. Lat. In old English law and practice. Neighborhood; vicinity; vicinage; venue or visne. Præcipimus tibi quod venire facias coram te, et coram custodibus placitorum coronæ nostræ in pleno comitatu tuo, xii tam liberos quam legales homines de visneto tali, per quos rei veritas melius sciri poterit; we command you, that you cause to come before you, and before the keepers of the pleas of our crown, in your full county court, twelve free and lawful men of such a neighborhood [or venue] by whom the truth of the matter may be better known. Bract. fol. 309 b. See Id. fol. 397. Per testimonium visneti sui deliberatus est; is delivered or acquitted by the testimony of his neighborhood. Id. fol. 154. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 5, § 4.

VISORES. L. Lat. [L. Fr. vejours.] In old English practice. Viewers; persons appointed to view one who had cast an essoin de malo lecti, or, in other words, had excused himself from appearing in court on the ground of infirmity or sickness. Bract. fol. 354, 361.

Jurors in certain actions. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 6, § 1.

VISUS. Lat. [from videre, to see.] In old English practice. View; inspection, either of a place or person. See View.

Examination or inspection by jurors of the subject of an action. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 6, § 1, et seq. Id. lib. 6, c. 21.

View or inspection of a person who had cast an essoin de malo lecti, made by four knights called viewers, (visores;) its object being to ascertain by personal inspection whether the sickness or infirmity was real, and what was its character. Bracton treats at length of the practice under this head. Bract. fol. 352—362.

VISUS FRANCI PLEGII. L. Lat. In old English law. View of frank-pledge. Otherwise termed visus de franco plegio. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. c. 35. Bract. fol. 155. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 2.

VISUS TERRÆ. L. Lat. In old English practice. View of land. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 48.

VITA. Lat. In old English law. Life. Ad vitam vel in feodo; for life or in fee. Bract. fol. 13 b. Ad terminum vitæ vel annorum; for a term of life or for years. Id. ibid.

VITAILLE. L. Fr. In old English law. Victual; provision; food. De blee, ou de autre vitaille, ou des autres necessaries; of grain, or of other victual, or of other necessaries. Britt. c. 45.

VITIOUS INTROMISSION. In Scotch law. An unwarrantable intermeddling with the moveable estate of a person deceased, without the order of law. Ersk. Pr. b. 3, tit. 9, § 25.—The irregular intermeddling with the effects of a deceased person, which subjects the party to the whole debts of the deceased. 2 Kames' Equity, 327.

VITIUM. Lat. In the civil law. Fault; defect; imperfection; blemish; bodily defect; vice. Dig. 21. 1. Id. 50. 16. 101. 2. Distinguished from morbus, (disease.) Id. ibid. See Vice.

In old English law. Fault; mistake; error. See Vitium clerici, Vitium scriptoris.

VITIUM CLERICI. L. Lat. In old English law. The mistake of a clerk; a clerical error. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. 4 M. & S. 100. Vitium clerici nocere non debet. A clerical error ought not to prejudice. Jenk. Cent. 23.

VITIUM SCRIPTORIS. L. Lat. In old English law. The fault or mistake of a writer, or copyist; a clerical error. Gilb. For. Rom. 185. Comb. 4.

VITRICUS. Lat. In the civil law. A step-father; a mother's second husband. Dig. 38. 10. 4. 6. Calv. Lex. Cooper's Just. Inst. Notes, *429.

VIVA AQUA. In the civil law. Living water; running water; that which issues from a spring or fountain, (quæ fonte exit.) Calv. Lex.

VIVA PECUNIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Live cattle. See Pecunia.

VIVA VOX. Lat. The living voice; oral utterance, as distinguished from written words. Hence the common phrase, vivâ voce, by word of mouth.

In old English law. A living witness, as distinguished from a writing offered in evidence. Et quod ita sit, producat sectam sufficientem, vivam vocem, vel aliquem qui paratus sit hoc disrationare; and [to prove] that it is so, he should produce a sufficient suit, a living witness, or any one who may be prepared to establish this. Bract. fol. 382. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 23, § 15. See Vive voys.

VIVARIUM. Lat. [from vivus, alive; Græco-barb. βιβρέον.] In the civil law. An enclosed place, where live wild animals are kept. Calv. Lex. Spelman. A. Gell. Noct. Att. ii. 20.

In old English law. A place in land or water where living things are kept; a vivary. Most commonly in law it signifies a park, warren or fishery. In the statute of Merton, (c. 11,) it is taken for a warren and fishery. 2 Inst. 100. See Vivary, Viver. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 2.

VIVARY. [Lat. vivarium; L. Fr. viver, qq. v.] In English law. A place for keeping wild animals alive, including fishes; a fish-pond, or fishery. See Viver.

VIVER. L. Fr. [from Lat. vivarium, q. v.] In old English law. A fish-pond; a fishery or fishing place. De pescher en autry viver; to fish in another's pond. Britt. c. 71. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 1, 20. Les fosses, et les vivers, et les hayes; the ditches, and the ponds, and the hedges. Britt. ub. sup.

Meat; food or victual, (Lat. victus.) A trover estovers en viver, ou en vesture; to find estovers in meat or in clothing. Stat. Glocest. c. 4.

VIVERE. Lat. To live. As to the interpretation of this word in the civil law, see Dig. 50. 16. 234. 2.

VIVEVOYS, Vive voys. L. Fr. [from Lat. viva vox, q. v.] In old English law. A living witness; the testimony of a witness; oral or parol testimony. Et si la chartre soit de puyr feffement sauns condicion, et le done soit graunte ou prove, adonques n'est mester à crere nule vivevoys à parler de condicion, pur la presumpcion de la chartre que ne tesmoyne nule condicion; and if the charter be of pure feoffment without condition, and the gift be granted or proved, then there is no necessity to listen to the testimony of any living witness to speak of a condition, in consequence of the presumption of the charter, which testifies to no condition. Britt. c. 51. Elsewhere written as two words; vive voys. Id. c. 85.

VIVUM VADIUM. L. Lat. [L. Fr. vif gage.] In old English law. A living pledge; that kind of a pledge in which the rents and profits of the thing pledged went towards the discharge of the debt. See Mortgage. Vivum vadium, or living pledge, is when a man borrows a sum (suppose 200*l.*) of another, and grants him an estate, as of 20*l.* per annum, to hold till the rents and profits shall repay the sum so borrowed. This is an estate conditioned to be void, as soon as such sum is raised. And in this case the land or pledge is said to be living; it subsists, and survives the debt; and immediately on the discharge of that, results back to the borrower. 2 Bl. Com. 157. In a pledge of this kind, the creditor took actual possession of the estate and received the rents, and applied them, from time to time, in liquidation of the debt. When it was satisfied, the debtor might re-enter, and maintain ejectment. Coote on Mortg. 8, 9.

VIX. Lat. Scarcely; hardly; rarely. Vix ulla lex fieri potest quæ omnibus commoda sit, sed si majori parti prospiciat, utilis est. Scarcely any law can be made which is adapted to all, but if it provide for the greater part, it is useful. Plowd. 369.

VOCABULA ARTIS. Lat. Words of art; "vocables" of art; technical terms. Co. Litt. pref. 5 Co. 121 b, Long's case.

Vocabula artium explicanda sunt secundum definitiones prudentum. Terms of arts are to be explained according to the definitions of the learned or skilled [in such arts.] Puffend. de Offic. Hom. lib. 1, c. 17, § 3. Bl. L. Tr. 6. See Grotius de Jur. Bell. lib. 2, c. 16, § 3.

VOCABULUM. Lat. A name. Vocabula rerum; the names of things. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 11.

VOCANS. Lat. [from vocare, to vouch.] In old practice. One who vouches another; a voucher. Bract. fol. 380.

VOCARE. Lat. To call; to call upon.

In old English practice. To vouch; to call upon one to warrant another's title (vocare ad warrantum) or defend it. Si ita vocaverit, voco talem, filium et hæredem talis, valet talis vocatio; if he vouch thus, "I vouch such a one, son and heir of such a one," such a voucher is good. Bract. fol. 382 b. A. vocat B. ad warantum versus C.; A. vouches B. to warranty against C. Id. fol. 381 b.

VOCARE AD CURIAM. L. Lat. In feudal law. To summon to court. Feud. Lib. 2, tit. 22.

VOCARE IN JUS. Lat. In the Roman law. To summon to court; to cite or summon before the prætor or magistrate. Calv. Lex. Adam's Rom. Ant. 242.

VOCAT'. L. Lat. In old pleading. Called. An abbreviation of vocatus, vocata, vocati, &c. used apparently to avoid the necessity of varying the termination, in order to adapt it grammatically to the words with which it was connected. This word was constantly used in the old Latin pleadings, as immediately introductory to the English name of a thing, where no equivalent Latin word could be found, or where it was not deemed safe to frame one. Thus, "instrumentum, vocat' a plate for a jack;" an instrument called a plate for a jack. Towns. Pl. 102. Sometimes the word Anglicè, (in English,) was used for the same purpose, and occasionally both together. See Law Latin.

VOCATIO. L. Lat. [from vocare, to vouch.] In old practice. Voucher; a calling to warrant. Bract. fol. 382 b. See Vocare.

VOCATUS. L. Lat. [from vocare, to vouch.] In old practice. One who was called or vouched; a vouchee. Bract. fol. 381, 382.

In old European law. An advocate; a patron. Chart. Alam. 32. Spelman.

VOCHE. L. Fr. [from vocher, q. v.] In old practice. A vouchee. Le voche n'est mye trove; the vouchee is not found. Britt. c. 15.

VOCHEOUR. L. Fr. [from vocher, q. v.] In old practice. A voucher; one who vouches or calls another to warrant. Si ad le vocheour fait defaut; if the voucher have made default. Britt. c. 75.

VOCHER. L. Fr. [from Lat. vocare, q. v.] In old practice. To vouch; to call to warrant. Britt. c. 75.

A vouching, or voucher. En tiel cas, cherrount les tenauntz en lour vocher; in such case, the tenants shall fail in their voucher. Id. ibid.

A voucher; a person vouching. Et issi de vocher en vocher; and so from voucher to voucher. Id. ibid.

VOCHERESSE. L. Fr. A female voucher; a woman who vouched. A defendre la vocheresse v's le pleyntyfe; to defend the voucheresse against the plaintiff. Britt. c. 108.

VOCIFERATIO. Lat. In old English law. Outcry; hue and cry. LL. Hen. I. c. 12. Cowell.

VOCO. Lat. In civil and old English law. I call; I summon; I vouch. In jus voco te; I summon you to court; I summon you before the prætor. The formula by which a Roman action was anciently commenced. Adam's Rom. Ant. 242.

Voco talem; I call or vouch such a one. The old formula of vouching to warranty. Bract. fol. 382 b. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 23, § 20.

VODEGELDUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Woodgeld, (q. v.) Spelman.

VOER. L. Fr. In old English law. To view; to see or inspect. Et puis vist le coroner, et les jurors ove luy, voer le cors, et les playes; and afterwards let the coroner go, and the jurors with him, to view the body and the wounds. Britt. c. 1. Que le tenaunt voet sauns jour; that the tenant go without day. Id. c. 76.

VOEVE, Voef. L. Fr. Widow. Kelham.

VOID. [L. Fr. voyde.] Of no force, or effect; absolutely null; that cannot be confirmed, or made effectual. A thing may be void in several degrees; it may be void as to some persons or purposes, and valid as to others. Spencer, C. J. 18 Johns. R. 527, 528, citing Bac. Abr. Vin. Abr. h. t.

VOIDABLE. That may be avoided, or declared void; not absolutely void, or void in itself; that may be avoided or confirmed. Most of the acts of infants are voidable only, and not absolutely void. 2 Kent's Com. 234.

"The term 'void,' as applicable to conveyances, or other agreements, has not at all times been used with technical precision, nor restricted to its peculiar and limited sense, as contradistinguished from 'voidable;' it being frequently introduced, even by legal writers and jurists, when the purpose is nothing further than to indicate that a contract was invalid, and not binding in law. But the distinction between the terms 'void' and 'voidable,' in their application to contracts, is often one of great practical importance; and whenever entire technical accuracy is required, the term 'void' can only be properly applied to those contracts that are of no effect whatsoever; such as are a mere nullity, and incapable of confirmation or ratification." Dewey, J. 6 Metcalf's R. 417.

VOIDANCE. [Lat. vacatio.] In ecclesiastical law. A want of an incumbent upon a benefice. Cowell.

VOIER, Veier. L. Fr. [from Lat. videre.] In old English law. To see. Est à voier; it is to be seen. Kelham.

VOILER, Voiller. L. Fr. In old English law. To will; to be willing. L. Fr. Dict.

VOILER (or VOLEIR.) L. Fr. In old practice. To mean; to purport or set forth. A term applied to written instruments, writs, &c. Yearb. M. 4 Edw. III. 45. M. 5 Edw. III. 26.

VOILOIR, Voillour. L. Fr. In old English law. A will; a testament. Kelham.

VOIR, Voire, Voier, Voyer, Voiar. L. Fr. [from Lat. verum, true.] In old English law. Truth; the truth. Kelham.

VOIRE DIRE. L. Fr. (To say the truth.) In practice. A preliminary oath administered to a witness, for the purpose of ascertaining whether he has such an interest in the cause in which he is offered to testify, as would disqualify him; he being sworn to say the truth touching matters in which he is thought or suspected to be an interested witness. Cowell. The old expression à dire le verité, conveyed the same idea. Yearb. H. 3 Hen. VI. 3. A witness may now, it seems, be examined on his voire dire at any time during the trial. Holthouse.

An oath of this kind is sometimes administered to infants, for the purpose of ascertaining their age. 3 Bl. Com. 332.

VOLENS. Lat. [from velle, to will or be willing.] Willing. He is said to be willing, who either expressly consents, or tacitly makes no opposition. Calv. Lex.

Volenti non fit injuria. An injury is not done to the willing. He who consents to a thing, or makes no opposition to it, cannot complain of it as an injury. This maxim occurs in the law of England in this form, as early as the time of Bracton. Bract. fol. 18. In the civil law, from which it is substantially derived, it is otherwise more clearly expressed, Nulla injuria est quæ in volentem fiat. That is no injury which is done to a willing party. Dig. 47. 10. 1. 5. It has been extensively adopted in the common law of England and the United States. Yearb. M. 4 Edw. III. 18. Plowd. 501. 1 Salk. 22, pl. 2. Wingate's Max. 482, max. 122. Broom's Max. 127, [201.] It is a general rule of the English law, that no one can maintain an action for a wrong, where he has consented or contributed to the act which occasions his loss. Tindal, C. J. 2 Scott, N. R. 257. It is held inapplicable in equity to the case of a usurious loan. "It would be absurd," it is said, "to apply this maxim to the case of a man who, from mere necessity, pays more [interest] than the other can in justice demand, and who has been significantly called the slave of the lender. He can in no just sense be said to pay voluntarily." 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 302. It is also held inapplicable to cases of agreements to break the peace. 3 Jones' (N. C.) Law R. 131.

VOLENTES. Lat. (We being willing.) In old practice. The initial word of the Latin writs of certiorari. Volentes de certis causis certiorari; we being willing for certain causes to be certified. Reg. Orig. 169 b. F. N. B. 247 E.

VOLO. Lat. I will; I wish or desire. One of the appropriate words used in Roman testaments to create a trust. Inst. 2. 24. 3. Bracton uses it as a term of conveyance. Bract. fol. 18 b.

Voluit, sed non dixit. He willed, but he did not say. He may have intended so, but he did not say so. A maxim frequently used in the construction of wills, in answer to arguments based upon the supposed intention of a testator. 2 Powell on Devises, (by Jarman,) 625. 4 Kent's Com. 538. It is applied also in the construction of statutes. The English judges have frequently observed, in answer to the remark that the legislature meant so and so, that they, in that case, have not so expressed themselves, and therefore the maxim applied, Quod voluit non dixit. 1 Id. 468, note. As to the peculiar meaning of velle and dicere in the civil law, see Dig. 34. 5. 3.

VOLUMEN. Lat. [from volvere, to roll.] In the civil law. A volume; so called from its form, being rolled up. As to the distinction between a volume and a book (liber,) see Dig. 32. 52. 1.

VOLUMUS. Lat. (We will.) In old English practice. The first word of a clause inserted in writs of protection, expressing the king's pleasure that the party should be quit of certain pleas and plaints for a certain period. Volumus etiam quod idem W. interim sit quietus de omnibus placitis et querelis, exceptis, &c. Reg. Orig. 22 b.

VOLUNT. L. Fr. [from Lat. voluntas, q. v.] In old English law. Will. Per sa volunt; by his will. T. Jon. 107. Fist son volunt; made his will. 1 And. 3. Bendl. pl. 3.

VOLUNTARIUS DÆMON. L. Lat. A voluntary madman. A term applied by Lord Coke to a drunkard, who has voluntarily contracted madness by intoxication. Co. Litt. 247. 4 Bl. Com. 25.

VOLUNTARY. [Lat. voluntarius, from voluntas, will.] Free; without compulsion or solicitation; in accordance with the will, intent, consent or agreement of a party.

Without consideration; without valuable consideration; gratuitous. 1 Kames' Equity, pref. See infra.

VOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT. An assignment made by a debtor in trust for the benefit of his creditors. So called in contradistinction from compulsory assignments, or such as are made under statutes of bankruptcy and insolvency, or by order of some competent court. See Burrill on Assignments, chap. 1, pp. 4, 5. And see 10 Paige's R. 445. 1 Comstock's R. 201. 3 Sumner's R. 345.

VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE. A conveyance without valuable consideration, such as a deed or settlement in favor of a wife or children. The term is usually applied to conveyances made by parties who are indebted at the time of making them. See 2 Kent's Com. 440—443, and notes.

VOLUNTARY DEPOSIT. In the civil law of bailment. A deposit arising from the mere consent and agreement of parties, as distinguished from a necessary deposit, which was made upon some sudden emergency, or from some pressing necessity. Dig. 16. 3. 2. Story on Bailm. § 44.

VOLUNTARY ESCAPE. In practice. An escape of a person from custody, by the express consent of his keeper. 3 Bl. Com. 415. An escape in consequence of the sheriff, or his officer, permitting a party to go at large. 1 Arch. Pr. See Escape.

VOLUNTARY JURISDICTION. In English law. A jurisdiction exercised by certain ecclesiastical courts, in matters where there is no opposition. 3 Bl. Com. 66. The opposite of contentious jurisdiction, (q. v.) Id. ibid.

VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER. In criminal law. Manslaughter committed voluntarily upon a sudden heat of the passions; as if, upon a sudden quarrel, two persons fight, and one of them kills the other. 4 Bl. Com. 190, 191.

VOLUNTARY OATH. In practice. An oath taken in some extra-judicial matter, or before some magistrate or officer who cannot compel it to be taken.* 4 Bl. Com. 137.

VOLUNTARY WASTE. Waste done by acts of commission; as by pulling down a house.* 2 Bl. Com. 281. It is distinguished from permissive waste, which is matter of omission only. Id. ibid.

VOLUNTAS. Lat. [from volo, velle, to will.] In civil and old English law. Will; intent; design; purpose. Voluntas et propositum distinguunt maleficia. Will and purpose characterize crimes. Bract. fol. 2 b, 136 b. Crimen non contrahitur, nisi voluntas nocendi intercedat, [interveniat.] Crime is not contracted, unless the intention of doing harm be present. Id. ibid. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 4. Tolle voluntatem, et erit omnis actus indifferens. Take away will, and every act will become indifferent. Bract. fol. 2 b. Voluntas in delictis, non exitus, spectatur. The will, not the issue, is looked to in crimes. 2 Inst. 57. Voluntas reputatur [reputabitur] pro facto. The will is [shall be] taken for the deed. A maxim in the English law of treason. 3 Inst. 5, 69. Broom's Max. 145, 146, [228.]

Will; intention; desire. Voluntas donatoris, in charta doni sui manifeste expressa, observetur. The will or intention of a donor, clearly expressed in the deed of his gift, should be observed. Co. Litt. 21. Voluntas testatoris est ambulatoria usque ad mortem, [ad extremum vitæ exitum.] The will of a testator is ambulatory until death. 2 Bl. Com. 502. 4 Co. 61 b. Lord Loughborough observed that this was the most general maxim he knew of. 4 Vesey, Jr. 210. It seems to have been taken from that of the civil law: Ambulatoria est voluntas defuncti usque ad vitæ supremum exitum. Dig. 34. 4. 4.

A will; a last will. Voluntas testatoris habet interpretationem latam et benignam. The will of a testator has [should have] a broad and benignant interpretation. Jenk. Cent. 260. See Dig. 50. 17. 12. Voluntas ultima testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention. Co. Litt. 322.

Will; pleasure. Ad voluntatem; at will. Bract. fol. 27.

VOLUNTE, Volunt, Volounte. L. Fr. [from Lat. voluntas, q. v.] Will; mind; intention. Britt. c. 43, 77.

VOLUNTEER. A grantee in a voluntary conveyance; one to whom a conveyance is made without valuable consideration. A party, other than a wife or child, to whom, or for whose benefit, a voluntary conveyance is made. See 1 White's Equity Cases, 167—193.

VOMENTUM. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. A cannon. Cum vomentis curriculatis; with pieces of ordnance mounted on wheeled carriages. 1 Pitc. Cr. Trials, part 1, p. 6.

VOUCH. [from L. Fr. vocher, voucher, from Lat. vocare, q. v.] In old practice. To call; to call to warranty; to call upon a person who has warranted a title (termed warrantus, or warantus, in the old books,) to defend the title which he so warranted.* 2 Bl. Com. 358.

To cite, or quote. "Vouched a precedent of a case." Yelv. 96. "The book that hath been vouched." 1 Leon. 79.

VOUCHEE. [L. Fr. voche; L. Lat. vocatus.] In old practice. One who is vouched or called to warranty. 2 Bl. Com. 358. 3 Id. 300.

VOUCHER. [L. Fr. vocher; L. Lat. vocatio.] In old practice. A calling to warranty; a calling upon one who has warranted a title, to defend it in an action.* The calling in of some person to answer an action, that has warranted the title to the tenant or the defendant. 3 Bl. Com. 300. See Roscoe's Real Act. 257—274.

The party who vouched, (vocans;) the tenant in a real action, who called upon another to defend his title. Cowell.

VOUCHER. In old English law. An account book wherein are entered the acquittances or warrants for the accountant's discharge. Stat. 19 Car. II. c. 1. Cowell.

Any acquittance or receipt, discharging a person, or being evidence of payment. Jacob. Shaw, C. J. 1 Metcalf's R. 218.

VOUS AVES (or AVEZ.) L. Fr. You have. Vous aves cy; you have here. The old form of commencing a pleading when delivered ore tenus. Vous aves cy John qui dit que, &c.; you have here John who says that, &c. Yearb. H. 9 Edw. III. 6. Vous aves icy Richard que avowa cest prise; you have here Richard who avows this taking. P. 8 Edw. III. 19. M. 19 Hen. VI. 1.

The same form of expression was used on other occasions, "Vous avez Sir William Roberts." The answer of the crier to the clerk of the crown, when a juror was called in court. 7 How. St. Trials, 161.

VOUS VEIES, (VOIES, or VEITZ) BIEN COMENT. L. Fr. You see well how. Formal words anciently used by counsel in addressing the court. Yearb. T. 1 Edw. III. 9. H. 2 Edw. III. 9. P. 8 Edw. III. 23. M. 4 Hen. VI. 1.

VOX. L. Lat. In old practice. Speech; saying; statement. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 1; c. 63, § 9. Vox emissa volat; litera scripta manet. The spoken word flies; the written letter remains. Broom's Max. [517.]

VOX SIGNATA. L. Lat. In Scotch practice. An emphatic or essential word. 2 Alis. Crim. Pr. 280.

VOYAGE. [L. Fr. viage; L. Lat. viaggium, iter navis.] In maritime law. The passage of a vessel upon the seas, either from one port to another, or to several ports.

VOYAGE INSURED. [Fr. voyage assuré; L. Lat. viaggium.] In insurance law. A transit at sea from the terminus à quo, to the terminus ad quem, in a prescribed course of navigation, (iter viagii,) which is never set out in any policy, but virtually forms parts of all policies, and is as binding on the parties thereto, as though it were minutely detailed. 1 Arnould on Ins. 333, (339, Perkins' ed.) This is a technical term, to be carefully distinguished from the actual voyage of the ship, (iter navis.) Id. See Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 13, sect. 4, § 1. Casaregis, disc. 67, n. 31.

VOYAGE OF THE SHIP. [Lat. iter navis.] In insurance law. The course of navigation on and in which a vessel actually sails. 1 Arnould on Ins. 333, (340, Perkins' ed.) See Voyage insured.

VOYER. L. Fr. In old English law. To go; to issue. A que le brefe voyse de la court; to whom the writ goes [issues] from the court. Britt. c. 120.

VOYS. L. Fr. [from Lat. vox, voice.] In old English law. Voice; word; speech; saying; assertion. Encontre sa soule voys; against his single assertion. Britt. c. 29.

Soule voys, (simplex dictum, simplex loquela, qq. v.) Id. c. 93.

VS. In practice. A very common contraction of versus, (against,) used in entitling papers on the part of a plaintiff; "A. B. vs. C. D." Sometimes still further abbreviated to v. It seems to have been immediately derived from the L. Fr. vers, and occurs as early as the time of Britton, in the entries of essoins on the record. Joha' v's Peres, d'play d' t'r, p'tel, (Johan v's Peres, de play de terre, par tiel ;) John vs. Peter, of a plea of land, by such a one. Johan v's Peres, T. et S. de tel plee, par tel ; John vs. Peter, T. and S. of such a plea, by such a one. Britt. c. 123. And see the Year Books, passim.

VULGARIS OPINIO. Lat. Common opinion. Vulgaris opinio est duplex, sc. opinio vulgaris orta inter graves et discretos, et quæ vultum veritatis habet, et opinio tantum orta inter leves et vulgares homines, absque specie veritatis ; common opinion is two-fold, viz. common opinion which originates among grave and discreet men, and which has a countenance of truth, and an opinion which originates only among light and vulgar men, without a show of truth. 4 Co. 107 b. Adams' & Lambert's case.

VULGARIS PURGATIO. L. Lat. In old English law. Common purgation; a name given to the trial by ordeal, to distinguish it from the canonical purgation, which was by the oath of the party. 4 Bl. Com. 342.

VULGO CONCEPTI. Lat. In the civil law. Spurious children; bastards; those who cannot point out their father, or if they can, have him for a father whom it is not lawful to have; (qui patrem demonstrare non possunt, vel qui possunt quidem, sed eum habent quem habere non licet.) Dig. 1. 5. 23.

VULGO QUÆSITI. Lat. In the civil law. Spurious children; literally, gotten from the people; the offspring of promiscuous cohabitation, who are considered as having no father. Inst. 3. 4. 3. Id. 3. 5. 4.

VYCINE. L. Fr. [Lat. vicinus.] A neighbor. Dyer, 36 b, (Fr. ed.)

W.

WACREOUR. L. Fr. In old English law. A vagabond, or vagrant. De wacreours per pays. Britt. c. 29.

WACTA. L. Lat. [from Germ. wacht, Sax. waecean, Fr. guet, q. v.] In old European law. Watch; watch and ward, (excubiæ.) Excubias, quas usitato vocabulo wactas dicunt, facere non negligant ; they shall not neglect to perform watches, which in the common language they call wacts. Capitul. Hludov. Pii, A. D. 815, c. 1. Esprit des Lois, liv. 30, c. 13, and note. Spelman. 1 Bl. Com. 356. Capitul. Caroli. lib. 3, c. 68.

WADIA, Guadia. L. Lat. In old European law. Gage; pledge. Si non habuerit unde summam persolvat, semetipsum per guadiam in servitio principis tradet ; if he have not wherewith to pay the sum, he shall deliver himself up by pledge to the service of the prince. LL. Longob. lib. 1, tit. 15.

WADRUS. L. Lat. In old European law. A term of frequent occurrence in the Formulæ Solennes, which Spelman supposes to mean water. Do, trado, &c. N. N. &c. mansos tantos, cum domibus, ædificiis, curtiferis, cum wadris, sylvis, terris arabilibus, &c. (I give, deliver, &c. to N. N. &c. so many manses, with the houses, buildings, curtilages, with the waters, woods, arable lands, &c.) Form. Sol. 18, 19, 20, 50, 58.

WADSET. [from wad, wadia, a pledge.] In Scotch law. A disposition of lands, answering to a mortgage in English law. 1 Kames' Equity, pref. Literally, a setting or putting to pledge; a close translation of the L. Lat. in vadium (or wadium) *positio.—A right by which lands, or other heritable subjects, are impignorated by the proprietor to his creditor, in security of his debt. The debtor who grants the wadset, and has the right of reversion, is called the reverser ; and the creditor receiver of the wadset, is called the wadsetter. Ersk. Pr. b. 2, tit. 8, § 1.—A disposition whereby any real right of lands or other things passing by infeftment, is transmitted from one to another, in security of a special sum, and redeemable upon payment of the money in the way and manner therein expressed. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 3, p. 12.

WADSETTER. In Scotch law. A creditor to whom a wadset is granted; a mortgagee. Ersk. Pr. b. 2, tit. 8, § 1.

WAFTORES. L. Lat. In old English law. A name given to certain naval officers, appointed 22 Edw. IV. chiefly to protect the fishermen on the coast of Norfolk and Suffolk. Cowell.

WAGA, Vaga. L. Lat. In old English law. A weigh; a measure of cheese, salt, wool, &c. containing two hundred and fifty-six pounds avoirdupois. Cowell. 1 Mon. Ang. 515. Spelman. De una waga casei. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 76, § 12.

WAGE. [from L. Fr. gager; L. Lat. vadiare, wadiare, guadiare.] In old English practice. To give security for the performance of a thing. Cowell. To wage battel, was to give gage or security for joining in the duellum or combat. See Wager of battel. To wage law, was to give gage or security to make one's law. See Wager of law.

WAGE. L. Fr. In old English law. Gage; pledge, (vadium.) LL. Gul. Conq. l. 6.

WAGER. A contract by which two parties or more agree that a certain sum of money or other thing, shall be paid or delivered to one of them, on the happening or not happening of an uncertain event. Bouvier. Wagers are founded either upon a fact already in existence, but not known to the parties, the one affirming that it is so, and the other that it is not; or upon some future event, the one affirming that it will be so, the other that it will not.

In New-York, all wagers, bets or stakes, made to depend upon any race, or upon any gaming by lot or chance, or upon any lot, chance, casualty, or unknown or contingent event whatever, are declared by statute to be unlawful; and all contracts for or on account of any money or property, or thing in action so wagered, bet or staked, are declared void. 1 Rev. St. [662,] 666, § 8. In Vermont and Pennsylvania, no action upon any wager or bet will be sustained. 2 Vermont R. 144. 6 Wharton's R. 173. 3 Kent's Com. 178, and note. At common law, however, a wager is considered to be a legal contract, which the courts are bound to enforce, unless it be on a subject which is illegal, or contrary to public policy, good morals, or the peace of society, or which affects the feelings or interests of third persons. Story on Contracts, § 566. Chitty on Contracts, 494—498. 3 Kent's Com. 277.

WAGER OF BATTEL. [L. Fr. gager de bataille; L. Lat. vadiatio duelli.] In old English practice. The giving of a gage or pledge to try a cause by battel, or single combat. This gage or vadium was originally an actual security given by both the parties; the appellee (in proceedings by appeal) giving gage to defend himself by his body, and the appellor giving gage to make good his charge in the same manner. Dat appellatus vadium defendendi, et appellator vadium disrationandi. Bract. fol. 137. Done le defendaunt gage à soy defendre, et le appellour gage pur la cause dereiner. Britt. c. 22. In writs of right, and other cases where the combat was by champions, the giving of gage was expressed by the mere formality of the tenant's champion throwing down his glove or gauntlet, which the demandant's champion took up. 3 Bl. Com. 339.

WAGER OF LAW. [L. Fr. gager de ley, ley gager; L. Lat. vadiatio legis.] In old practice. The giving of gage or sureties by a defendant in an action of debt, that at a certain day assigned, he would make his law; that is, would take an oath in open court, that he did not owe the debt, and at the same time bring with him eleven neighbors, (called compurgators,) who should avow upon their oaths that they believed in their consciences that he said the truth. Glanv. lib. 1, c. 9, 12. Bract. fol. 156 b. Britt. c. 27. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 5. 2 Bl. Com. 343. Cro. Eliz. 818. The sureties having been given, the defendant, on the day assigned, appeared in court with his compurgators, and standing at the end of the bar, was admonished by the judges of the nature and danger of a false oath. If he still persisted, he was to repeat this or the like oath: "Hear this, ye justices, that I do not owe unto Richard Jones the sum of ten pounds, nor any penny thereof, in manner and form as the said Richard hath declared against me. So help me God." The oaths of the compurgators then immediately followed. See Compurgator.

The whole proceeding is more minutely described in 2 Salk. 682, as follows: "Action of debt was brought on a by-law; the defendant waged his law, and a day was given upon the roll for him to come and make his law; and now, upon the last day of the term, he came. And Northby for the plaintiff insisted, that if he swear falsely or rashly and without reason, the court is not bound to receive him to it, and prayed a day to speak to that point. Sed per Holt, C. J. we can admonish him; but if he will stand by his law, we cannot hinder it, seeing it is a method the law allows. And the defendant was set at the right corner of the bar, without the bar, and the secondary asked him, if he was ready to wage his law; he answered 'Yes.' Then he laid his hand upon the book, and then the plaintiff was called; and a question thereupon arose whether the plaintiff was demandable. [The court held that he was.] Then the court admonished him [the defendant,] and also his compurgators, which they regarded not so much as to desist from it. Accordingly the defendant was sworn, that he owed not the money modo et forma, as the plaintiff had declared, nor any penny thereof. Then his compurgators standing behind him were called over, and each held up his right hand, and then laid their hands upon the book, and swore that they believed what the defendant swore was true."

This formality of acquitting one's self of a claim by oath, was properly and technically called "making law" or "perfecting law;" the word "law" being used in its ancient sense of oath. See Law. Lord Coke, however, supposes the term to mean, "taking the benefit which the law allowed the party." Co. Litt. 295. Wager of law strictly signified merely the preliminary formality of giving gage or security, but (probably in consequence of the ambiguous character of the expression, "making law") is generally used in the books, to denote the whole proceeding. 3 Bl. Com. 341—348. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 5.

Wager of law was one of the most ancient proceedings in English practice. It is distinctly described in Glanville, (ub. sup.) and was probably introduced by the Saxons. Montesquieu mentions it, under the name of the custom of negative proofs, (l'usage des preuves négatives,) as permitted by the laws of the Ripuarian Franks, and of the Allemans, Bavarians, Thuringians, Frisians, Saxons, Lombards and Burgundians. Esprit des Lois, liv. 28, c. 13. The last instance of its use in the English courts appears to have been in the case of King v. Williams, 2 B. & C. 538. It was abolished as late as the statute 2 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 13. In the United States it seems never to have been practiced, but if it ever existed, it is now completely abolished. 8 Wheaton's R. 642.

WAGER POLICY. In insurance law. A policy without any real interest to support it; a policy in which the insured has no interest, being in fact nothing more than a wager or bet between the parties, whether such a voyage would be performed, or such a ship arrive safe.* 3 Kent's Com. 277, 278. A mere hope or expectation, without some interest in the subject matter, is a wager policy. Id. 275. Mr. Arnould defines a wager policy to be "one in which the parties, by express terms, disclaim, on the face of it, the intention of making a contract of indemnity." 1 Arn. on Ins. 276, (281, Perkins' ed.) Policies of this kind are now generally held to be illegal. Id. 285, (289.) 1 Duer on Ins. 93—95. Id. 154, 155.

WAGES. In maritime law. The compensation allowed to seamen for their services on board a vessel during a voyage.* 3 Kent's Com. 185, et seq. See Abbott on Shipp. [605,] 715, et seq.

WAIF, Waife, Wayf, Wayfe, Weyfe. [L. Fr. weif, wef; L. Lat. wayvium, waivium, weyvium, weivium.] In English law. A thing stolen, which is thrown away, (or waived,) by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended. 1 Bl. Com. 296. 2 Kent's Com. 358. Goods waived are such as a thief having feloniously stolen, and being newly followed with hue and cry, or else overcharged with the burden or trouble of the goods, for his own ease, and more speedy flight, flies away and leaves the goods behind him. Cowell. Bracton (who is copied by Fleta) briefly defines a waif to be that which no one claims; (est wayvium quod nullus advocat.) Bract. fol. 125 b. Fleta, lib, 1, c. 27, § 13.

All goods waived are forfeited to the crown; but they may belong to a subject by special grant or prescription. 1 Bl. Com. 296. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 520, §§ 673, 674. In American law, a similar right may be considered as belonging to the state as against the finder, though it is never exercised. 2 Kent's Com. 358.

WAINABLE. In old records. That may be ploughed or manured; tillable. Cowell. Blount.

WAINAGE. In old English law. The team and instruments of husbandry with which a villein or agricultural bondman performed his services.* 4 Bl. Com. 379. See Wainagium.

WAINAGIUM, Wanagium, Waynagium. L. Lat. [from Sax. wæn, a wain, or wagon.] In old English law. Wainage; the furniture or appurtenances of a wain, with which a villein performed his services. Et villanus alterius quam noster, eodem modo amerciatur, salvo wainagio suo; and any other's villein than ours shall be amerced in the same way, saving his wainage. Magna Charta, c. 14. It answered to the contenementum of a freeman. Id. ibid. 2 Inst. 28. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 12. See Contenementum.

WAITING, Waitinge. In old English law. A species of service. Yearb. P. 10 Edw. III. 41.

WAIVE. [L. Lat. waviare, waiviare, wayviare, weyviare.] To throw away from one; to throw aside, as a thief does the thing he has stolen, in his flight; to give up that of which one has the possession; to abandon; to relinquish voluntarily; to relinquish a right which one may enforce if he chooses. In practice, a party is said to waive a default, to waive a right, or any advantage he may have regularly gained over his adversary. See Waiver.

In old English law. To forsake; to desert; to abandon. A man was said to waive the company of thieves. Staundf. Pl. Cor. fol. 26. The term was applied to a woman, in the same sense as outlaw to a man. A woman could not be outlawed, in the proper sense of the word, because, according to Bracton, she was never in law, that is, in a frank-pledge or decennary; but she might be waived, and held as abandoned. (Fœmina utlagari non potest, quia ipsa non est sub lege, i. Inlaughe, Anglice, s. in franco plegio sive decenna,—wayviari tamen bene potest, et pro derelicta haberi.) Bract. fol. 125 b. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 27, § 12.

WAIVER. In practice, and pleading. A throwing aside; abandonment or relinquishment; a passing by, or passing over; the express relinquishment of a right or advantage, which one may enforce or insist upon, if he pleases; the implied relinquishment of a right or advantage, by neglecting to enforce it, or act upon it, in proper time or manner. Errors and irregularities are often cured by waiver, which in many cases is implied from the acts of a party. If a party, being aware of an irregularity in the other's proceedings, overlook it, and take subsequent steps in the cause, or where, after being fully put on inquiry, he neglect to inform himself of the irregularity, it is a waiver of the irregularity, and he cannot afterwards take advantage of it. 1 Burr. Pr. 474. See Broom's Max. 59, 60, [101—103.]

WAIVIARE, Wayviare, Weyviare. L. Lat. [from Lomb. wifare, huifare, or guifare, according to Spelman.] In old English law. To waive; to throw away; to forsake, or abandon; to hold as derelict. Spelman.

To waive; to outlaw a woman. Reg. Orig. 276 b, 277. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 27, §§ 12, 13.

WAIVIARIA. L. Lat. [from waiviare, q. v.] In old English practice. The waiving of a woman; a proceeding answering to the outlawry of a man; waiviary.* Utlagaria et waviaria. Reg. Orig. 132 b, 133.

WAIVIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Waif; a waif. See Wayvium.

WAKENING. In Scotch law. The revival of an action. A process by which an action that has lain over and not been insisted in for a year and a day, and thus technically said to have "fallen asleep," is wakened, or put in motion again; or, in the quaint language of Forbes, "is roused and set a going." 1 Forbes' Inst. part 4, p. 170. Ersk. Pr. b. 4, tit. 1, § 33. Bell's Dict.

WALAPAUZ. Lomb. In old Lombardic law. The disguising the head or face, with the intent of committing a theft. LL. Longobard. tit. 15, cap. ult. Lindenbrog derives it from the Germ. wala, head, and pausen, to paint.

WALENSIS. L. Lat. In old English law. A Welshman. Mag. Cart. Johan. c. 56.

WALISCUS. L. Lat. [from Sax. wealh, a foreigner or stranger.] In Saxon law. A servant, or any ministerial officer. LL. Inæ, c. 34. Cowell.

WALL is distinguished by Callis from a bank; "for a bank is made ex solo et fundo quæ ex suis propriis naturis sunt eadem cum terra super qua edificatur (out of soil and ground, which, of their own natures, are the same with the land upon which it is built;) but so is not a wall, for it is an artificial edifice, not of the materials arising of the place where it standeth, but which be brought thither and built there." Callis on Sewers, [74,] 92.

WALLA, Wallia. L. Lat. [from Sax. wal; Lat. vallum.] In old English law. A bank of earth cast up for a mound, or boundary; a wall; a sea-wall. 2 Mon. Angl. 920. Cowell. Spelman, voc. Wallia.

WALLARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To repair or keep up a wall. Somner's Gavelk. 181.

To wall or enclose. Wallatur fossato vel haiâ; it is enclosed with a ditch or with a hedge. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 9, § 16.

WALLESHERIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Walescherv; the fact of being a Welshman. Stat. Walliæ, 12 Edw. I. c. 4. 2 Reeves' Hist. 96. Answering to Englescheria, in case of an Englishman. See Englecery.

WALLIA. L. Lat. In old English law. A wall; a sea-wall; a mound, bank or wall erected in marshy districts as a protection against the sea. Spelman. Questus est nobis A. quod B. quasdam wallias apud N. pro salvatione terrarum ibidem adjacentium contra fluxus et refluxus maris erectas, fregit; A. hath complained to us that B. hath broken down certain walls erected at N. for the protection of the lands lying in that neighborhood, against the flowings and ebbings of the sea. Reg. Orig. 93.

WALLIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Wales. Mag. Cart. Johan. c. 56.

WALLIÆ STATUTUM. L. Lat. The Statute of Wales. 2 Reeves' Hist. 93. 1 Chitt. Bl. Com. 94. See Statutum Walliæ.

WALLICUS. L. Lat. Welsh. Homines Wallici; Welshmen. 1 Leon. 31. Wallicam loquentes linguam; speaking the Welsh tongue.

WAMPUM. In American law. Indian money or currency, called by the New-York Dutch, seewan, and wampum by the English. This continued to constitute the common currency of the country long after it ceased to belong to the Dutch. In 1693, the ferriage for each single person from New-York to Brooklyn was eight styvers in wampum, or a silver two-pence. O'Callaghan's New-Neth. vol. i. pp. 60, 61, and note.

WAND OF PEACE. In Scotch law. A wand or staff carried by the messenger of a court, and which, when deforced, (that is, hindered from executing process) he breaks, as a symbol of the deforcement, and protest for remedy of law. 2 Forbes' Inst. 207.

WANG. Sax. In old English law. A field. Blount.

The cheek or jaw wherein the teeth are set. "Hence with Chaucer," says Blount, "we call the cheek-teeth or grinders wangs and wang-teeth, which is also notified in that old way of sealing writings:

> And in witness that this is sooth,
> I bite the wax with my wang-tooth."

WANNAGIUM. L. Lat. A word occurring in Hoveden's Annals, which Spelman gives, but without definition. The following expressions would seem to denote it to be a quantity of land allotted to the working of one plough. Quot carucarum wannagia fuerint in singulis villis, &c. Ad uniuscujusque carucæ wannagium centum acras terræ. (How many wannages of ploughs there were in every vill, &c. For the wannage of every plough, one hundred acres of land.) Hoved. Ann. pars post. fol. 443, num. 30. It seems to be only another form of wainagium, (q. v.)

WAPENTAKE. [from Sax. wæpen, weapons, and tac, touch, or take; L. Lat. wapentakium, wapentachium.] In English law. A division of a county in the north part of England, (viz. in the counties of Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire, and Northamptonshire) corresponding with a hundred. Lamb. Explic. voc. Centuria. Cowell. LL. Edw. Conf. c. 33, cited ibid. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 21. 1 Bl. Com. 115. Qui convenire faciunt hundreda, sive wapentachia. Bract. fol. 116 b. Per hundreda [sive] wapentakya. Id. fol. 155.

A hundred court, or hundred-gemote. Crabb's Hist. 27. The term seems to be still in use. 1 Steph. Com. 117.

 Hoveden derives this word from the Sax. wæpen, and tac, (Lat. tactus armorum) literally, weapon-touch, an ancient ceremony performed in the hundred, and which he describes in the following words: Cum quis accipiebat præfecturam wapentachii, die statuto, in loco ubi consueverunt congregari, omnes majores contra eum conveniebant, et descendente de equo suo, omnes assurgebant ei. Ipse vero erectâ lanceâ suâ, ab omnibus secundum morem fœdus accipiebat: omnes enim, quotquot venissent, cum lanceis suis hastam tangebant, et ita confirmabant per contactum armorum, &c., &c. (When any one received the appointment of chief of a wapentake, on a day appointed, all the principal men came together to meet him, in the place where they usually assembled, and as he alighted from his horse, all rose up before him. The chief then, raising his lance, received fealty from them all, according to custom; for all who were present touched his lance with theirs, and thus, by the touch of their weapons, expressed their submission to his authority.) Hoved. Ann. apud Cowell. The same ceremony is described by Fleta in nearly the same words. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, §§ 21, 22. This ceremony seems to have been derived from the use made of the spear or framea by the ancient Germans, in their popular assemblies, as described by Tacitus. De Mor. Germ. c. 11. Spelman. Ranulph of Chester, however, explains wapentake to mean a taking of weapons, observing, that as often as there was a new lord of a hundred, the vassals gave up their arms to him in token of subjection; (quoties novus esset hundredi dominus, ei in subjectionis signum, arma redderent vassalli.) Ranulph Cestr. lib. 1, c. 5, apud Cowell. And Sir Thomas Smith, (De Repub. Anglor. lib. 2, c. 16,) says that anciently musters were taken of the armor and weapons of the several inhabitants of every several wapentake, and from those that could not find sufficient pledges for their good abearing, their weapons were taken away and given to others. Cowell. See Fortescue de L. L. Angliæ, c. 24, note.

WAR. [Lat. bellum; Fr. guerre; L. Lat. guerra, werra.] A state of forcible contention; an armed contest between nations; a state of hostility between one or more nations or states. Grotius de Jur. Bell. lib. 1, c. 1. See Bellum.

WARA. L. Lat. In old records. A quantity or measure of ground. Concedimus—waram et dimidiam, cum cotlandis et insuper medietatem totius nemoris; we have granted a [ware] and a half, with the cotlands, and a moiety of the whole wood besides. 2 Mon. Ang. 128. Cowell.

WARACTUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Fallow; fallow-ground. Quando tenementum jacet incultum et ad waractum; when the tenement lies untilled, and at fallow. Bract. fol. 228 b. See Warectum.

WARANTIA. L. Lat. In old English law. Warranty; guaranty. Spelman gives the word in this form, which is used in Fleta, but in Bracton and the Register it is written warrantia, (q. v.)

WARANTIZARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To warrant. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 4, § 1. Warantizare nihil aliud est quam tenentem vocantem defendere in sua seisina vel possessione erga petentem; to warrant is nothing else than to defend a tenant, vouching in his seisin or possession, against the demandant. Id. lib. 6, c. 23, § 2.

WARANTIZATIO. L. Lat. In old English law. Warranty. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 4, § 5.

WARANTIZO. L. Lat. In old English law. I warrant. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 4, § 4.

WARANTUS, Warrantus. L. Lat. [L. Fr. garaunt.] In old English law. One who had covenanted to warrant another's title, and who might, therefore, be called upon, or vouched to warrant and defend it; a warrantor. Habet forte tenens warantum et defensorem, qui eum defendere tenetur in seysina sua contra petentem; the tenant perhaps has a warrantor and defender, who is bound to defend him in his seisin against the demandant. Bract. fol. 257 b. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 4, § 1. Quis posset warrantum vocare; who may vouch a warrantor. Bract. fol. 380 b. Quis vocari possit ad warrantum; who may be vouched to warranty. Id. ibid. Called, in Britton, garaunt, and garaunt voche. Britt. c. 75.

WARD. [from L. Fr. ward, garde, from garder, to guard or keep; L. Lat. warda; Lat. custodia.] In old English law. Guard; protection; defence; the duty of guarding a place. 1 Bl. Com. 356. See Watch and ward.

The state of being under protection or guardianship. An heir under age was said to be in ward. 2 Bl. Com. 67.

An infant under guardianship. Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 46. Lord Hale uses the civil law term pupil. Anal. sect. xx.

A place under the protection of a person; a division of a city, under the charge of an alderman. Stow. Cowell. A division of a forest. Manwood, part 1, p. 97. Spelman.

A place of custody or confinement; a prison, (carcer.) Spelman.

A state of confinement; imprisonment, (incarceratio.) Id.

WARD. In modern law. A person under the charge or care of a guardian; a minor under guardianship. 1 Bl. Com. 463.

A division of a city, under the charge of an alderman. See Ward, supra.

WARD-CORN. [Fr. corn, horn.] In old English law. The duty of keeping watch and ward, with a horn to blow upon any occasion of surprise. 1 Mon. Angl. 976.

WARD-FEGH, Ward-feoh. Sax. In old records. Ward-fee; the value of a ward, or the money paid to the lord for his redemption from wardship. Blount.

WARD-HOLDING. In old Scotch law. Tenure by military service; the proper feudal tenure of Scotland. Abolished by statute 20 Geo. II. c. 50. Ersk. Pr. b. 2, tit. 4, § 1. So called from the incident of ward or wardship belonging to it. See 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 97. Bell's Dict.

WARD-MOTE. [L. Lat. wardemotus, from ward, and Sax. mote, or gemote, a meeting.] In English law. A court kept in every ward in London, commonly called the ward-mote-court, or inquest. Cowell. 4 Inst. 249. 2 Show. 525.

WARD-PENNY, Warth-penny, Warpen. In old English law. Money paid to the sheriff or castellains, for the duty of watching and warding a castle. Spelman. Chart. Gul. Conq. Eccles. S. Martini de Bello.

WARD-WIT, Wardwyte, Warwite. In old English law. Immunity or exemption from the duty or service of ward, or from contributing to such service. Spelman. Exemption from amercement for not finding a man to do ward. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 16. Co. Litt. 83.

WARDA. L. Lat. In old English law. Ward; guard; protection; keeping; custody, (tutela, custodia.) Spelman.

A ward; an infant under wardship. Id.

WARDA, Varda. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. An award; the judgment of a court. In wardis et judiciis petitis; in awards and judgments prayed for. Quon. Attach. c. 34, § penult. Id. c. 35, §§ 1, 2. Spelman.

WARDARE, Vardare. L. Lat. In old Scotch law. To award; to decree or adjudge; to pronounce judgment. Spelman, quoting Skene.

WARDEGEMOT. [from ward, and Sax. gemote, meeting.] In Saxon law. The meeting of a ward, or the inhabitants of a ward; a court held in, or for a ward. Spelman, voc. Gemotum. See Wardmote.

WARDEN. [L. Fr. gardein; Lat. custos; L. Lat. gardianus.] In English law. One who has the keeping or charge of any person or thing, by office; a keeper. Various officers under this name are mentioned in old statutes; as Warden of the marshes, Warden of the forest, Wardens of the rolls in the chancery, Warden or clerk of the hanaper in chancery, Warden of the stannaries, Warden of the Cinque Ports, Warden of the Fleet. Cowell.

WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS. [L. Lat. gardianus quinque portuum.] In English law. The title of the governor or presiding officer of the Cinque Ports. Camden supposes this office to have been created in imitation of the policy of the Romans, who appointed a magistrate or governor over the eastern parts of England, for the special protection of the seacoast against invasion. Camd. Brit. 238. See Cinque Ports.

WARDS AND LIVERIES. In English law. The title of a court of record, established in the reign of Henry VIII. See Court of Wards and Liveries.

WARDSHIP. [L. Fr. garde; Lat. custodia.] In feudal and old English law. Guardianship; the right of acting as guardian to the heir of a tenant by knight-service.* This wardship consisted in having the custody of the body and lands of the heir, without any account of the profits, till the age of twenty-one in males, and sixteen in females. 2 Bl. Com. 67. Britt. c. 66.

WARE, Wair. O. Sc. [from O. Fr. varech.] In old Scotch charters. Seaweed, or that which is thrown up by the sea. Spelman.

WARECTARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To fallow ground; or plough up land (designed for wheat) in the spring, in order to let it lie fallow for the better improvement. Cowell. Ad warectandum. 1 Mon. Angl. 525. Warectandi tempus. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 10.

WARECT. L. Fr. In old English law. Fallow. Gist warect; lies fallow. Yearb. P. 11 Hen. VI. 9.

WARECTUM, Waractum, Wareccum. L. Lat. In old English law. Fallow ground; land that has been neglected and long untilled. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 5; c. 73, § 12. 2 Mon. Angl. 253. Cowell. Co. Litt. 5 b. Bracton writes this word, waractum, (q. v.)

WARENDA. L. Lat. In old European law. Warranty; a word of frequent occurrence in the Mirror of Saxony, corresponding to the warantia, or warrantia of old English law. Spelman, voc. Warantia.

WARENNA. L. Lat. In old English law. Warren; a warren. Spelman. Li- bera warenna; free warren, (q. v.) Quare vi et armis liberam warennam ipsius A. apud N. intravit, et in ea, sine licentia et voluntate sua, fugavit et lepores, cuniculos, phasianos et perdices cepit et asportavit, &c.; wherefore, with force and arms, he entered the free warren of the said A. at N. and therein, without his license and consent, chased, took and carried away hares, conies, pheasants and partridges, &c. Reg. Orig. 93 b.

WARENTARE. L. Lat. [Lomb. guarentare.] In old European law. To warrant. Spelman.

WARENTIZARE. L. Lat. [Lomb. guarentizare.] In old English law. To warrant; to save one harmless. Spelman. The more common form was warrantizare, (q. v.)

WARGUS. L. Lat. In old European law. An outcast; an exile; a banished person. Si quis corpus jam sepultum effoderit vel exspoliaverit, wargus sit; hoc est, expulsus de eodem pago, usque dum cum parentibus defuncti conveniret; if any one shall disinter or rob a body that has been buried, he shall be wargus, that is, driven out of the country, until he shall make satisfaction for the offence to the relatives of the deceased. L. Salic. tit. 57, § 5. L. Ripuar. tit. 85, § 2. LL. Hen. I. c. 84. Spelman.

WARNOTH. In old English law. An ancient custom, whereby, if any tenant holding of the Castle of Dover, failed in paying his rent at the day, he should forfeit double, and for the second failure, treble, &c. Cowell.

WARRANDICE. In Scotch law. Warranty; a clause in a charter or deed by which the grantor obliges himself that the right conveyed shall be effectual to the receiver. Ersk. Pr. b. 2, tit. 3, § 11. A clause whereby the granter of a charter obligeth himself to warrant or make good the thing granted to the receiver. 1 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 113.

A warrandice contra omnes mortales (against all mortals, or, as it is singularly translated, against all deadly,) or in other words an absolute warrandice, is one whereby the right is warranted against all legal defects in it, which may carry it off from the receiver, either wholly or in part. Id. ibid. 1 Forbes' Inst. ub. sup.

WARRANT. [from O. Fr. guarent; Lomb. warens.] In practice. An authority to do some judicial act; a power derived from a court, to take some person or property. A process under seal, issued by some court or justice, authorizing the officer to whom it is directed to arrest or apprehend a person named, or to take certain property.* A warrant is said to imply a seal, in all cases where a seal has not been dispensed with by statute. Bronson, J. 3 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 497.

An authority to do some act in court, for another; as to sue, to appear and defend a suit; to confess a judgment, &c. See Warrant of attorney, Warrant to sue and defend.

To WARRANT. [L. Lat. warentare, guarentare, warentisare, guarentisare, warrantizare; L. Fr. garaunter.] In conveyancing. To assure the title to property sold, by an express covenant to that effect in the deed of conveyance. To bind one's self by a covenant in a deed, to defend the grantee in his title and possession. To stipulate by an express covenant that the title of a grantee shall be good, and his possession undisturbed. See Warranty.

In contracts. To engage, or stipulate in writing, or by words, that a certain fact in relation to the subject of the contract is or shall be as represented; as, in the contract of sale, that the thing sold is free from defect, or shall prove to be of the quality or quantity represented; in a policy of insurance, that a thing insured is neutral property, or that a ship shall sail on or before a certain day, &c. See Warranty.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY. In practice. A written authority, directed to any attorney or attorneys of any court of record, to appear for the party executing it, and receive a declaration for him in an action at the suit of a person named, and thereupon to confess the same, or to suffer judgment to pass by default; and it also usually contains a release of errors. 2 Burr. Pr. 239.

Warrants of attorney to confess judgment are most commonly given where it is intended to secure a debt by giving to it the form of a judgment, without the necessity of an actual suit for the purpose. In these cases, they are accompanied by a bond in a penalty double the amount due, or intended to be secured, conditioned to pay the amount due on demand, or as the parties may agree, and to this description of bonds the common warrants of attorney are adapted. 1 Id. 367.

WARRANT TO SUE AND DEFEND. In old practice. A special warrant from the crown, authorizing a party to appoint an attorney to sue or defend for him. Gilb. C. P. 32. 3 Bl. Com. 25.

A special authority given by a party to his attorney, to commence a suit, or to appear and defend a suit, in his behalf. These warrants are now disused, though formal entries of them upon the record were long retained in practice. See 1 Burr. Pr. 39.

WARRANTIA, Warantia. L. Lat. In old practice. Warranty. Bract. lib. 5, tract. 4.

WARRANTIA CHARTÆ. L. Lat. In old practice. Warranty of charter. A writ which lay for one who being enfeoffed of lands or tenements, with a clause of warranty, was afterwards impleaded in an assise or other action in which he could not vouch to warranty. In such case, it might be brought against the warrantor, to compel him to assist the tenant with a good plea or defence, or else to render damages and the value of the land, if recovered against the tenant. Cowell. 3 Bl. Com. 300. See De Warrantia Chartæ.

Warrantia chartæ was, in other words, an action brought to take advantage of a warranty, in lieu of voucher, and by judgment in it the plaintiff might bind the lands of the warrantor, and have damages awarded to him. Roscoe's Real Act. 142. See 4 Kent's Com. 469, 471. Fleta calls it warantia cartæ. Lib. 6, c. 35.

WARRANTIZARE, Warantizare, Warentizare, Warrantisare. L. Lat. [L. Fr. garaunter.] In old conveyancing. To warrant; to bind one's self by covenant in a deed of conveyance, to defend the grantee in his title and possession. Warrantizabo, (I will warrant,) and warrantizabimus, (we will warrant,) were words used in old charters, to express a warranty. Et ego et hæredes mei warrantizabimus tali et hæredibus suis tantum, vel tali et hæredibus suis et assignatis, et hæredibus assignatorum, et assignatis assignatorum, et eorum hæredibus, et acquietabimus et defendemus eis totum terram illam cum pertinentiis contra omnes gentes imperpetuum, per prædictum servitium. (And I and my heirs will warrant to such a one and his heirs, only, or to such a one and his heirs and assigns, and the heirs of his assigns, and the assigns of his assigns and their heirs; and will acquit and defend to them all that land with the appurtenances, against all people forever, by the aforesaid service.) Bract. fol. 37. See Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 10. By this word, warrantizabimus, Bracton observes, the donor takes upon himself the obligation to defend his tenant [or donee] in the possession of the thing given, and his assigns and their heirs, and all others, if the tenement given should happen to be claimed by any one in demesne. Id. fol. 37 b. Of warrantizo, (I warrant,) Littleton observes, "this word and verb makes a warranty, and is the cause of warranty, and no other word in our law." Litt. sect. 733. Co. Litt. 384 a.

In old practice. To defend and acquit a tenant who had vouched the warrantor, in his seisin. Warrantizare nihil aliud est quam defendere et acquietare tenentem, qui warrantum vocavit, in seysina sua. Bract. fol. 380 b. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 23, § 2. Co. Litt. 365. To fulfil one's covenant of warranty, either by successfully defending the title in an action, or, in case of failure, by indemnifying the tenant with other lands of equal value.

WARRANTUS, Warantus. L. Lat. [L. Fr. garaunt.] In old English law. A warrantor; one who had warranted land by covenant, and might, therefore, be called upon or vouched to defend the title for the tenant. Si [tenens] warrantum habuerit, illum statim vocat; if he [the tenant] have a warrantor, he should immediately vouch him. Bract. fol. 380. The expressions warrantum vocare, (to call or vouch a warrantor,) and ad warrantum vocare, (to call to, or upon a warrantor,) are indifferently used by Bracton. Id. fol. 380 b, et passim. The former of these answers literally to the garaunt vocher of Britton. Britt. c. 75. "To vouch to warranty" is the usual English phrase in the old books.

WARRANTY. [L. Lat. warrantia, warrantizatio; L. Fr. garaunty, garranty.] In old English conveyancing. An undertaking by covenant to defend a tenant or grantee in his seisin, against an adverse claimant of the land. Bract. fol. 37 b, 380 b. Britt. c. 75.

In old practice. The complying with or fulfilling one's covenant of warranty, by defending the title or seisin of a tenant or grantee, in an action brought against him by an adverse claimant of the lands conveyed; and in case of failure so to defend the seisin, by indemnifying the tenant for the lands he lost, by conveying to him others of equal value, which was called making exchange to the value, (excambium ad valentiam.) Bract. lib. 5, tract. 4. Britt. c. 75.

Warranty was one of the most important and extensive heads of the old law of real property, distinguished for its abstruseness and multiplied refinements. Lord Coke has pronounced the learning of warranties to be "one of the most curious and cunning learnings of the law." A leading distinction was into lineal and collateral warranty, (qq. v.) But this branch of the law has long fallen into disuse, never was generally adopted in American jurisprudence, has been expressly abolished in some of the states, and is now at length abolished also in England, by statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. cc. 27, 74. 1 Steph. Com. 455. See 4 Kent's Com. 468—472, and notes.

WARRANTY. In modern law. An undertaking or stipulation, in writing, or verbally, that a certain fact in relation to the subject of a contract, is, or shall be as it is stated or promised to be. Warranty forms an important part of the contracts of sale and of insurance, and though generally expressed, is frequently implied by law. The common express warranty of an article sold is, that it is free from defect, but the law will imply a warranty of the title, provided the seller sells it as his own, and for a fair price. See 2 Kent's Com. 478.

When a person warrants an article, he makes himself liable for any defect in the matter to which the warranty applies, whether he knew it or not; but when he makes a bare representation, it is necessary to aver and prove that he knew the representation to be false, otherwise he is not liable in damages. Dewey, J. 4 Metcalf's R. 155, and cases there cited. The distinction between a warranty and a representation is an important one in the law of insurance. See 5 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 188; and see infra.

WARRANTY. In insurance law. A stipulation or undertaking by a party insured, in reference to a vessel or property which is the subject of insurance.

An express warranty is a stipulation inserted in writing on the face of the policy, on the literal truth or fulfilment of which the validity of the instrument depends. 1 Arnould on Ins. 577, (580, Perkins' ed.) These written stipulations either allege the existence of some fact or state of things at the time, or previous to the time of making the policy, as that the thing insured is neutral property, that the ship is of such a force, that she sailed on such a day, or was all well at such a time; or they undertake for the happening of future acts, as that the ship shall sail on or before a given day, that she shall depart with convoy; that she shall be manned with such a complement of men, &c. Id. ibid. The implied warranty in a policy is that the vessel is seaworthy. Id. 652, 653.

A warranty is generally a stipulation made and described in the policy itself, and must be complied with, whether material or not; but a representation is generally not given in detail in the policy, but verbally, or in a separate writing, if the property be situated at a distance. 2 Woodb. & Min. R. 472. In the law of insurance a representation is not a part of the contract, but is collateral to it; whereas an express warranty is always a part of the contract. Bronson, J. 5 Hill's (N. Y.) R. 188. But see 2 Duer on Ins. 644—646. "By the English and American law," observes Mr. Duer, "every affirmation of a fact contained in the policy, in whatever terms expressed, is construed as a warranty; but where the statement relates, not to facts, but to the information, expectation or belief of the party, it is plain that it cannot be thus construed; and it is equally clear that when the parties declare that the statement, although positive in its terms, shall be construed as a representation, and not as a warranty, the intention so disclaimed must supersede the general rule." Id. 644, 645.

WARREN. [L. Lat. warenna, warrenna; L. Fr. garene, from garenner, to prohibit; or from Germ. wahren, to protect, or defend.] In English law. A place privileged by prescription, or royal grant, for the keeping and preservation of certain animals, called beasts and fowls of warren, (q. v.) Cowell. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 91, § 97. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 47, 48, note [d.] Literally, a place protected by special privilege, or the use of which is prohibited to all but certain individuals.* The name is now chiefly preserved in grounds that are set apart for breeding hares and rabbits. 2 Bl. Com. 39.

A franchise, or sole and exclusive power of killing certain descriptions of game, so far as a person's warren extended, on condition of his preventing other persons.* 2 Bl. Com. 39. 2 Steph. Com. 21, 83. Generally termed free-warren, (q. v.)—A privilege which one has in his lands, by royal grant or prescription, of hunting and taking wild beasts and birds of warren, to the exclusion of any other person not entering by his permission. Spelman.

WARRETTEZ. L. Fr. In old English law. Fallow. Yearb. H. 3 Edw. II. 68.

WARRETS. L. Fr. Fallow. Yearb. T. 4 Edw. III. 7.

WARSCOT. In Saxon and Danish law. A customary contribution towards armor among the Saxons, mentioned in the forest laws of Canute. Quieti ab omnibus armorum oneribus quod Warstot Angli dicunt; quit of all burdens of arms which the English call warscot. LL. Forest. Canut. Reg. num. 9. Cowell.—Money paid for castle-guard, or for keeping watch and ward; the same as ward-penny. Spelman.

WARTH. In old English law. A customary payment, supposed to be the same with ward-penny, (q. v.) Spelman. Blount.

WAST. L. Fr. Waste. Wast de boys; waste of woods. Britt. c. 66.

WASTE. [L. Fr. wast, gast; L. Lat. vastum.] A spoil made either in houses, woods, lands, &c. by the tenant for life or years, to the prejudice of the heir, or of him in the reversion or remainder. Cowell. Kitchin, 168.—A spoil or destruction in houses, gardens, trees, or other corporeal hereditaments, to the disherison of him that hath the remainder or reversion in fee-simple or fee-tail. Co. Litt. 53. 2 Bl. Com. 284.—The destruction or material alteration of any part of a tenement, [by a tenant for life or years] to the injury of the person entitled to the inheritance; such, for example, as the demolition of buildings, or the cutting of timber. 1 Steph. Com. 241.—Spoil and destruction done, or allowed to be done, to houses, woods, lands, or other corporeal hereditaments, by the tenant thereof, during the continuance of his tenancy. 3 Id. 503.—A spoil and destruction of an estate, either in houses, woods or lands; by demolishing, not the temporary profits only, but the very substance of the thing, thereby rendering it wild and desolate; which the common law expresses very significantly by the word vastum. 3 Bl. Com. 223.

Waste and destruction, according to Bracton, are convertible terms, and signify the same thing, (convertibiliter se habent vastum et destructio, et vastum idem est quod destructio.) Bract. fol. 316 b. Fleta observes that they are almost equipollent, and are indifferently applicable to houses, woods and gardens, (fere æquipollent, et convertibiliter se habent in domibus, boscis et gardinis.) Fleta, lib. 1, c. 12, § 20. Britton, however, applies the term particularly to trees or woods, (wast de boys, destruccion de tenementz.) Britt. c. 66. See Co. Litt. 52 b, 53.

Waste is either voluntary, or permissive; the one by an actual and designed demolition of the lands, woods and houses; the other arising from mere negligence, and want of sufficient care in reparations, fences and the like. 3 Bl. Com. 223. 2 Id. 281. See Voluntary waste, Permissive waste.

Waste may be committed not only by destruction. but by alteration of any part of a tenement. Thus, the conversion of land from one species to another, as of woodland into arable, and vice versâ, is waste. 2 Bl. Com. 282. 7 N. Hamp. R. 171. The conversion of two chambers of a tenement into one is waste. 4 Kent's Com. 76, note. And, in general, whatever does a lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance, is waste. 2 Bl. Com. 281. As to what particular acts by a tenant constitute waste, see Archb. Landl. & Ten. 197—201. Roscoe's Real Act. 116—119. Cruise's Dig. tit. iii. ch. 2. For the American law of waste, see 4 Kent's Com. 76—82. 11 Metcalf's R. 304, 310—312. United States Digest, Waste. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 262—267. 1 Greenleaf's Cruise's Digest, 115—120, notes.

WASTE, Writ or action of. In old practice. A remedy given for waste in lands, houses, &c. partly founded upon the common law, and partly founded upon the statute of Glocester, which lay for one who had the immediate estate of inheritance in reversion or remainder, against the tenant for life, tenant in dower, tenant by curtesy, or tenant for years.* 3 Bl. Com. 227. It was a mixed action, partly real, so far as it recovered land, and partly personal, so far as it recovered damages. For it was brought for both these purposes, and if the waste were proved, the tenant recovered the thing or place wasted, and also treble damages. Id. 228. See Roscoe's Real Act. 107, 121—125.

This action, after having long fallen into disuse, was expressly abolished in England by the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27. In the United States, it has been generally adopted, though little used, being for the most part superseded in practice by an action on the case in the nature of waste, to cover damages, or by bill in equity. 4 Kent's Com. 77, 79, 80. See 1 Greenl. Cruise's Dig. 122, note. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 268—276.

WASTE. In old English criminal law. A prerogative or liberty on the part of the crown, of committing waste on the lands of felons, by pulling down their houses, extirpating their gardens, ploughing their meadows, and cutting down their woods. 4 Bl. Com. 385. See Year, day and waste.

WASTEL. [L. Fr. gastel; L. Lat. wastellum.] In old English law. The finest sort of bread. Britt. c. 30. Cowell.

WASTELLUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Wastel; a kind of bread. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 9, §§ 1, 2.

WASTINUM. L. Lat. In old records. Waste ground, or desert. Cowell. Chartul. Abbat. Glaston. MS. cited ibid.

WASTORS. In old statutes. A kind of thieves. "There have been divers manslaughters, felonies and robberies, done by people called Roberdsmen, Wastors, and Drawlatches." Stat. 4 Hen. IV. c. 27. Stat. 5 Edw. III. c. 14.

WATCH AND WARD. In English law. The duty of keeping watch by night, and guard by day, in a town or other district.* One of the principal duties of constables, arising from the statute of Winchester. 1 Bl. Com. 356. Ward, guard, or custodia, is chiefly applied to the day time, in order to apprehend rioters and robbers on the highways. Watch (Teut. wacht or wacta) is properly applicable to the night only, and it begins at the time when ward ends, and ends when that begins.* Id. 356, 357. See 4 Id. 292.

WATER, [Lat. aqua; L. Fr. awe, eawe, ewe; Fr. eau,] is considered in law as a mere incident or appurtenant to land, and cannot be conveyed or recovered independently of the land which it covers. Aqua cedit solo. Water belongs to, or goes with the land. Land, on the other hand, includes water as well as other things that are upon it. "And therefore," observes Sir William Blackstone, "I cannot bring an action to recover possession of a pool or other piece of water, by the name of water only; either by calculating its capacity, as for so many cubical yards; or by superficial measure, for twenty acres of water; or by general description, as for a pond, a water-course, or a rivulet; but I must bring my action for the land that lies at the bottom, and must call it twenty acres of land covered with water. Brownl. 142. For water is a moveable, wandering thing, and must of necessity continue common by the law of nature; so that I can only have a temporary, transient, usufructuary property therein: wherefore, if a body of water runs out of my pond into another man's, I have no right to reclaim it. But the land which that water covers is permanent, fixed and immoveable: and, therefore, in this I may have a certain substantial property, of which the law will take notice, and not of the other." 2 Bl. Com. 18. See 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 51. 2 Id. 100. By a grant of water, nothing passes but a right of fishing, or the right to use the water, as in the case of rivers and mill streams. 2 Chitt. Bl. Com. 19, and note. See 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 107, § 104. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 189—191.

WATER-BAILIFF. In English law. An officer in port towns, whose duties in general relate to the searching of ships. Cowell.

WATER-BAYLEY. In American law. An officer mentioned in the colony laws of New-Plymouth, (A. D. 1671,) whose duty was to collect dues to the colony for fish taken in their waters. Colony Laws, (ed. 1836,) 164, 166. Probably another form of water-bailiff, (q. v.)

WATER-COURSE. [L. Lat. aquæ cursus; L. Fr. cours del ewe.] A running stream of water; a body of running water; a natural stream, including rivers and rivulets. See Angell on Water-Courses, § 3. A water-course consists of water, bed and banks. 3 Ohio R. 495. Cowen, J. 20 Wendell's R. 153. It may be artificial as well as natural. 3 Kent's Com. 442, note.

The easement of receiving water in its accustomed course. 1 Crabb's Real Prop.

355, § 405.—The right which a man may have to the benefit of the flow of a river or stream. 2 Steph. Com. 12.

This right most commonly refers to a stream passing through a person's own land, (1 Tyr. & Gran. 398,) and the banks of which belong either to himself on both sides, or to himself on one side and to his neighbor on the other; in which latter case, (unless the stream be navigable,) the proprietor of each bank is considered as primâ facie the proprietor also of half the land covered by the stream, that is, usque filum aquæ. Hale de Jur. Maris, pars 1, c. 1. 1 Sim. & Stu. 190. 2 Rol. Abr. 170. 2 Steph. Com. 12. In either case, however, it is distinguishable from the right of merely using the water upon the soil, (which is incident, as of course, to the property in the soil itself;) it is the right of having the course of the stream kept free from any interruption or disturbance to the party's prejudice, by the acts of persons from without and in parts not within his own territory, whether consisting in a diversion of it, or an obstruction, or a pollution by offensive commixture. Id. ibid. The maxim is Aqua currit, et debet currere, ut currere solebat, (q. v.) See further, 3 Kent's Com. 439, 447. A water-course is regarded in law as a part of the land over which it flows, and will therefore pass with the latter by a deed or patent, unless expressly reserved. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 100.

WATER-GANG. Sax. [L. Lat. aquagangia, watergangium.] In old records. A passage for water; a trench to carry a stream of water, such as were usually made in sea-walls, to drain water out of the marshes. Cowell. Spelman, voc. Aquagium. Dugdale on Imbanking, 21, et passim.

WATER-GAVEL. In old records. A gavel or rent paid for fishing in, or other benefit received from some river or water. Cowell. Blount.

WATER-MEASURE. In old statutes. A measure greater than Winchester measure by about three gallons in the bushel. Stat. 22 Car. II. Cowell.

WATER-ORDEAL. [L. Lat. judicium aquæ.] In Saxon and old English law. The ordeal or trial by water, which was of two kinds; by hot water, and by cold water.

The hot water ordeal, (aqua fervida or calida,) was performed by plunging the bare arm up to the elbow in boiling water, and escaping unhurt thereby. 4 Bl. Com. 243. Spelman, vocc. Judicium Dei, Ordalium.

The cold water ordeal, (aqua frigida,) was performed by casting the person suspected into a river or pond of cold water, when, if he floated therein, without any action of swimming, it was deemed an evidence of his guilt; but if he sunk, he was acquitted. Id. ibid.

WATLING (or WETLING) STREET. [Sax. Wæteling Stræte; L. Lat. Via Vetelingiana.] One of the four great Roman ways or roads in Britain. Cowell. Blount. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 30. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 21. Otherwise called Verlam Street, from its passing through Verulam. Spelman, voc. Ikenild Street.

WAVESON. In old records. Such goods as, after a wreck, swim or float on the waves. This word occurs, in connection with flotteson and lagason, in a charter granted by Arthur Plantagenet, High Admiral of England, to the mayor and citizens of Rochester, dated Dec. 4. 18 Hen. VIII. Cowell. Blount. See Flotsam.

WAY. [Lat. via; L. Fr. chemyn, chimin; L. Lat. chiminus, chiminum.] A road; a street; a passage or path. A way, in the most general sense, includes highways as well as private ways. See Co. Litt. 56 a.

A private road, passage or path over another's ground. Lord Coke divides ways into three kinds: first, a foot-way, (iter;) second, a foot-way and horse-way, (actus,) which he says is vulgarly called pack and prime way, because it is both a foot-way, which was the first or prime way, and a pack or drift-way also; and third, [a way in the largest sense] via, or aditus, which contains the other two, and also a cart-way. Co. Litt. ub. sup. This division, and the terms of it, are obviously taken from the civil law. Inst. 2. 3, pr. See Bract. fol. 232.

The right of going over another man's ground. 2 Bl. Com. 35. A right of private passage over another man's ground. 3 Kent's Com. 419. A right of way, public or private, is held to be an incorporeal hereditament. Nelson, J. 12 Wendell's R. 98. Cowen, J. 20 Id. 99. Holman, J. 1 Blackford's R. 45. This sense of the term, importing a right to use a road or path, instead of the road or path itself, is taken from the civil law. Via est jus eundi, et agendi, et ambulandi; way is a right of going and driving and walking. Inst. 2. 3, pr.

WAYA. L. Lat. In old English law. A way, (a measure or weight.) Two ways of wool made a sack. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 2.

WAY-GOING CROP. In the law of leases. A crop of grain to which tenants for years are sometimes entitled by cus tom; grain sown in the fall to be reaped at the next harvest; a crop which will not ripen until after the termination of the lease. See 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 61, and note. See Away-going crop.

WAYF. An old form of waif, (q. v.)

WAYVIARE. See Waiviare.

WAYVIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. A waif; that which no one claims, (est wayvium quod nullus advocat.) Bract. fol. 125 b.

WEALD. Sax. A wood; the woody part of a country, as the weald of Kent. Camd. Brit. 247. 4 Mod. 343, arg.

WEAR, Weir. [from Sax. were, a taking; L. Lat. wera, wara.] A place in a river, artificially constructed for taking fish, by so narrowing the stream by dams projecting from each bank, that the passage may be easily closed by a net. Spelman, voc. Wara.

WEDBEDRIP. Sax. [from wed, a covenant, biddan, to pray or desire, and rippan, to reap or mow.] In old English law. A customary service which tenants paid to their lords, in cutting down their corn [grain,] or doing other harvest duties. As if a covenant to reap for the lord at the time of his bidding or commanding. Cowell.

WEDDE. Sc. [L. Lat. vadium.] In old Scotch law. A pledge. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Vadium.

WEDUE. L. Fr. [from Lat. vidua.] In old English law. Widow; a widow. Wedues femmes; widows. Britt. c. 21.

WEF. L. Fr. In old English law. A waif. De wefs à nous apurtenauntz; of waifs belonging to us. Britt. c. 17.

WEHADINC. In old European law. The judicial combat, or duel; the trial by battel. De pugna duorum quod wehadinc vocatur. Decret. Tassilonis in LL. Baiwar. § 5. So called, according to Spelman, from the Sax. wead, a pledge, being another form of weading, a giving of pledge, a covenanting. It seems to correspond closely to the English wager of battel.

WEIF. An old form of waif, (q. v.) Ingulph. Hist. Croyl. 875. Spelman. It occurs also in Britton. Et weifs ou estray. Britt. c. 17. De weifs ou de wrekkes de meer. Id. c. 29.

WELL. [Lat. bene; Fr. bien.] In the old reports. Good; sufficient; unobjectionable in law; the opposite of ill. "Held well" is a common expression in the reports. "And per curiam, well." 1 Show. 350. See Bien, De bene esse.

Advisable, or proper. See Bien.

Allowed as sufficient or valid, though not in strict form. "Well enough" was a common phrase. Latch, 196. 10 Mod. 270. 11 Id. 403. "Not proper, but well enough." 11 Id. 363.

WELL. In marine insurance. A word used in warranties of a ship's safety at a particular time and place, which are briefly expressed in or at the foot of the policy, "warranted well," (at such a date.) The word "well," in such warranty, refers solely to the state of the ship on the day of signing the policy. 1 Arnould on Ins. 586, (589, Perkins' ed.)

WELSH MORTGAGE. A species of mortgage frequently mentioned in the English books, though now out of use, resembling the ancient mortuum vadium described by Glanville; being a conveyance of an estate, redeemable at any time, on payment of the principal, with an understanding that the profits in the mean time shall be received by the mortgagee without account, in satisfaction of interest. Coote on Mortg. 9, 207. 4 Kent's Com. 137. The Welsh mortgage, under its strict contract, without any mitigation of its severity in equity, was analogous to the contract termed antichresis, (q. v.) in the Roman law. Id. ibid. note.

WEND. [L. Lat. wendus; from O. Eng. wend, to go.] In old records. A large extent of ground, comprising several juga; a perambulation; a circuit. Spelman. Cowell.

WERA. L. Lat. In Saxon and old English law. A were; the price or value of a person. Spelman. See Were.

A wear for taking fish. Id.

WERE. Sax. [L. Lat. wera.] In Saxon law. Price, (pretium;) the price or value of a man's life, (æstimatio capitis;) a sum paid for killing a man; the price of one's ransom. LL. Edw. Conf. c. 11. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 15. Co. Litt. 127 a, 287 b. Spelman. A fine which a mur-derer had to pay to the family or relatives of the deceased. Bosworth's Anglo-Sax. Dict. voc. Were and wite. By the laws of Athelstan, the life of every man, not excepting that of the king himself, was estimated at a certain price, which was called the were, or æstimatio capitis. Crabb's Hist. Eng. Law, 38. LL. Gul. Conq. ll. 8, 9, and Kelham's notes. The were is also considered to correspond with the modern damages. See Sedgwick on Damages, 10—17, and notes.

Spelman supposes this word, though literally importing price, to have reference also to the meaning of the Sax. wer, wær, a man, (vir.)

WEREGELT THEF. Sax. In old English law. A robber who might be ransomed. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 13.

WERELADA. Sax. and L. Lat. In Saxon and old English law. Purgation of a were or fine, (purgatio weræ.) Spelman. Purgation upon oath of other persons, according to the value or estimate of the person accused. LL. Hen. I. c. 12. Cowell.

WEREGILD, Wergild, Weregelt. Sax. [from were, price, or wer, a man, and gyld or geld, a payment; O. Sc. wergelt, vergelt; L. Lat. wergildus, wergilda, wergildum, wergeldum, werigildus, werigeldum, geweregildum, barrigildum, varigildum.] In Saxon and old European law. Payment of a were, (q. v.) compensation for a man; the payment of the price or value of a man slain, (pretii vel æstimationis capitis solutio;) otherwise called in Saxon, manwyrth. Spelman. A private pecuniary satisfaction paid to a party injured, or to his relations, where he was slain, in expiation of the offence. 4 Bl. Com. 312.

WERGELT, Vergelt. In old Scotch law. A sum paid by an offender, as a compensation or satisfaction for the offence; a weregild, or wergild. De unoquoque fure per totam Scotiam est wergelt 30 vaccæ et una juvenca, sive fuerit liber homo sive servus; of every thief throughout Scotland, the wergild is thirty cows and one heifer, whether he be a free man or a slave. Reg. Maj. lib. 4, c. 19.

WERP-GELD. Belg. [from werpen, to throw away, and Sax. geld, a payment.] In European law. Contribution for jettison; average. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 8, § 1.

WERPIRE. L. Lat. [from Germ. werpen.] In old European law. To throw; to throw away; to waive. Spelman. Wreck is called in a charter granted by king Edward to the church of Ramesey, seupwerp, which Spelman thinks may be analyzed sea-up-werp, i. e. thrown up by, or out of the sea, (ejectus maris.)

WERRA, Guerra. L. Lat. In old English law. War; private war, as well as public. Spelman. Nisi tempore werræ; unless in time of war. Artic. Mag. Cart. Johan. c. 33. Guerra is the form used in continental law. Calv. Lex.

WERRINUS. L. Lat. [from werra, q. v.] In old English law. In a state of war; at war. Spelman.

WERVAGIUM. L. Lat. In old records. Wharfage; money paid at a wharf for lading or unlading goods. 1 Mon. Angl. 550. Cowell.

WESTMINSTER. [Sax. Westmynster; L. Lat. Westmonasterium.] A city immediately adjoining London, and forming a part of the metropolis; distinguished as the seat of the four superior courts of the kingdom. See Superior Courts.

WESTMINSTER THE FIRST, Statute of. A celebrated statute passed at a parliament holden at Westminster, in the third year of the reign of Edward I. A. D. 1275. It is written in Law French, and contains fifty-one chapters. Lord Coke has commented at large on this statute in his second Institute, and Mr. Reeves has given a synopsis of its contents. 2 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 107—139. It was called the first, to distinguish it from two subsequent statutes, denominated likewise from parliaments held at the same place. See Barringt. Obs. Stat. 77—102.

WESTMINSTER THE SECOND, Statute of. A celebrated statute passed at a parliament holden at Westminster in the thirteenth year of Edward I. A. D. 1285. It is written in Law Latin, and is commented on by Lord Coke in his second Institute. It contains provisions on a variety of subjects, and its first chapter is called, from the subject of it, the Statute de Donis Conditionalibus, (q. v.) See Barringt. Obs. Stat. 127—148.

WESTMINSTER THE THIRD, Statute of. A statute passed in the eighteenth year of Edward I. A. D. 1290. More commonly known as the Statute of Quia Emptores, (q. v.) See Barringt. Obs. Stat. 167—169.

WESTMONASTERIUM. L. Lat. Westminster. A large proportion of the ancient English writs are tested and made returnable apud Westmonasterium, at Westminster. Reg. Brev. per tot.

WEST-SAXON LAGE. [Sax. West-seaxna-laga.] The laws of the West Saxons, which obtained in the counties to the south and west of England, from Kent to Devonshire. Blackstone supposes these to have been much the same with the laws of Alfred, being the municipal law of the far most considerable part of his dominions, and particularly including Berkshire, the seat of his peculiar residence. 1 Bl. Com. 65.

WEYVIARE, Weyvare. L. Lat. In old English law. To waive; to relinquish or abandon. Bract. fol. 80 b. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 10, § 3.

To outlaw a woman. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 27, §§ 12, 13.

WEYVIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Waif; that which no one claims, (est weyvium quod nullus advocat.) Fleta, lib. 1, c. 27, § 13.

A wandering animal which no one seeks, follows or claims, (pecus vagans quod nullus petit, sequitur, vel advocat.) Id. lib. 1, c. 43, § 2. But this is rather the definition of an estray.

WHARF. [L. Lat. wharfa.] A perpendicular bank or mound of timber, or stone and earth, raised on the shore of a harbor, river, canal, &c. or extending some distance into the water, for the convenience of lading and unlading ships and other vessels. Webster. Defined by Cowell, "a broad, plain place near a creek or hithe of the water, to lay wares on, that are brought to or from the water." By Spelman, "a shore where wares are sold and exchanged," (littus ubi merces vœneunt et permutantur.) Spelman derives the word from the Sax. hwyrfen, to exchange.

WHARFAGE. [L. Lat. wharfagium.] Money paid for landing wares at a wharf, or for shipping or taking goods into a boat or barge from thence. Cowell.

WHARFINGER. One who owns or keeps a wharf, or has the oversight or management of it. Cowell. A wharfinger has a lien on goods deposited at his wharf, for the money due for the wharfage of those goods. 1 Esp. N. P. R. 109. 3 Id. 81. 2 Kent's Com. 642.

WHEEL. In criminal law. An instrument of a barbarous kind of capital punishment, called breaking on the wheel, said to have been first employed in Germany, according to some writers, on the murderers of Leopold, Duke of Austria, in the 14th century. According to the German method of this savage execution, the criminal was laid on a cart-wheel, with his arms and legs extended, and his limbs in that posture fractured with an iron bar. But in France, (where it was restricted to cases of assassination, or other murders of an atrocious description, highway robbery, parricide and rape,) the criminal was laid on a frame of wood in the form of a St. Andrew's cross, with grooves cut transversely in it, above and below the knees and elbows, and the executioner struck eight blows with an iron bar, so as to break the limbs in those places, sometimes finishing the criminal by two or three blows on the chest or stomach, thence called coups de grace. This punishment was abolished in France at the Revolution; but it is still resorted to in Germany, as the punishment for parricide, the last instance of which took place in 1827, near Gottingen. The assassin of the bishop of Ermeland in Prussia, in 1841, was sentenced to the wheel. Brande.

"WHERESOEVER," in a policy of insurance, construed. 1 M. & S. 418.

"WHILST," in a lease, construed. 7 East, 116.

WHITE ACRE. A fictitious name given to a piece of land, in the English books. See Black acre.

WHITE BONNET. In Scotch law. A fictitious offerer or bidder at a roup or auction sale. Bell's Dict. voc. Articles of Roup.

WHITE RENT. [L. Lat. redditus albus.] In old English law. Rent payable in silver, or white money. Otherwise called white farm, (alba firma, or firma blanca,) and blanch farm, or ferme, (Fr. blanche fearme.) See Alba firma, Blanch ferme.

WHITTANWARII. L. Lat. In old English law. A class of offenders who whitened stolen ox-hides and horse-hides so that they could not be known and identified. Stat. Walliæ, 12 Edw. I. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 124, note [f.]

WHOLE BLOOD. In the law of descent. Blood which is compounded wholly of the same ingredients; blood which is derived from the same couple of ancestors.* A kinsman of the whole blood is he that is derived, not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors. For, as every man's own blood is compounded of the bloods of his respective ancestors, he only is properly of the whole or entire blood with another, who hath, (so far as the distance of degrees will permit,) all the same ingredients in the composition of his blood that the other had. Thus, the blood of John Stiles being composed of those of Geoffrey Stiles his father, and Lucy Baker his mother, therefore his brother Francis, being descended from both the same parents, hath entirely the same blood with John Stiles; or he is his brother of the whole blood. But if, after the death of Geoffrey, Lucy Baker the mother marries a second husband, Lewis Gay, and hath issue by him: the blood of this issue, being compounded of the blood of Lucy Baker, (it is true) on the one part, but that of Lewis Gay (instead of Geoffrey Stiles,) on the other part, it hath therefore only half the same ingredients with that of John Stiles; so that he is only his brother of the half blood. 2 Bl. Com. 227.

WHOLESALE. Sale in a whole or unbroken quantity; sale of goods by the piece or quantity.* "The term wholesale implies the selling in unbroken pieces or parcels, as [in the case of liquors,] by the barrel, pipe, cask, &c. or in a number of such pieces or parcels; while the word retail implies the cutting or dividing up such pieces, parcels or casks into small quantities, and selling to customers in such manner." 2 Wisconsin R. 237, 243.

WIC, Wik, Wyc. Sax. [from Gr. οἶκος, house.] In old English law. A house. Spelman. A country house, or farm, (wica.) Cowell. Concessimus Andreæ de wik, pro homagio et servitio suo, wicam de manerio nostro; we have granted to Andrew of the wik, for his homage and service, a wic of our manor. Chartul. Abbat. Glaston. MS. fol. 29, apud Cowell.

A castle, (castrum.) Called wic, according to Spelman, because constructed with a rampart, mound or embankment, in the sense of the Dutch wiick.

A town, (villa,) or village, (vicus.) In this sense, the word is more closely allied to the Lat. vicus, than the Gr. οἶκος, (supra.) Spelman.

WIC, Wich, Wig. Sax. [from Germ. weichen, to recede or go back.] In old English law. A bay of the sea, or of rivers, (sinus maris vel fluviorum;) as though formed by a recess of the land or stream. Spelman. A place where ships lie and unload. Id. See Wig.

In old European law. A grove, (lucus;) a small wood, (minuta sylva.) L. Baiwarior. tit. 21, § 6. Spelman.

WIC, Wich, Wick. A common termination of the names of towns and villages in England. In this connection, Spelman supposes wic to denote a village or wood; and wich, a bay, or sometimes a castle, as Norwich.

WICK. A termination of words denoting jurisdiction, or limits of jurisdiction or authority. Bailiwick is the district within which a bailiff or sheriff may lawfully exercise his office. Sheriff-wick is used in some of the old books, but is now superseded by the former word.

WIDRIGILD, Widrigilt. Lomb. In old Lombardic law. The same as werigild or wergild, (q. v.) LL. Longob. lib. 2, tit 1, c. 9. Spelman.

WIFA, Wiffa. L. Lat. In old European law. A mark, or sign, (signum;) a mark set up on land, to denote an exclusive occupation, or to prohibit entry. L. Boior. tit. 9, c. 12. LL. Longob. lib. 3, tit. 3, l. 6. Spelman.

WIFARE, Guifare, Guiphare. L. Lat. In old Lombardic law. To set or fix up a mark or sign, (wifa, q. v.) upon land or a house, [as a symbol of exclusive occupancy.] Domus vel casæ wifentur. LL. Longob. lib. 3, tit. 3, l. 6. Terram alienam sine publico jussu guifaverit; put a mark upon another's land, without public order. Id. lib. 1, tit. 27, l. 8. Spelman.

WIFE'S EQUITY. The equitable right or claim of a married woman to a reasonable and adequate provision, by way of settlement or otherwise, out of her choses in action, or out of any property of hers which is under the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, for the support of herself and her children.* 2 Kent's Com. 139. 1 White's Equity Cases, 305, note. Id. 323, Am. ed. note.

The wife's equity is a claim which attaches upon her personal property, whenever it is subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and is the object of a suit in any hands to which it may come, or in whatever manner it may have been transferred. It makes no difference whether the application to the court for the property be by the husband, or his representatives, or assignees, or by the wife or her trustee seeking a provision out of the property. 5 Johns. Chanc. R. 464. 2 Kent's Com. 140, and cases cited ibid. As between the husband and the wife, the principle is, that if the husband wants the aid of chancery to enable him to get possession of his wife's property, or if her fortune be within the reach of the court, he must do what is equitable, by making a reasonable provision out of it for the maintenance of her and her children. Id. 139, and note. But the wife's equity does not, according to the adjudged cases, attach, except upon that part of her personal property in action which the husband cannot acquire without the assistance of a court of equity. Id. 141. And see further, Id. 139—143. 1 White's Eq. Cas. 305—323. Id. 323, Am. ed. note.

The doctrine of the wife's equity seems to be recognized throughout the United States, with the exception of North Carolina. Id. ibid.

WIG. Sax. and Germ. In old German law. A bay of the sea, or a river. Spelman, citing B. Rhenan. Rer. Germ. lib. 3, fol. 217.

A wood or grove. Spelman.

WIGREVE. Sax. [from wig, a wood, and reve, refa, an overseer.] In old European law. The overseer of a wood. Spelman.

WILL. [L. Fr. volunt; Lat. voluntas, ultima voluntas, testamentum.] A disposition of real and personal property, to take effect after the death of the person making it.* 3 Kent's Com. 501.—The legal declaration of a person's mind or intention, respecting the manner in which he would have his property or estate disposed of after his death.* 2 Bl. Com. 499. 1 Jarman on Wills, (by Perkins,) 1. This definition is founded essentially on that of testament in the civil law. See Testament, Testamentum.—An instrument in writing, executed in form of law, by which a person makes a disposition of his property, to take effect after his death.

A will, when it operates upon personal property, is sometimes called a testament, and when upon real estate, a devise; but the more general and the more popular denomination of the instrument, embracing equally real and personal estate, is that of last will and testament. 3 Kent's Com. 501. Of these several terms it may be observed that "testament" is directly derived from the testamentum of the civil law, and though formerly distinguished from a will, as importing the appointment of an executor, and as particularly applicable to personal property, is now generally used as synonymous with it. 1 Steph. Com. 544. See Testament. Or rather, it may be said to be comparatively disused, except in connection with will. See infra. "Devise" strictly means a disposition of real estate contained in a will, as distinguished from the instrument itself. A will may contain several devises. See Devise. "Last will and testament" is the formal denomination chiefly used as descriptive of the instrument, either in the will itself, or in other instruments referring to it; or in pleadings, statutes, &c. But the simple term will is the one most commonly used in the modern books, and even in statutes, as well as in common parlance, to denote an instrument containing dispositions of property to take effect after death. By the English statutes 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 26, the word "will" is declared to extend to a testament, to a codicil, and to an appointment by will, or by writing in the nature of a will, in execution of a power. See 1 Steph. Com. 545, note. And in New-York, the term will is declared by statute to include a codicil. 2 Rev. St. [68, § 71,] 12, § 78.

WILL, Estate at. See Estate at will.

WILL. In Scotch practice. That part or clause of a process which contains the mandate or command to the officer. Bell's Dict. voc. Inhibition. 7 Wils. & Shaw's R. 519, 522.

WINCHESTER, Statute of. A statute passed in the 13th year of the reign of Edward I. by which the old Saxon law of police was enforced, with many additional provisions. 2 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 163. Crabb's Hist. Eng. Law, 189. It was repealed by the statute 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27. See Constable.

WINCHESTER MEASURE. The standard measure of England, originally kept at Winchester. 1 Bl. Com. 274.

WISBUY, LAWS OF. A code of maritime laws, compiled at Wisbuy, the ancient capital of Gothland in Sweden, towards the close of the thirteenth century; and which, soon after their promulgation, were adopted as laws of the sea, by all the nations of modern Europe. Even in the time of Cleirac, (who published them, with a commentary, in his work entitled Les Us et Coutumes de la Mer,) they were still observed in Sweden, Denmark, Flanders, and in the North of Germany. These laws resemble in many respects the laws of Oleron, to which, indeed, according to Cleirac, they were but a supplement, and they were adopted as the basis of the later collection known as the Laws of the Hanseatic League. 3 Kent's Com. 13, and note. 1 Duer on Ins. 40, 41. Introd. Disc. Lect. ii. They have been published in the United States, in the Appendix to the first volume of Peters' Admiralty Decisions.

WISTA. L. Lat. [Sax. wyst.] In old records. A half a hide of land. Spelman. Cowell.

WIT, Wyt, Wyte, Witt. [Sax. witan.] In Saxon, old English and Scotch law. Know; to know. To wit; to know. See To wit. Witt ze Ws to haif maid; Know ye Us to have made. 1 Pitc. Cr. Trials, part 1, p. 171. An old charter of King Athelstan to the chapel of St. Wilfred of Rippon, given by Blount in rhyme, commences with this word:

> Wyt all that es and es gan,
> Yat ik King Adelstan
> As given als frelith as I may,
> And to ye Capitel of Seint Wilfrai,

WITA, Wyta. L. Lat. [Sax. wite, q. v.] In Saxon law. A fine, or mulct; a penalty; a sum paid by way of punishment for an offence. Spelman. See Wite, Wyta.

WITAN. Sax. In Saxon law. Wise men; persons of information, especially in the laws; the king's advisers; members of the king's council; the optimates, or principal men of the kingdom. 1 Spence's Chancery, 11, note. Id. 72, 74.

WITE, Wit, Wyte. In Saxon law. A fine for an offence; a pecuniary punishment or penalty. Distinguished from were, (q. v.) which answered to the civil damages of modern law. The wite was paid to the crown or magistrate, as a punishment for the offence; the were, to the injured party, or his relatives, as a satisfaction for the injury. Bosworth's Anglo-Sax. Dict. voc. Were and wite. Sedgwick on Damages, 10, 11, and notes.

An amerciament, or amercement. Co. Litt. 127 a. A pecuniary punishment imposed upon the lighter classes of offences, which was not fixed, but varied according to the quality of the offence. Spelman thus distinguishes wite from were, making the latter word to signify a fine imposed upon persons guilty of homicide, and other atrocious crimes. Spelman, voc. Wyta. See Wyta.

WITENA DOM. Sax. [from witan, wise men, and dom, judgment.] In Saxon law. The judgment of the county court, or other court of competent jurisdiction, on the title to property, real or personal. 1 Spence's Chancery, 22.

WITENA-GEMOTE, Wettena-gemote, Gewitena-gemote. Sax. [from witan, wise men, and gemote, a meeting.] In Saxon law. An assembly or meeting of the wise men, (sapientes,) or principal men (optimates) of the kingdom; an assembly or council of the more solemn kind, frequently called by the Saxon kings; otherwise termed michel-synoth, (q. v.) the great council. 1 Bl. Com. 148. 1 Spence's Chancery, 73. The superior court of the kingdom, (curia regis.) Id. 76. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 7. See 9 Co. pref.

These more solemn assemblies, according to Mr. Spence, appear to have been held in the open air, by public notice or by particular summons, in or near to some city or populous town; and they are the assemblies which are called parliaments by the writers after the Conquest. It appears to have been part of the business of the select council which usually attended the king, to determine when these more solemn councils should be held. On some occasions, when the throne was vacant, they met of their own authority, for the purpose of choosing a sovereign. 1 Spence's Chancery, 73, and notes.

WITERDEN, Witereden. Sax. [from wite, wise or principal men, and rædan, council.] In Saxon law. A kind of taxation among the West-Saxons, imposed by the public council of the kingdom; a subsidy. Spelman. Munita ab omnibus secularibus servitutibus, necnon regalibus tributis, sive taxationibus, quod nos dicimus witereden; free of all secular burdens, and also of royal tributes or taxes which we call witereden. Chart. Ethelwulf. apud Malm. de Gest. R. lib. 1, p. 41, cited ibid.

WITEREDEN. [Sax. wite-rædenne.] In Saxon law. The payment of a wite or fine. Spelman.

WITH [L. Fr. ove,] is constantly used in the old books, in the sense of for. "Judgment with the plaintiff;" "of counsel with the defendant." See Ove. "He would have argued with the lease." Dyer, 126 b.

WITH STRONG HAND. [L. Lat. manu forti.] In pleading. A phrase used in describing a forcible entry in an indictment, and held to be indispensable. Wharton's Prec. of Indict. 219, note (e.)

WITHDRAWING A JUROR. In practice. The withdrawing of one of the twelve jurors impannelled to try a cause; a consent of parties that one of the jurors shall quit the jury-box, which, by leaving the jury incomplete, necessarily prevents any further proceedings in the cause. The withdrawing of a juror is always by the agreement of the parties, and is frequently done at the recommendation of the judge, where it is doubtful whether the action will lie; and in such case, the consequence is that each party pays his own costs. It is, however, no bar to a future action for the same cause. 2 Tidd's Pr. 861, 862. 1 Arch. Pr. 196.

WITHDRAWING RECORD. In practice. The withdrawing by a plaintiff, of the nisi prius or trial record filed in a cause, just before the trial is entered upon, for the purpose of preventing the cause from being tried. This may be done before the jury are sworn, and afterwards, by consent of the defendant's counsel. 2 Tidd's Pr. 851. 1 Arch. Pr. 189. 3 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 870.

WITHERNAM. Sax and Eng. [from Sax. weder, oder, other, and naam, a taking; L. Lat. withernamium.] In practice. A taking by way of reprisal;* a taking or a reprisal of other goods, in lieu of those that were formerly taken and eloined or withholden. 2 Inst. 141. A reciprocal distress, in lieu of a previous one which has been eloigned. 2 Bl. Com. 148.

A capias in withernam is a writ which issues in cases where goods distrained have been eloigned, i. e. carried away, concealed or otherwise withheld, so that they cannot be replevied; commanding the sheriff that he take other goods of the distrainor, in withernam, that is, by way of reprisal for the first distress, and as a punishment for withholding it.* 3 Bl. Com. ub. sup. Reg. Orig. 82. F. N. B. 69 A. 73 F.

 Withernam has been sometimes said to be the same with the Lat. vetitum namium, and L. Fr. vee de name, (qq. v.) and is actually expressed by these terms in some of the books. But this, as Lambard and Lord Coke have shown, is clearly a corruption or mistake; for the import of the terms is widely different. Vetitum namium or vee de name, was a prohibited taking, or rather the prohibition of a retaking, being the unlawful detention of a distress, by the distrainor, by not suffering it to be replevied by the owner. Bract. fol. 155 b. But taking in withernam is, as Lord Coke observes, a lawful taking by authority of law, and therefore cannot be termed a taking forbidden, because it is expressly commanded to be done. 2 Inst. 140. Withernamium was in truth the remedy for vetitum namium, and followed immediately after it; and from this close connection of the proceedings, and the similarity in sound between their names, the error no doubt arose of taking the one for the other. Withernam and vee de name are both mentioned, and distinguished by their proper names, in the twenty-seventh chapter of Britton, De prises des avers, as clearly appears from the following passage. After describing vee de name (the withholding of a distress) and the remedy for it by writ of replevin, it is said,—Et si les bestes soient clos dedens meson ou dedens parkes, ou si eles soient chases hors del counte, ou si le baillife autre desturbaunce trove, tauntost face prendre des bestes le deforceour à la double value come withernam, et cele destresse teigne, sauns lesser par plevine, jesques taunt que la destresse alloigne soit remene. (And if the beasts be shut up in a house or in a pound, or if they be driven out of the county, or if the bailiff meet with other hindrance [in the execution of the process,] he shall forthwith cause the beasts of the deforcer [the distrainor] to be taken to the double value, as a withernam, and shall hold this distress without delivering it by plevin [shall hold it irreplevisable] until the distress eloigned be driven back.) Britt. c. 27. This passage is almost a literal translation of the parallel one in Bracton, but in the latter the word withernamium is not used, though the proceeding itself is clearly indicated. Si autem [averia] inveniri non possunt, eo quod alibi fugata sunt forte, vel extra comitatum in fraudem, et captor terram habuerit in comitatu et catalla, capiat serviens domini regis de averiis illius in duplum, et illa detineat donec averia sic abducta reducantur. (But if the beasts cannot be found, in consequence of being driven elsewhere or fraudulently taken out of the county, and the distrainor have land and chattels [catals, cattle] in the county, the king's serjeant shall take of those beasts twofold [i. e. two for one] and shall detain them until the beasts which have been so eloigned be brought back.) Bract. fol. 157. In the parallel passage in Fleta, the words nomine wythernamii are added after the words in duplum. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 10. The word withernamium distinctly occurs in the Register. Reg. Orig. 79, 82.

WITHOUT CHILDREN. See Sine liberis.

WITHOUT DAY. [L. Lat. sine die; L. Fr. sans jour.] In practice. Without the appointment of a day to appear again; discharged from further attendance; finally dismissed. See Sine die, Eat inde sine die.

WITHOUT IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE. [L. Lat. absque impetitione vasti; L. Fr. sauns impeschement de wast.] In conveyancing. A clause frequently inserted in leases for life, where it is intended to give the tenant authority to cut down timber on the land leased, without making himself liable to an action, or to the statutory penalty in such cases. The clause itself strictly signifies, without liability to suit for waste. See Impeachment of waste. But according to Lord Coke, the tenant, by force of these words, is enabled not only to cut down timber, but to convert it to his own use; and a tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, has a right to the trees the moment they are cut down. 11 Co. 82 b. 1 Term R. 550. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 72, § 1040. See 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 275. The clause is sometimes more positively expressed, "with full liberty to commit waste." Id. ibid. But notwithstanding such a clause, tenants for life will be confined to a reasonable exercise of the right, and courts of equity will always restrain them from committing malicious waste, to the destruction of the estate. 2 Crabb's Real Prop. 73, 74, §§ 1040—1042. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 275.

WITHOUT MORE. [L. Fr. sans pluis.] Without further words. See Sans pluis.

WITHOUT RECOURSE. [Fr. sans recours.] In mercantile law. A clause used in the indorsement of negotiable instruments, where the indorser intends to exempt himself from liability to other parties. 3 Kent's Com. 92, 93. Such an indorsement transfers the whole interest, and the clause "without recourse" merely rebuts the indorser's liability to the indorsee and subsequent holder. 5 Metcalf's R. 201. Story on Bills, § 214.

WITHOUT STINT. Without limit; without any specified number. See Sans nombre.

WITHOUT THIS, THAT. [L. Lat. absque hoc quod, sine hoc quod; L. Fr. sans ceo que.] In pleading. Formal words used in pleadings by way of traverse, particularly by way of special traverse, (q. v.) importing an express denial of some matter of fact alleged in a previous pleading. Steph. Pl. 168, 169, 179, 180. Id. Appendix, Note (48.) See Absque hoc.

WITNESS. [Sax. witnesse, from witan, to know; Lat. testis.] A person who knows or sees any thing; one personally present. Webster.

In conveyancing. One who sees the execution of an instrument, and subscribes it for the purpose of confirming its authenticity by his testimony. Id.

In the law of evidence. A person who gives evidence to a judicial tribunal. Best on Evid. 140, § 114.

WITTEMON. [Sax. wituma, weotoma.] In old European law. Dower. LL. Burgund. tit. 69, § 1. Spelman.

WITTESCALCUS. L. Lat. [from Sax. wite, a fine, and scalc, an attendant.] In old European law. An officer by whom fines were collected; a bailiff. LL. Burgund. tit. 76. Spelman.

WODEGELD. In old English law. A payment for wood. See Woodgeld.

WOLD. Sax. [L. Lat. walda.] In England. A down or champaign ground, hilly and void of wood. Cowell. Blount.

WOLF'S HEAD. [Sax. wulves heved, wulves heofod; L. Lat. caput lupinum.] In old English law. A term applied to a person who had been outlawed, he being said to carry a wolf's head; implying that he had forfeited the protection of the law, as a man, and might be destroyed like a wild beast, in case he resisted being taken. See Caput lupinum.

WONG, Wang. Sax. In old records. A field, (campus, arvum.) Spelman. Cowell.

WOOD, [Lat. boscus; Fr. bois,] that is, growing wood, is distinguished from trees, in conveyancing. A grant or devise of an interest in growing wood is said to convey an interest in the soil itself. Shaw, C. J. 13 Pick. R. 44. Co. Litt. 4 b. Shep. Touch. 94. But it is otherwise with a grant or reservation of trees. 11 Co. 49 b, 50, Liford's case. 1 Hilliard's Real Prop. 56, [10.]

If a man seised of divers acres of wood grants to another omnes boscos suos, (all his woods,) not only the woods growing upon the land pass, but the land itself. Co. Litt. 4 b. Or at least these words pass an exclusive right to the land, so far as is necessary for the support of the trees. 4 Mass. R. 268. 2 Hilliard's Real Prop. 339, [356.]

WOOD, [Lat. lignum,] is held, in some of the old cases, to mean wood cut down or felled, not trees growing, according to the verse, Arbor dum crescit, lignum cum crescere nescit.

1 Ld. Raym. 959. Cro. Jac. 166. See Arbor, Lignum.

WOOD-CORN. In old records. A certain quantity of oats or other grain, paid by customary tenants to the lord, for liberty to pick up dead or broken wood. Cowell.

WOOD-GELD. [from wood, and Sax. geld, a payment.] In old English law, Money paid for the liberty of taking wood in a forest. Spelman. Cowell.

Immunity from such payment. Spelman. Co. Litt. 233 a.

WOOD-MOTE. [from wood, and Sax. mote, a court.] In forest law. The old name of the court of attachments, otherwise called the forty days' court. Cowell. 3 Bl. Com. 71.

WOOD-STREET COMPTER. The name of an old prison in London. 11 Mod. 50. See Counter.

WOOD-WARD. [from wood, and Sax. warde, guard.] In forest law. A keeper; one whose office was to protect the wood, and who was sworn to present all offences against vert and venison, at the forest courts. Cowell. Spelman.

WOOLSACK. In English practice. The seat of the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords; so called from its being a large square bag of wool, without back or arms, covered with red cloth. Brande.

WORTH, Weorth. Sax. In old records. A country house or farm, (curtis sive habitatio.) Spelman. Cowell.

WOUND. [Lat. vulnus; L. Lat. plaga; L. Fr. playe.] In criminal law. An injury to the person, by which the skin is divided, or its continuity broken. So defined in England, under the statute of 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 12. Lord Lyndhurst, C. B. 6 C. & P. 684. By "skin" is said to be meant the whole skin; a separation of the cuticle, or upper skin only, is not sufficient to constitute a wound. 8 C. & P. 635. See 1 Russell on Crimes, 729—731. "In legal medicine, the term wound is used in a much more comprehensive sense than in surgery. In the latter, it means strictly a solution of continuity; in the former, injuries of every description that affect either the hard or the soft parts; and accordingly under it are comprehended bruises, contusions, fractures, luxations, &c." 2 Beck's Med. Jur. 106. See Id. 287, and notes.

WOUNDING. In criminal law. The offence of inflicting a wound. Defined by Blackstone, "an aggravated species of battery, consisting in giving another some dangerous hurt." 3 Bl. Com. 121. But the term has had a more specific sense given to it, under recent English statutes. 1 Russell on Crimes, 729. See Wound.

WORTHIEST OF BLOOD. In the English law of descent. A term applied to males, expressive of the preference given to them over females. See 2 Bl. Com. 234—240.

WREC. An old form of wreck, (q. v.)

WRECCUM, or WRECCUM MARIS. L. Lat. In old English law. Wreck; sea-wreck; goods cast ashore by the sea from a wrecked vessel; (res e naufragio adductæ in terram.) Spelman. 5 Co. 106 a, b, Constable's case. 2 Inst. 167. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 11. Written wreckum in Bracton and Fleta, wrectum maris in the Register. Bract. fol. 120. Fleta, lib. 1, cc. 43, 44. Reg. Orig. 102 b, 126 a. See Wreck.

WRECK. [from Sax. wræc; L. Fr. wrek, wrekke; O. Fr. varech; L. Lat. wreccum, wreckum, wrectum; Lat. naufragium; Fr. naufrage, bris, échouément.] In English law. Goods which, after a shipwreck at sea, are by the sea cast upon the land. 5 Co. 106 b, Constable's case. 2 Inst. 167. Goods cast ashore from a wrecked vessel, where no living creature has escaped from the wreck alive; and which are forfeited to the crown, or to persons having the franchise of wreck. Cowell. 1 Crabb's Real Prop. 507, § 656; 509, §§ 658, 659. 1 Bl. Com. 290, 291.

In American law. Goods cast ashore by the sea, and not claimed by the owner within a year, or other specified period; and which, in such case, become the property of the state. 2 Kent's Com. 322. See Wreckum.

WRECK, Wrec. [L. Lat. wreccum, wreckum.] In old English law. Any thing thrown up on the land by the sea, (maris ejectus.) Spelman. Lib. Rames. § 95, cited ibid. Called in some old charters, seupwerp, quasi sea-up-werp. Spelman. Cowell.

A thing thrown out of a vessel, with the intention of throwing it away, and which is afterwards found; a thing derelict. Bract. fol. 120. See Wreckum.

WRECK. See Shipwreck.

WRECKFREE, Wrecfree, Wrecfry. In old English law. Exempt from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels to the king. Cowell.

WRECKUM, Wreccum. L. Lat. In old English law. Wreck. A thing thrown out of a ship, without the intention of reclaiming it. Et sciendum quod wreckum dici poterit, quasi derelictum, ut si quid (navis levandæ causâ,) à nave projectum fuerit ab aliquo, sine animo retinendi vel repetendi, id proprie dici poterit wreckum, cum res projecta habita sit pro derelicta; et si habita sit pro derelicta videri poterit per præsumptiones, ut si liber projectus fuerit, utrum inveniatur clausus vel apertus, cum commode claudi possit et bene; et sic de similibus. (And it is to be known that a thing may be called wreck, as being derelict, as if any thing be thrown out of a ship by a person, (for the sake of lightening the ship,) without the intention of retaining or reclaiming it, it may be properly called wreck, when the thing thrown out is regarded as derelict; and whether it be regarded as derelict may be judged by presumptions, as if a book have been thrown out [such inference may be drawn from the circumstance] whether it be found shut or open, where it could conveniently be shut; and so of like cases.) Bract. fol. 120. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 43, § 2. This definition of wreck seems to be nearly or quite that of jettison, (q. v.)

Goods or other things cast ashore by the sea from a wrecked vessel. This was regarded as the proper sense of the word. Item magis propriè dici poterit wreckum, si navis frangetur, et de qua nullus vivus evaserit, et maxime si dominus rerum submersus fuerit, et quicquid inde ad terram venerit erit domini regis, nec aliquis alius aliquid à domino rege inde vendicare poterit vel habere, quamvis prope littus maris prædia possederit, nisi de wrecko habendo speciali gaudeat privilegio. Et quod hujusmodi dici debeant wreckum verum est, nisi ita sit quod verus dominus aliunde veniens, per certa indicia et signa, docuerit res esse suas; ut si canis vivus inveniatur, et constare possit quod talis sit dominus illius canis et illorum rerum. Et eodem modo si certa signa apposita fuerint mercibus et aliis rebus. (Also, it may with more propriety be called wreck, if the ship be broken, and no living thing has escaped therefrom, and especially, if the owner of the property have been drowned, and whatever comes therefrom to land, shall be the king's, nor can any one else claim of the king any thing therefrom, or have it, though he may be the owner of lands near the seashore, unless he enjoy the special privilege of having wreck. And that things of this kind ought to be called wreck, is true, unless it so happen that the true owner, coming from another quarter, shall, by certain marks and signs, show the thing to be his property; as if a dog be found alive, and it can be evident that such person is the owner of that dog, and of those things. And in the same way, if certain marks have been put upon merchandize and other things.) Bract. fol. 120.

 The foregoing passage of Bracton was written before the statute of Westminster the First, in which the law of wreck is laid down in the following terms: De wreck de mere est accorde que la ou home, chien, ou chat escape vive hors de la neefe, la neefe ou batell', ou nul rien que la eins fuit ne soit wreck, &c. (Concerning wreck of the sea, it is agreed that where a man, a dog, or a cat escape alive out of the ship, the ship or boat or any thing in them shall not be adjudged wreck, but the goods shall be saved and kept, &c. So that, if any sue for those goods, and afterwards prove that they were his, or perished in his keeping, within a year and a day, they shall be restored to him without delay. And if not, they shall remain to the king.) Stat. Westm. 1, c. 4. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 44, § 2. These two passages have often been quoted together, that of Bracton being relied on by those who have contended for a broader view of the law of wreck than seems to be authorized by the letter of the statute. Both mention the escape of a live animal from the vessel, as a circumstance which would take from the goods the character of wreck; the statute declaring it to be the absolute criterion by which it was to be determined whether the goods were wreck or not; but Bracton mentioning it only as a means of proof by which the owner might show his property. Bracton, however, it will be seen, goes farther than the statute, laying down the doctrine, in the important clause with which the passage quoted from him concludes, that if the owner could prove his property by marks upon the goods, they were not to be considered as wreck. In the case of Hamilton and Smith v. Davis, (5 Burr. 2732,) this clause was relied upon by the plaintiffs' counsel as an authority to show that the goods were no wreck, there being, in that case, marks apparent upon them. The defendant's counsel rested upon the strict letter of the statute, and contended that as no living creature had come from the ship to the shore, the goods were legally wreck; arguing, also, that Bracton had mis-stated the law, and was unsupported by any other writer, and was contradicted by the Mirror, ancient charters and ancient acts of parliament. Lord Mansfield, in delivering the opinion of the court, adopted the more liberal view of Bracton, which he considered as according with the common law before the statute, (the statute itself having always been recognized as declaratory of the common law.) See 2 Kent's Com. 322. It will be observed that Blackstone is quoted by the defendant's counsel in this case, as favoring the stricter interpretation of the statute, in opposition to Bracton. But, in the editions of Blackstone since published, the decision in this very case is quoted with approval, as settling the doctrine on the more liberal basis. 1 Bl. Com. 291, 292. As to the accordance of the American law with Bracton, see 2 Kent's Com. 322.

Lord Mansfield, in the case above quoted, observed, in allusion to the language of the statute, and the construction of it contended for on the part of the defendant, that there was no ground for a forfeiture of the goods upon the distinction between a man or other animal coming to shore alive, or not alive; that the coming to shore of a dog or a cat alive, could be no better proof than if they should come ashore dead; that the escaping alive made no sort of difference; and that if the owner of the dog, or cat, or other animal was known, the presumption of the goods belonging to the same person would be equally strong, whether the animal was alive or dead. That an importance, however, was attached to the circumstance of life in the animal, in such cases, seems clear, not only from the language of the statute, but from the express words of Bracton, who enumerates it as one (and, indeed, mentions no other) of the indicia and signa by which the owner might prove his property, supposing there were no marks upon the goods themselves. Si canis vivus inveniatur, if the owner's dog were found alive on the shore, the behavior of the animal towards his master would furnish in itself a natural indicium of the greatest importance in identifying him, so that constare possit quod talis sit dominus illius canis, and then the presumption followed, that the owner of the dog was the owner of the goods that came ashore with the dog. Such, at least, seems to be the reasonable interpretation of the passage, otherwise it is difficult to explain why the canis vivus is so prominently mentioned by this author.

It may be observed in addition, that in a writ in the Register, on the subject of wreck, the escape of a live animal from the ship is expressly made a criterion whether the goods washed ashore were forfeitable as wreck; the persons to whom it is directed being instructed to inquire whether any person escaped alive from the ship to land or not, and to award the goods to the claimants on their making proof of property, provided, however, some animal have escaped alive from the said ship, (dum tamen aliquod animal à dicta navi vivum evaserit.) Reg. Orig. 126.

WRECTUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Wreck. Habere consueverunt wrectum maris infra præcinctum manerii prædicti; have been accustomed to have wreck of the sea, within the precinct of the manor aforesaid. Reg. Orig. 102 b. Ac si wrectum fuissent, ceperunt et asportaverunt; took and carried away, as if they were wreck. Id. 126.

WREK, Wreke, Wrekke. L. Fr. Wreck. De wrek de meer trove; of wreck of the sea found. Britt. c. 17, 33. De wrekkes de meer trove. Id. c. 29.

WRIT. [from Sax. writan, to write; Lat. breve; L. Fr. brefe, bref, briefe, briefve; Scotch, brieve.] In practice. A judicial instrument by which a court commands some act to be done by the person to whom it is directed. An instrument in writing, in an epistolary form, running in the name of the sovereign of a state, and issued out of a court of justice under seal, either as the commencement of an action or during its progress, directed to a sheriff or other ministerial officer, or to the party intended to be bound by it, and commanding some act therein mentioned to be done at, or within a certain time specified. Writs directed to officers always contain a command to return them on a certain day, called the return or return day, (q. v.) and all writs are usually witnessed or tested in the name of the chief justice or principal judge of the court out of which they are issued. The term writ is supposed by Mr. Reeves to have been derived from the fact of these formulæ having always been expressed in writing, being in this respect distinguished from all the other proceedings in the ancient action, which were conducted orally. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 95. 2 Id. 266.

 The distinction of writs into original and judicial, was a fundamental and highly important one in old English law and practice. Original writs were mandatory letters, (so termed from their epistolary form,) issuing out of the court of chancery under the great seal, constituting the foundation of actions, and being the first proceeding in them. Judicial writs were those which issued after the action had been thus commenced, and they were issued out of the court in which it was pending, and under the seal of such court. 3 Bl. Com. 273, 282. See Original writ, Judicial writ. The Register of Writs, the great repository of these formulæ, is divided into two parts; the Register of Original writs, and the Register of Judicial writs. In modern times, original writs have fallen into disuse, and most of them have been expressly abolished in England. And indeed the proceeding by writ, in general, seems to have been superseded in a considerable degree by other judicial instruments, though none of these appear to equal it in point of expressiveness and formal effect.

WRIT. [Lat. breve, litera, literæ.] In old English law. An instrument in the form of a letter; a letter or letters of attorney, (literæ procuratoriæ.) This is a very ancient sense of the word. Bracton observes that where a person had a charter or deed of land, and a letter of attorney from the grantor to deliver seisin, it was said in English, ȝee ȝaȝ bothe ȝrit and ȝarter. Bract. fol. 40. See Breve.

Letters patent and letters close are otherwise called writs patent and writs close. 2 Bl. Com. 346.

WRIT. In Scotch law. A writing; an instrument in writing, as a deed, bond, contract, &c. 2 Forbes' Inst. part 2, p. 175—179. Handwrit is used for handwriting. 2 How. St. Trials, 715.

WRIT OF ENTRY. See Entry, writ of.

WRIT OF ERROR. [L. Lat. breve de errore; L. Fr. brefe d'errour.] In practice. A writ to correct error; called at length in the old books, breve de errore corrigendo, a writ about correcting error; the abbreviation of which (breve de errore) has been literally translated, writ of error. Sometimes simply termed error. Defined by Lord Coke to be a writ which "lieth where a man is grieved by any error in the foundation, proceeding, judgment or execution [of a suit,] and thereupon it is called breve de errore corrigendo. But without a judgment, or an award in nature of a judgment no writ of error doth lie; for the words of the writ be, si judicium redditum sit, [if judgment be given;] and that judgment must regularly be given by judges of record, and in a court of record, and not by any other inferior judges in base courts; for thereupon a writ of false judgment doth lie." Co. Litt. 288 b. See Error, writ of.

WRIT OF INQUIRY. See Inquiry, writ of.

proprietatis,) or mere right, (jus merum,) as distinguished from the right of possession. 3 Bl. Com. 194, 191. Roscoe's Real Act. 19. It was in its nature the highest writ in the law, and lay only of an estate in fee simple, and not for him who had a less estate. It lay concurrently with all other real actions, in which an estate of fee simple might be recovered; and it also lay after them, being, as it were, an appeal to the mere right, when judgment had been had as to the possession in an inferior possessory action. 3 Bl. Com. 193.

Writs of right have been abolished in England, by statute 3 and 4 Will. IV. c. 27. 3 Steph. Com. 492. They have been abolished also in some of the United States, and are, in general, disused in practice. See 4 Kent's Com. 70, note. But they may still be used as process in the Circuit Courts of the United States. 16 Howard's R. 354, 365.

To WRITE. [Sax. writan; Lat. scribere.] To express ideas by letters visible to the eye. Kent, C. 14 Johns. R. 491. To impress letters upon paper or parchment with pen and ink, with a pencil, or with any other instrument or material which can make them permanently visible.* The term includes the impression of letters with types and ink. See Writing.

WRITER TO THE SIGNET. In Scotch law. An officer nearly corresponding to an attorney at law, in English and American practice. Writers to the signet, called also clerks to the signet, derive their name from the circumstance that they were anciently clerks in the office of the Secretary of State, by whom writs were prepared and issued under the royal signet or seal, and when the signet became employed in judicial proceedings, they obtained a monopoly of the privileges of acting as agents or attorneys before the Court of Session. Brande, voc. Signet.

WRITING. [Lat. scriptura; L. Fr. escript.] The expression of ideas by letters visible to the eye. Kent, C. 14 Johns. R. 491.—The outward, visible form in which the contract, will or direction of a person is expressed; and which in many cases constitutes an essential part of it.* Termed in the old books, one of the garments (L. Fr. garnements, L. Lat. vestimenta,) of a contract or obligation. Bract. fol. 99. Britt. c. 28.

Writing is an essential requisite to the validity of a deed or conveyance of land, and to many other contracts, such as bonds, bills, notes, leases in certain cases, and even the informal memoranda required by the statute of frauds. 2 Bl. Com. 297. 4 Kent's Com. 450—452. Writing constitutes, also, an essential part of nearly all judicial proceedings. But writing is not, in these cases, confined to the ordinary and popular signification of the term,—the formation of letters by pen and ink. The mode or manner of impressing the letters is no part of the substance or definition of writing. Kent, C. 14 Johns. R. 491. The law has gone so far as to prescribe the material upon which the writing is to be made; and hence a deed is required to be written on paper or parchment, and not on wood or stone. This, it is observed, was for the sake of durability and safety, and is all the regulation that the law has prescribed. But the instrument, or the material by which letters are to be impressed on paper or parchment, has never yet been defined. Kent, C. ub. sup. Hence printing is writing, in the legal sense of the term, and an instrument the words of which are printed either wholly or in part, is equally valid with an instrument written with a pen. 2 Bl. Com. 297. Even writing with a lead pencil, (liable, as it is, to be effaced,) has been held sufficient in many cases. See 14 Johns. R. 491. See Signature. A promissory note in pencil is valid while legible. 14 Texas R. 329.

WRITING. [Lat. scriptum; L. Fr. escript.] A thing written; a written instrument or document. See Scriptum. Best on Evid. 239—241.

WRITING OBLIGATORY. [L. Lat. scriptum obligatorium.] The technical name by which a bond is described in pleading. See Bond.

WRITTEN LAW. [Lat. jus scriptum, lex scripta; Gr. νόμος ἔγγραφος.] One of the two leading divisions of the Roman law, comprising the leges, plebiscita, senatusconsulta, principum placita, magistratuum edicta, and responsa prudentum. Inst. 1. 2. 3.

Statute law; law deriving its force from express legislative enactment. 1 Bl. Com. 62, 85. See Lex scripta.

WRONG. [L. Fr. tort; Lat. injuria.] The violation of a right, or of law, either by a positive act, or negatively, by withholding from another that which is his due, or neglecting to comply with some express requirement of law; an injury. See Injuria.

Literally, wrung, or twisted; the opposite of right, which also literally means straight. The Fr. tort, (from Lat. tortum, twisted, from torquere,) has precisely the same meaning.

The idea of rights naturally suggests the correlative one of wrongs; for every right is capable of being violated. A right to receive payment for goods sold (for example,) implies a wrong on the part of him who owes, but withholds the price; a right to live in personal security, a wrong on the part of him who commits personal violence. And, therefore, while in a general point of view the law is intended for the establishment and maintenance of rights, we find it, on closer examination, to be dealing both with rights and wrongs. It first fixes the character and definition of rights, and then, with a view to their effectual security, proceeds to define wrongs, and to devise the means by which the latter shall be prevented or redressed. 1 Steph. Com. 126.

A private wrong, is otherwise termed a civil injury; a public wrong, a crime, or misdemeanor. See Private wrongs, Public wrongs.

WRONGOUS, Wrangous. In Scotch law. Wrongful; unlawful; as wrongous imprisonment. Ersk. Pr. b. 4, tit. 4, § 25.

WULTAVA, Wulitava. L. Lat. In old European law. A disfiguring of the face. Addit. ad L. Frison. tit. 3, § 16. Spelman.

WULVESHEVED, Wulfesheofod. Sax. [from wulfe, wolf, and heofod, head.] In Saxon law. Wolf's head; a term applied to an outlaw. Si vero postea repertus fuerit, et retineri possit, vivus regi reddetur, vel caput ejus, si se defenderit. Lupinum enim gerit caput, quod Anglicè Wulfesheved dicitur. (But if he be afterwards found, and can be taken, he shall be brought to the king alive, or his head, if he defend himself. For he carries a wolf's head, which is called in English wulvesheved.) LL. Edw. Conf. c. 7, [8.] Spelman.

WURTH. Sax. In Saxon law. Worthy; competent; capable. Atheswurthe; worthy of oath; admissible or competent to be sworn. Spelman. See Othesworthe.

WYTA, Wita. L. Lat. In Saxon and old English law. A fine, or mulct; a wite, (q. v.) Ex his placitis, quædam emendantur centum solidis; quædam wera, quædam wyta; quædam emendari non possunt. (Of these pleas, some may be made amends for, [satisfied or discharged,] by payment of a hundred shillings; some by a were, some by a wite; some cannot be made amends for.) LL. Hen. I. c. 13. Spelman, voc. Wita.

WYTE. Sax. In old English law. Acquittance or immunity from amercement. Used in the compound words, frendwyte, ferdwyte, blodwyte, wardwyte and hengwyte, (qq. v.) Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, §§ 15, 16, 17.

X.

X. A contraction of the word extra, used in citing that part of the canon law called Gregory's Decretals, thus: cap. 8, X. de regulis juris.

XAIPEIN, Χαίρειν, Gr. [Lat. salve, salutem.] Hail; health; greeting. A word used in Greek conveyances, corresponding with the Latin salutem, (q. v.) Dig. 8. 3. 37. Id. 31. 34. 1.

XENODOCHIUM. Græco-Lat. [from Gr. ξενοδοχέω, from ξένος, a guest, and δέχομαι, to receive.] In the civil and old English law. An inn allowed by public license, for the entertainment of strangers, and other guests. Calv. Lex. Cowell.

A hospital; a place where sick and infirm persons are taken care of. Cowell. 10 Co. pref. In the civil law, the house itself was called xenon (ξένων;) the person who had charge of it, xenodochus, (ξενόδοχος.) Cod. 1. 3. 33. Id. 1. 3. 46. 1. Nov. 7, epilog.

XEURTE. L. Fr. A corruption of seurte, or suerte, (q. v.) Kelham.

XPHΣIΣ, Χρῆσις. Gr. [Lat. usus.] In the civil law. Use. Calv. Lex. See Usus.

Y.

Y is constantly used for th in old English and Scotch records. The use of ye or y^{e} for the, is a familiar illustration of this practice.

YA ET NAY. In old records. Mere assertion and denial, without oath. Quod homines sui (Ripponienses) sint credendi per suum Ya et per suum Nay, in omnibus querelis et curiis; that his men (of Rippon) may be believed on their yea and on their nay, in all plaints and courts. Chart. Athelstan. Reg. 1 Mon. Angl. 173 a. Cowell. Blount.

YALEMAINES, Jalemiens. L. Fr. At least; nevertheless; however. Kelham. Plowd. 219.

YARD. [from Sax. gyrdan, to enclose; Lat. curtis.] An enclosed space or area, generally attached to a dwelling-house. A common term in deeds. 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 176.

YARD-LAND. [Sax. gyrdland; L. Lat. virgata terræ.] In old English law. A measure of land of uncertain quantity, varying from fifteen to forty acres. Spelman, voc. Virgata terræ.

YAUE, Yave. L. Fr. Corrupted forms of eaue and ewe, (qq. v.) following the pronunciation. Kelham.

YCEL. L. Fr. It; this; the same. En ycel; in it. L. Fr. Dict. Kelham.

YCEMENT. L. Fr. Thus; in like manner. Kelham.

YCESTES. L. Fr. These. Kelham.

YCEUX, Yceaux. L. Fr. Those; them. Kelham.

YCONOMUS, Oeconomus. L. Lat. In old records. An advocate or defender; a patron. Cowell.

YEAR. [O. Sc. zeir; Sax. gear; Lat. annus; L. Fr. an, ann.] The period of three hundred and sixty-five days, or twelve calendar months. 2 Bl. Com. 140. Co. Litt. 135. Cro. Jac. 166. 1 N. Y. Rev. St. [606,] 615, § 3. By the statute 21 Hen. III. the increasing day in the leap-year, together with the preceding day, were directed to be accounted for one day; and this rule has continued to be observed ever since. 2 Bl. Com. 141. 1 N. Y. Rev. St. ub. sup.

YEAR AND DAY. [O. Sc. zeir and daie; Germ. jar und tag; L. Lat. annus et dies; L. Fr. an et jour.] A period of time limited by law for many purposes, and which in some cases determines a right, in other works a prescription. Thus, wreck and estrays become the property of the crown or state, unless claimed by the owner within a year and a day. 1 Bl. Com. 292, 297. 2 Kent's Com. 359, 360. So, in criminal law, in order to make the killing of a person murder, it is requisite that the party die within a year and a day after the stroke received, or cause of death administered. 4 Bl. Com. 197, 306. Co. Litt. 254 b. So, in practice, execution, according to the English rule, cannot be issued after a year and a day from the time of perfecting judgment, without a scire facias. 2 Tidd's Pr. 1102. Arch. N. Pract. 566. So, in admiralty law, a claim to property captured as prize must be interposed within a year and a day, otherwise comdemnation follows as of course. 2 Gallison's R. 386, 388.

In the old law of England, the period of a year and a day was allowed or prescribed for other purposes; as for making claim upon a fine or final judgment in a writ of right, and for bringing an appeal of death by a wife or heir. Co. Litt. 254 b. Protections were allowed but for a year and a day, and if a villein remained in ancient demesne a year and a day, he was privileged. Id. ibid.

In the early maritime ordinances of France, in the laws of Oleron and in the Consolato del Mare, the same period is fixed as the limitation of right in cases of shipwreck. Consol. del Mare, ch. 252. Les Us et Coutumes de la Mer, 53, 54. Laws of Oleron, 30. Ord. Mar. liv. 4, tit. 9, art. 24. And this was in accordance with the civil law. Cod. de Naufragiis, lib. xi. tit. 5, l. 2. Peckius ad Rem Naut. 889. Story, J. 2 Gallison's R. 388.

In the Books of Feuds, the laws of the Lombards, and the Formularies of Lindenbrog, the same period is prescribed in the case of forfeitures, warranties, &c. and Spelman considers it to be essentially of German origin. Gloss. voc. Annus et dies.

The day, in this period, is in modern law the ordinary day of twenty-four hours. In the German law of the middle ages, however, it meant a period of six weeks. Spelman quotes an old German Glossary that Jar und tag ist sechs wochen und ein jar; Year and day is six weeks and a year. See Heineccius De præscriptione annali juris Lubecensis à jure communi diversa, (Opera Minora, Syll. I. Exerc. 26.) It is generally supposed to have been added to the year in order to remove any doubt as to the completion of the year by inclusive or exclusive computation of the first or last day. 2 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 107, citing Palmer's Pr. Lords, 115, note. Mr. Erskine observes that "a day is adjected to the year, in majorem evidentiam, that it may clearly appear that the year itself is elapsed." Ersk. Pr. b. 1, tit. 6, § 22. Bell's Dict. And see 2 Gallison's R. 388, 389, note.

YEAR-BOOKS. The oldest English reports extant, beginning with the reign of Edward II. and ending with the reign of Henry VIII. They derive their name from the circumstance of having been annually published, and are called by old law writers "books of the years and terms," or "books of the terms and years." 1 Bl. Com. 72. Co. Litt. 115 b. Doct. & Stud. Dial. 1, ch. 9. 2 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 357. They consist of eleven parts or volumes, written in Law French, and extend over a period of nearly two hundred years. The series, however, is in some parts broken, and many years are found without a single report. Thus, in the reign of Edward III. the 11th to the 16th, the 19th to the 20th, and the 31st to the 37th are without a report. The case is the same during the whole reign of Richard II. and the 3d, 4th and 6th years of Henry V.; the 5th, 6th, 13th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 23d, 24th, 25th, 26th and 29th of Henry VI.; the 17th, 18th and 19th of Henry VII.; and the 1st to the 12th, the 15th, 16th, 17th, 20th to the 25th, and the 28th to the end of the reign of Henry VIII. Many of the omitted cases are, however, to be found in the Abridgments of Statham, Brooke and Fitzherbert, as also in the reports of Dyer, Jenkins, Keilway and Benloe. The use of the Year Books was indeed superseded in a great degree by the abridgments just named, and in modern law they are rarely referred to. But they are still regarded as authority, and have been followed in some recent English cases. See 1 B. & C. 410. 14 Mees. & W. 589. 3 Man. Gr. & Scott, 51, arg.

YEAR, DAY AND WASTE. [L. Lat. annus, dies et vastum; L. Fr. an, jour et wast.] In English law. A privilege or prerogative of the crown to have the lands and tenements belonging in fee simple to persons attainted for murder, for a year and a day, and to commit waste therein at pleasure. 4 Steph. Com. 450. 4 Bl. Com. 285.

YEME. In old records. Winter; a corruption of the Lat. hieme. Reddendo—ad festum S. Martini, in yeme; rendering at the feast of St. Martin, in winter. Cowell. Kelham gives it as a law French word. Yemis (for hiemis) occurs in Fleta. Lib. 2, c. 73, §§ 16, 18.

YEMER. L. Fr. [from Lat. hiemare.] To winter. Kelham.

YEOMAN, Yoman, Yeman. [from Sax. geman, common.] In English law. A commoner; a freeholder under the rank of gentleman. Cowell. Camd. Brit. 105. A man who has free land of forty shillings by the year; who was anciently thereby qualified to serve on juries, vote for knights of the shire, and do any other act, where the law requires one that is probus et legalis homo. 1 Bl. Com. 406, 407. 2 Inst. 668. 3 Steph. Com. 16.

This term is occasionally used in American law, in the description of persons in legal instruments, but without any definite meaning. The fictitious bail, John Doe and Richard Roe, are generally described as yeomen.

YEOVEN, Yeven, Yeuen. O. Eng. In old records. Given. "Yeoven, (given,) the day and year first above written." Cowell. The Dictum de Kenilworth concludes, "Yeoven and proclaimed in the castle of Kenilworth, the day before the Calends of Novemb. Anno 1256." Id. The famous bull of Pope Gregory against Wycliffe ends with these words: "Yeuen at Rome, at S. Marie's the greater, xj Kalend of June," &c. Cowell supposes it to be a corruption of the Sax. geofian, to give.

YEULX, Yeux, Yex, Yes. L. Fr. Eyes. Kelham.

YIELD. [Lat. reddere, cedere.] To give as claimed of right; to resign; to give up; to surrender to; to give way; to give place to. Webster, arg. 1 Cushing's R. 405.

YIELDING AND PAYING. In conveyancing. The initial words of that clause in leases, in which the rent to be paid by the lessee is mentioned and reserved. Corresponding to the reddendum or reddendo, (qq. v.) of old conveyancing. Cowell and Blount suppose "yielding" to be a corruption of the Sax. geldan, or gyldan, to pay.

The words "yielding and paying" have been held to constitute an implied covenant, and not to bind the lessee after assignment of the lease. 9 Vermont R. 191.

YINGEMAN. A word occurring in the laws of Henry I. (c. 16) which Spelman thinks might be a mistake for Ynglishman, or Englishman.

YL. L. Fr. He; it. A corruption of il. Yl semble; it seems. Kelham.

YO, Joe. L. Fr. Water. Kelham. A corruption of eau, or ewe.

YORK, Custom of. A custom of the province of York in England, by which the effects of an intestate, after payment of his debts, are in general divided according to the ancient universal doctrine of the pars rationabilis. 2 Bl. Com. 518. 2 Steph. Com. 254.

YORK, Statute of. An important English statute passed at the city of York, in the twelfth year of Edward II. containing provisions on the subject of attorneys, witnesses, the taking of inquests by nisi prius, &c. 2 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 299—302. Crabb's Hist. 203.

ΥΠΟΒΟΛΟΝ, Ὑποβολον. Gr. [from ὑποβάλλειν, to add a less to a greater.] In the civil law. An addition to a woman's dowry, (incrementum dotis.) Calv. Lex. See Hypobolon.

ΥΠΟΘΗΚΗ, Ὑποθήκη. Gr. [from ὑποτιθέναι, to put under.] In the civil law. A kind of pledge in which the possession of the thing pledged remained with the debtor. Calv. Lex. See Hypotheca.

YRELOND. In old English law. Ireland. Le def' fuist un marchand D'yrelo'd; the defendant was a merchant of Ireland. Yearb. T. 5 Edw. III. 4.

YVER, Yvre, Yverne. L. Fr. Winter. Kelham.

YVERNAGIUM. L. Lat. [from Fr. yverne, winter.] In old records. Winterseedness; season for sowing corn, [grain.] Cowell. Blount. Inbladatio yuernagii. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 1.

YVERNAIL BLE. L. Fr. Winter grain. Kelham.

Z.

Z is frequently used for y, in old English and Scotch records. See infra.

ZABULUM. L. Lat. In old records. Coarse sand or gravel. Blount. See Sabulo.

ZARDE, Zaird. O. Sc. Yard. Skene de Verb. Signif.

ZE. O. Sc. Ye. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Homagium.

ZEIR. O. Sc. Year. "Zeire and day." Act A. D. 1594, c. 226. Bell's Dict. voc. Houses.

ZELDE. O. Sc. A gift or donation. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Herezelda.

ZOUNG. O. Sc. Young. 1 How. St. Trials, 915.

ZOUR. O. Sc. Your. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Homagium.

ZOW, Zowe. O. Sc. and O. Eng. You. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Homagium. 1 How. St. Trials, 154. See To wit.

ZUCARIUM. L. Lat. In old English law. Sugar. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 4.

ZUCHE. [L. Lat. zucheus; L. Fr. souche.] In old records. A withered or dry stock or stub of a tree. Cowell. Blount.

ZYGOCEPHALUM. Græco-Lat. [Gr. ζυγοκεφαλον, from ζυγον, a yoke, and κεφαλη, head.] In the civil law. A measure or quantity of land. Nov. 17, c. 8. As much land as a yoke of oxen could plough in a day. Calv. Lex.

ZYGOSTATES. Græco-Lat. [Lat. libripens.] In the civil law. A weigher; an officer who held or looked to the balance, in weighing money between buyer and seller; an officer appointed to determine controversies about the weight of money. Spelman.

ZYTHUM. Lat. A liquor or beverage made of wheat or barley. Dig. 33. 6. 9, pr.
